Kirina ❙ 1235 ❙ Wars of Sosso

Sumanguru of Kaniaga made the Sosso of West Africa into a major force, capturing the former Ghanaian Imperial capital of Kumbi. But the tyrannical rule of the warrior-ruler helped speed the fall of his short-lived Sosso Empire. At Kirina (near modern Koulikoro, Mali), Sumanguru was defeated and overthrown by the Mandingo leader Sundiata, marking the birth of the new Mali Empire.

Kirkeban ❙ 1885 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

General Sir Garnet Wolseley advanced up the Nile to relieve Khartoum and sent a column ahead under General Sir William Earle, who met a large Mahdist force entrenched at Kirkeban, 75 miles above Merowe. The Mahdists were routed, but Earle was killed at the head of his troops. News then arrived of the fall of Khartoum and Wolseley returned downstream (10 February 1885).

Kirkee ❙ 1817 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

With Pindari outlaws ravaging central India, Peshwa Baji Rao II of Poona renewed war against the British by burning the Residency in Poona, then attacked a British-Sepoy force under Colonel Charles Burr moving out from positions at nearby Kirkee (modern Khadki). Repulsed with over 500 casualties, the Peshwa withdrew until his offensive against Koregaon (5 November 1817).

Kirkenes ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

German General Lothar Rendulic was driven out of Petsamo in northern Finland during the Lapland War and fell back west to Kirkenes in Norway, pursued by Finns and Soviet Marshal Kirill Meretskov. The Germans hoped to evacuate vital supplies out of the Arctic port, but were forced out in heavy fighting and withdrew into the mountains. Some held out until April 1945 (20–25 October 1944).

Kirkholm ❙ 1605 ❙ 1st Polish-Swedish War

On a fresh offensive in Livonia after Swedish defeat at Weissenstein, Charles IX took command and led his ill-trained army towards Riga. To the southeast at Kirkholm, he was met and heavily defeated by a much smaller Polish force under Hetman Jan Karol Chodkiewicz. The Swedes lost almost 10,000 casualties and Charles himself narrowly escaped capture (27 September 1605).

Kirkincliffe ❙ 1306 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

Having defeated Robert the Bruce at Methven and Dalry in mid-1306, Edward II captured and executed Robert's brother, Nigel Bruce, then turned his vengeance against the last resistance of Sir Simon Fraser (hero of the Scots victory over Edward at Roslin). Attacked at Kirkincliffe, near Stirling, Fraser was defeated and captured. He was then taken in chains to London for execution.

Kirk Kilissa ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

Bulgarian General Radko Dimitriev opened the war by invading Thrace, where he met Turks under Abdullah Pasha at Kirk Kilissa (modern Kirklareli, Bulgarian Lozengrad) east of Adrianople. Bloody fighting routed the Turks and, on the same day as a Turkish disaster in Macedonia at Kumanovo, they abandoned the fort and fell back on Lüleburgaz (23–24 October 1912).

Kirksville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

With southern Missouri secured for the Union at Pea Ridge, cavalry led by Colonel John McNeil marched into the northeast against about 2,500 Confederates under Colonel Joseph C. Porter at Kirksville, Adair County. Despite being heavily outnumbered, McNeil destroyed Porter's force. The Confederates were avenged within days in the west at Independence and Lone Jack (6 August 1862).

Kirovabad ❙ 1826 ❙ Russo-Persian Wars

See Yelizavetpol

Kirovograd ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

After the Zhitomir offensive to the north, Russian General Ivan Konev sent 550,000 men west from the Dnieper towards Kirovograd under Generals Ivan Galanin and Pavel Rotmistrov. Smashing into part of the German Eighth Army under General Otto Wöhler, the Russians secured a decisive victory before turning north to encircle the pocket at Korsun (5–17 January 1944).

Kishm ❙ 1622 ❙ Anglo-Portuguese Colonial Wars

See Hormuz

Kislingbury ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

See Borough Hill

Kissingen ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Attacking Austria's German allies, Prussian General Edouard von Falckenstein invaded Bavaria and just days after victory at Wiesenthal and Zella, Prussian General August von Goeben attacked General Friedrich von Zoller at Kissingen. Following costly fighting, Prince Karl of Bavaria arrived with fresh troops but was forced to retire. Bavaria lost again the same day at Hammelburg (10 July 1866).

Kitakyushu ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

See Wakamatsu

Kiukiang ❙ 1855 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Jiujiang

Kizil-Tepe ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Sent to relieve the Russian siege of Kars, the Turkish commander in the Caucasus, Ahmed Mukhtar Pasha, arrived with a much larger force and attacked General Mikhail Loris-Melikov at Kizil-Tepe, to the east near Subatan. While both sides lost about 1,000 casualties, the Russians were driven off. They later resumed the siege and took Kars by storm in November (25 August 1877).

Kjoge Bay ❙ 1677 ❙ Scania War

See Koge Bay

Kleck ❙ 1506 ❙ Polish-Crimean Tatar Wars

When Crimean Khan Mengli Girai sent his sons and 10,000 men into Lithuania, they raided up to Minsk and Novogrudok before Mikhail Glinski marched to aid the local Hetman Stanislas Kiska. Attacking unexpectedly across marshy ground, Glinski routed the Tatars at Kleck (near Nieswiez in modern Belorus) and the Khan switched allegiance to Alexander of Poland (5 August 1506).

Kleidion ❙ 1014 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Tsar Samuel

See Balathista

Kleinfontein ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Boer commander Jacobus de la Rey campaigning in the western Transvaal, recovered from a costly repulse at Moedwil (30 September) and attacked a large convoy under Colonel Stanley von Donop at Kleinfontein on the road to Zeerust. While the British lost 84 men in very heavy fighting, de la Rey lost 60 men before he managed to get away with just 12 wagons (24 October 1901).

Kliastitzy ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Jacobovo

Klissova ❙ 1826 ❙ Greek War of Independence

During the second Turkish siege of Missolonghi, 150 Greeks under Kitsos Tzavellas defended the harbour islet of Klissova against assault by Reshid Pasha and later by Hussein Bey Djertili, conqueror of Sphakteria. The Ottomans were driven off with 400 killed, including Hussein Bey, but this last Greek victory could not prevent the imminent fall of Missolonghi (6 April 1826).

Kliszow ❙ 1702 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Charles XII of Sweden defeated the Russians at Narva in late 1700 then marched into Poland, where he installed Stanislaus Leszczynski as King in Warsaw before advancing to Kliszow, near Katowice. There Charles destroyed a much larger Polish-Saxon army—though his brother-in-law, Frederick of Holstein-Gottorp was killed—and he went on to seize Cracow (9 July 1702).

Klokotnitsa ❙ 1230 ❙ Bulgarian Imperial Wars

Supporting Byzantine Nicaea against the Latin Emperors in Constantinople, Theodore Ducas of Epirus drove the Latins out of Thessalonica, then invaded Bulgaria against Tsar Ivan Asen II. On the Maritsa at Klokotnitsa, Theodore was routed, captured and blinded. Bulgaria replaced Epirus as the main Balkan power and Ivan switched to support Nicaea, attacking Constantinople in 1236 (April 1230).

Kloster-Kamp ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Allied commander Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick pursued the French west after victory at Warburg and sent his nephew Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand towards the Rhine. At Kloster-Kamp, north of the Eugenian Canal near Rheinberg, the Hereditary Prince's Prussian-British force was defeated by General Charles-Eugène Castries and he was forced to lift the siege of Wesel (16 October 1760).

Klushino ❙ 1610 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles

When King Sigismund III of Poland invaded Russia, Tsar Basil Shuiski obtained Swedish aid and sent a large force under his incompetent brother Dimitri Shuiski and Swedish commander Jakob de la Gardie to relieve the Polish siege of Smolensk. At Klushino, they were routed by a much smaller force of Poles under Hetman Stanislas Zolkiewski, who then captured Moscow (4 July 1610).

Kluszyn ❙ 1610 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles

See Klushino

Knin ❙ 1995 ❙ Croatian War

Four years after Serbian forces invaded western Croatia and created occupied Krajina, large Croatian forces, possibly with Western approval, launched a lightning offensive (Operation Storm). Amid shocking destruction and killing, the Croatians seized the key city of Knin and regained all their lost territory, displacing thousands of ethnic Serbs. War ended a few months later (4–7 August 1995).

Knockdoe ❙ 1504 ❙ Irish Barons' Wars

Nominally on behalf of the English crown, Gerald Fitzgerald Earl of Kildare led a large force from Dublin against his ambitious son-in-law, Ulich de Burgh of Clanrickard, and other rebellious nobles of Munster. Ulich was defeated and fled after terrible hand-to-hand fighting at Knockdoe, northeast of Galway town. Kildare then seized Galway and also Athenry (19 August 1504).

Knockfergus ❙ 1566 ❙ O'Neill Rebellion

Shane O'Neill Lord of Tyrone, campaigning against Anglo-Scots colonisation of Ulster, defeated the Protestant MacDonnells at Ballycastle then faced an English army under Sir Henry Sidney and Colonel Edward Randolph. Randolph was killed in battle at Knockfergus, near Lifford, but the English won. O'Neill was defeated again six months later at Letterkenny (12 November 1566).

Knoxville ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Fort Sanders

Kobarid ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

See Caporetto

Kobryn ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As Napoleon Bonaparte's army advanced into Russia, a Saxon brigade under General Heinrich von Klengel was surrounded by superior Russian forces under General Count Alexander Tormazov east of Brest-Litovsk at Kobryn. The Saxons were destroyed with 300 casualties and the remaining 2,000 men captured. Tormazov was defeated two weeks later at Gorodeczno (27 July 1812).

Kobylka ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

With Polish commander Tadeusz Kosciuszko beaten and captured at Maciejowice (10 October), Russian Field Marshal Alexander Suvorov attacked the defeated Polish rearguard in swampy forest at Kobylka, just northeast of the capital. Bloody hand-to-hand fighting saw the heavily outnumbered Poles lose again and they withdrew to glorious defeat at Warsaw (26 October 1794).

Kochersberg ❙ 1677 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Moving to stem the Imperial threat from the Rhineland, French Marshal Francois de Crequi (who had taken over command in Germany after the death of Turenne at Sasbach) was defeated in August 1675 at Consarbruck. But at Kochersberg, northwest of Strasbourg, he destroyed a large army under Duke Charles of Lorraine and drove the defeated Germans back to the Rhine (17 October 1677).

Koch's Plantation ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

See Cox's Plantation

Kock ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Despite the fall of Warsaw, Polish General Franciszek Kleeberg and Army Group Polesie held out for a few days southeast of the capital, around Kock. Heavy fighting along the Tysmienica against a Panzer Corps under General Gustav Von Wietersheim saw Kleeberg eventually forced to surrender his 17,000 men, ending the last organised resistance to the German invasion of Poland (2–5 October 1939).

Koge Bay ❙ 1677 ❙ Scania War

When Christian V of Denmark sided with the Netherlands against France and her ally Sweden, the brilliant Danish Admiral Niels Juel sailed against a large Swedish fleet in Koge Bay on the Oresund, southwest of Copenhagen. With Dutch support, the outnumbered Juel utterly routed Swedish Admiral Evert Horn, capturing or sinking 11 Swedish ships (30 June 1677).

Kogo ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

See Central Henan

Koheroa ❙ 1863 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

As a large force under General Duncan Cameron invaded the Waikato to protect settlers and the new military road south from Auckland, he was blocked by a small Maori force near the Waikato River at the Koheroa Range. The Crimean war veteran drove the Maoris out at bayonet point, then advanced south along the river through Meremere to the bloody action at Rangiriri (17 July 1863).

Kohima ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

General Kotoku Sato led the Japanese offensive into India, crossing the Chindwin to advance on Kohima, held by a tiny garrison under Colonel Hugh Richards. Some of the bloodiest fighting of the war saw General John Grover eventually counter-attack to retake Kohima (18 April) and repulse Sato. The British then turned south to relieve besieged Imphal (5 April–3 June 1944).

Kojima ❙ 940 ❙ Masakado Uprising

When Japanese provincial Governor Taira Masakado seized the central Honshu Province of Kanto and declared himself "new Emperor," he was eventually surprised at Kojima, in Shimosa, by his cousin Taira Sadamori and Fujiwara Hidesato. Masakado was defeated and killed in a sharp action (Hidesato reputedly dealt the death blow) and the rebellion in Kanto was crushed (25 March 940).

Kokein ❙ 1824 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

See Rangoon

Kokenhausen ❙ 1601 ❙ 1st Polish-Swedish War

After Swedish forces invaded and overran most of Livonia, almost 5,000 Swedes near Kokenhausen (Koknese in modern Latvia) were attacked by just 3,000 Poles led by Prince Krystof Radziwill, advancing from Vilna. With clever use of his cavalry, Radziwill won a brilliant victory. By 1605 Polish horsemen had been decisive again at Weissenstein and Kirkholm (10 March 1601).

Kokoda Trail ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Japanese General Tomitaro Horii, advancing across Papua, drove Australian defenders along the Kokoda Trail (or Track) over the steep Stanley Owen Range. The Japanese were finally halted at Imita Ridge, overlooking Port Moresby (28 September). They were then forced to withdraw in terrible jungle fighting back to the northern beaches at Gona, Buna and Sananda (23 July–17 November 1942).

Kokonsaari ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Withdrawing east from Vasa in western Finland, Russian invasion forces under General Jegor Wlastoff turned on the pursuing Swedish army at Kokonsaari. Reinforced by Russians from Nykarleby under General Ivan Fedorovich Jankovich, Wlastoff inflicted a sharp check on Swedish General Otto von Fieandt. However, the Swedes won handsomely a few days later at Lapuu (11 July 1808).

Kokumbona ❙ 1942–1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Army General Alexander Patch took over command on Guadalcanal and launched a ground offensive west, taking Mount Austen, the hill positions known as Galloping Horse and Sea Horse, and the fort at Gifu. The key Japanese centre at Kokumbona then fell by storm and General Haruyoshi Hyakutake withdrew to evacuate from Cape Esperance (17 December 1942–23 January 1943).

Kolarovgrad ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

See Kozludzha

Kolberg ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

An abortive attack on the coast of Prussian Pomerania saw the Russian Kronstadt fleet under Admiral Zakhar Danilovich Mishukov bombard Kolberg (modern Kolobrzeg), then land troops and guns. However, the assault was repulsed and the Russians withdrew with the loss of 600 men. Kolberg did not fall to Russian forces until after a lengthy siege the following year (5 September 1760).

Kolberg ❙ 1761 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

A renewed Russian offensive into Prussian Pomerania saw General Pyotr Rumyantsev lay siege to the port and fortress at Kolberg (modern Kolobrzeg), which was finally forced to surrender after six months. The capture of Kolberg gave Russia a vital strategic port on the Prussian flank, but the death of Empress Elizabeth a few weeks later took Russia out of the war (July–16 December 1761).

Kolberg Heath ❙ 1644 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Swedish Admiral Klas Fleming launched a pre-emptive attack on Denmark and took Fehmarn, before being heavily defeated on nearby Kolberg Heath by Danish ships under command of 67-year-old King Christian IV. Fleming was killed when his ships were blockaded near Kiel, though Karl Gustav Wrangel led the fleet's escape. In October he beat a Danish squadron off Lolland (1 July 1644).

Kolb's Farm ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Pursuing General Joseph E. Johnston through Georgia, Union commander William T. Sherman was blocked by Johnston at Marietta and sent Generals John M. Schofield and Joseph Hooker circling to the southwest. A Confederate counter-attack by General John B. Hood was repulsed at Kolb's Farm and Sherman soon attacked to the north at Kennesaw Mountain (22 June 1864).

Kolin ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

When Austrian Marshal Leopold von Daun advanced to relieve the Prussian siege of Prague, Frederick II of Prussia took as many men as he could spare to attack the Austrian camp at Kolin on the Elbe, east of the city. A bloody action saw Frederick's outnumbered force repulsed with heavy losses. He was forced to lift the siege of Prague and evacuate Bohemia (18 June 1757).

Kollum ❙ 1581 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Turning against William of Orange, Georges Lalaing Count Rennenberg declared for Spain and, after a check at Steenwijk, his army fled east into Groningen following heavy defeat near Kollum by loyal Dutch forces under Diederik Sonoy and Sir John Norris. Rennenberg, who had been too ill to take command, died four days later. His successor soon attacked again at Noordhorn (19 July 1581).

Kolombangara ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Admiral Shunji Izaki again attempted to reinforce the Japanese garrison on Kolombangara, west of New Georgia, and was met off Kolombangara in the Kula Gulf by Admiral Walden Ainsworth. A second deadly night action saw three American cruisers damaged and a destroyer sunk, while Izaki died when his cruiser sank. Meanwhile, the reinforcements got through to Vila (12–13 July 1943).

Kolomna ❙ 1238 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia

On campaign against the Princes of Russia, the Mongol Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) and General Subetai killed Prince Yuri Igorevich at his capital, Ryazan (December 1237). They then besieged and captured Kolomna, southeast of Moscow, held by Yuri's brother Roman, who died in the fighting. The Mongols then systematically destroyed the towns in the Princedom of Ryazan (January 1238).

Kolubara ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Despite checking Austria at the Drina, Serbian Marshal Radomir Putnik fell back before a third invasion by Generals Oskar Potiorek and Liborius von Frank, who broke through and occupied Belgrade (1 December). A counter-offensive towards the Kolubara by Putnik and Zivojin Misic routed the invaders to retake Belgrade. Potiorek and Frank were both dismissed (3–16 December 1914).

Kolwezi ❙ 1978 ❙ Shaba War

After a previous failed attempt (March 1977), about 4,000 rebels under Nathaniel Mbumba entered Shaba Province (Katanga) in southeast Zaire and seized Kolwezi, where 50 whites and many locals were killed. French Foreign Legion paratroops led by Colonel Philippe Erulin landed and there was fierce fighting before the rebels withdrew with perhaps 100 killed (19–21 May 1978).

Komaki ❙ 1584 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

See Nagakute

Komandorski Islands ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Japanese Admiral Boshiro Hosogaya attempting to reinforce Attu, in the Aleutians, was intercepted near the Komandorski Islands by a cruiser squadron under Admiral Charles McMorris. A confused action saw either side suffer one cruiser damaged, but Hosogaya turned away when threatened by a destroyer torpedo attack and was later relieved of command (26 March 1943).

Komárno ❙ 1594 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Komárom

Komárom ❙ 1594 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Responding to Austrian invasion of northern Hungary, Ottoman Grand Vizier Sinan Pasha drove off a siege of Gran by Archduke Matthias and captured Raab after three days. However, despite his huge army, he was frustrated by the stubborn Danube fortress of Komárom (modern Komárno), northwest of Budapest. After a long siege, he was forced to withdraw his expedition with little achieved.

Komárom ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

When Russia intervened in Hungary to help Austria crush revolution, Hungarian General Artur Gorgey was repulsed at Acs, northwest of Budapest, then surrendered the army following defeat at Temesvár. General Gyorgy Klapka continued to hold nearby Komárom (Komárno) fortress against besieging Russian and Austrian forces and finally capitulated a month later (27 September 1849).

Komárow ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As Austrian commander Franz Conrad von Hotzendorf invaded eastern Poland, his northern flank secured Krasnik, while the centre under General Moritz von Auffenberg attacked the Russian Fifth Army around Komárow. The Russians were defeated and fell back to avoid encirclement. Further south, they quickly counter-attacked across the Gnila Lipa towards Lemberg (26–31 August 1914).

Komarów ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

See Zamosc

Komatsu ❙ 1062 ❙ Earlier Nine Years War

Renewing war against the rebel Abe Sadato of Mutsu in northeast Japan after his check at Kawasaki (1058), Imperial Governor Minamoto Yoriyoshi was massively reinforced by Kiyohara Takenori of Dewa and attacked his rival's fortified camp at Komatsu (near modern Ichinoseki in Iwate), where Sadato was defeated and driven out. He was soon routed at Kuriyagawa (5 September 1062).

Komorn ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Komárom

Kondavidu ❙ 1515 ❙ Vijayanagar-Gajapati War

At war with the Gajapati kingdom of Orissa, Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar took Udayagiri (June 1514) and next season laid siege to Kondavidu, near Guntur, held by Prince Virabhadra, son of King Pratapudra. Krishnadeva defeated Pratapudra in battle and captured Kondavidu after a two-month siege. He then advanced north, taking other fortresses, and Pratapudra sued for peace (23 June 1515).

Kondavidu ❙ 1563 ❙ Wars of the Deccan Sultanates

Following defeat for Husain Nizam Shah of Ahmadnagar at Jamkhed (1560), former rival Ibrahim Qutb Shah of Golconda joined him to attack Bijapur. Rama Raya of Hindu Vijayanagar again intervened and, when Ibrahim launched a diversionary attack in the east at Kondavidu, Golconda was routed and he sued for peace. In 1565 the Sultanates joined forces against Rama Raya at Talikota.

Koniah ❙ 1832 ❙ 1st Turko-Egyptian War

See Konya

Königgratz ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Prussian Prince Friedrich Karl invaded Bohemia and won at Münchengratz and Gitschin, while Austrian Field Marshal Ludwig von Benedek concentrated east of Prague, between Sadowa and Königgratz (modern Hradec Kralove). Although Friedrich Karl attacked prematurely, Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm arrived with reinforcements and Austria was decisively defeated (3 July 1866).

Königsberg ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

With Russia falling back from disastrous defeat at Friedland, Napoleon Bonaparte advanced towards the Nieman and next day, Marshal Nicolas Soult bombarded Königsberg (modern Kaliningrad), defended by Prussian General Anton Lestocq. Soult occupied the Baltic port city when Lestocq evacuated overnight and the Emperors of France and Russia met to make peace (15 June 1807).

Königsberg ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As part of the Vistula-Oder offensive, Generals Ivan Bagramyan and Ivan Chernyakovsky swept into East Prussia, but stalled outside Königsberg. With Chernyakovsky killed, Marshal Aleksandr Vasilevksy took command and led a massive assault, with 42,000 Germans killed and 92,000 captured when General Otto Lasch surrendered. Vasilevksy then reduced Samland at Pillau (6–9 April 1945).

Königshofen ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War

Georg Truchsess von Waldburg driving into Franconia soon after victory at Böblingen, routed a peasant force at Krautheim, then advanced on the main force of 8,000 men and 32 cannon on the Tauber, southwest of Würzburg, at Königshofen. Attacking with artillery fire and lance, Truchsess destroyed the peasant army then marched to recover Würzburg and relieve Frauenberg (2 June 1525).

Königswartha ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

As Napoleon Bonaparte marched east towards Dresden after victory at Lützen (2 May), Russian General Mikhail Barclay de Tolly attacked an Italian division under General Louis de Peyri at Königswartha, northeast of Kamenz. Bonaparte's Italian allies lost 3,000 men, including 750 prisoners, before the Russians were driven off by Marshal Michel Ney's cavalry (19 May 1813).

Konitsa ❙ 1947–1948 ❙ Greek Civil War

Defeated in northern Greece at Florina, Communist commander Markos Vaphiadis was then repulsed near the Albanian border at Konitsa. After insurgent action at Grevena and Metsovo, Vaphiadis attacked Florina again with 2,500 men. The garrison resisted strongly and he withdrew when US-equipped government troops arrived (13–15 July & 25 December 1947–7 January 1948).

Konitz ❙ 1454 ❙ Thirteen Years War

See Chojnice

Konotop ❙ 1659 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

When Ukrainian Cossacks openly allied themselves with Poland, Prince Aleksei Trubetskoi led 150,000 Russians into the Ukraine, where he besieged Gregori Huliantski at Konotop, northeast of Kiev. Cossack leader Ivan Vyhovsky arrived with Polish and Tatar aid to rout the Russians and they withdrew. A fresh Russian offensive the following year was repulsed at Liubar (April–28 June 1659).

Kontum ❙ 1972 ❙ Vietnam War

During the Eastertide Offensive, four North Vietnamese Divisions with tanks invaded the central highlands to take Dak To (24 April), then attack Kontum. After overrunning fire-bases to the northwest, they surrounded and seized part of Kontum City. The offensive was finally halted, then repulsed by fierce South Vietnamese defence and massive US air support (14 May–19 June 1972).

Konya ❙ 1832 ❙ 1st Turko-Egyptian War

Ibrahim Pasha, son of Egyptian Viceroy Mohammed Ali, conquered Syria, then invaded Anatolia and occupied Konya (21 November). Turkish Grand Vizier Reshid Mehmed Pasha took a large force to cut off the Egyptian supplies, but near Konya the Ottoman army suffered a devastating defeat. Ibrahim eventually agreed to evacuate Anatolia in return for Adana and Syria (21 December 1832).

Konz ❙ 1675 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Consarbruck

Koppal ❙ 1677 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

On campaign in southern India, Maratha King Shivaji sent Hambir Rao Mohite and Dhanaji Jadhav against the fortress of Koppal, east of Gadag in Mysore, held by Pathan brothers, Husain Khan Miana and Abdul Rahman Khan in Bijapur service. Husain Khan was killed in severe fighting and his brother was captured and surrendered Koppal. Shivaji then attacked Vellore (January 1677).

Koppal ❙ 1790–1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

Nizam Ali of Hyderabad supported his British allies in renewed war against Tipu Sultan of Mysore by sending General Mahabat Jang against Koppal, near the Tungabhadra River, east of Gadag in northern Mysore. After a long siege, the town surrendered following Mysorean defeat at Bangalore. At the end of the war, Koppal was ceded to Hyderabad (18 April 1791).

Koppam ❙ 1054 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Rajadhiraja of Chola, grandson of Rajaraja the Great of Chola, continued attacks on Chalukya territory, but in a decisive battle at Koppam, King Somesvara I (Ahavamalla) of Later Chalukya defeated and killed him. (Some Chola sources claim Rajadhiraja's brother Rajendra arrived late to secure victory.) Chola later won at Kudalsangamam (1063) but the dynasty was soon supplanted.

Koprukoy ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

Six months after checking the Turks at Karakilise, Russian commander Nikolai Yudenich prepared a massive advance southwest from Kars towards Koprukoy. Following intense fighting on the northern flank at Kara Dag, the main attack smashed the Turkish front. Abdul Kerim narrowly escaped encirclement and retreated to Erzurum with massive losses, many from frostbite (10–19 January 1916).

Kora ❙ 1765 ❙ Bengal War

After Britain's great victory in northern India at Buxar (October 1764), Major John Carnac pursued Mir Kassim of Bengal and Shujah-ud-Daula of Oudh into the Doab, where they joined up with Marathas under Mulhar Rao Holkar. On the Plain of Kora, south of Cawnpore, British artillery destroyed the Maratha army. Mulhar Rao fled to Kalpi and the Nawab made peace (3 May 1765).

Korbach ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Marshal Victor-Francois Broglie renewed France's offensive in Hesse following defeat at Minden the previous year, marching west from Kassel to Korbach, where Prince Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand of Brunswick was badly defeated. His uncle Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick arrived to stabilise the position and the Hereditary Prince was sent against the French days later at Emsdorf (10 July 1760).

Korcula ❙ 1298 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

See Curzola

Koregaon ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

In his first offensive since defeat at Kirkee (November 1817), Peshwa Baji Rao II of Poona took his Maratha army against a tiny British force northeast of Poona on the Bhima, at Koregaon. A remarkable defence by Captain Francis Staunton held off the Marathas all day until the approach of General Joseph Smith forced the Peshwa to withdraw with over 600 casualties (6 January 1818).

Korigaum ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

See Koregaon

Korijan ❙ 1731 ❙ Turko-Persian War

See Hamadan

Kornspruit ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Sannah's Post

Koromogawa ❙ 1189 ❙ Gempei War

After his great victory in 1185 at Dannoura, Minamoto Yoshitsune fell out with his powerful brother Yoritomo and fled to Fujiwara Hidehira in northeast Japan, who gave him Koromogawa fortress. When Hidehira died, his son Yasuhira, hoping to appease Yoritomo, besieged and defeated Yoshitsune, who committed seppuku. Yoritomo then marched north and conquered the Fujiwara.

Kororareka ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

Resisting authority in the New Zealand's far north, Maori Chief Hone Heke thrice cut down the flagpole at Kororareka (modern Russell), then joined with Chief Kawiti to attack the town. About 250 inexperienced troops and militia were driven off, with 13 Europeans and 34 Maoris killed. Kororareka was plundered and burned, before Heke was attacked two months later at Puketutu (11 March 1845).

Korsun ❙ 1630 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

See Pereiaslav

Korsun ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

The Polish Hetmen Marcin Kalinowski and Mikolaj Potocki sent to suppress rebellion in the Ukraine, lost their advance guard at Zolte Wody and were attacked at Korsun, southeast of Kiev, by Cossack leader Bogdan Chmielnicki and Crimean Tatars under Tuhai-Bei. The Poles were routed, with both leaders among 8,000 captured. Chmielnicki then marched west towards Pilawce (26 May 1648).

Korsun ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With the German Eighth Army trapped west of the Dneiper, General Nikolai Vatutin drove south from Zhitomir and General Ivan Konev moved north from Kirovograd to encircle the Korsun Pocket under General Wilhelm Stemmerman. While about 35,000 Germans escaped, perhaps 70,000 were killed or surrendered and the Russians advanced west to Kamenets Podolsk (24 January–17 February 1944).

Korupedion ❙ 281 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

See Corupedion

Kos ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

When the British seized some of the Dodecanese Islands after Italy's surrender, German forces launched an overwhelming parachute and seaborne assault on Kos. Colonel Lionel Kenyon's under-equipped garrison and their Italian allies had to surrender and Colonel Felice Leggio and 89 of his Italian officers were executed. The Germans then turned against Leros (5–6 October 1943).

Kose Dagh ❙ 1243 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Asia Minor

Marching into Asia Minor, the Mongol Baiju seized Erzurum then attacked the Seljuk Sultan Kaykhusraw at Kose Dagh, west of Sivas. Baiju decisively defeated the Sultan's mixed force, including Armenians, Greeks and western European mercenaries, opening Asia Minor to further Mongol conquest. The Sultanate of Rum later became a dependant of the Mongol regime in Persia (26 June 1243).

Kossovo ❙ 1389 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Ottoman Sultan Murad I captured southern Bulgaria with victory at the Maritza (1371) and later marched against Lazar I of Serbia, who was aided by Bosnia and Albania. Murad was assassinated during battle at Kossovo, but his son Bayazid won a decisive victory, virtually securing the Balkans. Bayazid executed Lazar and defeated a Crusader army in 1396 at Nicopolis (15 June 1389).

Kossovo ❙ 1448 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

To avenge Christian defeat at Varna in November 1444, Hungarian Regent Janos Hunyadi invaded Serbia in the last major attempt to recover the Balkans from Sultan Murad II. Without waiting for support from George Kastriote Skanderbeg of Albania, Hunyadi was defeated in a bloody battle at Kossovo after his Wallachians deserted. Constantinople fell five years later (17–20 October 1448).

Kossovo ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Marshal Radomir Putnik attempting to defend central Serbia, made a stand on the Plain of Kossovo, north of Kacanik. Crushed between Bulgarians advancing north from Skopje and Austro-German forces driving south from Belgrade, the Serbians had to retreat west through a blizzard into Albania. The shattered survivors were evacuated and later fought at Salonika (24–29 November 1915).

Kossovo ❙ 1999 ❙ Kossovo War

After suppressing Kossovo separatists in southeast Serbia in 1998, Yugoslav troops and Serb militia renewed their offensive, causing heavy damage and huge displacement of mainly Muslim refugees. When NATO began an intensive campaign of air-strikes against Serbian targets, the Yugoslav government agreed to withdraw and international peacekeepers arrived (24 March–9 June 1999).

Kostalac ❙ 601 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars
See Viminacium

Kostliju ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War
See Kozludzha

Kosturino ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

As Anglo-French forces were driven back along the Vardar from a failed intervention to aid Serbia, British General Lewis Nicol attempted to hold the right flank in steep country at Kosturino, north of Lake Doiran. Attacked by a superior Bulgarian army under General Georgi Todorov, the British suffered costly losses and fell back to defend the line at Salonika (7–8 December 1915).

Koszeg ❙ 1532 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars
See Guns

Kota Bharu ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Within hours of the attack on Pearl Harbour, Japanese forces landed unopposed at Singora and Patani in southern Thailand, while General Hiroshi Takumi stormed ashore at Kota Bharu in northeast Malaya. Stiff resistance by Indian troops under General "Billy" Key inflicted heavy Japanese losses. But when tanks landed the British withdrew south towards Kuala Lipis (8–9 December 1941).

Kotah ❙ 1804 ❙ 2nd British-Maratha War
See Monson's Retreat

Kotah ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Lieutenant Frederick Roberts marched with 600 men and two guns from Nasirabad to Kotah on the Chambal, where troops of Rajah Ram Singh of Kotah had mutinied and besieged him in Kotah's citadel. After sending some troops to reinforce the Rajah, Roberts bombarded the town and took it by assault, capturing 50 guns. The Rajah's authority was then restored (27–30 March 1858).

Kotah-ki-Serai ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Marching west through intense heat in pursuit of defeated rebel forces from Kalpi (23 May), General Sir Hugh Rose secured victory at Morar then next day sent General Michael William Smith against rebels in a strong position at Kotah-ki-Serai, just five miles from Gwalior. The warrior-Queen, the Rhani of Jhansi, was killed in confused fighting and her disheartened followers fled (17 June 1858).

Kotelnikovo ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

In a desperate effort to relieve besieged Stalingrad, Marshal Erich von Manstein attacked from the southwest through Kotelnikovo. His German and Romanian divisions reached the Myshkova and Aksai Rivers where they were halted by bitter cold and stubborn defence. Von Manstein was forced to withdraw with over 16,000 casualties and Stalingrad was doomed (12–30 December 1942).

Kotlin Island ❙ 1705 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Following the fall of Narva (August 1704), Swedish Admiral Cornelius Anckarstjerna sailed against Saint Petersburg and attempted to land forces. Off Kotlin Island, in the Gulf of Finland, he was met in a prolonged action by a much smaller Russian squadron under Admiral Kornely Kruys, aided by the Russian batteries, Kotlin and Kronstadt. The Swedes were finally driven off with heavy losses.

Kotor ❙ 1690 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars
See Cattaro

Kotor ❙ 1813–1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)
See Cattaro

Koto-ri ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

After bitter fighting at Chosin, Marine General Oliver Smith famously "attacked in another direction" to break out through surrounding Chinese forces. A fighting retreat in extreme cold saw the Allies fall back through Hagaru-ri to Koto-ri, where a costly rearguard action secured the withdrawal to Hungnam. About 200,000 troops and civilians were evacuated by sea (5–10 December 1950).

Kouchanas ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

See Freyer's Farm

Kouno ❙ 1899 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

Emile Gentil determined to avenge the French disaster in July at Niellim and marched north from Fort Archambault along the Chari against Muslim leader Rabih az-Zubayr. At Kouno, southeast of Lake Chad, the "Black Sultan" was badly beaten. Early the following year, Gentil supported a combined French force which finally defeated and killed Rabih further north at Kousséri (October 1899).

Kousséri ❙ 1900 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

Six months after defeat at Kouno, Muslim leader Rabih az-Zubayr faced a massive converging assault south of Lake Chad under Emile Gentil from Congo, Francois Lamy and Fernand Foureau from Algeria and Jules Joalland from Niger. Battle on the Logone at Kousséri (just inside modern Cameroun) saw Rabih defeated and killed (Lamy also died) and France secured Chad (22 April 1900).

Kovel ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Stochod

Kovno ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

To protect the tail end of Napoleon Bonaparte's retreat from Moscow, Marshal Joachim Murat stubbornly defended the bridgehead on the Nieman at Kovno (modern Kaunus, Lithuania). The frozen river made the French position untenable, but he held off defeat until Marshal Michel Ney arrived with the last survivors. Ney was reputedly the last French soldier to leave Russia (13 December 1812).

Kovno ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

On the northern flank of Germany's Triple Offensive, General Hermann von Eichhorn advanced on Kovno (Kaunas). Russia's Northwest commander Mikhail Alexeyev believed the fortress would hold out, but its garrison was weak and ill-disciplined. Kovno was taken by storm, yielding 1,300 guns and over 800,000 shells, opening the way to Vilna and Dvinsk (7–15 August 1915).

Kowloon ❙ 1839 ❙ 1st Opium War

Manchu Commissioner Lin Zexu drove the British out of Macao and sent war junks to prevent British Superintendent Captain Charles Elliot securing food for the British ships off Hong Kong. The frigates Volage and Hyacinth (Captain Henry Smith) shelled the junks off Kowloon to secure Elliot's supplies in an incident, which helped precipitate war with China (4 September 1839).

Kowloon ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (China)

Just four hours after Pearl Harbour, Japanese General Tadayoshi Sano led 20,000 men against the Chinese border defences of Hong Kong. With the fall of the Shing Mun Redoubt, the so-called Gindrinkers Line collapsed and the invaders swarmed into Kowloon. The British Mainland Brigade under Brigadier Cedric Wallis then withdrew to Hong Kong Island (8–10 December 1941).

Kozludzha ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

With Russia and Turkey almost exhausted by war, an offensive by Generals Alexander Suvorov and Mikhail Kamenski defeated Ottoman forces under Abdul Rezak on the Danube at Kozludzha (modern Kozloduy) and drove the Turks into blockade at Shumla (Kolarovgrad).

Sultan Abdul-Hamid soon made peace, giving Russia effective command of the Black Sea (9 June 1774).

Kozuki ❙ 1577–1578 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Having secured Nagashino, Toyotomi Hideyoshi marched west and starved the Mori castle of Kozuki in Harima into surrender, assigning it to Amako Katsuhisa and Yamanka Shikanosuke. Besieged by Mori commanders Kikkawa Motoharu and Kobayakawa Takakage, Amako committed seppuku and Yamanka was captured and killed. In 1582 Hideyoshi attacked the Mori at Takamatsu.

Krajina ❙ 1995 ❙ Croatian War

See Knin

Krak de Chevaliers ❙ 1271 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

Mamluk Sultan Baibars completed his capture of the major inland Crusader cities and fortresses by marching on the massive Hospitallier castle of Krak de Chevaliers in central Syria. As one of the most powerful fortifications of its day, it had never been captured. But during an intensive month-long assault its outer wall was breached and the castle was forced to capitulate (3 March–8 April 1271).

Krasnik ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As Austrian commander Count Franz Conrad von Hotzendorf invaded eastern Poland, his northern force under General Victor von Dankl smashed into Generals Aleksei Evert and Pavel Plehve, southwest of Lublin, at Krasnik. The Russian armies were driven back with heavy losses and a few days later other Austrians further east repulsed the Russians around Komárow (23–24 August 1914).

Krasnodar ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Ekaterinodar

Krasnoi ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Krasnoye

Krasnoye (1st) ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

Napoleon Bonaparte's army advancing into Russia towards Smolensk crossed the Dnieper and found the road blocked at Krasnoye by a force of about 9,000 Russians under General Dmitri Sergeevich Neverovski. After some sharp fighting led by Marshals Joachim Murat and Michel Ney, the Russians withdrew to Smolensk, losing about 1,500 casualties and 800 prisoners (14 August 1812).

Krasnoye (2nd) ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

In order to cut off Napoleon Bonaparte's retreat from Moscow, Prince Mikhail Kutuzov's Russians attempted to ambush the French west of Smolensk at Krasnoye. A courageous but costly counter-attack by Marshals Louis Davout and Michel Ney drove off General Mikhail Miloradovich and the French retreat continued to the disastrous passage of the Berezina (17 November 1812).

Krefeld ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Crefeld

Kresna ❙ 1913 ❙ 2nd Balkan (Inter-ally) War

When Bulgaria suddenly attacked her former allies over Macedonia, King Constantine of Greece checked their advance near Kilkis then pursued them through hard fighting to a defensive position in the Pass at Kresna, near the Struma. A bitter action cost heavy losses on both sides before Constantine broke through to secure Simitli. The war ended a week later (21–24 July 1913).

Kressenbrunn ❙ 1260 ❙ Bohemian Wars

In the breakup of the Babenberg inheritance, Ottokar II of Bohemia secured Austria by agreement, then determined to also grab Styria, which had been granted to Bela IV of Hungary. With victory at Kressenbrunn, on the March northeast of Vienna, Ottokar seized Styria and continued to aggressively expand his Bohemian Kingdom until killed by the Habsburgs at Marchfeld.

Krimiskop ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Tweefontein

Kringen ❙ 1612 ❙ War of Kalmar

With Sweden and Denmark at war over Lapland, 300 Scottish mercenaries under Colonel Alexander Ramsay landed in Danish-ruled Norway on their way to aid Sweden at Alvsborg and were ambushed by Norwegian militia at Kringen, near Gudbrandsdalen. In an action much-celebrated in Norwegian legend, most of the Scots were killed in battle or executed afterwards (26 August 1612).

Krishna ❙ 1398 ❙ Vijayanagar-Bahmani Wars

Thirty years after Hindu Vijayanagar was routed at Kauthal, King Harihara II of Vijayanagar renewed the war against the Muslim Bahmanid Dynasty, leading a huge force against Sultan Firuz Shah. Harihara was surprised and defeated at the Krishna River by a much smaller force of Bahmani cavalry and his son was killed. The Hindu army dispersed back to Vijayanagar and a peace was agreed.

Krithia (1st) ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

British General Aylmer Hunter-Weston landed at the tip of the Gallipoli Peninsula around Helles (25 April) and advanced inland towards Krithia, on the heights of Achi Baba. His disorganised attack stalled against reinforced Turkish defences and the Anglo-French Allies were driven off with more than 3,000 casualties. The Turks soon counter-attacked at Eski Hissarlik (28 April 1915).

Krithia (2nd) ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

British commander Sir Ian Hamilton halted a Turkish counter-attack around Eski Hissarlik then determined on a fresh attack towards Krithia. The frontal assault was a disaster, with over 6,000 Allied casualties, including many Australians and New Zealanders transferred from Anzac after surviving Baby 700. Both sides then dug in for trench warfare (6–8 May 1915).

Krithia (3rd) ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

Despite previous losses attacking towards Krithia, British General Aylmer Hunter-Weston, now heavily reinforced and supported by new French commander Albert Gouraud, determined on a fresh assault. Advancing out of trenches against powerful Turkish defences, the Allies suffered terrible losses for no gain and had to pin their hopes on a landing in the north at Suvla Bay (4 June 1915).

Krivoy Rog ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

While the Russians took Kirovograd, further south Generals Rodion Malinovsky and Fedor Tolbukhin launched a massive offensive against German and Romanian divisions in the Dnieper Bend. The Nikopol bridgehead was lost, then the key city of Krivoy Rog, as Marshal Ewald von Kleist withdrew to escape encirclement falling back towards Odessa (10 January–22 February 1944).

Kroissenbrunn ❙ 1260 ❙ Bohemian Wars

See Kressenbrunn

Kromeriz ❙ 1423 ❙ Hussite Wars

Hussite nobles led by Divis Borek of Miletinek campaigned against Sigismund of Hungary, attacking Moravia, held by Sigismund's son-in-law Albert of Austria. Outside Kromeriz (German Kremsier), Borek defeated a Royalist force under Bishop John of Olomouc and Duke Premek of Opava then returned to Bohemia to fight Hussite leader John Zizka in August at Strachuv (July 1423).

Krommydi ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence

With Navarino besieged by Egyptian commander Ibrahim Pasha, Greeks under sea Captain Skourti tried to disrupt communication between Navarino and Methone. At Krommydi, up to 7,000 Greeks and irregulars were routed with about 600 killed by Ibrahim's much smaller, yet disciplined Egyptian force. Navarino soon fell and Ibrahim joined the siege of Missolonghi (19 April 1825).

Kronstadt ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

In support of the White cause in the Baltic, British Admiral Walter Cowan bombed the key Bolshevik fortress of Kronstadt, outside Petrograd, then sent eight coastal motorboats against the Red Fleet. The battleships Andrei Pervozvanni and Petropavlovsk and the depot ship Pamyut Azova were sunk in shallow water in a bold assault, which saw two Victoria Crosses won (18 August 1919).

Kronstadt ❙ 1921 ❙ Kronstadt Rebellion

When sailors at the island fortress of Kronstadt, off Petrograd (St Petersburg), mutinied over post-war civilian famine, Leon Trotsky led Red infantry in a night assault over the ice and stormed the fortress amid heavy losses. About 800 mutineers escaped to Finland and the rest were executed or imprisoned, but the rising led to introduction of the New Economic Policy (17–18 March 1921).

Kronstadt Bay ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

With the Swedish army repulsed at Fredrikshamn (18 May), Duke Charles of Sodermanland (brother of Gustav III) sailed into Kronstadt Bay, at the head of the Gulf of Finland, where he met Russian Admiral Alexander Kruse off Cape Styrsudden. Action over two days proved inconclusive and, when the Russian Reval Squadron arrived, Duke Charles withdrew into Vyborg Bay (3–4 June 1790).

Kroszka ❙ 1739 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

Supporting Russia against Turkey in the Balkans, Austrian Marshal Count Georg Oliver von Wallis faced a massive Turkish advance southeast of Belgrade at Kroszka (modern Grocka). Grand Vizier Al-Haji Mohammed inflicted a heavy defeat then advanced to besiege Belgrade, which was later given up when Austria made a separate peace (22 July 1739).

Krugersdorp ❙ 1896 ❙ Jameson's Raid

Encouraged by Cecil Rhodes, Dr Leandar Starr Jameson led 600 mounted police and volunteers from Rhodesia to raise rebellion in the Boer Transvaal. Defeated at Krugersdorp, west of Johannesburg, Jameson lost 17 killed and 55 wounded before surrendering to Pieter Cronjé at nearby Doornkop. He was then handed over and taken to England for trial and prison (1–2 January 1896).

Krujë, Albania ❙ 1448 ❙ Albanian-Turkish Wars

Ottoman Sultan Murad II invading Albania against George Kastriote Skanderbeg besieged Svetigrad, then left a covering force and continued on to besiege the strategic fortress of Krujë, on a mountain spur north of Tirana. However, after Skanderbeg defeated the Turks at Dibra, Murad had to withdraw to oppose a Hungarian invasion of Serbia, which he soon crushed at Kossovo.

Krujë, Albania ❙ 1450 ❙ Albanian-Turkish Wars

After decisive victory at Kossovo in 1448, Sultan Murad II again besieged the mountain fortress of Krujë in central Albania, held by Count Uran. With George Kastriote Skanderbeg harrying him from the hills and winter approaching, Murad withdrew after four months with up to 20,000 casualties. Skanderbeg later handed Krujë to Alfonso V of Naples (14 May–September 1450).

Krujë, Albania ❙ 1466–1467 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

In a fresh Turkish invasion of central Albania, Ottoman Sultan Mehmed II and Balaban Pasha besieged Krujë, north of Tirana, held by Venetian troops. When the Sultan withdrew, George Kastriote Skanderbeg defeated and killed Balaban to relieve the siege. Mehmed returned with a great army but did not press the siege. Skanderbeg shortly died and Albania was soon conquered.

Krujë, Albania ❙ 1478 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

Three years after a failed campaign against Scutari in Venetian Albania, Sultan Mehmed II launched a fresh assault and besieged the nearby fortress city of Krujë. The starving Venetian garrison surrendered after a year on a promise of safe conduct, but most were executed. Mehmed was then able to concentrate his army on the renewed siege of Scutari itself.

Krujë, Montenegro ❙ 1796 ❙ Montenegran-Scutari War

See Krusi

Kruptchitsa ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

Polish Nationalist General Karol Sierakovski facing a Russian counter-offensive established about 15,000 men in a strong position east of the Bug near Kubrin at Kruptchitsa. Heavy bombardment by Russian Field Marshal Alexander Suvorov drove the Poles out with costly losses. They managed to withdraw with their guns and fought again three days later at Brest-Litovsk (16 September 1794).

Krusevac ❙ 1454 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

When Ottoman Sultan Mehmed II invaded Serbia, Hungarian Regent Janos Hunyadi marched to Belgrade, then advanced southeast to Krusevac on the Rasina, defended by a large contingent under Firuz Bey. Hunyadi destroyed the Ottoman force in a surprise dawn attack, capturing Firuz Bey and a large number of Turks, who were later exchanged for Serbian prisoners (September 1454).

Krusi ❙ 1796 ❙ Montenegran-Scutari War

On campaign against Peter I of Montenegro, Mahmud Pasha Bustalija of Shkoder (Scutari) was routed near Spuz at Martinici and two months later, with his invasion army reinforced to a reported 30,000 Turks, he was attacked again a few miles to the southwest at Krusi. The Pasha was decisively defeated and killed and Peter secured the Brda highlands (22 September 1796).

Kuangchang ❙ 1934 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Guangchang

Kuan-tu ❙ 200 ❙ Wars of the Three Kingdoms

See Guandu

Kuba ❙ 1262 ❙ Mongol Dynastic Wars

Two years after a Mongol loss in Syria at Ain Jalut, Hulegu, the Il-Khan of Iran and grandson of Genghis Khan, came under attack in Georgia by his Muslim cousin Berke, Kipchak Khan of the Golden Horde. Marching north of the Caucasus, Hulegu beat Berke in Azerbaijan near modern Kuba. His son Abaqa then rashly pursued Berke and was soon defeated at the Terek (14 November 1262).

Kuban ❙ 1222 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

With the Khwarezmian Empire destroyed after its final defeat at the Indus, the Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan sent General Subetai north into Christian Georgia, ruled by Queen Russudan. At the Kuban River the Georgian army was heavily defeated by Subetai and Jebei, who marched north into the Ukraine for victory the following year over the Russians at the Kalka.

Kuban ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

White commander Pyotr Wrangel in the Crimea launched a late offensive, sending an amphibious expedition under General Sergei Ulugai east into the Kuban to threaten Ekaterinodar (modern Krasnodar). Despite little initial resistance, Ulugai faced massive Red Army reinforcements and was forced to withdraw with terrible losses. Wrangel was soon beaten at the Perekop (August 1920).

Kudalsangaman ❙ 1063 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Rajadhiraja of Chola died at Koppam (1054) and his brother Virarajendra later faced attack by Somesvara (Ahavamalla) of Later Chalukya, who sent a large force under Dandanayaka and the Princes, Vikkalan and Singanan. Near the confluence of the Krishna and Tungabhadra at Kudalsangamam, Virarajendra won a great victory. However, within a few years Chalukya seized the throne of Chola.

Kudarangan ❙ 1904 ❙ American-Moro Wars

At war against the Americans on Mindanao in the southern Philippines, the Muslim Moro Datu Ali faced counter-attack by General Leonard Wood and withdrew to the huge fortress at Kudarangan, inland from Coabato. After heavy bombardment, Datu Ali slipped away overnight, along with about 5,000 men, women and children, and fought on until killed near Buluan (March 1904).

Kuei-ling ❙ 353 BC ❙ China's Era of the Warring States

See Guiling

Kufah ❙ 1060 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

With Toghril Beg occupied elsewhere, General Arslan al-Muzaffar al-Basasiri and Quraysh ibn Badran retook Baghdad (December 1058) and recognised Fatimid Egypt. But, al-Basasiri's sponsors soon abandoned him and he had to escape the city. Pursued by Seljuk cavalry to Saqy al-Furat, near Kufah, his brother-in-law Dubays fled and al-Basasiri was defeated and executed (15 January 1060).

Kufah ❙ 1920 ❙ Iraqi Revolt

On the offensive against Arab insurgents south of Baghdad, British General Henry Walker advanced southwest from Hillah to relieve Captain Dermot M. Dowling at Kufah. While another column struck west to seize Tuwairij, and other British forces further south advanced on Samawah, Walker fought his way into Kufah, effectively ending the war (21 July–17 October 1920).

Kufit ❙ 1885 ❙ Sudanese-Ethiopian War

Mahdist General Osman Digna was besieging Kassala on the Mareb when Abyssinian commander Ras Alula led a 10,000-strong relief force west from Asmara and inflicted a heavy defeat on the Dervishes at Kufit. The Mahdists lost at least 3,000 dead, including many killed after the battle. However, Kassala had already surrendered and Ras Alula returned to Asmara (23 September 1885).

Kula Gulf ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

When Japanese forces tried to reinforce Kolombangara, west of New Georgia, ten destroyers under Admiral Teruo Akiyama were met in the nearby Kula Gulf by Admiral Walden Ainsworth's cruiser squadron. The Japanese lost two destroyers and Akiyama was killed, and an American cruiser was sunk. However, the Japanese troops were successfully landed (5–6 July 1943).

Kulevcha ❙ 1829 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

As he advanced through the Balkans after victory at Varna (October 1828), Russian General Count Hans von Diebitsch marched against Grand Vizier Reshid Mehmed Pasha 40 miles west at Kulevcha. Trapped in a deep valley, the Turks lost 5,000 men before they managed to withdraw. Diebitsch then took his army across the steep Balkan Mountains towards Adrianople (11 June 1829).

Kulikovo ❙ 1380 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

Encouraged by victory over the Mongols at the Vozha, Russian Princes under Dimitri of Moscow took a reputed 150,000 men to Kulikovo on the Upper Don. Without his former Lithuanian allies, General Mamai's Mongol army was destroyed and Dimitri was named "Donskoi." Mamai was soon overthrown at the Kalka and Mongol forces captured Moscow in 1382 (8 September 1380).

Kul-i-Malik ▌ 1512 ▌ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

Uzbek conqueror Muhammad Shaybani Khan died at Merv (1510) and the Mughal Babur of Kabul seized Samarkand for the third time after Pul-i-Sanghin. Without his Persian allies he was defeated near Bokhara at Kul-i-Malik by new Uzbek leader Ubaid Khan. Babur was defeated again at Ghujduwan and abandoned hope of recovering the capital of his ancester Tamerlane (May 1512).

Kulm ▌ 1794 ▌ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Chelmno

Kulm ▌ 1813 ▌ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Just days after massive defeat at Dresden, the Allies resumed their policy of attacking Napoleon Bonaparte's lieutenants and French General Dominique Vandamme found himself outnumbered by a huge Austrian-Prussian-Russian army under Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg at Kulm in Bohemia. Vandamme was captured and his force was virtually destroyed (29–30 August 1813).

Kum ▌ 1950 ▌ Korean War

As North Korean forces advanced south from Seoul through Osan and Chochiwon, American commander William Walker tried to establish a defensive line on the Kum River. North Korean General Lee Kwon Mu stormed across on a broad front and threatened to envelop the defenders. As a result the Americans had to abandon the Kum and fell back 20 miles to the city of Taejon (14–16 July 1950).

Kumamoto ▌ 1877 ▌ Satsuma Rebellion

Despite supporting the Meiji Restoration, Japanese Marshal Saigo Takamori eventually led a rebellion in Satsuma, marching 30,000 men towards Kumamoto, in central Kyushu. Saigo defeated General Tani Tanjo (Tateki), who defended the town for 50 days until Prince Arisugawa Taruhito arrived with an Imperial army. The rebels then withdrew to Kagoshima (22 February–14 April 1877).

Kumanovo ▌ 1912 ▌ 1st Balkan War

As the war started, Prince Alexander of Serbia invaded Macedonia and met Turkish General Zekki Pasha northeast of Skopje at Kumanovo. A bloody action cost each side over 4,000 men before the Turks fled towards Monastir and Skopje fell more than 500 years after Ottoman conquest at Kossovo. Turkey was routed the same day in Thrace at Kirk Kilissa (23–24 October 1912).

Kumasi ▌ 1874 ▌ 2nd British-Ashanti War

See Odasu

Kumbakonam ▌ 1782 ▌ 2nd British-Mysore War

Aided by French Major Henri Lally, Tipu Sultan, heir to the ruler of Mysore, surrounded British Colonel John Brathwaite in southeast India near Kumbakonam on the Coleroon River (modern Kollidam). With fewer than 2,000 men, Brathwaite was overwhelmed and surrendered after terrible slaughter. Tipu then marched north to capture the port of Cuddalore (18 February 1782).

Kumbi ▌ 1076 ▌ Fall of Ghana

Determined to spread Islam into the great West African Empire of Ghana (modern Mali and Mauretania), Almoravid Berbers under Abu Bakr ibn Umar took Audaghost (1054) and eventually seized the capital Kumbi (north of modern Bamako). While the invaders soon left, the empire entered a slow decline. Kumbi fell again to the Sosso in 1203 and was absorbed by Sundiata of Mali in 1240.

Kumbi ▌ 1203 ▌ Wars of Sosso

Amid the decline of the Empire of Ghana, the warrior-ruler Sumanguru of Kaniaga led a campaign of expansion for the Sosso people of West Africa. After subsuming several neighbouring states, Sumanguru attacked and captured the former Ghanaian capital of Kumbi. However, Kumbi's role in the strategic trans-Saharan trade declined and the Sosso Empire was soon overthrown at Kirina.

Kumeiky ❙ 1637 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

When Pavlo Pavliuk led a revolt by anti-Polish Cossacks in the Ukraine, he captured Korsun (August 1637). He was then badly defeated at Kumeiky by a Polish army under Hetman Mikolaj Potocki and withdrew under siege to nearby Borovitsa (near Chigirin). During negotiations, Pavliuk was handed over on condition of safe conduct but he was taken to Warsaw and executed (16 December 1637).

Kum Kale ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

In support of Allied landings on Gallipoli Peninsula at Helles and Anzac Cove, 3,000 French under General Albert d'Amade landed near Kum Kale, on the Asiatic side of the entrance to the Dardanelles. A Turkish counter-attack cost about 1,700 French casualties before the costly diversion was withdrawn to support the main Allied offensives against Krithia (25–27 April 1915).

Kumsong ❙ 1953 ❙ Korean War

Two days after victory at Pork Chop Hill, about 150,000 Chinese with massive artillery support assaulted the Kumsong Salient, east of Pyongyang. The last Chinese offensive fell mainly on South Korean troops, who suffered costly losses. The Allies had to withdraw about six miles to the Kumsong River, straightening the line just a week before armistice ended the war (13–20 July 1953).

Kunch ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Hugh Rose captured the strategic stronghold at Jhansi (3 April), then advanced northeast towards Kalpi and was blocked at the town of Kunch by a large force under the great rebel leader Tantia Topi. With a brilliant flank attack—in terrible heat, which caused many British deaths from sunstroke—the rebels were defeated and driven out. Rose then pressed on towards Kalpi (6 May 1858).

Kunduz ❙ 2001 ❙ Afghanistan War

Having taken Mazar-i-Sharif, the Northern Alliance turned east to besiege perhaps 10,000 Taliban at Kunduz, including 3,000 Arabs and Chechens determined to fight to the death. Massive American bombing and fierce ground attack saw the last Taliban stronghold in the north surrender to General Rashid Dostam. Many prisoners died in transports or at Qala-i-Jangi (14–26 November 2001).

Kunduzcha ❙ 1391 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol Tamerlane repulsed Toktamish, Khan of the Golden Horde, at the Syr Darya, then marched north into Russia and heavily defeated his former protégé in a three-day battle at Kunduzcha, east of the Volga. Tamerlane sacked the Khan's capital at Sarai before withdrawing to deal with rebellion in Persia. Four years later he returned to destroy Toktamish at the Terek (18 June 1391).

Kunersdorf ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia advanced across the Oder to avenge the defeat at Kay (23 July) and attacked a massively superior Austro-Russian force under General Gideon von Loudon and Count Pyotr Soltikov, just east of Frankfurt at Kunersdorf. Frederick lost over 20,000 men and almost 170 guns in his worst defeat, though Allied losses and Russian dissent enabled him to withdraw (12 August 1759).

Kunjpura ❙ 1760 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

Recovering from defeat at Sikandarabad in March, Marathas under Bhau Saheb captured Delhi then marched north against Afghan invader Ahmad Shah Durrani. In victory at Kunjpura, east of Karnal, the Marathas inflicted nearly 10,000 Afghan casualties, including Abusammad Khan killed and Qutb Shah executed. Within months the Afghans were victorious at Panipat (17 October 1760).

Kunlun Guan ❙ 1939 ❙ Sino-Japanese War
See Nanning

Kunovica ❙ 1444 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars (Long Campaign)
Ladislas of Hungary and General Janos Hunyadi were turned back from invading Bulgaria at Zlatitsa and withdrew across the Balkans in extreme winter conditions, repulsing the pursuing Turks at Melshtitsa. The Christians were then ambushed near Kunovica, between Pirot and Nish in Serbia, inflicting another heavy defeat on the Turks before continuing home to Hungary (4 January 1444).

Kunyang ❙ 23 ❙ Fall of the Xin Dynasty
When Wang Mang usurped the Former (Western) Han throne, he faced insurrection by Liu Xuan and his cousin Liu Xiu, whose forces were eventually besieged at Kunyang. Reinforcements arrived to win a decisive victory, then captured Chang'an and killed Wang Mang. Liu Xiu was proclaimed Emperor Guangwu and his new Later (Eastern) Han Dynasty ruled for 200 years (7 July 23).

Kup ❙ 1762 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah
In a fresh Afghan invasion of the upper Punjab, Ahmad Shah Durrani reached Malerkotla, west of Sirhind, then attacked a 50,000-strong Sikh army just to the north at Kup. In one of their worst defeats—known as Ghallaghurga (Bloody Carnage)—the Sikhs lost perhaps 20,000 killed in a decisive battle of movement. The Afghans then marched north to sack Amritsar (5 February 1761).

Kurchukai ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War
One month after the Turkish defeat on the Danube at Kozludzha, a Russian advanced detachment marched across the Balkan hills and along the Luda-Kamchia Valley to attack Kurchukai, about 50 miles south of Shumla. While the Russians were repulsed, their presence south of the Balkans hastened the treaty signed 11 days later, which ended the war (10 July 1774).

Kurdlah ❙ 1795 ❙ Maratha Territorial Wars
See Kharda

Kurikara ❙ 1183 ❙ Gempei War
Taira Komemori marched north from Kyoto against the Minamoto rebel Yoshinaka to secure the fortress at Hiuchi, then met the full Minamoto army in the mountains at Kurikara, near Tsubata in Toyama, below the ridge at Tonamiyama. The Taira were routed in a comprehensive disaster, with perhaps 7,000 killed, and fled back towards Kyoto through further defeat at Shinowara (2 June 1183).

Kuriyagawa ❙ 1062 ❙ Earlier Nine Years War
Renewing war against Abe Sadato in northeast Japan, Governor Minamoto Yoriyoshi, aided by Kiyohara Takenori, beat the rebel at Komatsu and later Koromogawa, then attacked his last stronghold at Kuriyagawa (modern Morioka in Iwate). Sadato was defeated and killed and his brother Muneto surrendered, ending the war. The Kiyohara ruled the northeast until defeat at Kanazawa in 1087.

Kurna ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)
See Qurna

Kursk ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)
Marshal Erich von Manstein retook Kharkov, then joined Marshal Gunther von Kluge in a massive assault on the Russian salient at Kursk, commanded by Marshal Georgi Zhukov. The huge battle of attrition involved two million men in World War II's largest tank action before the Germans were halted at Prokhorovka. The Soviets then struck back at Orel and Kharkov (5–16 July 1943).

Kürük-Dar ❙ 1854 ❙ Crimean War

When Russian Prince Vassily Bebutov invaded Armenia and won at Bayazid, Turkish commander Zarif Mustapha Pasha unwisely marched out of Kars with about 40,000 men. About 20 miles east at Kürük-Dar, Zarif Mustapha was heavily defeated, losing about 3,000 dead and 2,000 prisoners. However, the Russians were not yet strong enough to attack Kars (5 August 1854).

Kushliki ❙ 1661 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

A year after victory in the Ukraine at Chudnov, Polish Hetman Stefan Czarniecki returned north to Lithuania against Russian commander Ivan Khovanski, previously defeated at Polonka. At Kushliki, west of Polotsk in modern Belarus, the Russians were crushed, losing up to 9,000 men. Vilna was retaken and by year's end Lithuania was largely cleared of the invaders (4 November 1661).

Kusseri ❙ 1900 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

See Kousséri

Kustendil ❙ 1330 ❙ Serbian Imperial Wars

See Velbuzhde

Kut-al-Amara ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Anglo-Indian General Charles Townshend advanced up the Tigris from Basra through Amara and met Turkish commander Nur-ud-Din well-entrenched at the key city of Kut-al-Amara (modern Al Kut in Iraq). The Turks were badly beaten, losing over 5,000 men and all their guns before retreating upriver, pursued by Townshend towards Ctesiphon (28 September 1915).

Kut-al-Amara ❙ 1915–1916 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Repulsed outside Baghdad at Ctesiphon, Anglo-Indian General Charles Townshend rashly determined to hold Kut-al-Amara against siege by Turkish General Nur-ud-Din and Colmar von de Goltz. When relief efforts failed at Sheik Sa'ad, Wadi, Hanna, Dujaila and Sannaiyat, Townshend surrendered 10,000 men. About 4,000 of them died in captivity (7 December 1915–29 April 1916).

Kut-al-Amara ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

New Anglo-Indian commander Sir Frederick Maude determined to regain the initiative in Mesopotamia and took a large force up the Tigris, advancing on General Kara Bekir Bey at Kut-al-Amara, scene of the British Army's worst surrender up to that time. Heavy fighting forced the outnumbered Turks to abandon the city and withdraw upriver to Baghdad (17–26 February 1917).

Kutna Hora ❙ 1421 ❙ Hussite Wars

Despite Imperial losses at Vitkov Hill and Zatec earlier in the year, Sigismund of Hungary led a third expedition into eastern Bohemia and attacked Hussite Jan Zizka outside Kutna Hora, southeast of Prague. When Germans in the city rose in support of Imperial General Pipo Spano (Count Filippe de Scolari), Zizka was forced to break out. He was soon avenged at Nebovidy (21 December 1421).

Kuttenberg ❙ 1421 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Kutna Hora

Kuwait ❙ 1990 ❙ 1st Gulf War

After an orchestrated campaign of aggression, Iraqi troops and tanks invaded and rapidly overwhelmed Kuwait, forcing Emir Sheik Jabir Al Sabah to flee. Despite Superpower military threats and United Nations economic sanctions, President Saddam Hussein of Iraq annexed Kuwait a week later, setting the stage for the coalition Desert Storm offensive in January 1991 (2 August 1990).

Kuwait ❙ 1991 ❙ 1st Gulf War

Following massive bombardment by warships in the Persian Gulf, Marine General Walter Boomer stormed through Iraqi southern defences into Kuwait towards the Al Wafra oil field and further west towards Al Jaber air base. The reputed largest tank battle in US Marine Corps history saw the Iraqis routed and the Americans raced north to help liberate Kuwait City (24–28 February 1991).

Kuzeik ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

Japanese forces seized Moulmein, while further north General Shozo Sakurai took Pa-an then crossed the Salween downstream of Kuzeik and circled behind a small force under Colonel Jerry Dyer. Attempting to hold well-prepared positions, the British were overwhelmed with 300 killed (including Dyer) and 200 captured. The survivors fled west towards the Bilin (11–12 February 1942).

Kwajalein ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While marines attacked Roi-Namur, on the northern Kwajalein Atoll in the Marshall Islands, General Charles Corbett landed on Kwajalein Island in the south, defended by 5,000 Japanese under Admiral Monzo Akiyama. Although Corbett lost 177 dead and 1,000 wounded, virtually the entire garrison was killed, including Akiyama. The airfield was back in use within days (1–4 February 1944).

Kweilin ❙ 1852 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Guilin

Kweilin-Liuchow ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

See Guilin-Liuzhou

Kyo Chong ❙ 1597 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Japanese commander Konishi Yukinga renewed the war against Korea and sailed west from Pusan, supported by troops under Shimazu Yoshihiro on Koje Island, to surprise Korean Admiral Won Kyun near Kyo Chong. Won Kyun and Yo Ok-ki were utterly defeated and killed, losing perhaps 200 ships. Yi Sun-shin was soon recalled to restore Korean prestige at Myongyang (27 August 1597).

Kyoto ❙ 1221 ❙ Jokyo Disturbance

Concerned by the growing power of the Hojo clan in Kamakura, retired Japanese Emperor Go-Toba opposed the Kamakura Shogunate and rallied allies against Regent Hojo Yoshitoki. Marching on Kyoto with 100,000 men, Yoshitoki's son Yasutoki crushed the rising. Executions and confiscations then secured Hojo hegemony in Japan until the fall of Kamakura in 1333 (June 1221).

Kyoto ❙ 1333 ❙ Genko War

With his forces stalled at the siege of Chihaya, Japanese Dictator Hojo Takatoki in Kamakura sent a large force under Ashikaga Takauji against Emperor Go-Daigo. However, Takauji immediately declared for the Emperor and stormed the Hojo city of Kyoto, where the Shogun's representative was defeated and killed. Another Imperialist army soon attacked Kamakura itself (10 June 1333).

Kyoto ❙ 1336 ❙ Ashikaga Rebellion

Ashikaga Takauji supported the restoration of Japan's Emperor Go-Daigo (1319) and suppressed a Hojo rebellion in Kamakura (1333) then turned against the Emperor, marching west to seize Kyoto. Attacked by Imperial troops under Kitabatake Akiie, the rebel and his brother Tadayoshi were routed and fled to Kyushu, where they soon won a great victory at Tatarahama (February 1336).

Kyoto ❙ 1863 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

When anti-western forces in Choshu secured dominance in Japan's court at Kyoto and persuaded Emperor Komei to expel foreigners, the leaders of Satsuma and Aizu determined to stage a coup d'etat. Heavy fighting saw the moderates seize the gates of the palace and the Choshu Samurai were driven out. A year later, Choshu failed in an attempt to recapture Kyoto (30 September 1863).

Kyoto ❙ 1864 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

In an attempt to retake the Imperial Palace, Choshu and its allies marched on Kyoto, defended by Aizu Katamori and Hitotsubashi Keiki. Much of Kyoto was burned in a fierce action, but Kusaka Genzui of Choshu was killed and the attack repulsed. The survivors fled to nearby Yamazaki, where Maki Izumi and his followers were defeated and committed suicide (20 August 1864).

Ky Phu ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War

See Phuoc Ha

Kyrenia ❙ 1974 ❙ Turkish Invasion of Cyprus

After Greek army officers staged a coup in Cyprus, about 6,000 Turks landed near Kyrenia and 1,000 paratroops dropped north of Nicosia to protect the Turkish Cypriots. Facing heavy resistance, more Turks landed through the Kyrenia bridgehead and held one third of the island by the 16 August ceasefire. The invasion cost about 6,000 Greek Cypriot and 3,500 Turkish casualties (20 July 1974).

Kyritz ❙ 1635 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Elector John George of Saxony declared war on Sweden and was defeated in Mecklenberg at Domitz and Goldberg, before being driven back into Brandenberg, where a Swedish army under General Lennart Torstensson marched south to threaten Berlin itelf. To the northwest at Kyritz, near Rathenow, the Swedes were victorious again and swept into Saxony (17 December 1635).

Kyunnairyang ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

See Hansan

Kyushu ❙ 1281 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Hakata Bay

L

La Amarilla ❙ 1899 ❙ Colombian War of the Thousand Days

See Peralonso

La Arada ❙ 1851 ❙ Central American National Wars

Attempting to support Liberal leader Jose Dolores Nufio in Guatemala, President Doroteo Vasconcelos of Salvador, aided by Honduras, led an Allied army into Guatemala. Meeting the invaders near the border at La Arada in Chiquimula, Guatemalan President Jose Rafael Carrera won a decisive victory. He soon imposed conservative regimes in Salvador and later Honduras (2 February 1851).

Labadieville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

See Georgia Landing

La Bahía ❙ 1812–1813 ❙ Gutiérrez-Magee Expedition

When American Filibusters under Lieutenant Augustus W. Magee invaded Spanish Texas to support Republican Bernardo Gutiérrez, they captured Nacogdoches then took La Bahía on the San Antonio near Goliad. A siege by Governor Manuel de Salcedo and Simón de Herrera failed and a month later the withdrawing Royalists were defeated at the Rosillo (7 November 1812–19 February 1813).

La Bassée ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

British under Sir John French sent north from the Aisne attempted to turn the German flank and General Horace Smith-Dorrien attacked near La Bassée, east of Bethune. Heavy fighting spread north through Armentières and Messines to merge into actions around Ypres, but the British were driven back to Neuve Chappelle and the Germans kept La Bassée (10 October–2 November 1914).

La Bicocca ❙ 1522 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

See Bicocca

La Bisbal ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In order to divert French forces around Tortosa, Spanish commander General Henry O'Donnell concentrated about 6,000 men in northern Catalonia and attacked a brigade under General Francois-Xavier Schwarz at La Bisbal, just east of Gerona. Schwarz and about 1,000 men surrendered after heavy casualties while O'Donnell was later created Duke of La Bisbal (14 September 1810).

La Bourgonce ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Etival

Labuan ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Brunei Bay

La Cañada ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

Facing a rising against America's annexation of New Mexico, Colonel Sterling Price marched north from Albuquerque and attacked over 1,000 Mexicans at La Cañada near Santa Cruz. The insurgents fled with 36 killed and Price advanced through Embudo Pass towards Pueblo de Taos. A separate American force was defeated the same day further east at Mora (24 January 1847).

La Cañada de Cepeda ❙ 1820 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

See Cepeda

Lácar ❙ 1875 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

Carlist commander Torcuato Mendíri recovering from defeat at Oteiza secured a brilliant victory when he surprised and routed a government force under General Enrique Bargés at Lácar, east of Estella, nearly capturing newly crowned King Alfonso XII. However, the tide had turned against the Carlists and defeats at Treviño and Estella made Don Carlos VII leave Spain forever (3 February 1875).

La Carbonera ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

An Austrian column sent to relieve Imperial commander General Carlos Oroñoz besieged at Oaxaca by Republican General Porfirio Diaz, was intercepted by Diaz about 30 miles to the northeast at La Carbonera. The Austrians were forced to withdraw after a day-long action and Diaz returned to the siege of Oaxaca, which surrendered two weeks later (18 October 1866).

La Carolina ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Buoyed by victory at Ocaña, King Joseph Napoleon invaded Andalusia and met Spanish General Carlos Areizaga in the mountains north of the Guadalquivir. In related actions around La Carolina and at Linares, Despenaperros and Montison, French Generals Édouard Mortier, Jean-Baptiste Gérard and Francois Sébastiani drove the defeated Spaniards across the river (19 February 1810).

Lachanas ❙ 1913 ❙ 2nd Balkan (Inter-ally) War

See Kilkis

La Chanca ❙ 1841 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders

Rebel leader General José María Obando won at Garcia (12 March), then was met at La Chanca, in the Cauca Valley near Cali, by a large government force under Colonel Joaquín Barriga. Obando was routed and his force was dispersed in a decisive and bloody action which effectively ended the rebellion in the south. The war in the north was soon decided at Ocaña (11 July 1841).

Lachine ❙ 1689 ❙ King William's War

With England and France at war in Europe, 1,500 pro-British Iroquois crossed Lake St Louis and attacked Lachine, just west of Montreal, where they killed 24, burned most of the houses and took prisoners, many later killed. Reinforcements under Lieutenant de Rabeyre approaching to support nearby Fort Roland were intercepted and destroyed. The Indians then withdrew (5 August 1689).

La Ciudadela ❙ 1831 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

After victory in March at Rodeo de Chacón, in western Argentina, Federalist leader Juan Facundo Quiroga marched north on Tucumán and at nearby La Ciudadela fortress decisively defeated Unitarist General Gregoria Araoz de Lamadrid, who fled to Bolivia. The Unitarist cause effectively collapsed, leading to a temporary ceasefire and the rise of Juan Manuel de Rosas (4 November 1831).

La Cluse ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Pontarlier

La Coimas ❙ 1817 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

See Putaendo

Lacolle Mill ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

American General James Wilkinson was beaten on the St Lawrence at Chrysler's Farm in late 1813 and tried to approach Montreal from Lake Champlain in the south. Advancing down the Lacolle River he was blocked at a stone mill held by a small garrison under Major Richard Handcock. After losing 150 casualties Wilkinson retreated across the border and was later dismissed (30 March 1814).

La Corona ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Two days after an Austrian attempt to relieve the siege of Mantua was repulsed at Rivoli, French General Barthélemy Joubert pursued the defeated Baron Josef Alvinzi north along the Adige to La Corona, where he lost again and thousands surrendered. Another Austrian relief force was defeated the same day at La Favorita and Mantua fell two weeks later (16 January 1797).

La Coronilla ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

As Imperial forces left eastern Mexico, Republican Commander Ramon Corona sent Colonel Eulogia Parra to intercept General Ignacio Gutiérrez withdrawing east of Guadalajara. The Imperial column was heavily defeated at La Coronilla—Parra claimed to have inflicted 450 casualties—and Gutiérrez then evacuated Guadalajara and took his troops towards Querétaro (18 December 1866).

Lade ❙ 494 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

Resuming war against the Greek cities of Asia Minor a few years after victory off Ephesus and Salamis, Darius I of Persia took a large fleet to besiege Miletus. Off the nearby island of Lade the Chian ships fought bravely, but the Ionian fleet suffered a terrible defeat, when the Samians deserted. Miletus fell and the Ionian revolt collapsed. Four years later Darius invaded Greece and lost at Marathon.

Lade ❙ 201 BC ❙ 2nd Macedonian War

Philip V of Macedon was campaigning in Asia Minor when he fought an indecisive action at Chios and pursued the fleet of Rhodes further south, where they took up a defensive position near Lade, off Miletus. The Rhodian fleet was defeated and forced to withdraw, although it did not suffer heavy losses. Philip then moved north to the Dardanelles to attack the free city of Abydos.

La Decena Trágica ❙ 1913 ❙ Mexican Revolution

See Mexico City

Ladoceia ❙ 227 BC ❙ Cleomenic War

Determined to recover Mantinea in Arcadia, lost despite recent victory at Mount Lyceum, Cleomones III of Sparta attacked Aratus of Sicyon at Ladoceia, near Megalopolis. Sparta's advance forces were defeated, but Lydiades and the Achaean cavalry advanced alone against orders and were routed, with Lydiades killed. The Achaean infantry fled and was beaten next year at Hecatombaeum.

La Donjuana ❙ 1877 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Colombia's Liberal government resumed war against Conservative rebels and sent General Sergio Camargo, fresh from victory at Garrapata, into Norte de Santander. In battle at La Donjuana, south of Cúcuta, Camargo secured a bloody victory over a rebel force led by General Alejandro Posada. Decisive victory for the government followed three months later at Manizales (27 January 1877).

Ladysmith ❙ 1899–1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As Boers under Petrus Joubert advanced deep into Natal, British commander Sir George White failed in a blocking move at Nicholson's Nek and fell back under siege at Ladysmith. While a major assault was repulsed at Wagon Hill, General Sir Redvers Buller's advance finally succeeded at Tugela Heights and Ladysmith was relieved after 119 days (2 November 1899–28 February 1900).

Lae ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Salamaua

La Esperanza ❙ 1876 ❙ Central American National Wars

Determined to regain power in Honduras, former President José María Medina and General Indalecio Miranda defeated the forces of President Ponciano Levía under War Minister Juan López in a five-day battle at La Esperanza, north of Concepción near Intibucá. While Medina's victory enabled him to seize the Presidency, he was soon defeated by Levía at San Marcos River (January 1876).

La Estancia ❙ 1859 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Reactionary President Miguel Miramón marched northwest from Mexico City to intercept General Santos Degollado advancing on Querétaro and inflicted a decisive defeat on the Liberal army near Querétaro at La Estancia de las Vacas, on the Celaya Road, capturing huge quantities of arms and supplies. Degollado fled to San Luis Potosi and Miramón won again at Colima (13 November 1859).

La Favorita ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Two days after an Austrian attempt to relieve the French siege of Mantua was defeated at Rivoli, a separate Austrian relief force under General Giovanni Provera almost reached Mantua but was routed by General Jean Sururier just to the north at La Favorita. A major sortie by besieged General Dagobert Wurmser was also routed and Mantua surrendered two weeks later (16 January 1797).

La Fère-Champenoise ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

While Napoleon Bonaparte campaigned southeast of Paris, the advancing Allies under Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg crashed into Marshals Auguste Marmont and Édouard Mortier at La Fère-Champenoise, southwest of Chalons. The heavily outnumbered French were badly defeated and Schwarzenberg was joined by General Gebhard von Blucher in the advance on Paris (25 March 1814).

La Forbie ❙ 1244 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

After Khwarezmian Turks captured Jerusalem, local Crusaders allied themselves with the Ayyubid Sultan of Damascus against the new invaders. At La Forbie, near Gaza, the Turks, supported by rival Ayyubid Sultan al-Salih of Egypt, inflicted one of the worst defeats suffered by a Crusader army. This defeat, and the loss of Jerusalem, led directly to the French 7th Crusade (17 October 1244).

Lafourche Crossing ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Despite the surrender of Confederate Port Hudson on the Mississippi in Louisiana, further south Confederate General James P. Major led an offensive east from Brashear City. Met at Lafourche Crossing by Union Colonel Albert Stickney, Major was eventually forced to withdraw north through Thibodeaux. He joined the attack a week later to the north at Donaldsonville (20–21 June 1863).

Lagos Bay ❙ 1693 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

French Marshal Anne Comte de Tourville avenging defeat at La Hogue in May attacked a large merchant convoy approaching Gibraltar, bound for Smyrna, after the main Allied escort had turned back. De Tourville drove off the inadequate Anglo-Dutch squadron of Admiral Sir George Rooke in Lagos Bay, near Cape St Vincent, then destroyed or captured almost 100 ships (17–18 June 1693).

Lagos Bay ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Sailing from Toulon to Brest for a planned invasion of Britain, Commodore Jean-Francois de la Clue Sabran was intercepted near Gibraltar by Admiral Sir Edward Boscawen. Some French ships escaped to Cadiz, but in a running battle two were captured and four were pursued into neutral Lagos Bay, Portugal to be captured or burned. De la Clue was fatally wounded (17–19 August 1759).

La Guaira ❙ 1902 ❙ Venezuelan Incident

While Venezuelan President Cipriano Castro fought a civil war at La Victoria, British and German warships under Admiral Archibald Douglas attacked La Guaria in support of unpaid debts. After seizing Venezuelan ships and bombarding the port, Italy joined the Allies in blockading the Pacific coast. The blockade was lifted (13 February 1903) after US intervention (9–13 December 1902).

La Gueule ❙ 891 ❙ Viking Raids on Germany

Danish Vikings led by King Godefrid advanced deep into Lorraine, where they defeated a German force at La Gueule, near Maastricht. The warrior-Archbishop Sunderold of Mainz died leading his troops on the battlefield and the Danes continued raiding down the Rhine until their disastrous defeat later in the year at the Dyle (26 June 891).

La Herradura ❙ 1819 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

At war with rebel Chiefs in the northeast, government troops under Colonel Juan Bautista Bustos were attacked at La Herradura, southeast of Villa María, by Estanislao Lopez of Santa Fe, with Ricardo López Jordán of Entre Rios and Indians led by the Irish-born Pedro Campbell. López suffered a costly repulse in heavy fighting, though he won in May at Barrancas (18–19 February 1819).

Lahijan ❙ 1757 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

Mohammad Hasan Khan of Qajar led a brilliant winter offensive south of the Caspian, where he suddenly assaulted his rival Azad Khan Afghan who had advanced into Persia from Azerbaijan. Attacking at Rudsar, Mohammad Hasan routed the garrison at nearby Lahijan, then took Rasht. Azad fled with terrible losses and was defeated again in the summer at Urmiya (10 February 1757).

Lahn ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Neuwied

La Hogaza ❙ 1817 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

As they advanced along the Orinoco from Angostura, part of Simón Bolívar's rebel force under Generals Pedro Zaraza and Pedro Léon Torres was surprised near the Rio Manapire at La Hogaza by Spanish General Miguel de La Torre. When Bolívar's cavalry was outflanked and fled, his infantry was destroyed and he returned to Angostura before advancing on Calabozo (2 December 1817).

La Hogue ❙ 1692 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

In a final French attempt to re-establish James II of England, Admiral Anne Comte de Tourville sailed with a large fleet and was defeated off Barfleur, on the Contentin Peninsula, by the Anglo-Dutch fleet of Admiral Edward Russell. Three days later 12 French ships were destroyed at La Hogue Bay by Admiral George Rooke and the invasion was abandoned (19–24 May 1692).

Lahore ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Invasions of India

Tair Bahadur, the Mongol military commander in Afghanistan, invaded the Punjab, where he advanced on Lahore and bombarded the city. Lahore fell when the local Governor Malik Kara Kush fled and the city was subjected to massacre and destruction. Troops sent from Delhi by Sultan Muiz-al-din Bahram Shah arrived too late and the Mongols withdrew with their booty (22 December 1241).

Lahore ❙ 1712 ❙ Mughal Wars of Succession

Amid war between the sons of the late Emperor Bahadur Shah, Jahandar Shah, Rafi-al-Shan and Jahan Shah joined forces against the second son and favourite Azim-al-Shan. With Azim defeated and killed in battle outside Lahore, Jahandar Shah defeated and killed his other two brothers to claim the throne. However, Jahandar was himself killed a year later at Agra (14–17 & 26–28 March 1712).

Lahore ❙ 1752 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

Despite initial defeat at Manupur (March 1748), Afghan General Ahmad Shah Durrani

invaded the Punjab in 1749 and was bought off, then appeared two years later and besieged Lahore. He captured the city after four months and Mughal Emperor Ahmad Shah made peace by ceding Lahore and Multan. The Afghan leader invaded again in 1757 to capture Delhi itself (5–6 March 1752).

Lahore ❙ 1759 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

On his fifth invasion of the decaying Mughal Empire, Afghan General Ahmad Shah Durrani was met near Lahore by Sikhs attempting alone to resist his advance. Afghan General Jahan Khan was defeated and wounded in a sharp check, but as Maratha General Sabaji fled from the Punjab, the Sikhs allowed the invaders to advance towards Delhi and victory in early 1761 at Panipat (September 1759).

Lahore ❙ 1965 ❙ 2nd Indo-Pakistan War

As Pakistani forces invaded southwestern Kashmir around Chhamb, India launched a large counter-offensive towards Lahore, west through Chhamb and from the southeast along the Ravi-Sutlej corridor. Pakistani armour was destroyed around Khem Karan and, after a further bloody Indian offensive north of Lahore towards Sialkot, both sides accepted a ceasefire (6–22 September 1965).

Laiazzo ❙ 1294 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

War between Venice and Genoa resumed after the expiry of a truce, and a great naval battle was fought off Laiazzo (modern Ayas) on the Cilician coast of Anatolia. Genoese ships were lashed together in the harbour to form a powerful fighting platform and they successfully repulsed a disorganised attack, inflicting heavy losses on the Venetians.

Laing's Nek ❙ 1881 ❙ 1st Anglo-Boer War

When Boers in the Transvaal declared independence and destroyed a British column at Bronkhorstspruit, 1,000 men advancing under General Sir George Colley were blocked in the Drakensbergs at Laing's Nek by Boer General Petrus Joubert. Colley was repulsed in an utter rout with almost 200 men lost and he was soon defeated again at Ingogo and Majuba Hill (28 January 1881).

Lake Ashangi ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

Emperor Haile Selassie retreated south after decisive defeat at Maychew, east of Sekota (31 March), leading his survivors past Lake Ashangi where they were pursued and brutally attacked by Italian-armed Oromo tribesmen while being bombed and strafed from the air. A virtual rout saw the Imperial army destroyed before the Emperor reached Addis Ababa and fled into exile (4–9 April 1936).

Lake Asunden ❙ 1520 ❙ Wars of the Kalmar Union

See Bogesund

Lake Balaton ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Despite the fall of Budapest, SS Generals "Sepp" Dietrich and Hermann Balck launched a last offensive towards the oil fields around Lake Balaton. After initial success, an early thaw saw them repulsed by a counter-offensive under Marshal Fedor Tolbukhin. The "Ardennes in the East" cost Germany 500 tanks and 40,000 men and the survivors withdrew towards Vienna (6–15 March 1945).

Lake Benacus ❙ 268 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

During a disputed succession in Rome (resolved at Mediolanum) Alemanni tribesmen crossed the Alps into northern Italy. On the shores of Lake Benacus (modern Lake Garda) they were met and decisively defeated by new Emperor Claudius II, who then returned to the Balkans to meet the Goths at Nish. The Alemanni later invaded again and won a bloody victory in 271 at Placentia.

Lake Borgne ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

In preparation for the attack on New Orleans, British Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane sent Commander Nicholas Lockyer with a force of marines in launches and longboats against American gunboats under Lieutenant Thomas ap Catesby Jones on Lake Borgne, at the mouth of the Mississippi. Fierce fighting saw all six American gunboats captured and a schooner destroyed (14 December 1814).

Lake Champlain ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

British General Sir George Prevost led an offensive south from the St Lawrence, where he captured Plattsburg on Lake Champlain then sent naval Captain George Downie against American ships at anchor nearby under Captain Thomas Macdonough. Downie was defeated and killed, with all his four ships captured, and Prevost withdrew to Canada in disgrace (11 September 1814).

Lake Chicot ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Old River Lake

Lake Como ❙ 196 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

With the Insubre Gauls of northern Italy defeated on the Mincio, Consul Marcus Claudius Marcellus (whose father and namesake had beaten them at Clastidium 25 years earlier) attacked the survivors the following year near the city of Comum at the southern end of Lake Como. The Insubre suffered another very costly defeat and signed a treaty finally accepting submission to Rome.

Lake Erie ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

In a bloody and decisive naval action at the western end of Lake Erie near Put-in Bay, American Commodore Oliver Perry defeated and captured the outnumbered British squadron of Captain Robert Barclay. This strategically significant defeat ended British control of Lake Erie and quickly led to their withdrawal from Detroit (10 September 1813).

Lake Garda ❙ 268 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

See Lake Benacus

Lake Garda ❙ 1439 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

See Maderno

Lake George ❙ 1755 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

Colonial militia led by Colonel William Johnson of New York advanced north from Albany and met a French and Indian force from Crown Point under Baron Ludwig Dieskau. In hard fighting at the head of Lake George, Dieskau was captured but Johnson did not follow up his victory. He built Fort William Henry nearby and the French withdrew to Ticonderoga (8 September 1755).

Lake Goplo ❙ 1666 ❙ Lubomirski's Rebellion

See Matwy

Lake Janda ❙ 711 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain

See Guadalete

Lake Khasan ❙ 1938 ❙ Russo-Japanese Border Wars

See Changfukeng

Lake Koloe ❙ 229 BC ❙ Pergamum-Seleucid Wars

A year after defeating Gallic tribes at Pergamum, in western Anatolia, King Attalus I of Pergamum renewed his war against Antiochus Hierax, who ruled part of Asia Minor after defeating his brother Seleucus II at Ancyra. Marching south into Lydia, Attalus defeated Hierax at Lake Koloe, then defeated him again later that year in Caria at the Harpasus.

Lake Kurukowa ❙ 1625 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

See Borovitsa

Lake Naroch ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Russian Generals Aleksei Kuropatkin and Aleksei Evert, attempting to ease pressure on Verdun, attacked around Lake Naroch, east of Vilna, against General Hermann von Eichhorn's Germans. After an ineffective bombardment the Russian offensive ground to a halt in heavy mud with over 100,000 men lost. A subsidiary attack towards Riga also failed (18 March–14 April 1916).

Lake Okeechobee ❙ 1837 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

In one of the war's largest field actions, over 1,000 men under Colonel Zachary Taylor met Seminole Chiefs Sam Jones and Hallack Tustenuggee in Central Florida at Lake Okeechobee. In very heavy fighting, with Missouri militia sacrificed and their Colonel Richard Gentry killed, the Seminole were defeated, though at the cost of 26 American dead and 112 wounded (25 December 1837).

Lake Peipus ❙ 1242 ❙ Rise of Russia

Two years after repulsing a Swedish invasion at the Neva, Prince Alexander Nevski of Novgorod faced an even greater threat from Estonia by German knights of the Sword Brethren and their Danish allies. In the "Battle on the Ice" on frozen Lake Peipus (modern Chudskoye) Nevski utterly destroyed the invasion, establishing himself as one of Russia's greatest heroes (April 1242).

Lake Poyang ❙ 1363 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

See Poyang Lake

Lake Poyang ❙ 1855 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Jiujiang

Lake Prespa ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Franco-Serb forces under General Maurice Sarrail commenced a fresh offensive into southern Serbia, advancing along a line west from Monastir, towards Lake Prespa. The attack met powerful German-Bulgarian defences and was driven back to Monastir with costly losses. Meanwhile, a British advance further to the east was repulsed around Doiran (11–22 March 1917).

Lake Providence ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Goodrich's Landing

Lake Regillus ❙ 496 BC ❙ Early Roman-Etruscan Wars

A last effort to restore Roman monarchy saw deposed King Lucius Tarquinius join with sons Sextus and Titus and son-in-law Octavius Mamilius of Tusculum. In a semi-legendary battle against Aulus Postumius at Lake Regillus, somewhere southeast of Rome, the King was wounded and his sons and son-in-law were killed. With the Latin army routed the King's cause was destroyed (trad date 496 BC).

Lake Seit ❙ 1903 ❙ American-Moro Wars

Soon after America defeated Philippine Moros on Mindanao at Bacolod, Panglima Hassan attacked American troops on Jolo, then faced a large counter-offensive under General Leonard Wood and Major Hugh Scott. The rebel stronghold near Lake Seit was stormed, with up to 500 Moros killed. Hassan was captured but escaped and was defeated at Pangpang in March 1904 (14 November 1903).

Lake Smolino ❙ 1502 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War

The Livonian Order recovered from disaster at Helmed (November 1501) and Master Walther von Plettenberg besieged Pskov, then withdrew south to meet approaching Russians under Prince Daniil Shchenya. A bloody action at Lake Smolino saw both sides withdraw exhausted. Meantime, Duke Ivan III of Moscow failed to seize Smolensk, but Alexander of Poland soon sued for peace (September 1502).

Lake Tana ❙ 1543 ❙ Adal-Ethiopian War

See Wayna Daga

Lake Trasimene ❙ 217 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

After wintering in northern Italy, the Carthaginian Hannibal Barca marched south across the Apennines and by-passed Romans waiting at Arretium. General Gaius Flaminius pursued him south and, in a narrow defile leading around the northern shore of Lake Trasimene, the Roman army was ambushed and cut to pieces. Gaius Flaminius was among thousands killed in the slaughter (April 217 BC).

Lake Urmiya ❙ 1605 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

See Sufiyan

Lake Vadimo ❙ 310 BC ❙ 2nd Samnite War

As Rome continued her conquest of Central Italy, war resumed against the Samnites, who found fresh allies among the Etruscans and were able to drive Rome onto the defensive. However, at Lake Vadimo on the River Tiber north of Rome, the Etruscan army was defeated by Quintus Fabius Maximus Rullianus and they were soon forced out of the war.

Lake Vadimo ❙ 283 BC ❙ Later Roman-Etruscan War

Soon after Roman forces were devastatingly defeated at Arretium, a combined army of Etruscans and Gallic Senones assembled and advanced towards Rome. At Lake Vadimo in Etruria, the invaders were virtually annihilated by Publius Cornelius Dolabella. Despite some continued Etruscan and Senone resistance, the decisive victory virtually completed Rome's conquest of central Italy.

Lakhairi ❙ 1793 ❙ Maratha Territorial Wars

Campaigning against Mahadji Sindhia, Maratha General Tukaji Holkar and Chevalier Dudrenec marched against Viceroy Gopal Rao Bhao, who was supported by Benoit de Boigne and veteran General Lakwa Dada. Hard fighting on wet ground in the pass at Lakhairi, near Ajmer, saw Holkar's army shattered and Mahadji was undisputed Maratha ruler of Hindustan (20 September 1793).

Laknta ❙ 1900 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

See Kousséri

La Ladera ❙ 1828 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Colonels José María Obando and José Hilario López led a rebellion in the Cauca Valley against the dictatorship of Simón Bolívar. They took up arms in Popayán and seized the city, then met and defeated the garrison in battle at nearby La Ladera to secure the area. Bolívar later pardoned the rebels and signed an armistice with them to restore peace (November 1828).

La Laja ❙ 1899 ❙ Colombian War of the Thousand Days

See Peralonso

Lalsot ❙ 1787 ❙ Mughal-Maratha War of Ismail Beg

Supported by the Rajput rulers of Jodhpur and Udaipur, Partab Singh of Jaipur took a massive force southeast against Marathas under Mahadji Sindhia. When his Mughal cavalry under Mohammad Beg and his nephew Ismail Beg Hamadani defected, Sindhia was defeated in a bloody three-day battle at Tunga, near Lalsot. He then made peace and pressed on to reinforce Agra (30 May–1 June 1787).

La Maddalena ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

An ill-advised and confused assault on northern Sardinia saw French Revolutionary troops under Colonel Pietro-Paulo Colonna-Cesari land at La Maddalena. However, they were insufficient for the task and, although artillery Captain Napoleon Bonaparte bombarded the town, the force withdrew after two days. Bonaparte had to spike and abandon his guns (23–25 February 1793).

La Marfée ❙ 1641 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Louis de Bourbon Count of Soissons (brother of Louis XIII) opposed Cardinal Richelieu and invited Imperial General William von Lamboy to support him and Duke Henry of Bouillon at Sedan. At nearby La Marfée, Royalists under Marshal Gaspard de Chatillon were routed, but Soissons was killed—reputedly by accident using his pistol to raise his visor—and the rebellion collapsed (6 July 1641).

La Mesa ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War
See San Gabriel, California

Lamghan ❙ 989 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India
After cross-border raiding, Amir Sebuktigin of Bokhara attacked Raja Jaipal of Punjab, who gathered support from other Hindu Princes, including Dhanga of Chandella. At Lamghan, near Kabul, his confederacy suffered a decisive defeat. Jaipal was forced to concede Kabul and other territory in the west of his Kingdom. In 1001 he was defeated by Sebuktigin's son Mahmud at Peshawar.

Lamia ❙ 323–322 BC ❙ Lamian War
Athens and other Greek cities which rebelled following the death of Alexander the Great seized Thermopylae then besieged Antipater of Macedonia at Lamia, in the Sperchios Valley. The death of Leosthenes and the arrival of troops from Asia forced the Hellenic League to lift the siege after almost six months. Defeat at Crannon and Amorgos ended their effort to overthrow Macedonian hegemony.

La Motta ❙ 1513 ❙ War of the Holy League
See Vicenza

Lam Son ❙ 1971 ❙ Vietnam War
A disastrous test of "Vietnamization" saw about 16,000 South Vietnamese invade Laos to cut Communist supply routes. After claiming initial success, the invaders were routed by large North Vietnamese reinforcements and withdrew with half the force killed or wounded. About 200 Americans were also killed, mainly crew of over 100 US helicopters destroyed (8 February–24 March 1971).

Lancaster Hill ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
See Vryheid

Landau ❙ 1702 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession
Prince Louis of Baden led an Austrian offensive across the Rhine, where he besieged French General Ezekiel de Mélac at Landau, northwest of Karlsruhe. When Marshal Nicolas Catinat could not send relief the town capitulated. After Bavaria joined the war Louis withdrew and lost at Friedlingen. Landau was recovered after victory at Speyer in November 1703 (29 July–12 September 1702).

Landau ❙ 1713 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession
When England and Holland made peace, Austria resumed war and French Marshal Claude Villars crossed the Rhine to seize Speyer and Kaiserslautern, then besieged Landau, held by Prince Eberhard Ludwig of Württemburg and 12,000 troops. When Imperial commander Prince Eugène of Savoy could not send aid, Landau surrendered and Villars turned against Freiburg (20 August 1713).

Landau ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
See Pirmasens

Landen ❙ 1693 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance
See Neerwinden

Landi Kotal ❙ 1897 ❙ Great Frontier Rising
Despite a rebuff for rebellious Pathans at Shabkadr, Afridi and Orakzai tribesmen attacked the Khyber Forts. Ali Masjid and Fort Maude quickly fell, but at Landi Kotal, west of Peshawar, there was fierce fighting before the sepoys of the British Khyber Rifles were overwhelmed. The forts were eventually regained by General Sir William Lockhart after the end of the campaign (24–25 August 1897).

Landrécies ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Driving French General Charles Pichegru back into northern France, the English and Austrian Allies under Prince Frederick Augustus Duke of York besieged Landrécies on the Sambre River near Le Cateau. Inadequate French relief attempts from the west were repulsed at Villers-en-Cauchies and Beaumont-en-Cambresis and the garrison agreed to a premature surrender (17–30 April 1794).

Landriano ❙ 1529 ❙ 2nd Habsburg-Valois War

A French army under Francois de Bourbon Count of St Pol ravaged northern Italy before being driven back from a siege of Naples. Withdrawing north they were defeated at Landriano, south of Milan, by Spanish commander Antonio de Leyva, who captured St Pol and his senior officers. Charles V of Spain and Francis I of France soon signed a treaty to end the war (21 June 1529).

Landshut ❙ 1634 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

With Ferdinand of Hungary advancing up the Danube from Bohemia to threaten Regensberg, Protestant commander Bernard of Saxe-Weimar joined Marshal Gustavus Horn in a diversionary attack south against Landshut on the Isar. Bernard seized Landshut with General Johann von Aldringer killed, but the Imperials meanwhile captured Regensberg then besieged Nördlingen (22 July 1634).

Landshut ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Prussian Baron Ernst Heinrich de la Motte-Fouqué was forced out of the fortress of Landshut, southwest of Breslau in Silesia, but was ordered by Frederick II of Prussia to retake it from Austrian Marshal Gideon von Loudon. De la Motte-Fouqué's outnumbered force was virtually destroyed and Frederick advanced into Silesia to meet von Loudon in August at Liegnitz (23 June 1760).

Landshut ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

The Austrian army of Archduke Charles invaded Bavaria, where it was defeated and split in two by Napoleon Bonaparte at Abensberg, with the Austrian left wing under Baron Johann Hiller driven southeast towards Landshut. They were attacked there the following day and routed by a large French force under Marshal Jean Lannes, with heavy losses in men and equipment (21 April 1809).

Landskrona ❙ 1677 ❙ Scania War

When Denmark sided with the Netherlands against France and Sweden, Charles XI of Sweden suffered several heavy defeats at sea, but beat the Danes at Lund (December 1676) then met them again in a bloody encounter at Landskrona, northwest of Malmo. The Danes were defeated with over 3,000 killed, but the war dragged on while Charles continued campaigning in Germany (14 July 1677).

Landstuhl ❙ 1523 ❙ German Knights' War

Franconian knights under Franz von Sickingen and Ulrich von Hutten resolved to preserve their rights and attacked Catholic Trier. But they fell back to Landstuhl, near Kaiserslautern, besieged by Landgrave Philipp of Hesse, Elector Palatine Ludwig IV and Richard von Griefenklau, Archbishop of Trier. Fatally wounded, Sickingen was forced to surrender, effectively ending the war (6 May 1523).

Lang Bac ❙ 42 ❙ Wars of the Later Han

When the sisters Trung Trac and Trung Nhi raised rebellion in Vietnam and drove out the Chinese Governor, Han Emperor Guangwu sent an army under the veteran General Ma Yuan. The rebels were beaten in battle at Lang Bac (near modern Hanoi) and lost again at Hat Mon (now Son Tay). Unable to face defeat, the sisters killed themselves and Chinese Imperial control was restored.

Langemark ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Opening the First Battle of Ypres following action further south at Messines and Armentières, ill-trained German volunteers attacked Langemark, north of Ypres, where the Allied defence had been badly underestimated. The force of mainly university students and army cadets was destroyed, while the main attack went in further south through Gheluvelt (21–24 October 1914).

Langemark ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Despite terrible losses around Pilkem Ridge at the start of Third Ypres, General Hubert Gough soon attacked again northeast towards Langemark. The ruined town was taken at heavy cost before the advance ground to a halt in terrible mud for little gain. General Sir Douglas Haig's offensive from Ypres resumed a month later further south along the Menin Road (16–18 August 1917).

Langensalza ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

While Prussia invaded Austrian Bohemia, Prussian General Edouard Vogel von Falckenstein attacked Hanover, which had sided with Austria. At Langensalza, near Erfurt, George V of Hanover repulsed the Prussian vanguard, but two days later, was decisively defeated by the main force. Hanover was annexed to Prussia and Falckenstein invaded Bavaria for victory at Würzburg (27–29 June 1866).

Langfang ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

When anti-foreign Boxers threatened the legations at Beijing, a 2,000-strong multi-national relief force set out from Tianjin under British Admiral Sir Edward Seymour. With the railway destroyed at Langfang, Seymour was cut off and soon faced a major assault by well-armed Imperial troops. His failed expedition retreated to Tianjin with almost 300 casualties (14–17 June 1900).

Langport ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

In the wake of his great victory over Charles I at Naseby (14 June), Sir Thomas Fairfax marched into Somerset to relieve Taunton, held for Parliament by Colonel Robert Blake. Twelve miles east at Langport, Royalist General George Lord Goring was heavily defeated by Oliver Cromwell's cavalry and withdrew to Devon. Taunton was saved and Bridgwater fell two weeks later (10 July 1645).

Langside ❙ 1568 ❙ Uprising against Mary Queen of Scots

Mary Queen of Scots escaped from captivity after defeat at Carberry Hill (June 1567), raising a 6,000-strong army under Archibald Campbell Earl of Argyll to regain the throne from her son James VI. At Langside, near Glasgow, her army was routed by her half-brother, the Regent Lord James Stewart, and Sir William Kirkaldy. Mary fled to England, where she was beheaded in 1587 (13 May 1568).

Lang Son ❙ 1885 ❙ Sino-French War

A major offensive from Bac Ninh in northern Vietnam (Tonkin) saw General Louis Brière de l'Isle secure strategic Lang Son from Chinese Guangxi forces (13 February). However, a massive counter-attack at nearby Bang Bo saw General Oscar de Négrier routed and the French abandoned Lang Son in panic. Paris quickly sued for peace and the pre-war status quo was restored (28–29 March 1885).

Lang Son ❙ 1979 ❙ Sino-Vietnamese War

To punish Vietnam for invading Cambodia, China invaded northern Vietnam, where General Yang Dezhi captured four provincial capitals. Fiercest fighting developed around Lang Son, where the Vietnamese counter-attacked with plentiful modern equipment. With severe losses in men and armour, China withdrew, each side suffering about 20,000 casualties (17 February–5 March 1979).

Lanhozo ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Braga

Lanneau's Ferry ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Attacking American communications during Britain's siege of Charleston, South Carolina, Colonel Banastre Tarleton won at Monck's Corner and later met American Colonels Anthony White and Abraham Burford 40 miles from Charleston on the Santee, at Lanneau's Ferry. Tarleton surprised and routed the Americans, then beat Burford again a few weeks later at Waxhaw (6 May 1780).

Lansdown ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

Sir Ralph Hopton's Royalists advancing into Somerset after victory at Stratton (16 May) were blocked at Lansdown Hill, near Bath, by Parliamentary General Sir William Waller. After heavy losses on both sides Cornish infantry under Sir Bevil Grenville took the hill, but Grenville was killed. Waller withdrew after dark and Hopton, who was accidentally wounded, retired on Devizes (5 July 1643).

Lanskroun ❙ 1771 ❙ Polish Rebellion

Polish Nationalists under French Colonel Charles Dumouriez defending themselves against a Russian advance, took up a defensive position along a ridge near the fortress of Lanskroun, south of Cracow. Attacking with his Cossacks, Russian General Alexander Suvorov routed the Poles, killing about 500. Dumouriez fled to France, leaving the Poles without a commander (10 May 1771).

Lantada ❙ 1068 ❙ War of Castilian Succession

In the war of succession between the sons of Ferdinand I of Castile, Sancho II of Castile met his brother Alfonso VI of Leon in battle at Lantada, near Carrion, between the two kingdoms. According to legend, the brothers agreed the loser would forfeit his kingdom. However, after Sancho defeated Alfonso and drove him from the field, the brothers managed to patch up the peace.

Laohekou ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (China)

Japanese General Takashi Takamori resumed the offensive into Western Henan, leading a large force against Allied airfields north of the Yangzi. The major base at Laohekou in Hubei fell after a bitter ten-day siege (8 April), though a huge Chinese counter-offensive saved the base at Ankang and retook Laohekou. Further south the Japanese advanced on Zhijiang (21 March–28 April 1945).

Laon ❙ 941 ❙ Franco-Norman Wars

In the struggle for the throne of France, Hugh the Great—Duke of the Franks and brother of the late King Rudolf—campaigned against Louis IV d'Outremer, son of the deposed Charles III. Louis was besieged at Laon, north of the Aisne and, although the siege was driven off by the intervention of German Emperor Otto I, Louis lost much of his support and fled to Burgundy.

Laon ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Three days after achieving a costly victory at Craonne, northeast of Paris, Napoleon Bonaparte attacked General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussian-Russian army at nearby Laon. Bonaparte was eventually driven off in a confused two-day action and withdrew towards Soissons with heavy losses. Blucher meanwhile was able to continue his advance towards Paris (9–10 March 1814).

Laon ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

As German forces invaded France through the Ardennes and swept towards the coast, a French armoured Division attempted a bold counter-attack just north of Laon, where tanks under General Charles de Gaulle struck the Germans around Montcornet. After heavy fighting he was driven off by dive-bombers and concentrated armour and the Germans took Laon (17–19 May 1940).

La Palma ❙ 1855 ❙ Peruvian Civil Wars

In a rising against brutal President José Rufino Echénique, former President Ramón Castilla, supported by Mariano Ignacio Prado and Miguel San Román, met the President's army under General Juan Crisóstomo Torrico southeast of Lima, at La Palma. With Torrico decisively defeated, he and Echénique fled into exile and Castilla secured a second term in office (5 January 1855).

La Placilla ❙ 1891 ❙ Chilean Civil War
See Placilla

Lapland ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)
Under the Armistice with Moscow signed after Ilomantsi, Finland attacked its former German Allies in Lapland. Aided by the Soviets at Petsamo, General Hjalmar Siilasvuo recovered most of northern Finland. General Lothar Rendulic's retreating Germans caused massive destruction and burned Rovaniemi before withdrawing to Kirkenes in Norway (20 September 1944–24 April 1945).

La Plata, Colombia ❙ 1816 ❙ Colombian War of Independence
As they withdrew east from Popayán after the disaster at El Tambo, 150 Patriots led by Colonels Liborio Mejía and Pedro Monsalve attempted to defend a bridge at La Plata against 400 pursuing Royalists under Colonel Carlos Tolrá. Mejía was defeated and later executed, along with many other leaders, effectively completing Spanish reconquest of the Cauca Valley (10 July 1816).

La Plata, Cuba ❙ 1957 ❙ Cuban Revolution
Fidel Castro and Ernesto Che Guevara regrouped after Alegría del Pío and soon led a modest force against the army post at the mouth of the La Plata River. After an hour of fighting the small garrison surrendered and the rebels captured much-needed arms. While a minor action, it was hailed as the first victory of the revolution. Further success followed in May at El Uvero (16 January 1957).

La Polonia ❙ 1840 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders
At the start of a widespread Federalist rebellion, Colonel Manuel Gonzáles in the north seized Velez. Supported by Generals Juan José Reyes Patria and Juan Gómez, he then attacked government troops under Colonel Manuel María Franco and Major Alfonso Acevedo at La Polonia in Santander. Gonzáles secured a decisive victory, but was defeated next month at Culebrera (29 September 1840).

La Prairie ❙ 1691 ❙ King William's War
On a reconnaissance in force towards Montreal, British Major Peter Schuyler with 120 militia and 150 Mohawks attacked La Prairie de la Magdaleine on the St Lawrence, recently reinforced by Governor Louis-Hector de Callière. Schuyler drove off a sortie by Jean Bouillet de la Chassaigne, then fought a brilliant defensive withdrawal, inflicting heavy French losses (1 August 1691).

La Puerta (1st) ❙ 1814 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence
Spanish irregulars led by José Tomás Boves advanced north from victory at San Marcos and met a blocking force of 2,000 Republicans under General Vicente Campo Elías in battle at La Puerta. While Boves was seriously wounded his cavalry won a decisive victory. Patriot leader Simón Bolívar responded by executing about 800 Spanish prisoners at Caracas and La Guaria (3 February 1814).

La Puerta (2nd) ❙ 1814 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence
With Royalist forces advancing in western Venezuela, Patriot leader Simón Bolívar secured defensive victories at La Victoria, San Mateo and Carabobo. At La Puerta, near San Juan de Los Morros, he was decisively defeated by the Spanish leader José Tomás Boves. Withdrawing through Aragua, Bolívar fled into exile and Venezuelan independence was again crushed (15 June 1814).

La Puerta ❙ 1818 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence
See Semen

Lapuu ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)
Russian forces withdrawing from the West Finland port of Vasa, checked the Swedes at Kokonsaari, then fell back on a strong position at the Lapuu River, held by General Nikolai Rayevski. In hard fighting a few days later, Swedish Commander Karl Adlercreutz drove the Russians out of Lapuu village. Rayevski was relieved of command and was replaced by Nikolai Kamenski (14 July 1808).

L'Aquila ❙ 1424 ❙ Condottieri Wars
See Aquila

Larache ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War
When the military Nationalist uprising began in Spanish Morocco at Melilla, key centres such as Tetuán and Ceuta quickly fell. However in the western Moroccan city of Larache on that night, rebel army officers met with sharp resistance from pro-government troops and unionists. The loyal opposition was bloodily crushed and by morning the city was under rebel control (18 July 1936).

Laramie ❙ 1854 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars
See Fort Laramie

Laredo ❙ 1842 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence
In retaliation for Mexican raids on San Antonio earlier in the year, President Sam Houston of Independent Texas sent about 700 volunteers under Alexander Somervell, southwest to the Rio Grande, where the so-called Somervell Expedition captured Laredo. They also took Guerrero before disbanding, though some continued downriver to disaster two weeks later at Mier (8 December 1842).

Larga ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War
Russian Generals Pyotr Rumyantsev and Grigori Potemkin led a new offensive in the Balkans, crossing the Pruth with 37,000 men. After victory at Ryabaya Mogila (17 June) they advanced to the junction with the Larga against 80,000 Turks and Crimean Tatars under Abaza Pasha and Khan Kaplan Girai. Rumyantsev attacked without delay and his routed enemy fled towards Kagul (7 July 1770).

Largs ❙ 1263 ❙ Norwegian Invasion of Scotland
When Scotland attempted to regain her western isles, Haakon IV of Norway took a substantial force against Alexander III of Scotland. With his fleet badly damaged by a storm, Haakon landed near Largs on the Clyde in Ayrshire, where he suffered a decisive defeat. As a result Norway gave up the Hebrides and Isle of Man after more than 150 years of rule (2 October 1263).

Larissa ❙ 171 BC ❙ 3rd Macedonian War
See Callicinus

Larissa ❙ 1084 ❙ 1st Byzantine-Norman War
The year after defeating Byzantine Emperor Alexius I for a second time at Dyrrhachium in Albania, the Norman army of Bohemund advanced into Thessaly to besiege Larissa. But Alexius had raised yet another army—including 7,000 Turkish cavalry—and beat the invaders. When Bohemund's father Robert Guiscard died in Italy in 1085 the Normans withdrew from Byzantine territory.

La Roche-L'Abeille ❙ 1569 ❙ 3rd French War of Religion
In the aftermath of the Protestant rout at Jarnac (13 March), Huguenot leader Admiral Gaspard de Coligny received large-scale German Protestant reinforcements and inflicted a sharp check on the Catholics in western France near La Roche-L'Abeille, south of Limoges. However, he failed in a siege of Poitiers and was heavily defeated in October at Moncontour (June 1569).

La Rochelle ❙ 1372 ❙ Hundred Years War
In response to an English claim on his kingdom, Henry II of Castile supported Charles V of France by attacking the English fleet attempting to relieve the siege of La Rochelle. Castilian Admiral Ambrogio Boccanegra (a Genoese) destroyed the English, capturing commander John Hastings Earl of Pembroke, and La Rochelle soon fell, leading to England losing all of Poitou (22–23 June 1372).

La Rochelle ❙ 1572–1573 ❙ 4th French War of Religion

The principal military campaign of the War following the notorious Massacre of St Bartholomew's Eve saw Charles IX of France send his brother Henry of Anjou against the Protestant stronghold of La Rochelle, held by Francois de la Noue. After seven months and increasing Catholic casualties, Henry lifted the siege and accepted a negotiated truce (December 1572–June 1573).

La Rochelle ❙ 1625 ❙ 2nd Huguenot Rebellion

Benjamin Duke de Soubise renewed the Huguenot revolt against the French Crown, seizing Royalist ships at Blavet and taking the islands of Re and Oleron, guarding Protestant La Rochelle. Using borrowed ships with French crews, Duke Henry of Montmorency defeated Soubise off La Rochelle, recapturing the islands. Cardinal Richelieu signed a hasty peace (September 1625).

La Rochelle ❙ 1627–1628 ❙ 3rd Huguenot Rebellion

Attacking the heart of Huguenot rebellion, Armand du Plessis Cardinal Richelieu and Duke Henry of Guise led a brutal land and sea blockade of La Rochelle. With English relief fleets driven off in May (William Feilding Lord Denbigh) and September (Robert Bertie Earl of Lindsey), the city capitulated and the rebellion effectively came to an end (August 1627–29 October 1628).

La Rothière ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Three days after being repulsed from Brienne, southeast of Paris, General Gebhard von Blucher led his force of Prussians and Russians against Napoleon Bonaparte to recover nearby La Rothière. After a bitterly fought action, the outnumbered French withdrew during a snowstorm, abandoning guns and prisoners, and the Allies continued towards Paris (1 February 1814).

Larrainzar ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Determined to relieve the Carlist siege of Villafranca de Oria, Liberal commander in Navarre, General Jéronimo Valdés, sent Colonel Marcelino Oráa with 3,500 men. At Larrainzar, north of Pamplona, Oráa was surprised and routed by Carlist leader José Miguel Sagastibelza, losing perhaps 500 killed and 500 captured. A second relief force was repulsed days later at Descarga (29 May 1835).

Larrasoaña ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

See Tirapegui

Larremiar ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Spanish Liberal General Francisco Espoz y Mina and 1,500 men marching to relieve Elizondo in northern Navarre—besieged by Carlists under José Miguel Sagastibelza—came under attack at Mount Larremiar by Carlist commander Tomás Zumalacárregui. Mina lost about 300 casualties in heavy fighting before he managed to reach Elizondo. He resigned a few weeks later (12 March 1835).

La Salud ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

After news of defeat at Vitoria, French General Charles Decaen called off a planned attack on Vich, north of Barcelona. However, his subordinate General Maximilien Lamarque unwittingly proceeded with the attack alone. Lamarque was routed by Spanish General Baron Jaime Eroles at nearby La Salud, losing over 400 men before Decaen rescued him and Vich was saved (23 June 1813).

Las Cruces Pass ❙ 1810 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

See Monte de las Cruces

Las Gradas ❙ 1862 ❙ Ecuador-Colombia War

See Tulcán

Las Guásimas ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

At the start of the American land invasion of Cuba, Commander William R. Shafter secured Siboney, then moved west towards Santiago, pursuing the Spanish army of General Arsenio Linares. Facing a rearguard delaying action at Las Guásimas, American Generals Henry W. Lawton and Joseph W. Wheeler suffered the greater losses, but continued on towards San Juan Hill (24 June 1898).

Lashio ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

General Yoshiro Takeuchi drove the Chinese out of Toungoo, then advanced with great speed into northeast Burma to the key city of Lashio, the start of the Burma Road into China, where the Chinese 55th Army under General Chen Mianwu was beaten at Mauchi (19 April). As resistance failed, Lashio fell and the Chinese dispersed across the border, pursued to the Salween (29 April 1942).

Las Hormigas ❙ 1285 ❙ French-Aragonese War

When Pedro III of Aragon claimed Sicily after the Sicilian Vespers, Philip III of France invaded Aragon and besieged Gerona, aided by a strong fleet. His ships suffered costly losses at Rosas before being attacked by Admiral Roger di Loria at the islands known as Las Hormigas. The French fleet was destroyed and Philip had to retreat, dying of fever on the way home (9 September 1285).

Las Navas de Tolosa ❙ 1212 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

Facing a massive Almohade army under Caliph Muhammed an-Nasir, Alfonso VIII of Castile gathered a huge force supported by the Kings of Navarre, Aragon and Leon, and Crusaders from Portugal and southern France. Marching south through the Sierra Morena to the Plains of Tolosa, north of Jaen, the Christians inflicted a terrible defeat, which broke Muslim power in central Spain (16 July 1212).

La Souffel ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

In the aftermath of French defeat at Waterloo, General Jean Rapp and the Army of the Rhine were driven back by overwhelming numbers under Austrian Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg. At La Souffel, west of the Rhine, Rapp and his heavily outnumbered force inflicted a costly defeat on the Allies before withdrawing to Strasbourg, where a ceasefire was soon agreed (28 June 1815).

Las Piedras ❙ 1811 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Viceroy Franscisco Javier de Elio campaigned north from Montevideo into modern Uruguay, where he sent Captain José Posadas and 1,000 men against José Gervasio Artigas near Las Piedras. The Spanish lost 100 dead and almost 500 prisoners in a decisive defeat and Artigas besieged Montevideo itself. Elio brought in Portuguese reinforcements and by October had restored order (18 May 1811).

Lastaguanes ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

See Taguanes

Las Trincheras ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

See Bárbula

Laswari ❙ 1803 ❙ 2nd British-Maratha War

Soon after capturing Delhi and Agra, British General Sir Gerard Lake pursued the army of Daulat Rao Sindhia of Gwalior west towards Laswari, near Alwar, where the Maratha Ambaji Inglia was driven from a strong defensive position after one of the hardest fought battles in India. Lake captured massive stores and prisoners, his victory securing the province of Sindhia (1 November 1803).

La Tablada ❙ 1829 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

In support of Unitarist Governor Juan Galo Lavalle, José Maria Paz defeated Federalist Juan Bautista Bustos in Córdoba at San Roque and two months later beat Bustos and Juan Facundo Quiroga at La Tablada, north of Córdoba. However next day in Buenos Aires, after defeat at Puente deMárquez, Lavalle signed a pact with General Juan Manuel Rosas and went into exile (23 June 1829).

Latakia ❙ 1973 ❙ Arab-Israeli Yom Kippur War

At the start of the war, six Israeli missile boats under Michael Barkai sank a Syrian torpedo boat with gunfire off the port of Latakia, then engaged two Syrian missile boats and a minesweeper. While both sides fired missiles, all three Arab craft were sunk without Israeli loss. It was claimed as history's first ship-to-ship missile action and the first to see electronic countermeasures (7 October 1973).

Latham ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

When Parliamentary forces overran Lancashire, Charlotte Countess of Derby boldly defended her fortified manor at Latham against Sir Thomas Fairfax, his cousin Sir William and then Colonel Alexander Rigby. The siege was lifted when Prince Rupert advanced, but Marston Moor ended the Royalist offensive in the north. Latham surrendered six months later (28 February–26 May 1644).

La Trinidad ❙ 1827 ❙ Central American National Wars

Conservative President Manuel José Arce of the Central American Federation overthrew President Dionisio Herrera of Honduras at Comayagua, after which the deposed President's nephew Francisco Morazán attacked and defeated Federal General José Justo Milla at La Trinidad. Morazán secured the country, then invaded El Salvador in 1828 for victory at Gualcho (11 November 1827).

Latrun (1st) ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

A major offensive on the Tel Aviv-Jerusalem road saw Jewish commander Shlomo Shamir attack the key town of Latrun, held by the Arab Legion under Colonel Habes Majali. After terrible Israeli losses in a frontal assault, three attacks failed and American Jewish leader Micky Marcus was killed by one of his own sentries just before a ceasefire came into force (25 & 30 May & 9 June 1948).

Latrun (2nd) ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

During the so-called Ten Days Offensive, Jewish forces again attacked the Arab Legion at Latrun, blocking the Tel Aviv Road west of Jerusalem. Colonel Ygal Allon took surrounding villages, but suffered heavy losses in men and armour before the Second Truce put an end to his failed assault. Latrun remained in Arab hands until the Six Day War of 1967 (14–18 July 1948).

La Tunas ❙ 1897 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

See Victoria de la Tunas

Laufach ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

As Prussian General August von Goeben advanced against Austria's south German allies after victory at Kissingen, his forward units under General Karl von Wrangel attacked Hessian General Karl von Perglach at Laufach, east of Frankfurt. Perglach fell back after house-to-house fighting and the Prussians advanced west through Aschaffenburg to Frankfurt (13 July 1866).

Lauffeld ❙ 1747 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

When English commander William Duke of Cumberland and Austrian Marshal Count Leopold von Daun tried to destroy an isolated French force in the Netherlands under Louis Comte de Clermont, they were attacked by the main French army of Marshal Maurice de Saxe at Lauffeld, west of Maastricht. Saxe secured a hard-fought victory then besieged Bergen-op-Zoom (2 July 1747).

Laugharne ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

On the offensive in southern Wales, Parliamentary leader Rowland Laugharne took 2,000 men against Laugharne Castle, on the Taf Estuary, held by just 200 Royalists under Colonel William Russell. After heavy bombardment, the castle was taken by assault and destroyed. Laugharne gradually secured Pembrokeshire, ending with victory in July 1645 on Colby Moor (29 October–3 November 1644).

Launceston ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

Parliamentary General James Chudleigh resumed the offensive in Cornwall after defeat at Braddock Down in January, advancing on Launceston where Royalists Sir Ralph Hopton and Sir Bevil Grenville held Beacon Hill. Despite reinforcements under Sir John Merrick, Chudleigh's Puritans were repulsed after a full day's fighting, but promptly beat Hopton on Sourton Down (23 April 1643).

Laupen ❙ 1339 ❙ Burgundian-Swiss Wars

Faced by the rising power of Bern, Swiss and Burgundian nobles under Gerhard of Valangin supported the rival city of Fribourg to besiege nearby Laupen. In a remarkable victory of disciplined infantry over cavalry, an outnumbered relief force of Bernese pikemen under Rudolf von Erlach repulsed the mounted knights then drove their infantry from the field (10–21 June 1339).

Lauron ❙ 76 BC ❙ Sertorian War

With much of Spain held by rebel General Quintus Sertorius after victory at the Baetis and Anas, Rome sent a massive force across the Alps under Gnaeus Pompey, who advanced to relieve Lauron (modern Liria) northwest of Valencia, besieged by Sertorius. Pompey was routed, losing a legion, and withdrew north of the Ebro for winter. Sertorius captured and burned Lauron.

Lautulae ❙ 315 BC ❙ 2nd Samnite War

Roman forces resuming their campaign in central Italy after disaster at the Caudine Forks (321 BC), met some success against the Samnites. In Campania at Lautulae, a pass between Tarracina and Fundi, commander Quintus Fabius Maximus Rullianus suffered a costly defeat. However, the Romans soon resumed the offensive and Fabius Maximus was avenged five years later at Lake Vadimo.

Lava Beds (1st) ❙ 1873 ❙ Modoc Indian War

When war broke out against the Modoc following Lost River (November 1872), Colonel Frank Wheaten led about 320 regulars and volunteers against Captain Jack (Kintpuash) in the Lava Beds near Tulelake, northern California. Attacking in heavy fog, Wheaten was driven off with costly losses. General Edward Canby took personal command but was later murdered at a parley (17 January 1873).

Lava Beds (2nd) ❙ 1873 ❙ Modoc Indian War

General Jeff Davis and Colonel Alvan Gillem led a renewed and better-equipped assault on the Modoc in the Lava Beds of northern California, south of Tulelake, forcing their way in with heavy gunfire. After a six-week campaign near Dry Lake, Captain Jack (Kintpuash) was cornered in a cave. He and three other Modoc leaders were hanged and the war ended (14 April–1 June 1873).

Laval ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

A prelude to battle at Entrammes against the Royalist rebels of western France saw Republican General Francois-Joseph Westermann—the Butcher of the Vendée—impulsively attack the nearby city of Laval. Led into a rebel trap at night, Westermann suffered a sharp defeat. However, this was reversed next day by the great Republican victory a few miles south at Entrammes (25 October 1793).

La Victoria ❙ 1814 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

While Spanish irregulars led by José Tomás Boves besieged Patriot commander Simón Bolívar at San Mateo, southwest of Caracas, Spanish General Tomás Morales was attacked and defeated at nearby La Victoria by a separate Republican force under Colonel José Félix Ribas. Boves was also repulsed from San Mateo, but in December he and Morales defeated Ribas at Urica (12 February 1814).

La Victoria ❙ 1902 ❙ Venezuelan Civil Wars

Three years after seizing power after Tocuyito, President Cipriano Castro faced a "Liberating Revolution" under General Manual Antonio Matos, who won several early victories. In a prolonged large-scale action at La Victoria, in Aragua, Castro and General Juan Gomez secured a decisive victory. Resistance was finally crushed in July 1903 at Ciudad Bolívar (12 October–2 November 1902).

La Virgen ❙ 1855 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

Defeated by Nicaraguan forces at Rivas (29 June) American Filibuster William Walker withdrew down the Nicaraguan Isthmus, where he was later attacked at La Virgen (Virgin Bay) by new Legitimist commander, the Honduran José Santos Guardiola. Fighting with his back to Lake Nicaragua, Walker secured a bloody victory, then advanced north to capture Grenada (3 September 1855).

Lavis ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French Generals André Masséna and Claude-Henri Vaubois pursued Austrian General Paul Davidovich after his decisive defeat at Calliano, driving him out of Trent, in the Adige Valley of northeastern Italy, then caught up with him at the River Lavis. Davidovich suffered another sharp defeat before continuing his withdrawal north along the Adige towards Austria (6 September 1796).

Lawrence ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

On a deadly incursion into Kansas, Confederate guerrillas under Colonel William C. Quantrill attacked the defenceless town of Lawrence, east of Topeka. In one of the most notorious raids of the war, the Confederates killed about 150 men and boys and destroyed much of the town before withdrawing back into Missouri with a massive quantity of captured supplies (21 August 1863).

Lazikou Pass ❙ 1935 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

As the Red Army of Zhou Enlai and Mao Zedong marched north from Zunyi, they crossed the Snowy Mountains and Grasslands before reaching Kongdong Mountain, where Nationalists tried to block their entry into Gansu (Kansu). A much-mythologised action saw Yang Chengwu storm the strategic Lazikou Pass and the Long March to Yan'an was almost over (16 September 1935).

Lebanon ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Middle East)

With Germany on the offensive in North Africa, British General Henry Wilson and Free French commander Paul Legentilhomme invaded the Vichy French Levant, where the heaviest fighting in Lebanon was around Jezzine, Merdjayoun and the Litani. Following defeat in Syria, Vichy General Henri Dentz agreed to an Armistice and Beirut was occupied next day (8 June–14 July 1941).

Lebouirate ❙ 1979 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

Polisario guerrillas from Western Sahara continued their offensive in southern Morocco after Tan-Tan in January, turning east against the major army base at Lebouirate. Following several failed attacks and a virtual siege, the base was taken by storm with about 40 Russian-supplied tanks captured. A relief column to Zag was destroyed in March 1980, taking Moroccan losses to perhaps 500 killed (14 August 1979).

Le Bourget (1st) ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

An unauthorised fighting reconnaissance northeast from besieged Paris saw General Adrien-Adolph Carrey de Bellemare capture Le Bourget, about four miles away. Paris commander Louis Jules Trochu was reluctantly forced to send reinforcements, but after three days the village was retaken by a German counter-attack. The rash sortie cost about 1,200 French casualties (27–30 October 1870).

Le Bourget (2nd) ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

General Auguste Alexandre Ducrot led a fresh breakout from besieged Paris and marched northeast towards Le Bourget, site of a failed sortie two months earlier. Advancing across open ground in extreme winter conditions the French temporarily gained the village. However, they suffered heavy losses to gunfire and frostbite and were driven out by German reinforcements (21 December 1870).

Leburnion ❙ 1091 ❙ Byzantine-Pecheneg Wars

See Mount Leburnion

Le Cateau ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Driven out of Mons by German commander Alexander von Kluck, Sir John French's badly outnumbered British Expeditionary Force retreated west and General Horace Dorien-Smith made a bold stand at Le Cateau. The delaying action cost very heavy losses to both sides and a French attack to the south at Guise further aided the Allied withdrawal towards the Marne (26–27 August 1914).

Le Cateau ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

After the initial success of the Allied offensive against the Hindenburg Line between Cambrai and St Quentin, Generals Sir Henry Rawlinson and Julian Byng, with French support, advanced on Le Cateau, 15 miles southeast of Cambrai. Very heavy fighting forced General Adolph von Carlowitz to withdraw and the Allies continued east to the Selle and Sambre (6–10 October 1918).

Lech ❙ 1632 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

See Rain

Lechaeum ❙ 390 BC ❙ Corinthian War

Determined to detach Corinth from Athens, King Agesilaus of Sparta blockaded the city while his brother Teleutius captured the port of Lechaeum. But outside Lechaeum, 600 Spartans were surprised and virtually destroyed by javelin-armed mercenaries under the Athenian Iphicrates. The blockade of Corinth was broken and Agesilaus withdrew. In 388 BC, Iphicrates won in Asia Minor at Cremaste.

Lechfeld ❙ 955 ❙ Magyar Invasion of Germany

Twenty years after their defeat at Riade, a massive army of Magyars invaded Bavaria and was met on the River Lech, south of Augsburg, by Emperor Otto I and Duke Conrad of Lorraine. The Magyars were completely defeated, although Conrad was also killed. Magyar King Pulzko was executed and his Hungarian horsemen never again threatened western Europe (10 August 955).

L'Ecluse ❙ 1340 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Sluys

L'Ecluse ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French General Jean Victor Moreau advanced against the remaining Allied strongholds in the Netherlands where he took Nieuport by siege, then moved against the powerful fortress of L'Ecluse (Sluys). In a terrible siege, which cost over 7,000 casualties from fever, Moreau's force withstood shocking conditions and eventually captured the city (28 July–25 August 1794).

Legations, Siege of ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

See Beijing

Leghorn ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

Attempting to break the Dutch blockade of Leghorn, on the west coast of Italy, English Commodore Henry Appleton sailed to join up with Admiral Richard Badiley, due to arrive from Elba. Before the squadrons could meet, Dutch Commodore Jan van Galen routed Appleton with three ships sunk and three captured. Galen was killed and Appleton taken prisoner (14 March 1653).

Legnano ❙ 1176 ❙ Wars of the Lombard League

On his fifth expedition to northern Italy, Emperor Frederick Barbarossa was repulsed from a siege of Alessandria (April 1175) and, after failed truce negotiations, met a large army of the Lombard allies at Legnano, northwest of Milan. German cavalry was destroyed by Milanese infantry and Frederick fled the field, later accepting a humiliating truce, which virtually ended the war (29 May 1176).

Legnano ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Verona

Leh ❙ 1948 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

Advancing into northern Kashmir along the Indus, Pakistani regulars and Pathan tribesmen seized Kargill and besieged Leh, where Indian Major Priti Chand led a courageous defence, aided by airlifted troops and guns. Despite the fall of Skardu, to the north, Leh withstood the siege and was finally relieved after an Indian breakthrough to the west at Zojila (February– November 1948).

Le Havre ❙ 1563 ❙ 1st French War of Religion

In return for English support at the siege of Rouen, Huguenot leader Louis I de Bourbon Prince of Condé permitted Ambrose Dudley Earl of Warwick to seize Le Havre (20 September 1562). Rouen eventually fell and, after Protestant defeat at Dreux and a peace treaty, French Catholics and Protestants joined forces to recapture Le Havre and drive the English out of France (28 July 1563).

Leicester ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

King Charles I marched north from Oxford and attacked Leicester, held for Parliament by Sir Robert Pye. The city fell to a midnight assault by Prince Rupert and was put to the sack with many civilians killed. However, a relief force under Parliamentary commander Sir Thomas Fairfax intercepted the King's returning army two weeks later at Naseby and inflicted a decisive defeat (30–31 May 1645).

Leilan ❙ 1733 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars of Nadir Shah

Determined to recover Persian territory from Turkey, Regent Nadir Kuli (later Nadir Shah) besieged Baghdad before he was driven off at Karkuk by a massive relief army under Topal Osman Pasha. However, Nadir rallied his forces and at nearby Leilan, Topal Osman was defeated and killed. Nadir then marched south to Baghdad and made peace with Governor Ahmad Pasha (9 November 1733).

Leipheim ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War

Near the start of the Peasants' War in Germany, about 5,000 rebels under Jacob Wehe advancing towards Ulm were attacked to the northeast on the Danube at Leipheim by a Catholic force under Georg Truchsess von Waldburg. The peasant army was routed, with Wehe captured and executed. The survivors fled to Württemburg, where they were defeated in May at Böblingen (4 April 1525).

Leipzig ❙ 1631 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

See Breitenfeld

Leipzig ❙ 1642 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

See Breitenfeld

Leipzig ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Defending strong positions at Leipzig, Napoleon Bonaparte was heavily outnumbered by the combined Allied armies under General Gebhard von Blucher and Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg. After a huge battle, involving perhaps 500,000 men, the Emperor began withdrawing towards the Rhine, leaving an estimated 50,000 casualties, 15,000 prisoners and 150 guns (16–19 October 1813).

Leith ❙ 1560 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Royal Wars

When France sent troops to aid Mary of Guise, Regent for Mary Queen of Scots, Admiral Sir William Winter and an Anglo-Scots army under Lord William Grey de Wilton besieged the invaders at Leith. Marshal Pietro Strozzi inflicted heavy losses in a fierce sally (14 April) and while repulsing a major attack (7 May). However, he surrendered when France agreed to withdraw (March–7 July 1560).

Leitha ❙ 1246 ❙ Austro-Hungarian War

With Hungary ravaged by the Mongols following disastrous defeat at the Sajo (1241), Frederick II "the Warlike" of Austria (son of Duke Leopold VI) invaded the western provinces. In northwest Hungary on the Leitha River, a revitalised Hungarian army under King Bela IV defeated and killed Frederick. With him died the Babenberg Dynasty of Austria and Styria (15 June 1246).

Leitskau ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

See Hagelsberg

Le Mans ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Just days after defeat at Angers, the weakened Royalist rebel army of 12,000 under Henri de la Rochejaquelein captured the city of Le Mans and were attacked by a large Republican force under General Francois Vachot at the nearby village of Pontlieu-sur-l'Huisne. The Vendéeans were crushed, with perhaps 1,000 prisoners executed, and the survivors fled across the Sarthe (12 December 1793).

Le Mans ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

A month after his defeat at Beaugency, General Antoine Eugène Chanzy tried to counterattack near Le Mans with a largely militia army of about 150,000 against the heavily outnumbered German veterans of Prince Friedrich Karl of Prussia and Grand Duke Friedrich Franz of Mecklenburg. Fierce fighting cost Chanzy 10,000 casualties and 20,000 prisoners and he retreated west (10–12 January 1871).

Lemberg ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Rawa Russka

Lemberg ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Austro-German commander August von Mackensen campaigning north from Gorlice-Tarnow in Galicia, retook Przemysl (22 March), then advanced on the key city of Lemberg (Lvov). Mackensen dislodged the Russians to the west at Gorodok, while Austrian General Eduard Böhm-Ermolli defeated the Russians further north at Rawa-Russka and took Lemberg itself (17–22 June 1915).

Lemberg Offensive ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Kerensky Offensive

Lemnos ❙ 73 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War

A year after defeat at Chalcedon (74 BC), which gave the Sea of Marmara to Mithridates VI of Pontus, Roman commander Lucius Licinius Lucullus beat a Pontic squadron off Tenedos, then met the main fleet off Lemnos. Pontic commander Marcus Varius was defeated and captured, opening the way for Lucullus to pass through the Dardanelles to attack Mithridates at Cyzicus.

Lemnos ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

Despite Russia's great naval victory in the Aegean off Chesme (7 July), Admiral Alexei Orlov passed up an opportunity to force the Dardanelles and instead besieged the island of Lemnos. Surprised by Turkish commander Hasan Bey and a small force of volunteers in boats, the Russians were defeated and dispersed. Hasan was named Ghazi and became Kapudan Pasha (21 July–25 September 1770).

Lemnos ❙ 1807 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Shortly after a failed British attack on Constantinople, Russian Admiral Dimitri Siniavin blockaded the Dardanelles and captured several ships. Just as the condition of his flotilla forced him to withdraw he met a larger Turkish fleet off Lemnos and inflicted heavy losses in men and ships. An armistice followed between Russia and Turkey (30 June 1807).

Le Mort-Homme ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Crown Prince Wilhelm captured Douaumont, northeast of Verdun, then sent forces west across the Meuse against the strategic French position on Le Mort-Homme (Dead Man's Hill). Nearby Hill 304 was taken after very heavy fighting (4 May) and Le Mort-Homme was also taken before both sides fell back exhausted. The positions were not retaken until August 1917 (6 March–31 May 1916).

Leningrad ❙ 1941–1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

When German forces invaded Russia, Army Group North under Marshal Wilhelm von Leeb drove hard for Leningrad. After failure to take the city by assault, it was placed under siege, which lasted for 900 days. Up to one million civilians died from bombardment and starvation before a massive offensive by four Soviet armies broke the long siege (1 September 1941–27 January 1944).

Lenkoran ❙ 1813 ❙ Russo-Persian Wars

Two months after victory at Aslanduz, Russian General Pyotr Kotliarevski attacked Lenkoran, in modern Azerbaijan, supported by Caspian flotilla commander Yegor Veselago. Following massive bombardment by land and sea, the fortress was stormed with terrible losses on both sides (Kotliarevski was badly wounded). Persia sued for peace, ceding parts of Azerbaijan and Georgia (1 January 1813).

Lens ❙ 431 ❙ Roman-Frankish Wars

See Helena, France

Lens ❙ 1648 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

The final Imperial offensive saw Archduke Leopold William (brother of Ferdinand III) invade northeast France to capture Lens, near Arras. French commander Louis II Duke d'Enghien, now Prince of Condé, enticed the Archduke into an open engagement, where he was utterly routed, losing about 10,000 casualties. The Emperor soon sued for peace, though war continued in Spain (20 August 1648).

Lenud's Ferry ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Lanneau's Ferry

Lenzen ❙ 929 ❙ German Imperial Wars

After years of intermittent warfare with the Pagan Wends of northern Germany, Emperor Henry I sent the Counts Bernhard and Thietmar to finally suppress them. A large Saxon army besieged the Wend stronghold of Lenzen on the Elbe and, then destroyed a massive relief force. The city surrendered next day and the Wends were forced to accept Christianity (4 September 929).

Leon ❙ 1845 ❙ Central American National Wars

With Morazánista rebels repulsed at Danli, President Francisco Malespín of El Salvador, aided by Honduran General José Santos Guardiola, invaded Nicaragua, which had supported the rebellion and he seized Leon after a long siege. A week later, Malespín was deposed by Juan José Guzman and Honduran efforts to restore him were crushed in August at Obrajuela (26 November 1844–24 January 1845).

Leontini ❙ 214 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

When Sicilian cities began to declare for Carthage, Rome sent Marcus Claudius Marcellus, who first attacked Leontini and took it by storm. Marcellus had 2,000 citizens executed, but local commander Hippocrates and his brother Epicydes escaped to lead the defence of Syracuse, 20 miles to the southeast. The carnage at Leontini is said to have motivated Syracuse to hold out for two years.

Lepanto ❙ 1499 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

An early Ottoman naval victory saw Turkish Admiral Borrak Rais take his ships into the eastern Mediterranean against Venice, which had recently captured Cyprus. In two decisive actions off southern Greece at Zonchio and Lepanto, Admiral Antonio Grimani was heavily defeated. Lepanto then fell, marking a significant setback for Venetian naval supremacy (12 & 14 August 1499).

Lepanto ❙ 1571 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

A large Christian fleet under Don John of Austria arrived too late to prevent Ottoman conquest of Cyprus at Famagusta, but met Turkish Admiral Ali Pasha off Lepanto in southern Greece in one of history's most decisive naval battles. The last great action between oared galleys saw the Ottoman fleet virtually destroyed and Turkey never again dominated the Mediterranean (7 October 1571).

Leptis ❙ 238 BC ❙ Truceless War

Recovering from defeat at Tunis, Carthage recalled former General Hanno (dismissed after losing at Utica) to join his rival Hamilcar Barca against the rebellious former mercenaries. In the final decisive action at Leptis (exact location not known), the remaining rebel army was defeated and their leader Mathos was captured. With his execution, the brutal war effectively came to an end.

Lequeitio ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

An offensive on the northern coast of Spain to relieve pressure on the Allied campaign around Salamanca saw British Admiral Sir Home Popham and Spanish Guerrilla leader Don Gaspar attack and capture the fortress of Lequeitio, west of San Sebastian, defended by Chef du Battalion Gillort. They then marched east in a failed attack on the small town of Guetaria (22 June 1812).

Le Quesnoy ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Weeks after Frederick Augustus Duke of York captured Valenciennes, southeast of Lille, an Allied force under Austrian Field Marshal Charles Clerfayt besieged Le Quesnoy, nine miles further southeast. The town held out for two weeks before it fell to the Allies. It was recovered by the French the following August (28 August–12 September 1793).

Lérida ❙ 78 BC ❙ Sertorian War

See Ilerda

Lérida ❙ 49 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

See Ilerda

Lérida ❙ 1642 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

French commander Philippe de la Motte-Houdancourt on campaign in Catalonia met a large Spanish army under Diego Felipe de Guzmán Marquis of Leganés outside Lérida. Leganés was defeated and retired on Fraga, while de la Motte entered Barcelona as Viceroy for Louis XIII. Leganés temporarily lost command, but won at Lérida in another campaign four years later (7 October 1642).

Lérida ❙ 1644 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

With most of Catalonia in French hands, Marshal Philippe de la Motte-Houdancourt attempted to relieve the Spanish Imperial siege off the key city of Lérida. However, he was heavily defeated and driven off by General Philippe de Silvas. After later being forced to lift his siege of Tarragona, de la Motte was recalled and was replaced the following year by Henri Comte d'Harcourt.

Lérida ❙ 1646 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

After a six-month siege of Lérida, on the Segre in Catalonia, French forces under Henri Comte d'Harcourt came under attack by Spanish commander Diego Felipe de Guzmán Marquis of Leganés, who had been repulsed at Lérida four years earlier. Harcourt was defeated and driven off, abandoning his heavy guns, and was replaced by Louis II Duke d'Enghien (June–November 1646).

Lérida ❙ 1647 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Louis II Duke d'Enghien, now Prince of Condé, led a final French attempt to capture the Catalonian city of Lérida, laying siege to the city on the Segre, defended by Don Jorge Britt. Threatened by a large Spanish relief army under Diego Felipe de Guzmán Marquis of Leganés, Condé withdrew and later resigned in favour of Marshal Charles de Schomberg (12 May–17 June 1647).

Lérida ❙ 1707 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Despite initial repulse in July, French troops under Marshal James Duke of Berwick and Philippe II Duke d'Orleans again besieged Lérida, held by Prince Henry of Hesse. When an Allied relief force under Henri de Massue de Ruvigny was driven off, the Spanish city fell at the beginning of October. The garrison in the citadel capitulated six weeks later (September–14 November 1707).

Lérida ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

French Marshal Louis Suchet advanced into Catalonia where he besieged Lérida, defended by Spanish General Garcia Conde. A Catalan relief force under General Henry O'Donnell was bloodily repulsed at Margalef and Lérida was heavily shelled and taken by storm. Nearby Mequinenza surrendered a month later with little resistance (15 April–14 May 1810).

Lerin ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Lodosa

Lerna ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence

A month after defeating the Greeks at Maniaki, the Egyptian-Turkish army of Ibrahim Pasha took Tripolitza (22 June), then advanced to threaten Nauplia. Blocked at the Mills of Lerna by a small force under Yannis Makriyannis, Konstantinos Mavromichalis and Dimitrius Ipsilantis, the Ottomans withdrew with about 500 killed. In July they checked the Greeks at Trikorpha (25 June 1825).

Leros ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

After seizing Kos in the Dodecanese Islands (6 October), German General Friedrick Müller sent a parachute and seaborne assault against Leros, held by Brigadier Robert Tilney. Four days' fighting saw heavy casualties on both sides, plus costly Royal Navy losses. While Samos was evacuated to aid Leros, the doomed campaign ended with 3,000 British and 5,000 Italians captured (12–16 November 1943).

Lesbos ❙ 1462 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

See Mytilene

Les Espagnols sur Mer ❙ 1350 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Winchelsea

Lesnaya ❙ 1708 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

As Charles XII of Sweden advanced into Russia after victory at Holowczyn, his supply train from Riga was overwhelmed on the Dneiper, south of Mogilev at Lesnaya, by Tsar Peter. Swedish General Adam Lewenhaupt lost perhaps 8,000 casualties as well as his guns and 2,000 wagons of supplies before fighting his way through to join King Charles in the Ukraine (9–10 October 1708).

Les Saintes ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Saints

Letterkenny ❙ 1567 ❙ O'Neill Rebellion

English commander Sir Henry Sidney defeated Irish Catholic rebel Shane O'Neill at Knockfergus (November 1566) and restored Hugh O'Donnell Lord of Tyrconnell. Sidney then supported the O'Connells against O'Neill at Letterkenny on Lough Swilly, where O'Neill lost over 1,000 men in a terrible rout. He was murdered, when he sought refuge with former enemies, the MacDonnells (8 May 1567).

Leucimne ❙ 435 BC ❙ Corinthian-Corcyrean War

In an attempt to deter Corinthian interference in the Corcyrean colony of Epidamnus (modern Durres, Albania), ships from Corcyra (modern Corfu) besieged the city, then faced a large Corinthian fleet sailing to break the siege. In the nearby Ambracian Gulf, off Leucimne, the Corinthians were defeated and Epidamnus capitulated. Another major action was fought two years later off Sybota.

Leucopetra ❙ 146 BC ❙ Roman-Achaean War

See Corinth, Greece

Leuctra ❙ 371 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

When Thebes stalled truce talks between Athens and Sparta, King Cleombrotus of Sparta took 10,000 men into Boeotia and, ten miles from Thebes at Leuctra, met 6,000 Thebans under Epaminondas. Using the innovative oblique attack, Epaminondas secured a brilliant victory, with 2,000 Spartans killed including Cleombrotus, finally overthrowing the power of Sparta (July 371 BC).

Leuthen ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia secured victory in Saxony at Rossbach, then marched east into Silesia to avenge the Prussian defeat at Breslau. At nearby Leuthen he met Prince Charles of Lorraine and Marshal Leopold von Daun. In his greatest tactical victory Frederick destroyed the Austrian army, inflicting over 6,000 casualties and taking 20,000 prisoners, then retook Breslau (5 December 1757).

Leuven ❙ 891 ❙ Viking Raids on Germany

See Dyle

Leuze ❙ 1692 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

While manoeuvering in Flanders against Prince George Frederic of Waldeck, French Marshal Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg sent his cavalry to attack the Prince's camp at Leuze, east of Tournai. As at Walcourt two years earlier, Waldeck was utterly defeated and William III of England and Holland assumed command of the Dutch-German-English Alliance army (20 September 1691).

Lewes ❙ 1264 ❙ 2nd English Barons' War

Facing rebellion by Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester, Henry III of England and his son Prince Edward defeated the Barons at Northampton and Rochester. But advancing to relieve a renewed rebel siege of Rochester, they were heavily defeated on the Sussex Downs at Lewes. The King was held prisoner for over a year until Edward killed de Montfort at Evesham (14 May 1264).

Lewis's Farm ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union Generals Gouvernor K. Warren and Charles Griffin renewed the offensive against the southwest defences of besieged Petersburg, Virginia, where they were met by Generals Richard Anderson and Bushrod Johnson at Lewis's Farm, near the Boydton and Quaker Roads. Stubborn fighting eventually forced the Confederates back towards the White Oak Road (29 March 1865).

Lexington, Massachusetts ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Determined to seize arms held by American patriots, Major John Pitcairn marched from Boston to nearby Lexington. Roused by Paul Revere, about 70 militia under Captain John Parker met the approaching British and a confused action which triggered the war, saw the Americans dispersed with eight dead and ten wounded. Pitcairn then marched west to Concord (19 April 1775).

Lexington, Missouri ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Following victory in southwest Missouri at Wilson's Creek, secessionist General Sterling Price marched north against Lexington, strongly defended by Union forces under Colonel James A. Mulligan. After repeated assaults, and defeat of a column at Blue Mills Landing, Mulligan gave up hope of aid from General John C. Frémont and surrendered over 3,000 men (13–20 September 1861).

Lexington, Missouri ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate General Sterling Price marched west across Missouri from Fort Davidson and advanced on Lexington, east of Kansas City, defended by a scratch force of Plains militia under General James G. Blunt. Heavily outnumbered, Blunt slowed the Confederate advance but was forced to fall back across the Little Blue River to Independence, Missouri (19 October 1864).

Lexington, Tennessee ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Jackson, Tennessee

Leyden ❙ 1573–1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Spanish Viceroy Luis de Requesens sent General Francisco Valdez against George Noyelles at Leyden, north of the Hague, but later suspended his offensive to fight at Mookerheyde. After the siege resumed, William of Orange ordered the dykes cut and Dutch Admiral Louis de Boisot finally broke through. Valdez then had to withdraw (31 October 1573–21 March 1574 & 26 May–3 October 1574).

Leyte ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Opening the land campaign in the central Philippines, General Walter Krueger landed on eastern Leyte and seized major airfields. However, General Sosaku Suzuki led a stubborn resistance and Krueger had to make a second landing in the west at Ormoc (7 December). Leyte was finally secured at a cost of 3,500 Americans and up to 60,000 Japanese killed (22 October–25 December 1944).

Leyte Gulf ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Determined to repel the invasion of the Philippines, three Japanese naval forces converged on two massive American fleets protecting the beachhead at Leyte Gulf. After an ambush in the Palawan Passage, actions in the Sibuyan Sea, Surigao Strait, Cape Engaño and Samar saw Japan decisively defeated in history's largest and most complex naval battle (23–25 October 1944).

Liangtian ❙ 883 ❙ Huang Chao Rebellion

With bandit warlords threatening the Tang Empire, Huang Chao captured Luoyang (December 880) and drove Emperor Xizong out of the capital, Chang'an (January 881). From exile in Sichuan, Xizong secured an army from the steppe under Li Keyong, who helped decisively defeat Huang at Liangtian Hill. Huang soon abandoned Chang'an and was later defeated again at Chenzhou.

Liao ❙ 1287 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

The final campaign of the Mongol Kubilai Khan saw him lead a large force into southern Manchuria to suppress rebellion by the Nestorian Christian Nayan, a distant relative and descendant of Genghis Khan. Commanding the battle from an elephant-borne palanquin, the 72-year-old Khan defeated Nayan at the mouth of the Liao River, near the Korean border, and had him executed.

Liaoshen ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Communist General Lin Biao broke through to secure the railway at Siping (Szepingkau), then launched about 600,000 men on the massive Liaoshen offensive against remaining isolated Manchurian cities. The fall of Changchun, Jinzhou and Shenyang (previously Mukden) cost the Nationalists about 350,000 men and decisively ended their presence in the northeast (12 September–2 November 1948).

Liaoshi ❙ 1947–1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Having crossed the Songhua to isolate key Manchurian cities, Communist General Lin Biao circled south to attack the Liaoshi Corridor and Peining railway linking Mukden (modern Shenyang) to the rest of China. Costly defence by Nationalist General Liao Yaoxiang and later Chen Cheng eventually held the corridor and Lin switched his effort north against Siping (September 1947– February 1948).

Liaoshi-Shenyang ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Liaoshen

Liaoyang ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

In the aftermath of the Boxer rebellion, Russian General Deian Subotich advanced north into Manchuria through Haicheng and Shaho and next day attacked Chinese commander Zengji at Liaoyang. The Chinese suffered a decisive defeat and abandoned Mukden, virtually ending the war. Russia's continued occupation of Manchuria eventually led to war with Japan (28 September 1900).

Liaoyang ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Three Japanese armies under Marshal Iwao Oyama converged on Liaoyang, second largest city in Manchuria, and attacked Russian General Aleksei Kuropatkin on the Tang and Taizi Rivers. After severe fighting, Kuropatkin withdrew towards Mukden. Yet he claimed victory as the enemy suffered greater losses and his Russian army escaped to fight another day (25 August–3 September 1904).

Libertwolkwitz ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

A prelude to the decisive battle of Leipzig saw Austrian Field Marshal Wenzeslaus von Klenau and Russian cavalry under Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein probe the French defences five miles to the south near Libertwolkwitz. Marshal Joachim Murat's cavalry drove off their opponents in a sharp action and helped secure the French position for the main contest two days later (14 October 1813).

Liberty ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Blue Mills Landing

Lichtenburg ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

On the offensive in the western Transvaal, Boer commander Jacobus de la Rey determined to recapture his hometown, Lichtenburg, southeast of Mafeking, held by 600 British under Colonel Charles Money. Attacking at night with 1,200 men, de la Rey broke into the town, but was driven out and withdrew after a courageous defence, with about 50 casualties on either side (2–3 March 1901).

Lidzbark Warminski ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See Heilsberg

Liebenau ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Invading Austrian Bohemia with Prussia's 1st Army against Count Edouard von Clam-Gallas, Prussian Prince Friedrich Karl sent General August von Horn south through Reichenberg towards the Iser. At Liebenau, near Turnau, in the first action of the war, von Horn defeated the Austrians to take Turnau (modern Turnov), then marched downstream towards Podol (26 June 1866).

Liebishau ❙ 1577 ❙ Gdansk War

See Lubieszow

Liège ❙ 1468 ❙ Franco-Burgundian Wars

When Louis XI of France met his great rival Charles Duke of Burgundy at Peronne, Charles effectively imprisoned him and Louis agreed to accompany the Duke against the rebellious Liègeois, routed a year earlier at Brusthem. With token support from Louis, Charles attacked Liège. After three days, with heavy losses on both sides, he stormed and burned the city (27–30 October 1468).

Liège ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

The first major action of the war saw German commander Karl von Bulow invade Belgium and send Generals Otto von Emmich and Erich von Ludendorff against Liège, defended by General Gérard Leman. Despite unexpected losses, the Germans seized the city (7 August) and bombarded and took the surrounding forts. The Belgians then fell back northwest on Antwerp (4–16 August 1914).

Liegnitz ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Invasion of Europe

With Kiev conquered (1240), the Mongol Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) sent his cousins Kaidu and Baidur into Poland, where they captured Cracow (3 March) before meeting a German and Polish army under Henry II the Pius of Silesia near Liegnitz at Wahlstadt. While Henry was routed and killed in a decisive defeat, the Mongols did not pursue but turned south towards Hungary (9 April 1241).

Liegnitz ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II advanced into Silesia following Prussian defeat at Landshut (23 June) and reached Liegnitz (modern Legnica), where he found himself between Austrians under Marshals Leopold von Daun and Gideon von Loudon and approaching Russians. Frederick brilliantly cut his way through the Austrians at night, inflicting over 10,000 casualties, and withdrew towards Berlin (15 August 1760).

Liesna ❙ 1708 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Lesnaya

Light Brigade, Charge ❙ 1854 ❙ Crimean War

See Balaklava

Ligny ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

In a preliminary to battle at Waterloo, south of Brussels, Napoleon Bonaparte took his centre and right wing against General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians at Ligny, while Marshal Michel Ney led the left wing against Quatre Bras. At Ligny Blucher was defeated and wounded. However, Bonaparte failed to adequately follow up in pursuit northeast towards Wavre (16 June 1815).

Liguria ❙ 204 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

After defeat in Spain at Ilipa (206 BC), the Carthaginian Mago marched into Italy with 30,000 men to support his brother Hannibal. Having destroyed Genoa, Mago was met in Liguria by four Roman legions under Marcus Cornelius Cethegus and Publius Quintilius Varus. The Romans were eventually driven back in fierce action before Mago fell wounded and withdrew. He died on route to Carthage.

Lille ❙ 1667 ❙ War of Devolution

Following the death of Philip IV of Spain, Louis XIV of France invaded the Spanish Netherlands claimed for his wife, Maria Theresa, daughter of Philip IV. Lille, one of the few cities which resisted, was besieged by French Marshals Henri de Turenne and Francois de Crequi and fell two weeks later after the defeat of a Spanish relief army (27 August 1667).

Lille ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Prince Eugène of Savoy advanced southwest from Oudenarde to besiege Lille, while John Churchill Duke of Marlborough drove off French armies under Louis Duke de Vendôme and Marshal James Duke of Berwick. After an heroic defence, which stalled the Allied offensive, Marshal Louis de Boufflers surrendered the town (22 October) and then the citadel (12 August–9 December 1708).

Lille ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Invading France from the Austrian Netherlands, Archduke Charles of Austria sent Duke Albert Casimir of Saxe-Teschen to besiege Lille, which held out for a week under severe artillery fire. French General Charles-Francois Dumouriez then started north from victory at Valmy and the Austrians withdrew, followed by defeat a month later at Jemappes (29 September–6 October 1792).

Lilybaeum ❙ 368–367 BC ❙ 4th Dionysian War

Despite defeat at Cronium (383 BC), Dionysius the Tyrant of Syracuse led a fresh offensive into Carthaginian western Sicily, where he blockaded the key fortress at Lilybaeum (modern Marsala). After a failed siege, Dionysius died of fever and his son, Dionysius II, made a peace with Carthage which endured more than 20 years until the invasion by Timoleon of Corinth at Adranum.

Lilybaeum ❙ 277–275 BC ❙ Pyrrhic War

Invited into Italy to aid Greek Tarentum against Rome, King Pyrrhus of Epirus secured costly victories at Heraclea and Asculum, then crossed to Carthaginian Sicily, where he seized key cities and besieged the powerful fortress in the west at Lilybeaum (modern Marsala). After further losses while failing to take Lilybeaum by storm, Pyrrhus returned to the mainland, where he lost at Beneventum.

Lilybaeum ❙ 250–241 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

The powerful Carthaginian fortress at Lilybaeum (modern Marsala) on the west coast of Sicily was besieged by Romans and held out for eight years under the leadership of Himilco against constant attack by land and sea. Carthage drove off the Romans at nearby Drepanum (249 BC), though a fresh fleet under Lutatius Catulus took Lilybaeum. After naval defeat at the Aegates Islands, Carthage sued for peace.

Lima ❙ 1881 ❙ War of the Pacific

See Miraflores

Liman ❙ 1788 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

Eight months after the Turks were beaten near the mouth of the Dnieper at Kinburn, Admiral Hassan el Ghazi clashed with Russian commander Charles Nassau-Siegen at sea off the Liman near Ochakov. He was forced to withdraw after the intervention of American John Paul Jones in Russian service. Ten days later the Russians surprised and destroyed the Turkish fleet (7 & 17 June 1788).

Limanowa ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As Russians stormed the Vistula near Ivangorod, General Radko Dmitriev raced southwest to besiege Cracow. At nearby Limanowa, Austrian General Svetozar Boroevic launched a bold counter-offensive against General Aleksei Brusilov. Although Boroevic suffered terrible losses, the Russians withdrew to the Dunajec and lost six months later at Gorlice-Tarnow (1–9 December 1914).

Limbang ❙ 1962 ❙ Brunei Rebellion

During a brief revolt in Brunei, rebel leader Salleh bin Sambas attacked Bangar, then took hostages at Limbang, on the strip of Sarawak between the two halves of Brunei. British Royal Marines under Captain Jeremy Moore landed at Limbang and retook the town after fierce fighting. Fifteen rebels and five Marines were killed and the rebellion was virtually over (12 December 1962).

Limerick ❙ 1651 ❙ British Civil Wars

Oliver Cromwell returned to England after destroying Drogheda and Wexford, leaving his son-in-law Henry Ireton to compete the subjugation of Catholic-Royalist Ireland. Ireton besieged the last stronghold at Limerick, defended by Hugh O'Neill (who had resisted Cromwell at Clonmel) and forced the town to surrender. However, he died soon afterwards of plague (11 June–27 October 1651).

Limerick ❙ 1690 ❙ War of the Glorious Revolution

William III secured victory over the Catholic army of James II on the Boyne in July and captured Dublin, then besieged the Irish port of Limerick, defended by Patrick Sarsfield Lord Lucan. After William's siege train was intercepted and destroyed (10 August) and a costly assault failed (27 August), the King raised the siege. The town was taken a year later (9–30 August 1690).

Limerick ❙ 1691 ❙ War of the Glorious Revolution

After resisting a powerful siege the previous year, the north Irish port of Limerick was again defended by Patrick Sarsfield Lord Lucan as the last remaining Jacobite stronghold. Fresh from success at Aughrim, the Protestant army of General Godert de Ginkel forced the surrender of Limerick, effectively ending Irish resistance against William III (25 August–13 October 1691).

Limerick ❙ 1922 ❙ Irish Civil War

Driven out of Dublin at Four Courts and O'Connell Street, Republican forces in the west under Liam Lynch attempted to hold Limerick against Generals Michael Brennan and Donncada Hannigan. When General Eoin Duffy arrived to take command with government reinforcements and more guns from Dublin, heavy fighting soon forced the IRA to evacuate the city (11–21 July 1922).

Limoges ❙ 1370 ❙ Hundred Years War

With Edward Prince of Wales campaigning in France, a number of cities previously under English rule declared for Charles V of France, most importantly the city of Limoges, led into this fateful decision by its Bishop. In a terrible retribution, Prince Edward sacked the city, destroying part of its defensive walls and putting a reported 3,000 men, women and children to the sword.

Lin'an ❙ 1275–1276 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Hangzhou

Linares ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See La Carolina

Lincelles ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

During the failed Allied siege of Dunkirk, British Major General Gerard Lake was detached to support Dutch forces led by William V, Prince of Orange, who had been driven out of forts they had captured near Lille. In a sharp action near Lincelles, troops from the British Guards Regiments defeated the French and recaptured the lost positions (18 August 1793).

Lincoln ❙ 1141 ❙ English Period of Anarchy

Amid anarchy following the death of Henry I, King Stephen of England found himself at war with the late King's daughter Matilda and her half-brother, Earl Robert of Gloucester. Besieging the Castle of Lincoln, held by Earl Ranulf of Chester, Stephen was defeated by Robert after his cavalry deserted. Matilda imprisoned Stephen and was elected Queen (2 February 1141).

Lincoln ❙ 1217 ❙ 1st English Barons' War

When King John of England died, some Barons continued fighting his son Henry III in favour of Prince Louis of France. In battle at Lincoln (the "Fair of Lincoln"), rebel leaders Falke de Breaute and Thomas de Perche were decisively defeated by William Marshal Earl of Pembroke (de Perche was killed). Louis soon abandoned his siege of Dover and the rebellion waned (20 May 1217).

Lindenau ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

At the start of the three-day Battle of Leipzig, a sharp action was fought to the west around Lindenau. Defending marshy ground near the River Pleisse, French General Count Henri Bertrand drove General Ignace Gyulai's Austrians and Russians out of Lindenau, which secured the line of retreat for Napoleon Bonaparte after his resounding defeat in the main battle (16 October 1813).

Lindisfarne ❙ 590 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

The Angles of Bernicia led by Theodoric threatened to invade northern Northumberland and found themselves facing a Celtic alliance led by the semi-legendary Urien of Rheged, supported by Gwallawg of Elmet and Rhydderch of Strathclyde. Theodoric was driven back to an epic siege on Lindisfarne (modern Holy Island), but Urien was killed and the Britons were eventually defeated.

Lindisfarne ❙ 793 ❙ Viking Raids on Britain

Near the start of Viking raids on England, a powerful Danish force attacked the island of Lindisfarne (Holy Island) off the eastern coast of Northumberland, with its monastery founded by St Aidan in 635. While not a true battle, the attack came to exemplify the "Norse fury" and the Christian world was stunned by its brutality, with the church destroyed amid an orgy of murder and pillage.

Lindley ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As British forces advanced across the Zand River towards Pretoria, Boers under General Piet de Wet besieged 500 mounted Irish volunteers under Colonel Basil Spragge at Lindley, further to the east on the Valsch. Spragge was killed while waiting for help, which came too late. When the Boer guns were brought up, his force surrendered and 530 men were captured (23–27 May 1900).

Linduz ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Roncesvalles

Linkoping ❙ 1598 ❙ Swedish War of Succession

See Stangebro

Linlithgow Bridge ❙ 1526 ❙ Scottish Royalist War

Determined to free 14-year-old James V of Scotland from virtual imprisonment by Regent Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, 10,000 men under James Stewart Earl of Lennox approached Edinburgh and were heavily defeated on the Avon at Linlithgow by James Hamilton Earl of Arran. Lennox was captured then murdered by Arran's natural son, James of Finnart (4 September 1526).

Linying ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

While Chiang Kai-shek prepared to invade northern China, Wuhan Nationalist Tang Shengzhi campaigned north through Zhumadian to repulse warlord Chang Xueliang, most decisively at Linying, where Tang's General Zhang Fakui secured a bloody victory. However, the delay allowed his rival Feng Yuxiang to advance through Luoyang to capture Zhengzhou (28 May 1927).

Lipantitlán ❙ 1835 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

With invading Mexican forces besieged at San Antonio, a small Texan force under Adjutant Ira J. Westover attacked the Mexicans near a fort on the Lipantitlán near San Patricio on the Gulf Coast. A brief action saw 28 Mexicans killed for no Texas loss, though Westover allowed the fort to be retaken. He defeated the Mexicans again next day at the Nueces (4 November 1835).

Lipany ❙ 1434 ❙ Hussite Wars

Bohemian Hussites repulsed the final German crusade at Domazlice (1431) then resumed their doctrinal war. During the decisive battle at Lipany, east of Prague, with terrible losses on both sides, moderate Utraquists (Calixtines) and Catholic allies defeated and killed radical Taborite leader, Prokob the Bald. Sigismund of Hungary was then finally accepted as King of Bohemia (30 May 1434).

Lipara ❙ 260 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

Gathering strength after losing Acragas in southern Sicily (262 BC), Carthaginian naval commander Hannibal sent Admiral Boodes from Panormus to Lipara, in the Lipari Islands north of Sicily, to surprise a Roman fleet under Cornelius Scipio Asina. Badly outnumbered, Asina was defeated and fled ashore, where he was captured. Rome's navy was avenged later that year off Mylae.

Lipari Islands ❙ 1676 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Stromboli

Lipitsa ❙ 1216 ❙ Early Russian Dynastic Wars

When Yaroslav of Pereiaslav and his brothers Yuri of Vladimir and Konstanin of Rostov attempted to suborn Novgorod, they were attacked by Prince Mstislav of Novgorod, supported by Smolensk and Pskov. At the Lipitsa, near Yurev-Polski, Mstislav decisively defeated the Princes of Vladimir-Suzdal. Twenty years later Yuri was killed by the Mongols at the Sit (21–22 April 1216).

Lippa ❙ 1658 ❙ Transylvanian National Revolt

Prince George Rákóczi II of Transylvania suffered a disastrous defeat in Poland at Trembowla (July 1657), but overthrew his pro-Turkish successor Ferenc Rédei and routed the Turks at Lippa (modern Lipova) on the Mures, east of Arad.

Though a Turkish counter-offensive drove Rákóczi out, he returned and overthrew Prince Akos Barcsay before he was killed in 1660 at Gilau (May 1658).

Lippa ❙ 1695 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Lugos

Lippe ❙ 11 BC ❙ Rome's Germanic Wars

Drusus, stepson of Emperor Augustus, led his Legions across the Rhine to campaign against Germanic tribes before returning to the Lippe, where he was outnumbered and surrounded. In a brilliant victory, the Romans fought their way out and returned to Gaul. Drusus died two years later in a fall from his horse. Roman ambition beyond the Rhine was destroyed in 9 AD at Teutoburgwald.

Liptingen ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Stockach

Lircay ❙ 1829 ❙ Chilean Conservative Revolution

See Ochagavía

Lircay ❙ 1830 ❙ Chilean Conservative Revolution

Following the overthrow of Chilean Dictator Bernardo O'Higgins, rival factions met at Ochagavía, before General Ramón Freire broke with the rebels to support the government. Attacked by General Joaquín Prieto at the Lircay, near Talca, Freire's Liberal forces were cut off and virtually annihilated. The Conservatives then ruled Chile for the next 30 years (17 April 1830).

Liri Valley ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Stalled south of Rome, the Allies launched a massive offensive into the Liri Valley. French General Alphonse Juin led a bold flank attack through the mountains while Anglo-American forces stormed the western end of the Gustav Line and the Poles took Monte Cassino. The Allies broke out from Anzio and Rome fell (4 June) as the Germans withdrew to the Gothic Line (11–17 May 1944).

Lisaine ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Héricourt

Lisbon ❙ 1147 ❙ Christian Reconquest of Portugal

Launching a renewed offensive against the Muslims of central Portugal, King Alfonso I seized Santarem (March 1147) then marched south against the well-fortified city of Lisbon. A fleet with about 12,000 English, Flemish and German Crusaders on their way to Palestine was enlisted and, after a five-month siege, Lisbon fell by assault, followed by a notorious massacre (June–25 October 1147).

Lissa ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

On an expedition against the British-held Adriatic island of Lissa, French Commodore Bernard Dubourdieu led six French and Venetian frigates, with five smaller ships and 500 occupation troops. In a remarkable action off Lissa, Captain Sir William Hoste and just four frigates defeated and killed Dubourdieu, sank his flagship, and took three prizes (13 March 1811).

Lissa ❙ 1866 ❙ 3rd Italian War of Independence

Despite Italy's disastrous defeat on land at Custozza, Admiral Carlo di Persano continued the war at sea and soon met Austrian Admiral Wilhelm von Tegetthof in the Adriatic near Lissa (modern Vis). In the reputed first open sea battle involving iron-clads as well as wooden vessels, the Austrians were better handled and sank three Italian ships. Peace followed soon afterwards (20 July 1866).

Litokhoro ❙ 1946 ❙ Greek Civil War

Communist leader Nikos Zachariadis recovered from defeat at Athens and sent a small band under Markos Vaphiadis against Litokhoro, east of Mount Olympus. The police station was burned and eight gendarmes and National Guards killed. However, when British troops approached, the guerrillas withdrew. The action was later mythologised as marking the resumption of open war (30 March 1946).

Littafatchee ❙ 1813 ❙ Creek Indian War

Near the start of the war, General Andrew Jackson detached Colonel Robert Dyer with 200 Tennessee militia to attack the Creek village of Littafatchee on Big Canoe Creek, above modern Ashville, Alabama. Dyer surprised and destroyed the village, capturing large supplies of food and 29 prisoners. Within days Jackson's forces destroyed Tallaseehatchee and Talladega (29 October 1813).

Little Balur ❙ 747 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars

See Gilgit

Little Belt ❙ 1658 ❙ 1st Northern War

See Funen

Little Big Horn ❙ 1876 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

Days after American defeat at the Rosebud, General Alfred Terry sent Colonel George Custer against Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse on the Little Big Horn River, in southeast Montana. Unwisely dividing his force, Custer was surrounded and all 211 men were killed. His other columns under Major Marcus Reno and Captain Frederick Benteen also suffered costly losses (25–26 June 1876).

Little Blue River ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

In an attempt to slow Confederate General Sterling Price's advance across Missouri, General James G. Blunt fell back west from Lexington to join Union commander Samuel R. Curtis in a defensive position behind the Little Blue River. The Union troops fought a courageous holding action, but were soon forced to continue withdrawing west towards Independence (21 October 1864).

Little Concho ❙ 1862 ❙ Kickapoo Indian Wars

Discontented with the American Civil War, about 500 Kickapoo under Machemanet trekked south from Kansas and were intercepted on the Little Concho, in southwest Texas, by a Confederate force which attempted to seize their horses. The Texans withdrew after a sharp action with 16 killed, while the Kickapoo settled under Mexican protection at Nacimiento (December 1862).

Little Egg Harbour ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British Captain Patrick Ferguson raiding rebel privateers at Little Egg Harbour, north of modern Atlantic City, New Jersey, destroyed a number of ships and facilities, then met a rebel force under the Polish adventurer Casimir Pulaski. The Pulaski Legion were surprised in a dawn attack and heavily defeated, with about 50 killed, before Ferguson withdrew (15 October 1778).

Little Mountain ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

At the start of a new offensive into Kentucky, Wyandot Indians (who had attacked Ruddle's Station in June 1780) began raiding south of modern Lexington. Imprudently pursuing with just 25 men, Captain James Estill and six others were ambushed and killed at Little Mountain, near modern Mount Sterling. Another Kentucky force lost a few months later at Blue Licks (22 March 1782).

Little Rock ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Bayou Fourche

Little Wichita ❙ 1870 ❙ Kiowa Indian War

Captain Curwen McClellan pursued a Kiowa war party under Chief Kicking Bird, attacking the Indian camp on the Little Wichita River, northeast of modern Archer City, Texas. However, the outnumbered cavalry was badly defeated and withdrew to Fort Richardson with three dead and 11 wounded. It was Kicking

Bird's last battle, as he never again went on the warpath (12 July 1870).

Liubar ❙ 1660 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Recovering from disaster in Ukraine at Konotop (June 1659), Russia sent Vasili P. Sheremetev towards Lvov. To the east at Liubar, near Zhitomir, Sheremetev was badly defeated by Poles and Tatars under Jerzy Lubomirski and Stefan Czarniecki. The Russians withdrew northeast to Chudnov to await reinforcements, though their Cossack allies were soon defeated at Slobodyszcze (August 1660).

Liubech ❙ 1016 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

When Russian Prince Sviatopolk seized Kiev (15 July 1015), he was attacked by his stepbrother Yaroslav of Novgorod, at the head of a reported 40,000 Novgorodians and 1,000 Varangian (Viking) mercenaries. In battle at Liubech, on the Dnieper north of Kiev, Sviatapolk was defeated and fled to Poland. He returned with Polish aid two years later to defeat Yaroslav at the Bug.

Livorno ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

See Leghorn

Lizard ❙ 1707 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Following victory off Beachy Head, French Admiral Claude Chevalier de Forbin was joined by René Duguay-Trouin attacking a large British supply convoy to Portugal off the Lizard, Cornwall. The heavily outnumbered escort of Commodore Richard Edwards lost three ships captured and one blown up (with the loss of almost 900 lives), and many merchantmen were captured (10 October 1707).

Lizasso ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Just days after victory at Maya during the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," French General Jean Baptiste d'Erlon was blocked at Lizasso by General Sir Rowland Hill to prevent him joining Marshal Nicolas Soult's advance on Pamplona. While Hill's Anglo-Portuguese force was badly beaten, Soult was meantime defeated at Sorauren and d'Erlon joined the retreat (30 July 1813).

Lizhe ❙ 478 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

In war between rival states in eastern China, Goujian of Yeu recovered from defeat at Fuqiao (478 BC) and marched against Fuchai of Wu, facing his army across the Lizhe River. In a brilliant tactical move, Goujian launched two noisy night flank attacks across the river to disperse the enemy, then attacked in force in the centre. Fuchai was routed and Goujian later besieged his capital at Suzhou.

Lizy ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Ourcq

Llandudoch ❙ 1088 ❙ Welsh Dynastic War

Soon after killing his rival Cadifor following victory at Llechryd, Welsh King Rhys ap Tewdwr faced rebellion by Cadifor's sons Llewelyn and Einion, his own brother Einion (the Elder) and Gruffyth ap Maredudd. Rhys killed Cadifor's sons in battle near Cardigan at Llandudoch (St Dogmael) and executed Gruffyth. However, Einion the Elder escaped to lead the attack at Aberdare in 1093.

Llanos ❙ 1817 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

See San Juan de los Llanos

Llechryd ❙ 1088 ❙ Welsh Dynastic War

The Welsh King Rhys ap Tewdwr was forced into exile by Cadifor of Dyffed and Madog, Rhyrid and Cadwyan (sons of Bleddyn), but returned to Wales with a large Irish force and sailed into the Teifi. Madog and Rhyrid were killed in a decisive defeat at Llechryd, just southeast of Cardigan, and Rhys went on to kill Cadifor at Blaen-Cych Castle before securing further victory at Llandudoch.

Llera ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

After defeat at Villagarcia drove the French in Badajoz Province back on Llerena, French cavalry under General Henri-Dominique Lallemand met British cavalry led by Sir John Slade north of the city between Llera and Maguilla. Lured into a rash pursuit, the British were routed by the French reserve and fled, leaving over 100 prisoners. Slade was blamed for mismanagement (11 June 1812).

Llerena ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Villagarcia

Loano ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

A bold French offensive in Italy saw Commander General Barthélemy Schérer split the Piedmontese and Austrian allies by sending General André Masséna across the Apennines in deep winter conditions. Over three days Masséna drove General Michael Wallis out of defensive positions behind the Italian Riviera port of Loano, capturing valuable guns and stores (23–25 November 1795).

Lobositz ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

When Frederick II of Prussia invaded Saxony and besieged the Saxon army at Pirna, Austria sent Marshal Maximilian von Browne and 50,000 men, who met the Prussians at Lobositz (modern Lovosice) in Bohemia, northwest of Prague. The Austrian relief army suffered a hard-fought defeat and Pirna was forced to surrender, giving Frederick control of Saxony and its army (1 October 1756).

Lochaber ❙ 1429 ❙ MacDonald Rebellion

Alexander MacDonald Lord of the Isles continued the rebellion led by his father at Harlaw , taking a reported 10,000 men to burn Inverness. King James I of Scotland then met the rebels in Lochaber, where MacDonald was heavily defeated in marshy ground after the Camerons and Mackintoshes deserted. Shortly afterwards he surrendered and was imprisoned (26 June 1429).

Lochgarry ❙ 1654 ❙ British Civil Wars

A last effort to revive the Royalist cause defeated in 1651 at Worcester saw Scottish nobles loyal to the exiled Charles II led by John Middleton, raise an army against the Commonwealth. Oliver Cromwell then sent General George Monck to Scotland and near Lochgarry, Perthshire, he crushed the Scots. The Earls Glencairn and Kenmure made peace and Middleton fled (19 July 1654).

Lochindorb ❙ 1336 ❙ Anglo-Scottish War of Succession

In the war between adherents of young David II of Scotland and English-backed Edward Baliol, Scottish Regent Sir Andrew Moray killed Earl David of Atholl at Kilblain, then besieged his widow, the Countess Katherine, in Lochindorb Castle, near Grantown in Moray. In an unexpected repulse, Moray was held off, then forced to withdraw by approaching English troops under Edward III.

Lochmaben ❙ 1484 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Royal Wars

Alexander Duke of Albany renewed the war against his brother James III of Scotland (which had been suspended after the capture of Berwick in 1482) and led a 500-strong English force across the border, supported by the banished James Earl of Douglas. At Lochmaben, near Dumfries, the raiding party was routed with Douglas captured. Albany fled to France and died a year later (22 July 1484).

Loch Ore ❙ 83 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

Governor Gnaeus Julius Agricola resolved to extend Roman control into Scotland and sent a force across the Firth of Forth, where the Ninth Legion were boldly attacked by Caledonian forces while in camp at Loch Ore, near Ballingry in Fife. The Legion was rescued by Agricola after severe losses and it was not until a year later at Mons Graupius that Romans finally defeated the Highlanders.

Lochrey's Defeat ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Marching to join Americans under George Roger Clark campaigning in Illinois, Colonel Archibald Lochrey led Pennsylvania volunteers down the Ohio. Attacked below the Big Miami by Iroquois and Mohawks under the British ally Chief Joseph Brant, the Americans were routed, with 40 dead and 60 captured. Several prisoners were later killed, including Lochrey (24 August 1781).

Lochryan ❙ 1307 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

Thomas and Alexander Bruce (brothers of Robert the Bruce) returned from Ireland with fresh recruits and landed at Lochryan in Galloway, where they were defeated and captured by Duncan McDougal, who delivered them to Edward II of England for execution. While only a skirmish, it cost the lives of two Scottish Princes. Robert had his revenge seven years later at Rushen (February 1307).

Loc Ninh ❙ 1967 ❙ Vietnam War

After a North Vietnamese attack across the DMZ at Con Thien, Viet Cong crossed from Cambodia to attack weak local forces at Loc Ninh, north of Saigon. Americans and South Vietnamese arrived to drive them off with up to 850 killed, while another offensive in the central highlands around Dak To further diverted attention from the impending Tet Offensive (29 October–8 November 1967).

Locri ❙ 205 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

When Quintus Pleminius attacked Locri on the "toe" of Italy, Carthaginian commander Hamilcar was driven back into one of the city's citadels. With Hannibal approaching from Caulon, Publius Scipio the Younger sailed from Messina and a decisive action saw Hannibal's attack and Hamilcar's sortie defeated. Both Carthaginians then withdrew and Pleminius held Locri.

Lod ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

See Lydda-Ramleh

Lodge Trail Ridge ❙ 1866 ❙ Red Cloud's War

With Colonel Henry Carrington pursuing Ogala Sioux Indians under High Back Bone and Yellow Eagle northwest of Fort Phil Kearney, Wyoming, part of his force under Lieutenant Horatio Bingham was lured into ambush on Lodge Trail Ridge. Bingham and a sergeant were killed with five others wounded in a foretaste of the Fetterman Massacre two weeks later (6 December 1866).

Lodi ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Just two days after failing to halt the French advance into Lombardy near Piacenza, Austrian General Jean-Pierre de Beaulieu's retreating rearguard under General Karl Sebottendorf was attacked by Napoleon Bonaparte on the Adda River. Despite courageous Austrian resistance, Bonaparte won a bloody battle around the bridge at Lodi and five days later he marched into Milan (10 May 1796).

Lodosa ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Michel Ney moving along the Ebro against the Spanish Army of the Centre, attacked Logrono, where the Spaniards fled without fighting, while further south at Lodosa French General Bon Adrien Moncey inflicted heavy casualties capturing a key bridge. General Francisco Castanos then regrouped to meet the main French offensive a month later at Tudela (25–26 October 1808).

Lodosa ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When Spanish guerrilla Francisco Espoz y Mina defeated the French at Tiebas and siezed Tafalla (11 February), General Bertrand Clausel sent part of the Army of the North under General Marie Étienne Barbot against the rebel. On the Ega at Lerin, northeast of Lodosa, Mina routed Barbot, causing nearly 1,000 casualties, before escaping into the mountains (30 March 1813).

Lodz ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

With an Austro-German offensive into Poland repulsed at Warsaw (1st) and Ivangorod,

Russia renewed the offensive into Silesia where General August von Mackensen smashed into General Pavel Plehve around Lodz. Very heavy fighting saw the Germans checked and their spearhead almost captured. However, the Russians later evacuated Lodz to defend Warsaw (2nd) (11–25 November 1914).

Lofoten (1st) ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Determined to harass the Germans in Norway, 500 British commandos under Brigadier Charles Haydon attacked fish oil factories on the Lofoten Islands, which produced glycerine for German munitions. The successful raid cost no losses while 11 factories and five ships were destroyed and many Germans were captured, giving British morale a much-needed boost (4 March 1941).

Lofoten (2nd) ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

On a second raid against the Lofoten Islands, off Norway just below the Arctic Circle, 300 British commandos and a few Norwegian troops under Colonel Stewart Harrison landed unopposed and destroyed the German radio station. The raid itself was not significant, yet it provided a valuable diversion from the strongly opposed attack further south at Vaagso (26–27 December 1941).

Loftche ❙ 1810–1811 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Two months after Turkish defeat on the Danube at Batin, a weak Turkish force sent into Bulgaria against Russian General Nikolai Kamenski was heavily defeated at Loftche (modern Lovech) losing 3,000 men. The Russians soon lost Loftche, but retook it a few months later before fresh Turkish forces drove them back across the Danube at Ruschuk (29 October 1810 & 9 February 1811).

Loftche ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

During the Russian siege of Plevna, south of the Danube, Prince Alexander Konstantinovich Immeritinski was sent south against the powerful position at Loftche (modern Lovech) on the Turkish communication lines with the Balkans. The Turks under Adil Pasha were driven out of Loftche with a reported 5,000 casualties, though Plevna held out another three months (3 September 1877).

Logan's Crossroads ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Mill Springs

Logie ❙ 844 ❙ Scottish Dynastic Wars

On the death of the Pictish King Uven, King Kenneth I MacAlpin of the Dalriad Scots marched east to claim the throne through his grandmother. In battle at Logie, near Cambuskenneth in modern Stirling, Kenneth the Hardy achieved a sharp victory over the Picts, establishing himself as the first King of united Dalriada and southern Pictavia, the foundation of modern Scotland.

Logrono ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Lodosa

Lohgarh ❙ 1710 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

Responding to Sikh victories in the Punjab, Mughal Emperor Bahadur Shah's army recaptured Sirhind, then advanced on the Sikh fortress of Lohgarh, near Sadhaura. Both sides lost heavily in assaults and sorties before the Emperor arrived with 60,000 troops. Banda Singh Bahadur soon fled and General Kanwar Khan then took the fortress by storm (13 October–10 December 1710).

Loigny ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

French General Louis d'Aurelle followed French recapture of Orleans after Coulmiers by sending General Antoine Eugène Chanzy northwest against outnumbered Germans under Grand Duke Friedrich Franz II of Mecklenburg near Loigny. Facing a massive counter-attack by Prince Friedrich Karl of Prussia, the French withdrew with costly losses and abandoned Orleans (2–3 December 1870).

Loja ❙ 1482 ❙ Final Christian Reconquest of Spain

Continuing the recovery of Muslim Granada after his capture of Alhama, Ferdinand of Castile and Aragon besieged the city of Loja on the River Genil. In a brilliant defensive victory, Muslim General Ali Atar sortied from the city, lured the Spaniards into pursuit and destroyed them. Ferdinand's personal bravery enabled the survivors to escape and withdraw to Cordova (1 July 1482).

Lokhvitsa ❙ 1663 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

John II Casimir of Poland intervened in Eastern Ukraine to storm Lokhvitsa, supported by Cossacks under Pavel Teteria and 5,000 Tatars. The bloody action cost him terrible losses and he withdrew after a check further north at Glukhov. Threatened by civil war at home, Casimir agreed to a truce. After defeat three years later at Matwy he made peace and divided the Ukraine with Russia.

Lolland ❙ 1644 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

After the Swedish fleet was defeated at Kolberg Heath, Swedish Admiral Karl Gustav Wrangel joined with Dutch ships against a heavily outnumbered Danish squadron under Admiral Pros Mund near the Baltic island of Lolland. Mund was killed in a decisive defeat and only three of 17 Danish ships returned home. Christian IV of Denmark quickly sued for peace (13 October 1644).

Loma del Gato ❙ 1896 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

With resistance continuing in eastern Cuba, 1,500 Spanish troops led by Colonel Joaquín Vara de Rey, serving under General Arsenio Linares, attacked a rebel position at Loma del Gato. In a six-hour action the rebels were defeated and driven out with the bayonet, leaving 59 killed, including their commander José Maceo, brother of the great insurgent General Antonio Maceo (5 July 1896).

Lomas Valentinas ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Ita Ybate

Lombok ❙ 1894 ❙ Dutch Conquest of Bali

See Cakranegara

Lombok Strait ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

During the Japanese invasion of the East Indies, Allied ships led by Admiral Karel Doorman intercepted an invasion force under Admiral Takeo Takagi in the Lombok Strait off Bali. A confused night action saw a Dutch destroyer sunk and the cruiser Tromp badly damaged before Doorman was driven off. Bali fell and days later Doorman was defeated in the Java Sea (19–20 February 1942).

Lomitten ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See Queetz

Lonato (1st) ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As a fresh Austrian army advanced into northern Italy, Napoleon Bonaparte lifted his siege of Mantua and marched northwest towards Brescia, which had been captured by General Peter von Quosdanovich. Near Lonato he heavily defeated an Austrian brigade under General Karl Ott and entered Brescia next day. He defeated the Austrians at Lonato again three days later (31 July 1796).

Lonato (2nd) ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Austrian Commander Dagobert Wurmser marching into northern Italy to relieve Mantua sent General Peter von Quosdanovich towards Brescia. Napoleon Bonaparte lifted his siege and, a few days after defeating an Austrian brigade near Lonato to retake Brescia, he routed Quosdanovich and General Joseph von Oeskay near Lonato. He then returned east to beat Wurmser at Castiglione (3 August 1796).

Loncomilla ❙ 1851 ❙ 1st Chilean Liberal Revolt

When Liberals opposing Conservative President Manuel Montt Torres were crushed at Petorca (14 October), Pedro Félix Vicuña Aguirre led a rising in the south at Concepción and José María de Cruz y Prieto met government troops under General Manuel Bulnes Prieto to the northeast at the Loncomilla. Cruz y Prieto was defeated and surrendered a week later at Purapel (8 December 1851).

London Bridge ❙ 1450 ❙ Cade's Rebellion

Rebels under Jack Cade defeated Royalist forces at Sevenoaks and killed several officials in London before being forced to withdraw. A fresh advance was blocked with heavy losses at London Bridge by a large force under Thomas Lord Scales, Governor of the Tower (Scales' Lieutenant Sir Matthew Gough was killed). Cade and other ringleaders were hunted down and executed (5 July 1450).

Londonderry ❙ 1600 ❙ Tyrone Rebellion

See Derry

Londonderry ❙ 1689 ❙ War of the Glorious Revolution

Resisting the accession of William III, James II and Count Conrad de Rosen besieged Protestant Londonderry in northern Ireland, defended by Major Henry Blake. After 105 days and costly losses on both sides, Colonel Percy Kirke arrived across Lough Foyle to break the blockade. The Catholics withdrew to defeat a few days later at Newtown Butler (17 April–30 July 1689).

Lone Jack ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate Colonel Gideon W. Thompson renewed the offensive in western Missouri by helping take Independence, near Kansas City, then supported Colonel John T. Coffee against a Union force under Major Emory S. Foster to the southeast at Lone Jack. Wounded and defeated, Foster retreated to Lexington. However, threatened in the rear, Coffee later also withdrew (16 August 1862).

Lone Pine ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

As a southern diversion from the offensive at Sari Bair, Australian General Harold Walker advanced inland from Anzac to Lone Pine Ridge. Heavy shelling failed to destroy the Turkish defences, but the Ridge was eventually taken, lost, then retaken again. Bloody fighting cost over 2,000 Australian and 5,000 Turkish casualties and seven Victoria Crosses were won (6–10 August 1915).

Long Bridge ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Great Bridge

Long Cheng ❙ 1971–1972 ❙ Laotian Civil War

After years of warfare in northern Laos, a large offensive by the Communist Pathet Lao, with North Vietnamese regulars, seized the Plain of Jars and attacked Long Cheng, the mountain base of Meo commander General Vang Pao. Aided by US air-strikes and Thai infantry the attack was repulsed. A few months later, as in Vietnam, a ceasefire ended the war (December 1971–January 1972).

Longcloth ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

Determined to prove the value of long-range penetration, British General Orde Wingate led Operation Longcloth into northern Burma, where his Chindits damaged the Mandalay–Myitkyina railway. However, the eccentric Wingate over-reached himself by crossing the Irriwaddy and was forced to withdraw, losing over 1,000 out of 3,000 men for little real gain (14 February–27 March 1943).

Longewala ❙ 1971 ❙ 3rd Indo-Pakistan War

In a bold offensive against India, 45 Pakistani tanks and a mobile infantry brigade advanced ten miles into Indian Rajasthan before being stalled at Longewala by courageous Indian artillery under Major Kuldip Singh Chandpuri. The invading column was then destroyed by Indian Hunter jets, with 34 tanks lost and more than 500 other vehicles. India then counter-attacked into Sind (5–6 December 1971).

Long Island ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British General William Howe attacking New York City landed 20,000 men from Staten Island on western Long Island. In desperate fighting, the outnumbered Americans were driven back from Brooklyn Heights. Americans under General William Alexander surrendered after a brave delaying action, but General Israel Putnam crossed to Harlem Heights on Manhattan Island (27 August 1776).

Longling ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

As Chinese crossed the Salween in Yunnan, the southern force under General Sun Lianzhong seized part of Longling (modern Longshan), but were driven out by Japanese counter-attack. After the fall of Songshan, to the northeast, a fresh assault was launched (29 October) and the Japanese under Colonel Kurashiga had to withdraw to avoid annihilation (9 June–3 November 1944).

Longstop Hill ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Thrown out of Tébourba, in northern Tunisia, British and Americans tried to force the Germans off Longstop Hill (Djebel Rhar), commanding the strategic Medjerda Valley, southwest of Tunis before winter. Fighting in terrible conditions, the Allies took the summit before being driven off by a counter-attack. The hill was retaken with more costly losses in April 1943 (22–24 December 1942).

Longtan, China ❙ 1927 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Determined to recover Nanjing, warlord Sun Zhuanfang crossed the Yangzi further east at Longtan, then faced counter-attack by Nationalist General Bai Chongxi, supported by Admiral Yang Shu Zhang. After very heavy losses on both sides, 30,000 Northerners surrendered with their guns. Sun withdrew and in December he struck back at Xuzhou (26–31 August 1927).

Long Tan, Vietnam ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

While patrolling from Nui Dat, in Phuoc Tuy, Australian troops under Major Harry Smith were nearly over-run in a rubber plantation at Long Tan by about 2,000 Viet Cong, who were finally driven off by heavy artillery and machine-gun fire with perhaps 500 killed. The massively outnumbered Australians lost 18 killed and 24 wounded in their fiercest action of the entire war (18 August 1966).

Longueuil ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In a final attempt to relieve besieged St Johns, southeast of Montreal, British General Guy Carleton assembled 800 men, supported by Colonel Allan MacLean. While attempting to cross the St Lawrence east of Montreal at Longueuil, they were heavily defeated by Colonel Seth Warner and his Green Mountain Boys. Three days later St Johns was forced to surrender (30 October 1775).

Longwood ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

American Captain Andrew Holmes patrolled in force up the Thames River in Ontario and reached Longwood, where he established a well-prepared log breastwork. An unwise frontal assault by regulars and militia under Captain James Basden was heavily repulsed, though with over-stretched lines the Americans withdrew to Detroit. Basden was wounded and did not pursue (5 March 1814).

Longwy ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

At the start of their invasion of France, Prussians and Austrians under Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick, attacked the border fortress of Longwy, west of Luxembourg. It fell after two days of bombardment and Verdun, further south, capitulated soon afterwards. Longwy was abandoned by Brunswick (19 October) when he was forced to retreat after defeat at Valmy (23 August 1792).

Lookout Mountain ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Chattanooga (2nd)

Loon Lake ❙ 1885 ❙ 2nd Riel Rebellion

The Cree Chief Big Bear (Mistahimaskwa) repulsed a pursuing Canadian army force at Frenchman's Butte after defeat at Batoche (12 May), then withdrew north towards Loon Lake in northwest Saskatchewan, where he was attacked by a party of Mounted Police under Samuel Steele. Big Bear again escaped after a sharp action, but surrendered a few weeks later (3 June 1885).

Loos ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As part of the Allied offensive in Artois, British forces under General Douglas Haig attacked north of Lens towards Loos. Advancing behind their first use of poison gas, the British enjoyed early success before lack of reserves forced them back with 50,000 casualties. Commander-in-Chief Sir John French was dismissed and was replaced by Haig (25 September–15 October 1915).

L'Orient ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Ile de Groix

Loros ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Chilean Liberal Revolt

In a rising against Conservative Chilean President Manuel Montt Torres, Pedro León Gallo and 1,400 men faced Colonel José Maria Silva Chávez at Loros, southeast of Copiapo. Following a bloody hand-to-hand action, the government forces withdrew south towards Coquimbo after losing 160 casualties and 250 prisoners. Gallo's rising was crushed next month at Cerro Grande (14 March 1859).

Lorraine ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

French Commander Joseph Joffre recovered from repulse at Mulhouse (10 August) and sent General Paul Pau into Lorraine southeast of Metz, with Auguste Dubail and Noel de Castelnau. As the French advanced on Sarrebourg and Morhange, German commanders Prince Rupprecht and Josias von Heeringen launched a devastating counter-attack and Pau fell back on Nancy (14–22 August 1914).

Los Angeles, California ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

See San Gabriel, California

Los Angeles, Peru ❙ 1880 ❙ War of the Pacific

After landing on Peru's coast, Chilean General Manuel Baquedano marched inland with 10,000 men and attacked a smaller Peruvian force under Colonel Andrés Gamarra defending a defile near Questa de Los Angeles, northwest of Moquegua. While Baquedano lost the greater casualties, the outflanked Peruvians were defeated and withdrew to rejoin the main force at Tacna (22 March 1880).

Los Arcos ❙ 1833 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Early in the war against Spanish Regent Maria Cristina, Carlist Marshal Santo Ladron gathered Royalist volunteers in Logroño, then advanced into Navarre against a larger government force under General Manuel Lorenzo. Attempting to make a stand at Los Arcos, near Estella, Ladron was routed, then executed next day as a rebel. Lorenzo won again next month at Peñacerrada (11 October 1833).

Los Chancos ❙ 1876 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Amid disorder following Colombia's election of 1876, Conservatives in Antioquia and Tolima resorted to arms against the government. In a bloody battle at Los Chancos, southwest of Manizales, a heavily outnumbered Liberal government force under General Julián Trujillo defeated rebel General Joaquín M. Córdoba. The rebels were defeated again in November at Garrapata (31 August 1876).

Lose-Coat Field ❙ 1470 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Edward IV recovered after Edgecote (July 1469) and attacked Lancastrian rebels in the north, who were routed at Lose-Coat Field, near Empingham north of Stamford—shedding their distinctive coats in flight. Before execution, rebel leader Sir Robert Welles implicated the King's brother George Duke of Clarence and Richard Neville Earl of Warwick, who both fled to France (12 March 1470).

Los Gelves ❙ 1510 ❙ Spanish Colonial Wars in North Africa

After Spain secured Tripoli (26 July), Garcia de Toledo, son of the Duke of Alba, arrived with reinforcements to join Pedro Navarro on an expedition to nearby Los Gelves Island. Rashly marching inland in extreme heat, Toledo was attacked by a Moor force and died with most of his men. Navarro turned for home, meeting further destruction when his fleet was struck by a storm (28 August 1510).

Losheim Gap ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Schnee Eifel

Loshnitza ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As Napoleon Bonaparte's retreat from Moscow approached the Berezina, Russian Admiral Paul Tchitchakov attempted to seize the river crossing at Borisov. On the nearby Plain of Loshnitza, Marshal Nicolas Oudinot drove off the attack, securing Borisov and capturing a large quantity of Russian stores. However, Tchitchakov was able to destroy the river bridges (23 November 1812).

Los Horcones ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Weeks after defeating a Royalist force in western Venezuela at Niquitao, Republican Colonel José Félix Ribas occupied El Tocuyo then set out northeast towards Barquisimeto in pursuit of Colonel Francisco Oberto. Intercepting the Royalists at Los Horcones, Ribas secured another decisive victory, then marched to join his commander Simón Bolívar in the great victory at Taguanes (22 July 1813).

Los Negros ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

American General William Chase invaded the Admiralty Islands, west of Rabaul, and landed on Los Negros, where intense attacks on his beachhead saw over 100 Americans killed. The island was eventually secured with about 1,200 Japanese dead, many committing suicide to avoid surrender. The Americans then turned west against the larger island of Manus (29 February–8 March 1943).

Los Pozos ❙ 1826 ❙ Argentine-Brazilian War

A fresh attempt to enforce the blockade of Buenos Aires saw the Brazilian fleet attack part of Argentine commander William Brown's squadron at Los Pozos, just outside the capital. In a brief engagement, reportedly witnessed by 10,000 spectators ashore at Buenos Aires, the Brazilians were driven off by heavy gunfire. Action resumed six weeks later off Quilmes (11 June 1826).

Los Remedios ❙ 1817–1818 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

In pursuit of rebel Francisco Javier Mina, Royalist Marshal Pascual Liñan captured Sombrero, then besieged the remaining rebel stronghold at Los Remedios, southwest of Guanajuato. When Mina was captured at Venadito and executed (11 November), the starving garrison attempted a breakout and hundreds of men, women and children were killed or captured (31 August 1817–1 January 1818).

Lost River, California ❙ 1872 ❙ Modoc Indian War

When Modoc under Captain Jack (Kintpuash) refused to return to the Klamath Reservation, Captain James Jackson's cavalry troop was sent to return them by force. In a confrontation on the Lost River, just inside northern California, two soldiers and one Indian were killed. While only a skirmish, it triggered a bitter war and the Modoc withdrew south to the Lava Beds (29 November 1872).

Lost Valley, Texas ❙ 1874 ❙ Red River Indian War

Kiowa Chief Lone Wolf seeking revenge for his son and nephew killed at Adobe Walls, ambushed Major John B. Jones and 25 men of the Texas Rangers' Frontier Battalion at Lost Valley, near Jacksboro, Texas, close to the site of the Salt Creek Massacre. The green Rangers lost two killed and several wounded in a sharp action before the Indians withdrew at nightfall (12 July 1874).

Lostwithiel ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

King Charles I won at Cropredy Bridge in June and pursued Robert Devereux Earl of Essex to siege at Lostwithiel in Cornwall. With the fall of nearby Beacon Hill, the Ironsides cavalry under Sir William Balfour escaped to Plymouth (31 August). When Essex fled, Philip Skippon surrendered the town with 6,000 men, 40 guns and 5,000 muskets (7 August–2 September 1644).

Loudon Hill ❙ 1307 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

Resuming his struggle against England after defeat at Methven (June 1306), Robert the Bruce gathered a fresh Scots army and after a sharp victory at Glentrool over Aymer de Valence Earl of Pembroke, decisively beat the Earl again at Loudon Hill, near Ayr. When Edward I died soon after, his son Edward II withdrew to England and lost Scotland in 1314 at Bannockburn (10 May 1307).

Loudon Hill ❙ 1679 ❙ Scottish Covenanter Rebellion

See Drumclog

Loudoun ❙ 1760 ❙ Cherokee Indian Wars

See Fort Loudoun

Lough Swilly ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Irish Rising)

See Donegal Bay

Louisbourg ❙ 1745 ❙ King George's War

A decisive offensive against France in North America saw 4,000 Maine militia under William Pepperell besieged the fortress port of Louisbourg on Cape Breton Island in Nova Scotia. Supported by naval gunfire from ships under Commodore Peter Warren, the Anglo-American expedition forced the fortress to capitulate. King George II later created Pepperell a Baronet (25 April–16 June 1745).

Louisbourg ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

In a large-scale siege of Louisbourg, on Cape Breton Island, British Generals Jeffrey Amherst and James Wolfe attacked by land while Admiral Edward Boscawen blockaded a French naval squadron in the harbour. After weeks of very heavy fighting, French Governor Auguste Drucour surrendered the fortress, reputedly the most powerful in North America (2 June–27 July 1758).

Loushan Pass ❙ 1935 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Recovering from disaster at the Xiang (December 1934), the Red Army of Zhou Enlai and Mao Zedong continued north, then doubled back to retake Zunyi. The claimed first victory of the Long March saw Peng Dehuai storm the Loushan Pass, then rout the Nationalists to seize nearby Zunyi. The March continued on to eventually cross the Lazikou Pass in September (26 February 1935).

Louvain ❙ 891 ❙ Viking Raids on Germany

See Dyle

Louvain ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French General Charles-Francois Dumouriez was disastrously defeated at Neerwinden and was beaten again three days later by Friedrich Josias, Prince of Saxe-Coburg at Louvain, east of Brussels. When French Minister of War, Pierre Riel, came to relieve Dumouriez of his command, Dumouriez handed Riel over to the Austrians and defected to his former opponents (21 March 1793).

Louvement ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

When French forces recaptured the Verdun fortresses of Douaumont and Vaux, General Charles Mangin launched a final major advance northeast through Louvement and Bezanvaux, taking 11,000 prisoners and over 100 guns in three days. German High Command finally had to accept defeat in the great struggle for Verdun and withdrew to their original lines (15–18 December 1916).

Lovejoy's Station ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

In support of his campaign against Atlanta, Georgia, Union commander William T. Sherman sent General H. Judson Kilpatrick against Confederate railroads to the south of the city. Kilpatrick destroyed the line at Jonesborough, but further south at Lovejoy's Station he was attacked and driven off by Confederates under General William H. Jackson (20 August 1864).

Lovek ❙ 1587 ❙ Siamese-Cambodian Wars

Prince (later King) Naresuan of Siam turned against his former ally King Chetta I of Cambodia (who had previously supported him against Burma) and invaded Cambodia, campaigning right up to the walls of the capital Lovek (north of modern Phnom Penh). While lack of supplies finally forced the Siamese army to withdraw, Naresuan succeeded in a second attempt seven years later.

Lovek ❙ 1594 ❙ Siamese-Cambodian Wars

Having securing Siam from Burmese control at Nong Sarai, King Naresuan took 100,000 men on a renewed expedition against Cambodia and captured many towns. However, the capital Lovek (north of modern Phnom Penh) refused to capitulate and had to be taken by storm (although King Chetta I himself escaped). Siam ruled Cambodia as a vassal until it was overthrown in 1622 (July 1594).

Lowenberg ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Prior to the decisive battle at the Katzbach, Prussian General Gebhard von Blucher turned on Marshal Jacques Macdonald, who had pursued him into Silesia after victory at Lützen and Bautzen. On the Bober at Lowenberg, southwest of Leignitz, the Prussians attempted to make a stand but were driven back. The French then advanced to defeat a few days later on the Katzbach (21 August 1813).

Lowestoft ❙ 1665 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

While cruising off Lowestoft, Dutch Admiral Jacob Opdam van Wassenaer with over 100 ships met a larger English fleet under James Duke of York. Opdam was killed when his vessel blew up and the resulting rout saw the Dutch lose more than 30 ships before Cornelius van Tromp skillfully managed the withdrawal. York lost only two ships, though failure to pursue cost him his command (13 June 1665).

Loxahatchee ❙ 1838 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

General Thomas Jesup was campaigning in eastern Florida, where he sent a navy boat party under Lieutenant Levin Powell against a Seminole village on the Loxahatchee, near modern Palm Beach. Led into an ambush, Powell was forced to retreat with five killed and 22 wounded. A week later Jesup himself took his main force against the Seminole at Jupiter Inlet (15 January 1838).

Lozengrad ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

See Kirk Kilissa

Loznitza ❙ 1810 ❙ 1st Serbian Rising

Despite defeat northwest of Nish at Varvarin, a Muslim-Bosnian army attacked Serbian patriot Kara George and Irish-born Russian General Joseph O'Rourke at Loznitza, near the Drina west of Belgrade and were badly beaten again. With Napoleon Bonaparte threatening in the west, Russia abandoned Serbia to make peace with Turkey and Kara George fled to Austria (17–19 October 1810).

Luanda ❙ 1648 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

With Portuguese troops absent on campaign against Kongo, 2,000 Dutch seized Luanda (1641) to capture part of the lucrative Angolan slave trade. Following a troubled occupation, Salvador Correia de Sá led a powerful force from Brazil against Luanda. A sharp siege forced the Dutch to surrender and the Portuguese soon imposed a humiliating peace on their ally King Garcia of Kongo (August 1648).

Lubar ❙ 1660 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars
See Liubar

Lubeck ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)
Retreating north after the twin defeats at Jena and Auerstadt (14 October), Prussian General Gebhard von Blucher reached the free city of Lubeck where he turned to face French Marshals Nicolas Soult and Jean Baptiste Bernadotte, who stormed and sacked the Baltic port. Blucher escaped with part of his force but was captured next day, surrendering the once-proud Prussian army (7 November 1806).

Lubieszow ❙ 1577 ❙ Gdansk War
When Danzig (modern Gdansk) supported the Habsburg candidate for the throne of Poland, King Stephen Bathory marched against the city. To the southwest at Lubieszow his army under Jan Zborowski destroyed a much larger Danzig-mercenary force under Hans Winkelbruch of Cologne. The Poles then imposed a siege of Danzig, which eventually agreed to pay allegiance (17 April 1577).

Lubina ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)
See Valutino

Lublin ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)
Just days after the fall of Minsk, Russian General Konstantin Rokossovsky launched a fresh offensive from Kovel, west across the Bug into Poland, where he advanced on Lublin, held by Army Group North Ukraine under Marshal Walther Model. The city fell after heavy fighting (Brest-Litovsk also fell a few days later) cutting off aid to Lvov and opening the way to Warsaw (18–24 July 1944).

Lubnitz ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)
See Hagelsberg

Lubny ❙ 1596 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars
Amid revolt against Poland, Ukrainian Cossacks under Severyn Nalyvaiko, Hryhori Loboda and Matvii Shaula were besieged by Hetman Stanislas Zolkiewski at Solonitsa, near Lubny. Loboda was killed by mutineers and, when Nalyvaiko and Shaula were handed over during negotiations, Zolkiewski surprised and slaughtered the Cossacks. His two prisoners were later executed (26 May–7 July 1596).

Lucania ❙ 71 BC ❙ 3rd Servile War
See Silarus

Lucca ❙ 1341 ❙ Florentine-Pisan Wars
In dispute over possession of Lucca, the armies of Pisa and Florence met outside the walls of the city, where a great battle saw the Florentine cavalry destroyed by Pisan crossbowmen. The Pisans then invested Lucca and, after repeated attempts by Florentine General Malatesta to relieve the siege were driven off, Pisa eventually took possession of Lucca in July 1342 (2 October 1341).

Lucena ❙ 1483 ❙ Final Christian Reconquest of Spain
Encouraged by victory at Axarquia, King Abu Abdallah (Boabdil) of Granada soon invaded Christian territory and besieged Lucena. South of Lucena at the Genil, the Muslims were routed by a relief army under Diego Fernández de Cordoba Count of Cabra. General Ali Atar was killed and the Muslim King was captured, then later ransomed as a tributary of Ferdinand of Aragon (21 April 1483).

Lucenec ❙ 1451 ❙ Polish-Bohemian War
Czech General Jan Jiskra of Brandyz campaigned in Upper Hungary on behalf of the infant-King Ladislav V (posthumous son of Albert of Hungary) against Regent Jan Hunyadi, most notably at Lucenec, in modern Slovakia. Jiskra's Bohemian mercenaries won decisively, though Jiskra was driven out two years later when Ladislav succeeded to the Hungarian throne (10 August 1451).

Luchana ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War
See Bilbao

Lu-chou ❙ 1853–1854 ❙ Taiping Rebellion
See Luzhou

Luckau ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Napoleon Bonaparte advanced across the Spree after victory at Bautzen and sent Marshal Nicolas Oudinot's division north towards Berlin, where Prussian General Friedrich von Bulow was repulsed at Hoyerswerda. A week later, south of the capital at Luckau, von Bulow drove Oudinot back with heavy losses. In August he inflicted a decisive defeat at Grossbeeren (6 June 1813).

Lucknow (1st) ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Indian mutineers under Nana Sahib swept aside a British force at Chinhat (30 June) and besieged the British Residency on the north of Lucknow, held by General Sir Henry Lawrence. Marching north through Mangalwar and Alambagh, Generals Sir Henry Havelock and Sir James Outram suffered heavy losses fighting their way into the Residency, but the siege continued (25 September 1857).

Lucknow (2nd) ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Despite relief by General Sir Henry Havelock (25 September), the British Residency north of Lucknow had remained under siege by Nana Sahib since 1 July. A second relief force approached under Sir Colin Campbell and, following hard fighting at the Sikander Bagh, the Residency was relieved. Campbell evacuated the garrison and families to Cawnpore (19 November 1857).

Lucknow ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Four months after evacuating Lucknow following victory at Sikander Bagh, General Sir Colin Campbell returned to retake the city from mutineers under Nana Sahib. Advancing with a large army and siege train through nearby Alambagh, Campbell and Sir James Outram took the city after more than a week of terrible street fighting. This was followed by massive looting (9–21 March 1858).

Lucon ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

During the Royalist rebellion in western France, Maurice d'Elbée and 6,000 rebels were repulsed at Lucon by Republican General Claude Sandoz and a garrison of just 800. New commander Augustin Tuncq drove off a second attempt and, two weeks later, Tuncq and 5,000 men routed 30,000 rebels under the personal command of Francois-Athanese Charette (15 & 28 July & 14 August 1793).

Ludford Bridge ❙ 1459 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Six weeks after decisive victory at Blore Heath, the outnumbered army of Richard Duke of York and his father-in-law Richard Neville Earl of Salisbury was confronted at Ludford Bridge, near Ludlow, Shropshire, by Henry VI. Without waiting for battle, York fled to Ireland, while his son Edward Earl of March and Salisbury and his son Richard Earl of Warwick fled to Calais (12 October 1459).

Lugalo ❙ 1891 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

A punitive column led by Lieutenant Emil von Zelewski was sent against rebellious Hehe tribesmen under Mkwawa in the south of German East Africa. Ambushed at Lugalo, east of Iringa in modern Tanzania, by Mkwawa's brother Mpangile, Zelewski was overwhelmed and killed, along with most of his 300 men. Mkwawa was eventually defeated in 1894 at Iringa (17 August 1891).

Lugdunum ❙ 197 ❙ Wars of Emperor Severus

Emperor Septimius Severus defeated Pescennius Niger in the east at Issus (194), then turned west and treacherously revoked his previous recognition of Decimus Clodius Albinus in Gaul. Severus crossed the Alps with a large army and a bitter mid-winter battle at Lugdunum (modern Lyon) saw Albinus defeated and take his own life, giving Severus control in the west (19 February 197).

Lugo ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Sir John Moore's British army retreated from Benavente towards Corunna in northwest Spain, he determined to make a stand on the Minho at Lugo. Despite heavy losses of men and equipment, Moore still had a strong force and an attack by Marshal Nicolas Soult was sharply repulsed. Moore then retired during the night through Betanzos to Corunna (7–8 January 1809).

Lugos ❙ 1695 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Sultan Mustafa II renewed Turkey's offensive in Romania where his invasion force captured Lippa then advanced south to Lugos (modern Lugoj), east of Timisoara, where Austrian Field Marshal Friedrich Veterani was defeated with heavy losses on both sides. Veterani was taken prisoner and beheaded and the offensive continued until Turkish defeat two years later at Zenta (22 September 1695).

Lugouqiao ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Marco Polo Bridge

Luino ❙ 1848 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

Disregarding an armistice between Sardinia and Austria after Austrian victory in July at Custozza, Giuseppe Garibaldi continued fighting and was attacked near Luino on the eastern shore of Lake Maggiore by 700 Croats under Major Anton von Molinary. The Croats were defeated and withdrew, but days later a larger force was sent against Garibaldi at Morazzone (15 August 1848).

Lukouchiao ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Marco Polo Bridge

Lüleburgaz ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

Turks under Abdullah Pasha withdrawing south days after defeat at Kirk Kilissa, tried to hold a line between Lüleburgaz and Bunahissar against General Radko Dimitriev's Bulgarians. A massive action—claimed to have decided Turkey's fate in Europe—saw the Turks crushed by artillery fire. They then fled to the defensive line outside Constantinople at Chataldja (28 October–3 November 1912).

Lumphanan ❙ 1057 ❙ Scottish War of Succession

Despite defeat at Dunsinane (July 1054), the usurper King Macbeth of Scotland retained power in the north and held out against Malcolm Canmore, son of the murdered Duncan I. Aided by Macduff, Thane of Fife, Malcolm defeated and killed Macbeth at Lumphanan, near Alford in Aberdeenshire. He became King in 1058 after victory over Macbeth's stepson at Essie (15 August 1057).

Luncarty ❙ 980 ❙ Later Viking Raids on Britain

Forced to wage continuous war against the Saxons of Northumberland and Viking raiders from the north, Kenneth II of Scotland secured a decisive victory against Danes, who had landed on the Tay, northwest of Perth. In one of their worst defeats, the Danish Vikings were utterly routed at Luncarty and their ships were sunk at the mouth of the Tay (trad date 980).

Lund ❙ 1676 ❙ Scania War

When Denmark sided with the Netherlands against France and her ally Sweden, Charles XI of Sweden invaded Danish territory, despite heavy Swedish losses at sea. Charles and General Simon Grundel Baron of Helmfelt attacked the Danes at Lund, near Horsens, where King Christian V of Denmark suffered a terrible defeat. He reputedly lost almost half his army (3 December 1676).

Lundy's Lane ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

American Generals Jacob Brown and Winfield Scott, marching north along the Canadian shore of the Niagara River after victory at Chippewa (5 July), were met at Lundy's Lane near Niagara Falls by Generals Sir Gordon Drummond and Sir Phineas Riall. After a confused and bloody action, and short of water and ammunition, Brown and Scott both withdrew wounded to Fort Erie (25 July 1814).

Luneberg ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Following Prussia's defection from his alliance, Napoleon Bonaparte marched into Germany and General Charles Morand crossed the Weser to occupy Luneberg, southeast of Hamburg, where he was heavily repulsed by Generals Wilhelm Dornberg and Alexander Tchernitcheff. Next day Marshal Louis Davout's French army appeared and the Allies were forced to withdraw (1 April 1813).

Lunga Point ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Tassafaronga

Lung-ling ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

See Longling

Lungtan ❙ 1927 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Longtan, China

Luoyang ❙ 311 ❙ Wars of the Sixteen Kingdoms Era

As civil war wracked northern China, the Xiongnu leader Liu Yuan proclaimed himself King of Han and threatened the Jin Imperial capital at Luoyang. When he died (310), his son Liu Cong and Jie leader Shi Le stormed Luoyang and destroyed much of the city, virtually ending Jin rule in northern China. Emperor Huai was captured and later executed and the Jin capital moved to Chang'an.

Luoyang ❙ 328 ❙ Wars of the Sixteen Kingdoms Era

With the end of the Jin Dynasty in northern China at Luoyang (311) and Chang'an (316), Xiongnu leader Liu Yao and his Jie ally Shi Le fell out and established rival kingdoms. Liu Yao of Former Zhao seized Luoyang, then faced a massive counter-attack by Shi Le. Outside the city, Liu was defeated and captured. Shi Le's Kingdom of Later Zhao effectively came to rule most of northern China.

Luoyang ❙ 620–621 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty

After securing northwest China at Qianshuiyuan (618), Li Shimin, son of Emperor Gaozu, turned east against the Sui loyalist Wang Shichong at Luoyang, who was defeated outside the city, then fell back under siege. When a Xia relief army under Dou Jiande was defeated at Hulao (28 May), Wang surrendered Luoyang and the Tang had eliminated their last major rival (September 620–4 June 621).

Luoyang ❙ 755 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

Military Governor An Lushan led a revolt in China's northern provinces, where he captured modern Kaifeng then advanced on the Eastern capital at Luoyang. Tang commander Feng Chang Qing fought boldly to halt the rebels, but was heavily defeated and Luoyang was taken by storm. An Lushan then declared himself Emperor and the Tang fell back to defend Tongguan (December 755).

Luoyang ❙ 762 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

After victory over an Imperial army at Xiangzhou (758), Shi Siming overthrew rebel leader An Qingxu and retook Luoyang (759) before he was murdered in 761 by his son Shi Chaoyi. Following three years of military deadlock, new Tang Emperor Daizong launched a fresh offensive. In battle outside Luoyang, Shi Chaoyi was decisively defeated, virtually ending the rebellion (November 762).

Luoyang ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

As Wuhan Nationalist Tang Shengzhi advanced north into Henan through Zhumadian and Linying, his rival Feng Yuxiang converged from the west against Northern General Zhang Zhigong. Feng stormed Luoyang after heavy fighting, then easily took Zhengzhou and Kaifeng. He soon abandoned the Wuhan clique to support Chiang Kai-shek (10–28 May 1927).

Luoyang ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

On the offensive in northern China, Communist General Chen Geng seized Luoyang in Henan on the strategic Longhai Railway, but six days later was driven out by a Nationalist counter-attack. After further heavy fighting, Chen retook Luoyang and entered Shanxi to capture Linfen (17 May). He then led his army southeast to join the major offensive against Kaifeng in June (12 March–7 April 1948).

Lupia ❙ 11 BC ❙ Rome's Germanic Wars
See Lippe

Lupstein ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War
See Zabern

Lüshun ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War
See Port Arthur

Lüshun ❙ 1904–1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War
See Port Arthur

Lutnyia ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)
See Leuthen

Lutsk ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

In support of Germany's Triple Offensive, Austrian Franz Conrad von Hotzendorf launched the Black and Yellow Offensive into the Ukraine and seized Lutsk. When General Aleksei Brusilov counter-attacked and retook the city Germany had to send reinforcements. Brusilov withdrew from Lutsk, though the campaign had cost Conrad 300,000 men (31 August–28 September 1915).

Lutsk ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As part of the stunning Brusilov Offensive on the Eastern Front, Russian General Aleksei Kaledin led a major attack south of the Pripet Marshes around Lutsk. The Austrian Fourth Army of Archduke Josef Ferdinand was badly defeated and Lutsk was taken along with up to 40,000 prisoners. However, the offensive later stalled further north around Kovel and Brzezany (4–6 June 1916).

Lutter am Barenberg ❙ 1626 ❙ Thirty Years War (Saxon-Danish War)

Christian IV of Denmark intervened in Germany and marched south from Brunswick. After his ally Count Ernst von Mansfeld was defeated at Dessau (26 April), Christian withdrew in the face of a massive Catholic army under Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly. Christian tried to make a stand at Lutter, on the Barenberg near Wolfenbüttel, but he was routed and had to abandon Brunswick (27 August 1626).

Lutterberg ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Counter-attacking across the Rhine through Hesse, French Duke Charles of Soubise secured victory at Sandershausen, northeast of Kassel (23 July) and was later attacked at nearby Lutterberg by a Prussian-British force under General Christoph Ludwig von Oberg. Soubise won a decisive victory, but failed to follow up and was eventually replaced by Marquis Louis de Contades (10 October 1758).

Lutterberg ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

A month after defeat in Hesse at Wilhelmstahl, French Marshals Charles Soubise and Louis d'Estrées fell back on the Fulda, northeast of Kassel, with the right wing around Lutterberg held by Prince Franz Xavier of Saxony. Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick attacked and routed the Saxons, forcing the French army to continue withdrawing through Amoneburg to the Rhine (23 July 1762).

Lutzelburg ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)
See Lutterberg

Lützen ❙ 1632 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

Imperial commander Albrecht von Wallenstein checked Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden at Furth, then advanced into Saxony where he faced a Swedish counter-offensive southwest of Leipzig, at Lützen, where the Swedish King and Catholic leader Gottfreid zu Pappenheim were killed. Bernard of Saxe-Weimar secured Protestant victory and Wallenstein withdrew into Bohemia (16 November 1632).

Lützen ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Napoleon Bonaparte followed Prussia's defection from his alliance by marching into Germany, where he captured Leipzig before meeting General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians and Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein's Russians near Lützen at Gross-Gorschen. Both sides suffered heavy losses before the outnumbered Allies were forced back across the Elbe. Bonaparte then occupied Dresden (2 May 1813).

Luxembourg ❙ 1684 ❙ Franco-Spanish War

A brief renewal of war between Louis XIV and the Spanish Netherlands saw France seize Coutrai then lay siege to Luxembourg. Supported by the great siege-master Marshal Sebastien Vauban, French Marshal Francois de Crequi forced Luxembourg to surrender. In the peace which followed it was retained by France (April–6 June 1684).

Luxembourg ❙ 1794–1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As he drove the Allies from the left bank of the Rhine, French General Charles Pichegru besieged the stubborn fortress of Luxembourg, defended by Austrian Baron Blasius von Bender. The starving city surrendered to General Jacques-Maurice Hatry after eight months and Pichegru then joined General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan to cross into Germany (21 November 1794–25 June 1795).

Luzhou ❙ 1853–1854 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

As the Taiping campaigned west from Nanjing into Anhui, commander Shi Dakai sent Hu Yihuang west against Luzhou (modern Hefei) recently reinforced by Imperial Governor Zhiang Zhongyuan. Despite a brilliant defence, the city was taken by storm with Zhiang killed, followed by a terrible massacre. It was held by the rebels until November 1855 (12 December 1853–15 January 1854).

Luzon ❙ 1941–1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Philippines

Luzon ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Two weeks after seizing Leyte in the Philippines, General Walter Krueger moved north to Luzon, where over 200,000 Americans eventually landed to secure Manila, Bataan and Corregidor. Fierce fight on Luzon cost 8,000 Americans killed and perhaps 190,000 Japanese, but General Tomoyuki Yamashita held out with 50,000 men until the war ended (9 January–4 July 1945).

Luzzara ❙ 1702 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

After losing cavalry at Santa Vittoria (26 July), Imperial commander Prince Eugène of Savoy raised his siege of Mantua and marched south to attack Louis Duke de Vendôme outside Imperial-held Luzzara. Though the French and Spanish were driven from their trenches with heavier losses, Eugène's Austrians withdrew. A stalemate ensued in Lombardy until Cassano in 1705 (15 August 1702).

Luzarra ❙ 1734 ❙ War of the Polish Succession

See Guastalla

Lvov ❙ 1655 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Having checked a Polish invasion at Okhmatov, the Cossack Bogdan Chmielnicki and Russian Vasili Buturlin besieged Lvov. When Stanislas Potocki's relief force was driven off by Grigori Romodanovsky at Slonihodrek, Lublin fell (20 October). The siege was lifted when a Crimean-Tatar army intervened and the Russians withdrew through Ozernoe (September–October 1655).

Lvov ❙ 1675 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

See Zloczow

Lvov ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Lemberg

Lvov ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Kerensky Offensive

Lvov ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

The final great offensive in the Ukraine saw Marshal Ivan Konev launch 850,000 men on a broad front towards Lvov. Eight German divisions were annihilated northeast around Brody and, after a massive flanking attack west towards Sandomierz, General Josef Harpe was forced to evacuate Lvov. The operation cost severe German losses and opened the way to Warsaw (13–27 July 1944).

Lycia ❙ 654 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Mount Phoenix

Lycus ❙ 66 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War

Despite defeat at Tigranocerta and Artaxata for Tigranes of Armenia, his father-in-law Mithridates VI of Pontus regained part of his kingdom at Zela and was attacked on the Lycus (Kelkit) in Armenia by new Roman commander Gnaeus Pompey. Mithridates was routed and Tigranes sued for peace. Mithridates later killed himself and Pompey built the city of Nicopolis to mark his victory.

Lydda-Ramleh ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

At the start of the so-called Ten Days Offensive, Palmach forces under Ygal Allon launched a large-scale assault southeast of Tel Aviv against Lydda (Lod) and Ramleh. Heavy fighting secured Lydda and its important airport and nearby Ramleh quickly surrendered. However, further along the Jerusalem road at Latrun, the Israelis were halted with costly losses (9–12 July 1948).

Lyesna ❙ 1708 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Lesnaya

Lyman's Wagon Train ❙ 1874 ❙ Red River Indian War

As Captain Wyllys Lyman escorted a wagon train to re-supply Colonel Nelson A. Miles in western Oklahoma, he was besieged for five days just north of the Washita River by 400 Kiowas under Lone Wolf, Satanta and others. An approaching patrol was repulsed at Buffalo Wallow, but Lyman was eventually relieved by Major William R. Price from Fort Union, New Mexico (9–14 September 1874).

Lyme ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

When Prince Maurice and 6,000 Royalists besieged Lyme in Dorsetshire, they were repulsed by Colonel Robert Blake and fewer than 1,000 men. The town came to symbolise Parliamentary resistance in the west and, after Robert Rich Earl of Warwick brought supplies by sea (23 May), Blake held out until Sir Thomas Fairfax approached. Maurice then had to withdraw (20 April–15 June 1644).

Lynchburg ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General David Hunter advancing south along Virginia's Shenandoah Valley from victory at Piedmont, approached the key railway junction at Lynchburg, where he was met by new Confederate reinforcements under General Jubal A. Early. Unexpectedly outnumbered, Hunter was chased into West Virginia and Early invaded Maryland for victory at Monocacy (17–18 June 1864).

Lynn Haven Bay ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Chesapeake Capes (2nd)

Lyons ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Faced by a Royalist insurrection in Lyons, the Convention sent General Francois Kellerman against the garrison of General Louis-Francois Précy. Lyons fell after a costly siege and Kellerman returned to the war, leaving General Francois Doppet and the Jacobins to exact a terrible revenge. They demolished much of the city and executed thousands of civilians (8 August–10 October 1793).

Lys ▌ 1918 ▌ World War I (Western Front)

German commander Erich von Ludendorff smashed the Allies on the Somme, then launched his second offensive south of Ypres, where Generals Friedrich von Arnim and Ferdinand von Quast attacked General Sir Herbert Plumer on the Lys. The Germans advanced ten miles and retook Messines before stalling at Kemmel. Ludendorff then turned south to the Aisne (9–29 April 1918).

M

Maan ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Arab forces under Prince Feisal and Jafaar Pasha advanced northeast from Aqaba and, aided by British armoured cars, attacked Maan on the Hejaz Railway south of the Dead Sea. The Turkish garrison held out under siege and were heavily reinforced from Amman. Amid the final offensives of the war, some defenders fled north and the town fell to the Arabs (17 April–23 September 1918).

Maarat an-Numan ❙ 1098 ❙ 1st Crusade

In preparation for the main Crusader advance towards Jerusalem, Bohemund of Taranto and Raymond of Toulouse marched southeast from Antioch to attack the fortified town of Maarat an-Numan. The town fell by bloody assault after a frustrating two-week siege and most of the population were massacred or sold into slavery (27 November–12 December 1098).

Maastricht ❙ 1579 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

A fresh offensive in the northern Netherlands saw Spanish Viceroy Alexander Farnese attack Maastricht, defended by soldiers and militia under Melchior van Schwartzenburg. After a hard-fought siege, with costly mining and counter-mining, the city fell by storm, followed by a terrible massacre. William of Orange was blamed for failing to relieve the city (12 March–29 June 1579).

Maastricht ❙ 1632 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Frederick Henry of Orange secured the south at Hertogenbosch in 1629 then took a large force, including English, Scots and French, east against Maastricht, held by Willem Bette Baron van Lede. Spanish under Gonzalo Fernández de Cordoba, reinforced by Imperial General Gottfried zu Pappenheim, were repulsed (18 August) before the fortress capitulated (10 June–31 August 1632).

Maastricht ❙ 1673 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

During the French campaign in the Dutch Republic, King Louis XIV himself led a large army against the city of Maastricht, defended by General Jacques de Fariaux Vicomte de Maulde. Brilliant tunnelling operations by the master of siege warfare, Marshal Sebastien Vauban, took only 12 days to undermine the city's defensive walls and Maastricht quickly capitulated (13–30 June 1673).

Maastricht ❙ 1748 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Having captured the Dutch fortress at Bergen-op-Zoom (September 1747) after victory at Lauffeld, French Marshal Maurice de Saxe marched against nearby Maastricht on the Meuse. Following a half-hearted winter siege, Saxe gathered his forces in spring and took the city by assault. The campaign then became stalemated as negotiations brought the war to an end (7 May 1748).

Maaten-as-Sarra ❙ 1987 ❙ Libyan-Chad War

With Libyan invaders routed in northern Chad at Ouadi Doum, 2,000 Chadians in armed Toyota pickups made a lighting raid on the military base at Maaten-as-Sarra, 60 miles inside Libya. Chad claimed to have killed 1,700 Libyans and destroyed 26 aircraft and 70 tanks before withdrawing across the border with just 65 killed. Libya quickly sued for peace to end the war (5–6 September 1987).

Macalo ❙ 1427 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

See Maclodio

Macassar ❙ 1660 ❙ Dutch Wars in the East Indies

Dutch Commander Joan van Dam and a fleet of over 30 ships attacked Macassar, in eastern Indonesia's Celebes, where he destroyed six Portuguese vessels in the harbour and seized Fort Panakkukan. Sultan Hasanuddin had to accept peace, but when a wrecked Dutch ship was plundered in 1665 and an investigating official was killed, the Dutch sent a fresh expedition (June 1660).

Macassar ❙ 1667–1668 ❙ Dutch Wars in the East Indies

Determined to recapture Macassar, in the southwest Celebes, Dutch Admiral Cornelius Speelman attacked with 21 ships and defeated the Makasarese fleet off Butong. At the end of a bloody land campaign, supported by Prince Palakka of Bone, Speelman imposed Dutch sovereignty. When Sultan Hasanuddin resumed fighting the following year, he was defeated again and was finally deposed.

Macassar Strait ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

A Japanese invasion force anchored off the burning oil port of Balikpapan in Borneo was surprised at night by four American destroyers under Admiral William A. Glassford, which sank a torpedo boat and four heavily loaded troopships before withdrawing without serious damage. Despite the American success however, the invasion of Borneo proceeded on schedule (23–24 January 1942).

Machias ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When a British schooner and two sloops entered Machias Bay, in eastern Maine, they were pursued by American volunteers under Jeremiah O'Brien, who captured the schooner Margaretta and the sloop Unity. This first naval action of the war became known as the "Lexington of the Sea." O'Brien later operated Margaretta as the renamed privateer Machias Liberty (11–12 June 1775).

Machiwara ❙ 1560 ❙ Mughal Wars of Succession

Former Regent Bairam Khan rebelled against the young Mughal Emperor Akbar and marched to the northern Punjab, where he was met by a large army under the loyal Governor Atjah Khan. After a heavy defeat at Machiwara near Jullundur, Bairam Khan fled to Tilwara on the Sutlej. He was later forgiven by Akbar, who sent him to Mecca, where he was killed by an Afghan assassin.

Maciejowice ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

With Russian Field Marshal Alexander Suvorov advancing from the Ukraine, Polish commander Tadeusz Kosciuszko marched from Warsaw against General Ivan Fersen before the two Russian armies could join. On the Vistula at Maciejowice, 40 miles southeast of Warsaw, Kosciuszko was routed and taken prisoner and the spirit went out of the rising (10 October 1794).

Mackinac ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

See Michilimackinac

Maclodio ❙ 1427 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

Three months after taking Brescia and defeating the Milanese at Casa-al-Secco, Venetian Captain-General Francesco Bussone Count Carmagnola lured his enemy into battle at Maclodio, between Brescia and Crema. Making clever use of swampy terrain, Carmagnola routed the Milanese and took thousands of prisoners, including field commander Carlo Malatesta (11 October 1427).

Macon ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Fort Macon

Macta ❙ 1835 ❙ French Conquest of Algeria

Following the capture of Algiers, France faced continued resistance in western Algeria by the Arab warrior Abd-el-Kader, who had his capital at Mascara. Campaigning south from Oran, General Camille Trézel was repulsed by Kader at Moulay Ishmael and lost heavily two days later near Macta, prompting Paris to send reinforcements for final victory in November at Mascara (26 & 28 June 1835).

Mactan ❙ 1521 ❙ Philippines Expedition

Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan and his Spanish men-at-arms reached the distant islands later known as the Philippines where they joined Rajah Humabon of Cebu against his rival Lapu-Lapu, ruler of the nearby island of Mactan. In a sharp fight on the beach at Mactan, the Spanish and their allies were repulsed and Magellan was killed (27 April 1521).

Madagascar ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Indian Ocean)

Threatened by possible Japanese use of the Vichy French naval base in Madagascar at Diégo Suarez, General Robert Sturges and Admiral Neville Syfret took a large amphibious force and seized the port, with about 100 British and 200 French killed. Later landings by General Sir William Platt secured the island and Governor Armand Annet surrendered (5–7 May & 10 September–5 November 1942).

Madain ❙ 637 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

Following the great Muslim victory at Qadisiyya (636), Arab Governor Sa'ad ibn Abi Waqqas sent his commander Zohra against the Sassanian Persian winter capital at Madain, the complex of cities around Ctesiphon on the Tigris 20 miles south of Baghdad. The Persians withdrew after a two-month siege, abandoning massive booty. Within months they were beaten to the northeast at Jalula (March 637).

Madanpur ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Hugh Rose marched north from Sagar towards the rebel stronghold at Jhansi and faced well-defended passes onto the upper Plateau. In a hard-fought action, he stormed the pass at Madanpur, held by the Rajah of Shahgarh, then captured nearby Madanpur town. Rebel forces in nearby passes at Malthon and Narhat then had to withdraw as Rose continued towards Jhansi (4 March 1858).

Madeira ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

In battle in the eastern Atlantic off Madeira, the American frigate United States (Captain Stephen Decatur) defeated and captured the outgunned British frigate Macedonian (Captain John Carden). The badly damaged British ship was taken into American service and Decatur went on to become one of his country's greatest naval heroes (25 October 1812).

Madeira ❙ 1815 ❙ War of 1812

Unaware that peace was signed in Europe, the large American frigate Constitution (Captain Charles Stewart) left Boston for the Atlantic and near Madeira, met the British frigate Cyane (Captain Gordon Falcon) and the sloop Levant (Captain the Hon. George Douglas). The heavily outgunned British ships attacked bravely before both were captured and taken as prizes (20 February 1815).

Maderno ❙ 1439 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

Determined to attack Milan, Venetian forces under Niccolo Sorbolo and Francesco Sforza dragged their ships overland from the Adige to Lake Garda, but were defeated off Maderno by Milanese commander Niccolo Piccinino. However, when Piccinino later narrowly escaped capture, Sforza retook Verona and Venice secured the lake. Piccinino lost the following June at Anghiari (29 September 1439).

Madoera Strait ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

An Allied force under Dutch Admiral Karel Doorman sailing to intercept a convoy heading for Macassar was attacked by Japanese bombers in the Strait between Java and Madoera Island. The ships dispersed to fight back, but the US cruiser Marblehead was severely damaged and limped back home. Doorman withdrew and a similar interception failed ten days later off Palembang (4 February 1942).

Madonna del Olmo ❙ 1744 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Charles Emmanuel of Sardinia marched to relieve the Franco-Spanish siege of Cuneo, west of Turin, and reached as far as Madonna del Olmo on the outskirts of the town, where he was heavily repulsed by Louis-Francois de Bourbon, Prince of Conti, with the Infante Philip of Spain. The siege continued until casualties and losses to disease forced Conti to withdraw (30 September 1744).

Madras (1st) ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

French Admiral Bertrand Mahé de la Bourdonnais repulsed the British off Negapatam in southeastern India in June, then besieged Governor Nicholas Morse at the British base at Madras. After a week—with no French and only six British casualties—Madras and Fort St George surrendered. They were returned to Britain after peace in Europe in 1749 ended the war (14–21 September 1746).

Madras (2nd) ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

See St Thomé

Madras ❙ 1758–1759 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

After a failed siege of Tanjore in August, French Governor General Comte Thomas Lally attacked Madras, on the southeast coast, defended by about 4,000 British and Indian troops under Major Stringer Lawrence. Lally captured part of the city, though Fort St George held out for two months until Admiral Sir George Pocock arrived and Lally had to withdraw (13 December 1758–17 February 1759).

Madras ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Sadras

Madrid (1st) ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

When troops in Madrid rose against the Popular Front government, about 2,000 soldiers and 500 civilians held out at the Montana Barracks under Colonel Moisés Serra and later, General Joaquín Fanjul. After artillery bombardment, the barracks were stormed with several hundred killed, including Serra and Fanjul (who was executed). A subsequent Nationalist assault failed (18–19 July 1936).

Madrid (2nd) ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

Nationalist commander Francisco Franco sent Generals José Varela and Juan Yagüe on a bloody assault against Madrid, where General José Miaja led a brave defence, aided by International Brigades. The Nationalists withdrew with very costly losses, then tightened the siege at Corunna Road, Jarama and Guadalajara. Madrid held out until the end of the war (8–23 November 1936).

Madura ❙ 862 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Following the defeat of Srimara of Pandya by Pallava at the Arisil (860), Sena II of Ceylon, who supported rebel Prince Varaguna of Pandya, sent an army under general Kutthaka, who besieged the Pandyan capital, Madura. After fierce fighting, Madura was taken and sacked and Srimara died of wounds. His son, who took the throne as Varaguna II, was in turn killed in 880 at Sripurambiyan.

Maeredun ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

See Merton

Mafeking ❙ 1899–1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As the war began, Colonel Robert Baden-Powell in Mafeking was besieged by General Piet Cronjé (and later General Jacobus "Koos" Snyman), while other Boers struck further south at Kimberley. The garrison of under 1,000 held out for 217 days, fighting off an assault at Stadt, until relieved by General Bryan Mahon. The siege entered Victorian heroic legend (13 October 1899–20 May 1900).

Magagua ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

A few days after American defeat at Brownstown, forces under American Colonel James Miller made a further attempt to escort supplies to Detroit, on Lake St Clair. On the United States side of the Detroit River at Magagua, they were driven off by a British-Indian force under Captain Adam Muir and the Americans failed to break the British blockade of Detroit (9 August 1812).

Magango ❙ 1840 ❙ Zulu Wars of Succession

See Maqonqo

Magdala ❙ 1868 ❙ British Expedition to Ethiopia

General Sir Robert Napier led a punitive expedition against Emperor Theodore (Tewodros) of Ethiopia and his Anglo-Indian army marched 400 miles inland from the Red Sea. Three days after defeating the Ethiopian army at Arogi, they bombarded and stormed the Emperor's mountain fortress at Magdala. Theodore killed himself and Napier released the Emperor's British captives (13 April 1868).

Magdeburg ❙ 1630–1631 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

On campaign in northern Germany against Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, General Gottfried zu Pappenheim besieged Magdeburg, held by Swedes under Dietrich von Falkenburg. Reinforced by Imperial commander Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly, Pappenheim stormed the city, which then suffered a notorious orgy of destruction, with over 25,000 citizens killed (November 1630–20 May 1631).

Magdeburg ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

As the Prussian army retreated north across Germany after the twin defeats at Jena and Auerstadt, the powerful Elbe fortress of Magdeburg resisted the tide of defeat. General Franz Kasimir von Kleist and 25,000 men held out against Marshal Michel Ney for six weeks before the city finally surrendered and the garrison went into captivity (20 October–11 November 1806).

Magdhaba ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Having blunted a Turkish advance into Egypt at Romani (5 August), General Charles Dobell crossed the Sinai to seize El Arish, then sent General Harry Chauvel against nearby Magdhaba with Australian and New Zealand cavalry and an Imperial Camel Corps. Heavy fighting forced the Turkish redoubt to surrender, leaving the only Turks remaining in Sinai at Rafa (23 December 1916).

Magenta ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Napoleon III of France intervened in northern Italy to support King Victor Emmanuel II of Piedmont against Austria and Marshal Marie MacMahon led a powerful force against Austrian General Count Franz Gyulai at Magenta, 15 miles west of Milan. Gyulai withdrew after a mismanaged battle with costly losses on both sides and the Allies marched into Milan (4 June 1859).

Magersfontein ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Northwest of the British defeat at Stormberg, General Lord Paul Methuen attempted a frontal assault on General Piet Cronjé well entrenched at Magersfontein, near Kimberley. In the second disaster of "Black Week," Methuen was driven off with over 800 casualties (including General Andrew Wauchope killed). Britain was soon defeated again at Colenso (10–11 December 1899).

Magnano ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Amid renewed fighting in northern Italy, Austrian General Paul Kray defeated the French army under General Barthélemy Schérer around Verona, then again to the south at Magnano. Schérer was driven back to the Adda, where he yielded command to General Jean Victor Moreau. However, the new French commander was unable to prevent a further defeat at Cassano (5 April 1799).

Magnesia ❙ 190 BC ❙ Roman-Syrian War

Soon after victory at Myonnesus, General Lucius Cornelius Scipio and his brother Scipio Africanus invaded Asia Minor and were joined by Eumenes II of Pergamum against Antiochus III of Syria. The decisive action at Magnesia Manisa, near Ismir, saw the larger Seleucid army routed after its elephants stampeded. The Romans then required Antiochus to abandon Asia Minor (December 190 BC).

Magruntein ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

See Rafa

Maguilla ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Llera

Maharajpur, Gwalior ❙ 1843 ❙ British-Gwalior War

During a disputed succession of the Maharaja of Gwalior in central India, Governor General Edward Lord Ellenborough sent a large force under General Sir Hugh Gough. In battle south of Gwalior at Maharajpur, near Lashkar, Gough inflicted a terrible defeat on Maratha General Bhagerat Rao Scindhia. Another defeat the same day at Panniar brought the war to an end (29 December 1843).

Maharajpur, Uttar Pradesh ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Cawnpore (2nd)

Mahdiyya ❙ 1550 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

On a fresh offensive in North Africa, Emperor Charles V sent forces to recapture (al-)Madhiyya, south of Tunis, which had been lost to Ottoman Corsair Admiral Turgut Reis (Dragut). Venetian Admiral Andrea Doria retook the city by a brilliant assault, but it became untenable after the fall of Tripoli in 1551. Its fortifications were then destroyed and abandoned (8 September 1550).

Mahenge ❙ 1905 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

During the most serious rising in German East Africa, about 4,000 Maji Maji rebels of the Mbunga and Pogoro attacked Mahenge (in modern Tanzania), defended by Captain L. L. von Hassel and 60 Askaris. After an initial failed assault, the rebels besieged Mahenge. Captain Ernst Nigmann then counter-attacked at Namabengo (30 August–23 September 1905).

Mahidpur ❙ 1817 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

See Mehidpur

Mahiwa ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

A month after defeat at Tabora in German East Africa, German forces withdrew southeast where they were attacked inland of Lindi at Mahiwa. A frontal assault cost South African General Gordon Beves shocking losses and Colonel Paul Lettow-Vorbeck claimed the victory. However, his own losses could not be replaced and he withdrew south into Portuguese Mozambique (17–18 October 1916).

Mahoetai ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

General Thomas Pratt assumed command in New Plymouth after the rout at Puketakauere and led 900 Regulars and two companies of militia to meet the hostile Ngati Haua west of Waitara. Pratt routed an advance party of about 150 in fierce fighting at Mahoetai, but did not achieve strategic victory until he completed a hard campaign in early 1861 on the Waitara River at Te Arei (6 November 1860).

Mahsama ❙ 1882 ❙ Arabi's Egyptian Rebellion

See Kassassin

Mahungwe ❙ 1684 ❙ Later Portuguese Wars in East Africa

Changmire Dombo seized the Kingdom of Butua on the Zimbabwe Plateau, then met a Portuguese force at Mahungwe. A fine victory of hand weapons over muskets forced the Portuguese off the Plateau and Changmire later seized Dambarare and Macequece. However, his death in 1694 allowed the Portuguese to remain on the lower Zambezi. The Changmire Dynasty built the Rozwi Empire.

Maicanesti ❙ 1789 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

See Rimnik

Mai Ceu ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

See Maychew

Maida ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

When French Marshal André Masséna and General Jean-Louis Reynier invaded the Kingdom of Naples, Britain sent an expedition from Sicily to Calabaria under General Sir John Stuart, who heavily defeated Reynier at San Pietro di Maida, near Catanzaro. Stuart then captured Scylla Castle, but the expedition was not followed up and he withdrew back to Siciliy (4 July 1806).

Maidan ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st British-Afghan War

British General William Nott advanced from Kandahar in southern Afghanistan towards Kabul against Akbar Khan, son of deposed Amir Dost Muhammad and defeated Afghan General Shems-ud-Din at Ghoaine (30 August). Nott met him again with 12,000 men outside Kabul at Maidan (modern Maydan Shah) and inflicted another heavy loss. He entered Kabul three days later (14 September 1842).

Maidstone ❙ 1648 ❙ British Civil Wars

With war virtually over, Royalist rebels in Kent seized Rochester, Deptford and Dartford, and George Goring Earl of Norwich (father of Royalist Commander George Lord Goring) was elected leader. However, at Maidstone the disorderly rising was routed by disciplined Puritans under Sir Thomas Fairfax. Norwich then took his few Cavalier regulars to defend Colchester (1 June 1648).

Maine ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

In a notoriously contentious incident, the American warship Maine blew up in Havana Harbour, Cuba, killing 260 crew. While America blamed a Spanish mine and Spain blamed an explosion of coal gas, the incident triggered a war, which immortalised the slogan "Remember the Maine" and eventually gave the United States Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines and Guam (15 February 1898).

Mainpuri ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

On campaign east of Aligarh, Colonel Thomas Seaton defeated rebels at Kasganj and Patiala, then gathered his convoy and marched against new forces under Tej Singh, self-proclaimed Rajah of Mainpuri. The rebels fled with 250 killed after a brief action about a mile west of Mainpuri. Seaton established his camp in the town, clearing the road to Fategarh (27 December 1857).

Mainz ❙ 1635 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

French under Louis de Nogaret (Cardinal de la Valette) and Bernard of Saxe-Weimar advanced to the Rhine to relieve Mainz, where they defeated Imperial commander Count Matthias Gallas and raised the siege. With insufficient food however, the French had to destroy their stores and retreat across the mountains towards Lorraine, fighting off an Imperial attack at Boulay (July–8 August 1635).

Mainz ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

While fighting in the Rhine Valley, French General Adam Philippe Custine learned that the garrison of the fortified city of Mainz was weak and believed there was a strong pro-French group in the city. He immediately besieged and captured Mainz after just three days. The city was eventually recovered by the Prussians in mid-1793 after a four-month siege (19–21 October 1792).

Mainz ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

One year after the French captured Mainz, the key Rhine city was besieged by a large Allied force under Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand Duke of Brunswick. After a courageous defence, led by General Francois-Ignace d'Oyse, the garrison were released after agreeing not to take arms against any foreign army. Many later supported the Republic against the Vendée Rebellion (6 April–23 July 1793).

Mainz ❙ 1794–1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As French forces campaigned on the Rhine, General Jean-Baptiste Kléber commenced a fresh siege of Mainz, later continued by General Charles Pichegru. Almost a year after, following French defeat at Höchst, Austrian Field Marshal Charles von Clerfayt advanced to the Rhine, where he defeated Pichegru at Mainz and the siege was lifted (14 December 1794–29 October 1795).

Maiozamalcha ❙ 363 ❙ Later Roman-Persian Wars

Emperor Julian advanced down the Euphrates against Sassanian Shah Shapur II of Persia, where he razed Pirisabora, then moved along the strategic canal to the Tigris against the powerful fortress city of Maiozamalcha, the last major defence before the capital. After a brutal siege, the Romans stormed the city, which was pillaged and destroyed, then advanced on Ctesiphon (10–13 May 363).

Maipú ❙ 1818 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

Resolved to restore Spanish authority after defeat at Chacabuco (February 1817), General Manuel Osorio and 6,000 men won at Cancha Rayada, then met 9,000 Patriots under General José de San Martin south of Santiago at the Maipú River. The Royalists were crushed, with 1,000 killed and over 2,000 captured. Osorio withdrew to Peru and Chilean independence was secured (5 April 1818).

Maisalun ❙ 1920 ❙ French Occupation of Syria

Prince Faisal of Hijaz had helped Britain drive the Turks out of Damascus (October 1918) and was declared King of Greater Syria (March 1920). However, the League of Nations had granted France a mandate over Syria and fighting broke out. The Arabs were defeated at Maisalun and the French occupied Damascus. Faisal fled to Iraq, where the British made him King (24 July 1920).

Maiwand ❙ 1880 ❙ 2nd British-Afghan War

When Britain proclaimed Abdur Rahman Amir of Afghanistan, his cousin Ayub Khan, brother of former Amir Yakub Khan, appeared from Herat to claim the throne and marched on Kandahar. General George Burrows was sent to meet him with a small British force, which was routed at Maiwand with over 1,000 men lost. The survivors fled east and were besieged at Kandahar (27 July 1880).

Maizières ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Bellevue

Majadahonda ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington marched on Madrid after his great victory at Salamanca (22 July), Anglo-Portuguese advance units under General Sir Benjamin D'Urban were attacked by French cavalry at Majadahonda, northwest of the capital. They suffered unexpected casualties until Wellington's main force drove off the attack. He entered Madrid next day (11 August 1812).

Majalahonda ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
See Majadahonda

Majorca ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War
Majorca easily fell to Nationalist forces under General Manuel Goded (19 July), but Catalan Captain Alberto Bayo recaptured Ibiza (9 August) then landed to recover Majorca. With Nationalist resistance under Colonel Louis García Ruiz much stronger, a counter-attack forced Bayo to withdraw. Ibiza was also retaken and Majorca became a key air and naval base (16 August–3 September 1936).

Majuba Hill ❙ 1881 ❙ 1st Anglo-Boer War
After defeat at Laing's Nek and Ingogo, General Sir George Colley and about 600 men attempted to hold strategic Majuba Hill, south of Volksrust. A brilliant victory saw Boer General Petrus Joubert storm the hill and the British fled with 91 killed (including Colley), 134 wounded and 59 captured. War quickly ended with British recognition of independent Transvaal (27 February 1881).

Makale ❙ 1895–1896 ❙ 1st Italo-Ethiopian War
Buoyed by victory at Amba Alagi, Ethiopian commander Ras Makonnen advanced north to besiege the Italian invaders at Makale, heroically defended by a small garrison under Major Guiseppe Galliano. The Italians repulsed many heavy assaults, inflicting costly losses, but were starved into capitulation then permitted to withdraw northwest to Adowa (7 December 1895–20 January 1896).

Makaretu ❙ 1868 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War
The Hauhau rebel Te Kooti ravaged Matawhero then withdrew to the hills inland from Poverty Bay, pursued by militia under Lieutenants George Preece and Frederick Gascoigne with Maori allies under Ropata Wahawaka. Brought to action at Makaretu, near the Wharekopae Stream, Te Kooti lost about 20 killed before escaping wounded southwest to his stockade at Ngatapa (3 December 1868).

Makhram ❙ 1875 ❙ Russian Conquest of Central Asia
See Khokand

Makin ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
As a diversion before the assault on Guadalcanal, Marines under Colonel Evans Carlson landed by two submarines on Makin, in the Gilbert Islands, killing about 70 Japanese and destroying the radio station and stores. The raid had little true value, costing 30 American lives and prompting the Japanese to fortify Makin and Tarawa before the real attack there a year later (17 August 1942).

Makin ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
After heavy bombardment, Admiral Kelly Turner and General Ralph Smith attacked Makin in the Gilbert Islands, well fortified but with only about 500 troops under Lieutenant Seizo Ishikawa. Most of the Japanese were killed for the loss of just over 60 Americans dead, though a further 650 Americans were lost when the escort carrier Liscombe Bay was torpedoed offshore (20–23 November 1943).

Makry Plagi ❙ 1264 ❙ 3rd Latin-Byzantine Imperial War
In the aftermath of Byzantine restoration in Constantinople (1261), William of Villehardouin Prince of Achaea recovered from Latin defeat at Pelagonia to oppose Emperor Michael VIII. The Emperor's brother Constantine invaded Greece and seized Lacedaemonia. But after repulse at Prinitza (1263) he was routed at Markry Plagi (modern Yerani) northeast of Corinth and withdrew.

Makwanpur ❙ 1816 ❙ British-Gurkha War
General Sir David Ochterlony advanced into Nepal after Gurkha surrender in the west at Malaon (May 1815) and found his route to Kathmandu blocked at a mountain pass near Makwanpur. Despite heroic defence, the Nepalese army was driven off with heavy losses and the war quickly came to an end. Gurkhas soon became an important element in the British army (27 February 1816).

Malacca ❙ 1511 ❙ Early Portuguese Colonial Wars in Asia

With Indian Goa secured in 1510, Portuguese commander Afonso de Albuquerque sailed with 800 men to attack Malacca in modern Malaysia. Despite an initial repulse, the Portuguese force seized Malacca by storm and Sultan Mahmud and his son Ahmad fled to Pahang. The settlement remained a key Portuguese trading port until it was taken by the Dutch in 1641 (25 July–24 August 1511).

Malacca ❙ 1568 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in Asia

After Portugal seized Malacca in 1511, she faced constant attack by neighbouring states, most notably Acheh in northern Sumatra, which first attacked in 1537. In 1568 Sultan Ala al-Din of Acheh assembled a huge fleet, with 15,000 troops and Turkish mercenaries, and besieged Malacca. Aided by Johore, Dom Leonis Pereira drove off the siege, but Achinese attacks continued for many years.

Malacca ❙ 1606 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

A year after Dutch capture of Portuguese Ambon, Admiral Cornelius Matalief besieged the fortress port of Malacca, in modern Malaysia, but was finally driven off by Dom Martin Afonso de Castro, with two ships burned. He later returned and defeated Portuguese commander Dom Manuel Mascarenhas, who lost seven ships left to defend the port (30 April–17 August & 22 October 1606).

Malacca ❙ 1640–1641 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

Determined to secure Portuguese Malacca (modern Melaka, Malaysia) Dutch Admiral Willmsoon Cartekoe and ships from Johore besieged the powerful fortress, commanded by Governor Manuel de Sousa Coutinho. With no hope of aid from Goa, the city surrendered six months later after a bloody assault, effectively ceding control of the spice trade (June 1640–14 January 1641).

Malaga ❙ 1487 ❙ Final Christian Reconquest of Spain

Spanish forces under Ferdinand V of Castile and Aragon advancing into Granada captured Loja (where they had been defeated five years earlier) and besieged the key city of Malaga. Malaga fell after four months with many residents enslaved or exchanged for Christian prisoners. Ferdinand then moved on towards the Muslim capital at Granada (17 April–18 August 1487).

Malaga ❙ 1704 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

French Admiral Louis de Bourbon Comte de Toulouse sailing to recover Gibraltar was attacked at nearby Malaga by an Anglo-Dutch fleet under Sir George Rooke and Admiral Gerard Callenburgh. Badly damaged and out of ammunition, Rooke withdrew and was later relieved of his command. However, Toulouse also withdrew badly damaged and Gibraltar was secured (13 August 1704).

Malaga ❙ 1937 ❙ Spanish Civil War

In command of a southern offensive in Andalusia, Nationalist commander Gonzalo Queipo de Llano, with General Mario Roatta's Italians, took Marbella (17 January), then advanced on Malaga, defended by Colonel José Villalba. The Republicans abandoned the Mediterranean port after taking heavy casualties and fighting shifted back to the Madrid front at Jarama (3–8 February 1937).

Malaghur ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Bulandshahr

Malakand ❙ 1895 ❙ Chitral Campaign

During a disputed succession in the Kashmir Kingdom of Chitral, tribesmen under Sher Afzul and Umra Khan besieged a small British-Sepoy garrison. A field force of 16,000 men was sent northeast from Peshawar under General Sir Robert Low and 12,000 Chitrali attempting to block the advance at the Malakand Pass were driven out with heavy losses. Low continued on towards Chitral (3 April 1895).

Malakand ❙ 1897 ❙ Great Frontier Rising

Two years after British forces secured the Kingdom of Chitral, Pathan tribesmen inspired by the Mullah Sadullah besieged the small garrison in the Malakand Pass (Colonel William Meiklejohn) and nearby Chadkara. A relief force under General Sir Bindon Blood drove off the rebels to secure the fortresses and, after action at Shabkadr, the campaign was virtually over (26 July–2 August 1897).

Malakov (1st) ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

A poorly co-ordinated assault on the defences of the besieged Black Sea fortress of Sevastopol saw French forces under General Amiable Pélissier attack the position to the southeast known as the Malakov, while British troops attacked The Redan. The French were driven back with costly losses and, with the British also repulsed, the siege continued (17–18 June 1855).

Malakov (2nd) ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

Three months after costly Anglo-French failure at the Malakov and The Redan, guarding besieged Sevastopol, French General Pierre Bosquet made a fresh assault, forcing his way into the Malakov, from where he was able to support the British assault on The Redan. Russian General Mikhail Gorchakov evacuated Sevastopol next day, effectively ending the war (8 September 1855).

Malala ❙ 1905 ❙ American-Moro Wars

The Muslim Moro hero Datu Ali was driven out of Kudarangan, on Mindanao in the southern Philippines, in early 1904 but continued resisting American occupation until cornered on the Malala River, near Buluan, by Captain Frank McCoy. One of the bloodiest actions of the early occupation saw American guns kill several hundred men, women and children, including Datu Ali (22 October 1905).

Malandarai Pass ❙ 1586 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Facing insurrection following the death of Governor Muhammad Hakim Mirza of Kabul, Mughal Emperor Akbar sent General Zain Khan Kuka and court poet Raja Birbal against the Yusufzai tribesmen of Swat. In disaster at Malandarai Pass, near Peshawar, Birbal and 8,000 Imperial troops were killed. Mughal Generals Todar Mal and Man Singh eventually restored order (25 February 1586).

Malang-gad ❙ 1780 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

After victory at Kalyan (15 May), Britain attacked the powerful mountain fortress of Malang-gad south of the Sharavati, held by Pandurang Sambhaji Ketkar. A Maratha relief force under Gangadhar Ram Karlekar was repulsed at the Sharavati by Colonel James Hartley, but repeated assaults failed. The British finally lifted the siege and moved against Bassein, India (4 August–November 1780).

Malaon ❙ 1815 ❙ British-Gurkha War

Despite British losses at Mangu and Jaitak, General David Ochterlony assaulted the Gurkha fortress at Malaon, south of Bilaspur, where 74-year-old Bhakti Thapa and several hundred of his men died in an heroic sortie at nearby Deothal. A month later General Amar Singh Thapa made terms and marched out with his arms and colours. Ochterlony won a knighthood (16 April–15 May 1815).

Malatya ❙ 576 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

See Melitene

Malavalli ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War

When Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war against Britain in southern India, General George Harris advanced towards Seringapatam and met the Mysorean army on the Maddur River at Malavalli. A brilliant cavalry charge by Colonel John Floyd and conspicuous bravery by Colonel Arthur Wellesley saw the Indians forced to flee with over 1,000 casualties (27 March 1799).

Malaya ❙ 1941–1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Within hours of Pearl Harbour, General Tomoyuki Yamashita and Admiral Jizaburo Ozawa began landing 60,000 men and advanced into Malaya through Kota Bharu, Jitra and Slim River. The warships Prince of Wales and Repulse were sunk off the coast while the British, with obsolete aircraft and no tanks, were overwhelmed and driven back to Singapore (8 December 1941–31 January 1942).

Malazgirt ❙ 1054 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

See Manzikert

Malazgirt ❙ 1071 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars

See Manzikert

Malazgirt ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

As Turkish forces recovered from disaster at Sarikamish, new commander Abdul Kerim concentrated west of Lake Van, then marched north against Russian General Pyotr Ivanovitch Oganovski at Malazgirt. The Turks were initially driven from the nearby heights of Belican, but further costly fighting saw the Russians defeated and withdraw north towards Karakilise (10–26 July 1915).

Malborghetto ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte smashed the Austrians in northern Italy and sent General André Masséna to cut off their withdrawal through the Carnic Alps. Masséna was repulsed at the Pass of Tarvis, on the Isonzo, but next day to the west at Malborghetto, Masséna routed Archduke Charles, seizing his guns and supply wagons. Within weeks Austria sued for peace (23 March 1797).

Maldah ❙ 1659 ❙ War of the Mughal Princes

Amid bitter war between the sons of the ailing Mughal Emperor Shahjahan, the second son Shuja, was defeated by his brother the Emperor Aurangzeb at Khajwa. Then north of the Ganges near Ingraj Bazar at Maldah, he was decisively defeated by Aurangzeb's General Mir Jumla. Shuja fled to the Arakan, where he and his family were murdered by King Sandathudamma (5 April 1659).

Maldon ❙ 991 ❙ Later Viking Raids on Britain

In a return of Vikings to the coast of England, Olaf Tryggvason (later King of Norway) raided near Sandwich with a fleet of almost 100 ships, then landed in Essex east of Chelmsford. When East Saxon Ealdorman Byrhtnoth was killed in a disastrous defeat at nearby Maldon, King Aethelred II paid a tribute to make the raiders leave. However, they eventually returned to conquer England (August 991).

Malegaon ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

One of the final actions of the war saw the Maratha fortress of Malegaon, 150 miles northeast of Bombay, attacked by British forces under Lieutenant-Colonel Robert McDowell. Lack of heavy guns prolonged the siege and a premature assault was driven off. However, with the arrival of a British siege train from Bombay, the fortress fell and the war was effectively over (16 May–18 June 1818).

Malegnano ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

See Melegnano

Maleme ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

A key battle in the German invasion of Crete was in the northwest at Maleme, where glider and parachute forces under General Karl Student were met by stubborn New Zealand resistance. The strategic airfield was captured after bloody fighting and Crete soon fell, but shocking losses among the German parachute troops helped ensure it was the last such major airborne action (20–22 May 1941).

Malerkotla ❙ 1762 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

See Kup

Malesov ❙ 1424 ❙ Hussite Wars

The Hussites of Bohemia defeated Imperialist invaders at Nemecky Brod (January 1422), then began a self-destructive doctrinal war. After several losses the moderate Utraquist (Calixtine) faction eventually joined Catholic nobles against the radical Taborites of the great Jan Zizka. At Malesov, near Kutna Hora, Zizka secured victory. He later took Prague but died soon after (7 June 1424).

Maling ❙ 341 BC ❙ China's Era of the Warring States

Despite suffering a terrible defeat at Guiling (353 BC), Wei again interfered in neighbouring Han and was once more attacked by the army of Qi under Generals Tian Ji and Sun Bin. At the mountain pass of Maling the army of Wei was virtually destroyed, with the inexperienced young Crown Prince Shen of Wei captured. This second defeat led directly to the decline of Wei as a state power.

Malinta ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

See Polo

Mallaha ❙ 1157 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Baldwin III of Jerusalem recaptured the fortress of Baniyas in the upper Jordan Valley (previously besieged by Sultan Nur-ed-Din), then established himself further south towards Lake Tiberias at Mallaha. While crossing the Jordan at nearby Jacob's Ford the Crusaders were ambushed and suffered heavy casualties. Baldwin barely managed to escape with his life (19 June 1157).

Malloy ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Vaagso

Malmaison ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Despite earlier failed sorties from besieged Paris, General Auguste Alexandre Ducrot tried a further breakout, leading about 8,000 men with 120 guns west through Mt Valerian between Rueil and Malmaison to reach Buzenval. Badly hit in open fields by Prussian shellfire, his force withdrew with losses of 400 killed, 100 wounded and 120 captured (21 October 1870).

Malmo ❙ 1523–1524 ❙ Wars of the Kalmar Union

See Copenhagen

Malmo ❙ 1535–1536 ❙ Danish Counts' War

See Copenhagen

Malnate ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

See Varese

Malolos ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

American General Arthur MacArthur captured Caloocan, just north of Manila (10 February), then drove Philippine General Antonio Luna out of Polo and marched on the Revolutionary capital further northwest at Malolos. After a week of fighting, with over 530 American casualties, MacArthur captured Malolos. However, President Emilio Aguinaldo escaped to San Isidro (31 March 1899).

Maloyaroslavetz ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

Spearheading the French retreat southwest from Moscow, an advance unit under Prince Eugène de Beauharnais was blocked at Maloyaroslavetz on the Luhza by Prince Mikhail Kutuzov's Russians. The French took the town after a bloody engagement, though the action forced Bonaparte's main army to retreat along the more northerly "scorched" route via Smolensk (24–25 October 1812).

Malplaquet ❙ 1709 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

French Marshal Claude Villars advancing to relieve Mons, southwest of Brussels, established himself just to the south at Malplaquet, where John Churchill Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugène of Savoy frontally attacked French trenches. In the bloodiest battle of the war, both sides had heavy losses, including Villars wounded, before the French withdrew and Mons fell (11 September 1709).

Malpura ❙ 1800 ❙ Maratha Territorial Wars

When Partab Singh of Jaipur tried to throw off Maratha rule, General Pierre Perron sent the army of Sindhia under Lakwa Dada, who met the Raja and his allies from Jodhpur at Malpura, southwest of Jaipur. During terrible fighting, the Rajput cavalry was destroyed by Maratha gunfire. Partab Singh was forced into a humiliating peace and never regained his prestige (15 April 1800).

Malsch ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Having crossed the Rhine at Strasbourg, French General Jean Victor Moreau defeated Archduke Charles Louis of Austria at Rastatt and five days later, they fought an indecisive engagement further east at Malsch. After unsuccessfully attempting to hold the advance at nearby Ettlingen, south of Karlsruhe, Charles continued to withdraw towards Swabia (9 July 1796).

Malta ❙ 1565 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

Forty years after relocating from the island of Rhodes, the Knights Hospitalier of St John faced a massive assault on Malta by a Turkish force under Mustafa Pasha. In one of history's epic sieges, Grandmaster Jean de la Valette's garrison held out for four months with terrible losses on both sides until the arrival of a Spanish fleet forced the Turks to withdraw (19 May–11 September 1565).

Malta ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

En route to invade Egypt, young General Napoleon Bonaparte—apparently on his own authority—landed on Malta and bombarded the fortress of Valetta. At the cost of just three French dead, the once-powerful Knights of Malta surrendered and Bonaparte sailed for Egypt a week later. Valetta remained in French hands until it was captured by the British in September 1800 (9–12 June 1798).

Malta ❙ 1940–1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

With Malta commanding vital sea-lanes to the desert war, the island was massively bombed and besieged by Axis naval and air forces. Bloody convoy battles included Calabria, Cape Passaro, Matapan, Cape Bon, Sirte and Pedestal before the starving population were effectively relieved in November 1942. Attacks continued until Allied victory in North Africa (June 1940–May 1943).

Maltepe ❙ 1328 ❙ Byzantine-Ottoman Wars

See Pelacanon

Malthan ❙ 1751 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

During resumed war between Maharashtra and Hyderabad, Maratha Peshwa Balaji Rao marched towards Ahmadnagar. After losing a skirmish at Parner (21 November) he attacked the Nizam's army under Saiyad Lashkar Khan, south of Ahmadnagar. Near Malthan on the River Ghod, the Marathas secured a bloody victory and Nizam Salabat Jang soon made peace (27 November 1751).

Mal Tiempo ❙ 1895 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

With scant ammunition following Iguará and Manacal, insurgents Máximo Gómez and Antonio Maceo intercepted a Spanish column under Colonel Salavador Arizón at Mal Tiempo, southwest of Santa Clara near Cruces. Attacking with machete and bayonet, the rebels secured a bloody victory, capturing 200 rifles and 10,000 rounds, then marched on Coliseo in Matanzas (15 December 1895).

Maluna ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War
See Vigla

Malvasia ❙ 1689–1690 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars
See Monemvasia

Malventum ❙ 275 BC ❙ Pyrrhic War
See Beneventum

Malvern Hill ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

In the last of the Seven Days' Battles, south of Richmond, Virginia, Union commander George B. McClellan crossed the White Oak Swamp and took a defensive position north of the James at Malvern Hill. Confederate General Robert E. Lee withdrew after terrible fighting and over 5,000 casualties, but Richmond was saved and the Peninsula Campaign was over (1 July 1862).

Mams ❙ 688 ❙ Muslim Conquest of North Africa

Berber "King" Kusayla expelled the Muslim Arabs from Ifrikiya following his victory at Biskra (683), then faced a renewed Arab invasion led by the powerful General Zuhayr ibn Kays al-Balawi. The armies met at Mams, in mountains west of al-Kayrawan (Kairouan) in modern Tunisia, where Kusayla was defeated and killed. The Arabs steadily completed their conquest of the Maghrib.

Manacal ❙ 1895 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

After battle in western Cuba near Iguará (3 December), insurgent leaders Máximo Gómez and Antonio Maceo took a defensive position at Manacal, near Santa Clara, against a large pursuing Spanish force under General Fernando Oliver. They were finally driven out by Spanish artillery, but Oliver returned to La Siguanea. The Cubans soon struck back at Mal Tiempo (10–13 December 1895).

Manado ❙ 1958 ❙ Indonesian Civil Wars

Jakarta crushed dissident forces on Sumatra at Bukittingi, then turned its attention to Sulawesi, where the rebel capital had been moved to Manado under Colonel J. F. "Joop" Warouw. Manado fell after heavy fighting, though resistance continued in rural areas until a ceasefire in 1962. The revolt is claimed to have cost almost 10,000 government troops and 22,000 rebels killed (28 June 1958).

Manara ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

Lebanese troops under Fawzi el Kaukji advanced on Manara, in Upper Galilee extending between Lebanon and Syria, to support Egypt's offensive in the south. The Arabs took nearby Sheikh Abad, but the Jews at Manara held out against fierce and sustained attack. The besieged village was eventually relieved after Arab defeat further south at Safad and Tarshiha (22 October 1948).

Manassas ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Bull Run

Manassas ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Bull Run

Manassas Gap ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate commander Robert E. Lee withdrew from decisive defeat at Gettysburg and crossed the Potomac at Williamsport, pursued by General George G. Meade's Union army. Attempting a flanking attack at Manassas Gap, east of Front Royal, Union General William G. French was repulsed in an inconclusive action and Lee was able to continue south through Virginia (23 July 1863).

Manassas Station ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Kettle Run

Mancetter ❙ 61 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain
See Boudicca

Manchuria ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (China)
With war almost over, Russian Marshal Aleksandr Vasilevksy led a converging invasion of Japanese-occupied Manchuria—from Outer Mongolia towards Mukden (modern Shenyang), across the Amur towards the Songhua, and from Valdivostok towards Harbin. General Otozo Yamada's Guandong Army was crushed and, as the war ended, the Russians continued into Korea (8–22 August 1945).

Manchuria Incident ❙ 1931 ❙ Manchuria Incident
See Mukden

Mandalay ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)
While heavy fighting continuing around the vital Japanese communication centre at Meiktila, General Sir William Slim pursued General Shihachi Katamura's army north to Mandalay, where they dug in for a hard-fought siege. After a month of fierce resistance, the Japanese evacuated and, with the capture of Rangoon in the south, the campaign was largely over (12 February–19 March 1945).

Mandali ❙ 1982 ❙ Iraq-Iran War
Despite terrible losses against Iraq north of Basra, Iran launched a fresh offensive further north near Mandali, east of Baghdad. "Human wave" infantry assaults with little armoured support again cost Iran heavy casualties for some territory, yet negligible strategic advantage. A second assault, in support of action around Musian, also achieved little (1–6 October & 7–11 November 1982).

Mandasur ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny
See Goraria

Mandonium ❙ 338 BC ❙ Archidamian Wars
In an attempt to support Tarentum against Lucania, Archidamus III of Sparta took a mercenary force into southern Italy. Three years' unsuccessful campaigning ended when he was defeated and killed, along with most of his troops, at Mandonium (modern Manduria) 20 miles southeast of Tarentum (modern Taranto). This was ostensibly on the same day as the Macedonian victory at Chaeronea.

Mandora ❙ 1801 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)
As General Sir Ralph Abercromby marched from Aboukir towards Alexandria, his seaward column of marines and Scottish infantry, led by General Richard Lambart Earl of Cavan, came under heavy French attack at Mandora. Hard fighting cost 160 British killed and 2,000 wounded before the French were driven off and Abercromby's advance continued (13 March 1801).

Mandu ❙ 1535 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India
Emperor Humayun extended the Mughal Empire into central India, where he drove off Sultan Bahadur Shah of Gujarat besieging Chitor and pursued him to the great mountain fortress of Mandu, southwest of Indore. Bahabur Shah's Governor Mallu Kadir Khan attempted a defence, but Humayun's army forced their way in and took the fortress by storm as the Sultan fled to Champaner.

Manduri ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny
Nepalese troops under Dhir Shamsar Rana marching to support the British at Azamgarh, met a rebel force ten miles away at the village of Manduri. Advancing through fields of sugarcane the Gurkhas routed the rebels, inflicting over 200 casualties. This action, and a larger victory at Chanda, Uttar Pradesh, confirmed British willingness to use Nepalese against the rebels (19 September 1857).

Mañeru ❙ 1873 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

During continued campaigning in Navarre, Spanish Republican General Domingo Moriones met a Carlist force under Nicolás Ollo at Mañeru, near Puente de la Reina. Both sides claimed victory in a hard-fought yet indecisive action, though the Carlists were said to have had the advantage. A month later Moriones was repulsed in a costly assault further west against Estella (6 October 1873).

Mangalore ❙ 1783–1784 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

When Tipu Sultan of Mysore continued his father's war against Britain, he captured Bednur (30 April 1783) then marched on the southwest Indian port of Mangalore, defended by Colonel John Campbell. Amid failed negotiations, Campbell was starved into surrender (he later died in captivity of exhaustion). A subsequent settlement brought the war to an end (20 May 1783–26 January 1784).

Mangalwar ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

As they marched northeast from Cawnpore to relieve besieged Lucknow, British Generals Sir James Outram and Sir Henry Havelock crossed the Ganges and were blocked five miles away at Mangalwar by a strong rebel force. A four-hour action saw them clear the rebels with a bold cavalry attack, killing over 100, before continuing north towards the fort of Alambagh (21 September 1857).

Mangapiko ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

British General Duncan Cameron advancing south into the Waikato secured Rangiriri, then besieged the Maori position at Paterangi. After a bloody ambush at nearby Mangapiko Creek, a large hand-to-hand action developed (with the first Victoria Cross won by a non-regular soldier) before the Maoris were repulsed. Paterangi was evacuated after defeat at Rangiaowhia (11 February 1864).

Mangrol ❙ 1761 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

Encouraged by Maratha disaster at Panipat (14 January), the Rajput Principalities of northern India attempted to reassert their power under the leadership of Madho Singh of Jaipur. At Mangrol, northeast of Kota, Maratha General Mulhar Rao Holkar decisively defeated the Rajput allies. However, he then had to return to Maharashtra and Maratha power in the north declined (29–30 November 1761).

Mangshan ❙ 543 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

With an offensive by Western Wei defeated at Heqiao (538), war between the rival factions in northern China died down apart from a failed attack by Eastern Wei on Yubi (542). The following year, Yuwen Tai of Western Wei again advanced on Luoyang, but withdrew after a very heavy defeat by Gao Huan at nearby Mangshan. Fighting then eased until 546, when Gao made a fresh assault on Yubi.

Mangu ❙ 1814 ❙ British-Gurkha War

While General David Ochterlony checked Nepalese expansion into northern India at Nalagarh, further north Colonel William Thompson attacked the fortress of Mangu, near Ramgarh, held by Amar Singh Thapa. The British were repulsed in large-scale heavy fighting, but Amar Singh later abandoned the fort to intercept Ochterlony's advance towards Malaon (27–29 December 1814).

Maniaki ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence

With Navarino about to fall, Bishop Gregorios Dikaios (Papaflesas) boldly led 3,000 Greeks towards the Egyptians and met a claimed 6,000 men under Ibrahim Pasha marching northeast from Navarino at Maniaki, on Mount Malia. A ferocious action cost 800 Greeks killed (including Dikaios) as well as 400 Muslims before the Greeks finally had to withdraw (20 May 1825).

Maniar ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Rebel leader Kunwar Singh lost at Azamgarh (15 April) and suffered further casualties at Naghai two days later before escaping to Maniar, just south of the Gaghara near Sikandarpur. Surprised at dawn by British forces under Brigadier Claude Douglas, the rebels fled with terrible losses. Kunwar was wounded, but escaped south across the Ganges at Bulliah to fight at Jagdispur (20 April 1858).

Manila ❙ 1610 ❙ Dutch-Spanish Colonial Wars

On an expedition against the Philippines, Dutch Admiral Francois Wittert was met off Manila by a much larger Spanish fleet under Governor Don Juan de Silva. In a decisive defeat, during which Wittert was killed, two Dutch ships were captured and one was burned. The two remaining Dutch vessels played no part in the battle and escaped safely to Palani in India (25 April 1610).

Manila ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Philippines)

In response to Spain entering the war, British Admiral Sir Samuel Cornish and General Sir William Draper took a large force to the Philippines, where they besieged Manila, which surrendered after brief resistance. Britain captured the Acapulco galleon and levied a massive ransom (which was never honoured). After the war Manila was returned to Spain (23 September–6 October 1762).

Manila ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

With the Spanish fleet destroyed at Manila Bay, American General Thomas M. Anderson landed troops at Cavite, followed by the main force under General Wesley Merritt, to besiege Manila, defended by Spanish General Fermín Jáudenes. Manila fell in an almost bloodless assault and the United States seized the Philippines, triggering a bloody war with the Filipinos (17 July–14 August 1898).

Manila ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

After an incident outside Manila at San Juna del Monte, provoked by Colonel John Stotsenburg's Nebraskans against Colonel Luciano San Miguel, fighting broke out in Manila and part of the city was burned. The insurgents were repulsed at a cost of over 230 American and 500 Filipino casualties, opening a bitter war which continued with an attack on Caloocan (4–5 February 1899).

Manila ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

When Americans landed on Luzon, General Oscar Griswold drove south towards Manila, with a fresh landing to the southwest by General Joseph Swing. Army and navy forces under Admiral Sanji Iwabuchi fought a ferocious defence of the Philippine capital, which fell after terrible destruction with 16,000 Japanese killed as well as a large number of Filipino civilians (4 February–3 March 1945).

Manila Bay ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

At the start of war with Spain, American Admiral George Dewey took five cruisers and two gunboats to the Philippines and cornered Admiral Patricio Montojo's eight-ship squadron in Manila Bay. At the cost of just one American killed and eight wounded, Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet, inflicting over 380 casualties. He then had to wait for land forces to capture Manila (1 May 1898).

Manizales ❙ 1860 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Former President Tomás Cipriano de Mosquera of Cauca rose against the government of Mariano Ospina and marched on Manizales against General Joaquín Posada Gutiérrez. An indecisive seven-hour action saw Mosquera withdraw and an armistice was agreed. However by mid-1861, Mosquera had won at Subachoque and Bogotá and regained the Presidency (28 August 1860).

Manizales ❙ 1877 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Resuming war against Conservative rebels after his previous victory at Los Chancos (August 1876), General Julián Trujillo for the Liberal government attacked General Marcelino Vélez, who had earlier secured armistice after defeat at Garrapata. Following a recent rebel defeat at La Donjuana, Vélez and the rebellion were crushed at Manizales and Trujillo later became President (3–5 April 1877).

Mannar ❙ 1591 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in Asia

King Puvijara Pandaram of Jaffna besieged the Portuguese island colony of Mannar off the northwest coast of Ceylon (modern Sri Lanka), supported by the fleet of Samudri of Calicut. But in a bold attack, Portuguese commander Andre Furtado de Mendonca destroyed the Calicut fleet. He then defeated and killed Puvijara and installed Ethirimanna Cinkam as puppet King of Jaffna.

Mannerheim Line ❙ 1939 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

As the Winter War began, Soviet General Kirill Meretskov took 120,000 men and 1,000 tanks against Finland's Mannerheim Line across the Karelian Isthmus. However, outnumbered commander Hugo Östermann, with Generals Harold Öquist and Erik Heinrichs, achieved a courageous defensive victory. Meanwhile, the Russians were also repulsed further north at Tolvajärvi (1–20 December 1939).

Mannerheim Line ❙ 1940 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

New Russian commander Semyon Timoshenko recovered from terrible losses at Tolvajärvi and Suomussalmi and launched a massive fresh assault on the Mannerheim Line across the Karelian Isthmus. After one of the heaviest bombardments seen in Europe, the Russians broke through around Summa to capture Vyborg. Finland sued for peace to end the Winter War (1–15 February 1940).

Mannheim ❙ 1622 ❙ Thirty Years War (Palatinate War)

When defeat at Höchst, Frankfurt, drove the main Protestant army west across the Rhine, the victorious Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly captured Heidelberg, then besieged Mannheim, held by 1,400 English troops under Sir Horace Vere. Following stout resistance, Vere was permitted to withdraw with the honours of war. The last Rhine fortress at Frankenthal held out until early 1623 (5 November 1622).

Mannheim ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Campaigning on the Rhine, French General Jean-Victor Moreau besieged Mannheim, garrisoned by over 15,000 Prussians. The fortress on the left bank capitulated two months later with agreement that the French would not bombard the right bank city unless their army crossed the Rhine—which came to pass in September of the following year (10 October–25 December 1794).

Mannheim ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French troops invaded Germany and the major Rhine city of Mannheim quickly surrendered to General Charles Pichegru (20 September 1795). However, in the Austrian counter-offensive after their victory at nearby Höchst, Frankfurt, the large French garrison was forced to capitulate after holding out for a month against siege by General Dagobert Wurmser (10 October–22 November 1795).

Mannheim ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Archduke Charles of Austria defeated the French at Zurich (14 August), then marched from Switzerland to the Rhine and launched a massive attack against Mannheim, defended by Antoine Baron de Laroche-Dubouscat. The heavily outnumbered French garrison inflicted severe Austrian casualties in a bloody struggle before it was forced to withdraw from the city (18 September 1799).

Manresa ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the Spanish offensive in Catalonia by General Henry O'Donnell, General Juan Caro was wounded defeating the French at Villafranca del Penedes and a few days later, Luis Gonzalez Torres Marquis of Campoverde moved the force north against Manresa, northwest of Barcelona. General Francois-Xavier Schwarz's German Brigade lost 800 men before the town fell to the Spanish (5 April 1810).

Mansfield ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

As Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks advanced up Louisiana's Red River from Fort de Russy, Confederate General Richard Taylor determined to block Banks at Mansfield and moved out to meet him at nearby Sabine Cross Roads. In the decisive action of the campaign, Union assaults were driven off with heavy losses and Banks fell back to a defensive line at Pleasant Hill (8 April 1864).

Mansilla ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Untrained Spanish levies under General Pedro La Romana, advancing to support the British army as it withdrew to the northwest of Spain, were routed by Marshal Nicolas Soult while attempting to cross the river at Mansilla, southeast of Leon. La Romana had arrived too late to support the British at Benavente and now joined their retreat towards Corunna (30 December 1808).

Mansura, Egypt ❙ 1250 ❙ 7th Crusade

King Louis IX of France advanced towards Cairo and was repulsed at the Ashmoun Canal where, after months of delay, his brother Robert of Artois stormed the town of Mansura, killing Ayyubid Egyptian commander Fakr-ed-din. In a violent counter-attack the Crusaders were driven out with severe losses, including Count Robert killed, and were forced back towards Damietta (8 February 1250).

Mansura, Louisiana ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Withdrawing down Louisiana's Red River from Mansfield and Pleasant Hill, Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks repulsed an attack at Monett's Ferry (23 April) then continued to Mansura, south of Marksville, where he was met by Confederate General Richard Taylor. Taylor withdrew after a mainly artillery action and Banks marched east through Yellow Bayou (16 May 1864).

Mantapike Hill ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Walkerton

Mantinea ❙ 418 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

On a fresh offensive, Argis II of Sparta led a force into Tegea to secure his allies, then marched into Mantinea against a coalition of Argives, Athenians and Mantineans. In a classic hoplite action at Mantinea—reportedly involving 5,500 Spartans and 7,000 of the coalition forces—the brilliant discipline of the Spartans secured victory, boosting Spartan authority in the Peloponnese.

Mantinea ❙ 362 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

Determined to challenge Theban supremacy, established with victory at Leuctra (371 BC), Athens and Sparta combined against Epaminondas of Thebes, who was invading the Peloponnese. Despite very substantial forces deployed, action at Mantinea was indecisive. However, the death of Epaminondas in the pursuit and that of Pelopidas at Cynoscephalae ended Theban hegemony.

Mantinea ❙ 207 BC ❙ Spartan-Achaean Wars

When Machanidas of Sparta invaded northwest Peloponnesia, he was met by Achaean cavalry under Philopoemen of Megalopolis, near Mantinea. After his Tarantine mercenaries fled, Machanidas led a courageous counter-attack, but was defeated and killed, reputedly by Philo-poemen himself. A temporary truce resulted and in 199 BC, Philopoemen met Machanidas' successor Nabis at Scotitas.

Mantua ❙ 1629–1630 ❙ Thirty Years War (Mantuan War)

In a disputed succession in Mantua and Montferrat, Imperial Commander Rambaldo Collalto besieged Mantua, held for the French-born heir Charles di Gonzaga Duke of Nevers. Cardinal Richelieu himself crossed the Alps, though could not prevent Mantua falling to Collalto. However, Casale held out and the ensuing peace secured Nevers his inheritance (13 October 1629–18 July 1630).

Mantua ❙ 1796–1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte captured most of northern Italy, where he besieged the powerful city of Mantua. He then withdrew to fight a fresh Austrian army under General Dagobert Wurmser. After Austrian defeats at Lonato and Castiglione, Wurmser was trapped in a renewed siege of Mantua and capitulated with terrible losses (4 June–30 July 1796; 24 August 1796–2 February 1797).

Manupur ❙ 1748 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

Following the death of Persian Emperor Nadir Shah, General Ahmad Shah Durrani seized Persian Afghanistan and launched the first of many invasions of India. At Manupur, in the Punjab northwest of Sirhind, he was heavily repulsed by Mughal Prince Ahmad after Vizier Qamruddin was killed. Durrani's later expeditions yielded him much of northern India (11 March 1748).

Manus ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Having taken Los Negros, in the Admiralty Islands west of Rabaul, American commander General Innis Swift sent General Verne Mudge west against the larger island of Manus, aided by massive artillery and bomber support. The small Japanese garrison held out for a week of heavy fighting before the island was secured and the survivors retreated into the jungle (12–25 March 1944).

Manzikert ❙ 1054 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

On a fresh Seljuk offensive into Byzantine Armenia after victory at Hasankale (September 1048), Kutalmish invested Kars while the Sultan Toghril Beg captured Arjish, then laid siege to Manzikert, north of Lake Van. When the Greeks counter-attacked to burn his siege machines, and heavy snow fell, Toghril withdrew to Rayy. His nephew and successor won a great victory here 15 years later.

Manzikert ❙ 1071 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars

In a final effort against Turkish invasion of Anatolia and Armenia after his defeat at Sebastia, Byzantine Emperor Romanus IV led a large army—including many Western mercenaries—to Manzikert (modern Malazgirt) near Lake Van, against the Seljuk Alp Arslan. One of the medieval world's decisive battles saw Romanus defeated and captured, leading directly to the Crusades (19 August 1071).

Mao Khé ❙ 1951 ❙ French Indo-China War

Viet Minh commander Vo Nguyen Giap was heavily repulsed at Vinh Yen (17 January), but began a new attack in the Red River Delta at Mao Khé, northwest of Haiphong, where a small garrison held out. Next day bombardment by French warships broke up the advance before paratroops arrived. A final Viet Minh frontal assault cost 400 killed before Giap was forced to withdraw (23–28 March 1951).

Maqonqo ❙ 1840 ❙ Zulu Wars of Succession

A year after his terrible loss to the Boers at Blood River, Zulu King Dingane faced a coup by his brother Mpande. Dingane's army under Ndlela suffered a crushing defeat in battle at Maqonqo, near the Mkuzi River north of Nongoma, which cost both sides over 1,000 dead. The King fled to the north and a month later

Mpande was acknowledged as the new Zulu monarch (30 January 1840).

Marabout ❙ 1801 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

See Alexandria (2nd)

Maracaibo ❙ 1823 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Two years after victory at Carabobo, the ultimate battle for Independence was fought along the western shore of Lake Maracaibo between the Patriot navy of General José Padilla (with troops under General Manuel Manrique) and Royalists Admiral Angel Laborde and General Francisco Tomás Morales. After a decisive naval defeat Spain finally abandoned Venezuela (24 July 1823).

Maracesti ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

In support of the Kerensky Offensive in Galicia, Russo-Romanian forces in Moldavia under Generals Andrei Zayonchovsky and Alexandru Averescu advanced north of Focsani around Maracesti against Bulgarian-German forces under August von Mackensen. Though Averescu eventually held the line, the Russians were forced to withdraw and Romania soon sued for peace (6–28 August 1917).

Maragheh ❙ 1760 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

Azad Kahn of Azerbaijan recovered from his terrible defeat at Urmiya in July 1757, raising fresh forces in Kurdistan to advance towards Tabriz. Southeast of Tabriz at Maragheh, Azad met a confederation of his former allies led by Fath Ali Khan Afshar and Shahbaz Khan Donboli. The Azerbaijani leader was utterly defeated in a decisive battle and took refuge in Georgia (July 1760).

Marais des Cygnes ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

As he retreated south from defeat near Kansas City, Missouri, at Westport, Confederate General Sterling Price was attacked near Trading Post by Union General Alfred Pleasonton. At Marais des Cygnes his rearguard under Generals John S. Marmaduke and James F. Fagan fought a holding action before falling back to join Price in a better defensive position at Mine Creek (25 October 1864).

Maraita ❙ 1907 ❙ Nicaraguan-Honduran War

President José Santos Zelaya of Nicaragua invaded Honduras to win at San Marcos de Colón and Namasigue, while another invading force under José María Valladares advanced on Maraita, southeast of Tegucicalpa. Bloody fighting saw Honduran General Sotero Barahona defeated and killed and the capital fell. President Manuel Bonilla fled into exile, replaced by Miguel Dávila (22–23 March 1907).

Marakesh ❙ 1912 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

See Sidi Ben Othman

Marathon ❙ 490 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

Darius I of Persia recovered Greek Ionia at Lade, then sent Artaphernes and Datis against Eretria and Athens, which had aided the rebels. The Persians landed at Marathon, northeast of Athens, and were routed by Callimachus and Miltiades. Losing 6,400 killed for just 192 Athenians (including Callimachus) the Persians withdrew, but returned in 480 BC at Thermopylae (12 September 490 BC).

Marauder ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

See Plain of Reeds

Marbella ❙ 1705 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Sent to relieve the Franco-Spanish siege of Gibraltar, Admiral Sir John Leake, reinforced by Sir Thomas Dilkes and Dutch and Portuguese ships, pursued French commander Jean-Bernard Desjeans Baron de Pointis east through the Strait of Gibraltar to Marbella. With three French ships taken and two burned to avoid capture, de Pointis withdrew and the siege was raised (10 March 1705).

Marcellae ❙ 759 ❙ Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars

Emperor Constantine V repulsed Bulgar raids on Byzantine territory, then personally led an army into Bulgaria and met his enemy northwest of Burgas at Marcellae (near modern Karnobad). Constantine won a bloody battle, though both sides suffered costly losses and agreed on a truce. The Bulgars later renewed the war and were defeated in June 763 at Anchialus.

Marcellae ❙ 792 ❙ Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars

Determined to assert his authority, the 21-year-old Byzantine Emperor Constantine VI overthrew his mother, the Regent Irene, then unwisely marched into Bulgaria, where he came under attack by the Khan Kardam at Marcellae (near modern Karnobad). Constantine suffered a humiliating defeat and fled. He then restored his mother as Empress, but she later deposed and blinded him.

Marchfeld ❙ 1278 ❙ Bohemian Wars

Two years after the Habsburg King Rudolf of Germany captured Vienna from Ottokar II of Bohemia, his powerful rival returned with a large army. On the Plain of Marchfeld, north of Vienna, the Bohemian King was defeated and killed by a massive force under Rudolf and his ally Ladislav IV of Hungary. Victory established Habsburg dominance in Austria (26 August 1278).

Marchfeld ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

See Aspern-Essling

Marciano ❙ 1554 ❙ 5th Habsburg-Valois War

During the 15-month siege of Siena by Imperial forces under Gian Medecino Marquis of Marignano, a French army led by Pietro Strozzi approached to try and relieve the Republic. Strozzi's relief army was utterly defeated east of Siena at Marciano. Medecino then returned to the siege of Siena, which held out until April 1555 before starvation forced surrender (2 August 1554).

Marcianopolis ❙ 377 ❙ 5th Gothic War

Goths under Fritigern and Alvivus crossed the Danube with the permission of Emperor Valens (376), but war soon broke out against Governor Lupicinus, who had failed in an attempt to assassinate the Goth chiefs. Outside Marcianopolis (modern Preslav, Bulgaria), the local Roman army was annihilated. Valens himself then marched to Thrace and died in a disastrous defeat at Adrianople.

Marco Polo Bridge ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Under pretext of conducting a military exercise, Japanese troops clashed with Chinese at Marco Polo Bridge (Lugouqiao) just outside Beijing, triggering an undeclared war. Colonel Ji Xingwen was driven off and Chinese commander Song Zheyuan negotiated a truce. A few days later, the Japanese were reinforced and began their attack on Tianjin and Beijing (7 July 1937).

Marda ❙ 1977 ❙ Ogaden War

Somali forces invaded the Ogaden in southeastern Ethiopia, then advanced through Jijiga to the strategic pass at Marda (Karamarda) in the Ahmar Mountains. Overwhelmed by tanks and air-strikes, the Ethiopian army suffered a decisive defeat, opening the way to Harer. Somalis later dug in to defend Marda, but were bypassed by the Ethiopian counter-offensive of February 1978 (29 September 1977).

Mardia ❙ 317 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

See Campus Ardiensis

Mardon ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

See Merton

Mared ❙ 1563 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War

After invading Danish Halland and failing in an attempt on Halmstad, the defeated Swedes came under attack by Frederick II of Denmark while withdrawing at nearby Mared. The Swedes were beaten when their cavalry fled, though a courageous defensive action under Klas Kristersson Horn and Charles de Mornay saved the withdrawing army from complete destruction (9 November 1563).

Marengo ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Alessandria

Marengo ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

At Marengo, near the Lombard city of Alessandria, Austrian Baron Michael von Melas attacked the unprepared French and defeated General Claude Victor. However, a counter-attack by General Louis Desaix and a fine cavalry charge by General Francois Kellerman routed the Austrians, though Desaix was killed. A further defeat at Höchstädt made Austria sue for peace (14 June 1800).

Mareth Line ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

British General Sir Bernard Montgomery brushed aside an Axis spoiling attack at Médenine (6 March), then launched a major assault on the Mareth Line in southern Tunisia, held by General Giovanni Messe. After initial failure, a flanking attack across the Matmata Hills by New Zealand General Bernard Freyberg broke through the Tebaga Gap and Messe fell back to Wadi Akarit (20–27 March 1943).

Marga ❙ 1946 ❙ Indonesian War of Independence

Determined to restore order, Dutch forces attacked the stubborn nationalist I Gusti Ngurah Rai on Bali. Surrounded and massively outnumbered, the 29-year-old Colonel and 94 guerrillas refused to surrender and died to a man in a suicidal stand reminiscent of the puputan at Denpasar 40 years earlier. Although Balinese resistance was crushed, the Dutch left three years later (20 November 1946).

Margalef ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Catalan General Henry O'Donnell was advancing to relieve the siege of Lérida, when his vanguard led by General Miguel de Ibarrola was surprised six miles from Lérida at Margalef by a large French force under General Louis Musnier. By the time O'Donnell arrived, the French cuirassiers had killed 500 and taken more than 2,000 Spanish prisoners and he hastily withdrew (23 April 1810).

Margate ❙ 1387 ❙ Hundred Years War

In a short-lived period of French authority at sea after victory at La Rochelle, Duke Louis of Anjou, Regent for Charles VI, sent his fleet on an ill-prepared invasion of England. Off Margate, Kent, the French-Castilian fleet was destroyed by English ships under Richard Fitzalan Earl of Arundel and Thomas Mowbray Earl of Nottingham, ending the threat of invasion (24 March 1387).

Margus ❙ 285 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

When Aurelius Carinus, commander in the East, became Emperor, he was soon opposed by Diocletian, who was elevated by the Army of Asia. Setting out from Gaul with a large, well-disciplined force, Carinus defeated the usurper on the Margus (modern Morava) in Serbia. However, he was killed in the moment of victory by dissident officers and Diocletian was proclaimed Emperor.

Margus ❙ 505 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Horreum Margi

Maria ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Joachim Blake repulsed new French commander General Louis Suchet at Alcaniz in May, then led his Army of the Right northwest to threaten the key city of Saragossa, on the Ebro. Near the small town of Maria, in the Huebra Valley south of Saragossa, Blake was defeated by Suchet with heavy losses in men and guns and withdrew east towards Belchite (15 June 1809).

Maria de la Cabeza ❙ 1936–1937 ❙ Spanish Civil War

With the loss of Oveida, the monastery of Maria de la Cabeza, north of Andujar, was the last rebel outpost in the north, held by 2,000 Civil Guards and civilians under Captain Santiago Cortés. In a determined assault to crush the stubborn resistance, about 20,000 Republicans under Colonel Carlos García Vallejo finally took it by storm. Cortés died of his wounds (22 August 1936–1 May 1937).

Mariana Islands ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

American forces in the central Pacific under General Holland Smith and Admiral Kelly Turner advanced north from the Marshall Islands into the Mariana Islands, defended by Admiral Chuichi Nagumo and General Hideyoshi Obata. Bloody fighting secured Saipan, Guam and Tinian, and with them the vital airfields for B-29 bombers to attack the Japanese homeland (June–August 1944).

Marias ❙ 1870 ❙ Piegan Indian Expedition

Colonel Eugene Baker was sent to the Marias River in northern Montana against hostile Piegan under Mountain Chief, but instead he attacked the nearby camp of the friendly Chief Heavy Runner. In a dawn massacre in extreme cold, Heavy Runner and 172 other Piegan were killed, including many women and children. About 140 more were captured, along with over 300 horses (23 January 1870).

Maria Zell ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

As Napoleon Bonaparte advanced towards Vienna after victory at Ulm, French Marshal Louis Davout caught up with a retreating Austrian force under Count Maximilian von Merveldt at Maria Zell, east of Durrenstein. The Austrians suffered a sharp defeat with a heavy loss of prisoners and Bonaparte continued on to capture Vienna, a week later (8 November 1805).

Marienthal ❙ 1645 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

See Mergentheim

Marienwerder ❙ 1629 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

See Sztum

Marietta ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

While General William T. Sherman's Union army advanced through Georgia, Confederate commander Joseph E. Johnston was forced out of Allatoona following defeat at Dallas and withdrew east to defensive positions around Marietta. After three weeks of inconclusive action Johnson secured victory at nearby Kennesaw Mountain, then slowly fell back on Atlanta (10 June–3 July 1864).

Marignano ❙ 1515 ❙ War of the Holy League

When Francis I of France invaded Lombardy, where the Swiss held a virtual protectorate in alliance with the Pope, a two-day battle at Marignano, south of Milan, saw the hitherto invincible Swiss pikemen defeated by artillery combined with ferocious cavalry. The Swiss withdrew across the Alps and the Pope sued for peace, leaving the French in Milan (13–14 September 1515).

Marignano ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

See Melegnano

Marigüeñu ❙ 1554 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Chile

Following the execution of Pedro de Valdivia after defeat at Tucapel, new Spanish Governor Francisco de Villagrán assembled an army in Concepción and marched south across the Bio Bio, where he was attacked at Marigüeñu by up to 8,000 Araucanian Indians under Lautaro. Villagrán suffered a terrible defeat and abandoned Concepción, which was twice sacked by Lautaro (23 February 1554).

Marion ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

On a second Union raid into southwest Virginia against the vital saltworks at Saltville, General George Stoneman advanced from Knoxville and led a feint against the leadworks at nearby Marion. Confederate General John C. Breckinridge moved east to try and protect Marion, but after a brief skirmish, Stoneman eluded pursuit and marched west to attack Saltville (17–18 December 1864).

Maritza ❙ 1363 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

During the first united Christian campaign against growing Ottoman power, Serbian and Bosnian forces joined Louis the Great of Hungary advancing to the Maritza in southern Bulgaria against Lala Shahin Pasha. Hadji Ilbeki completely destroyed the Christians in a brilliant unauthorised attack and Louis only just escaped with his life. Ilbeki was later allegedly poisoned by his jealous commander.

Maritza ❙ 1371 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

When the Despot Vukashin Mernitchevitch and his brother Ugliecha secured southern Serbia, they were threatened by Sultan Murad I who retook Adrianople. Their attempted counter-offensive was defeated on the Maritza near Cernomen, where both brothers were killed. Murad seized much of southern Bulgaria and the remainder fell after victory at Samokov and Kossovo (26 September 1371).

Marjal-Saffar ❙ 635 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

See Marj as-Suffar

Marj as-Suffar ❙ 635 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

Continuing his advance towards Damascus, the great Muslim commander Khalid ibn al-Walid drove back the Byzantine General Baanes at Fihl, then a month later faced a last-ditch Byzantine stand at Marj as-Suffar, 20 miles south of Damascus, northeast of the Sea of Galilee. Baanes was again defeated and the Arabs moved forward to lay siege to Damascus (25 February 635).

Marj-Dabik ❙ 1516 ❙ Ottoman-Mamluk War

Sultan Selim I defeated Persia at Chaldiran and Turna Dag, then turned to meet a flank attack from Persia's Mamluk allies in the south in Syria. Using disciplined infantry and newly introduced mass artillery, Selim overcame and killed Mamluk Sultan Kansu al-Gauri north of Aleppo at Marj-Dabik. Victory at Yaunis Khan in October completed Selim's conquest of Syria (24 August 1516).

Marj Rahit ❙ 634 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

The Muslim commander Khalid ibn al-Walid was recalled from Mesopotamia after victory at Firadz in January to support the conquest of Byzantine Syria, marching west through the desert to inflict a sharp defeat on a Byzantine force at Marj Rahit, east of Damascus, traditionally on Easter Sunday. He then joined the main Muslim forces in Palestine for victory at Ajnadin and at the Yarmuk.

Marj Rahit ❙ 684 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

Following the death of the Umayyad Caliph Yazid I and his short-lived and feeble son Mu'awiya II, the former Regent Merwan ibn al-Hakam was appointed Caliph in Damascus, while the rebel Abdullah ibn Zubair continued to be recognised as Caliph in Arabia and Egypt. Near Damascus, at Marj Rahit, the Zubair faction was decisively defeated and Merwan reclaimed Syria.

Marks' Mills ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

After capturing Camden, Arkansas, Union General Frederick Steele lost a foraging party to the west at Poison Spring, then sent Colonel Francis Drake with a supply train northeast to Pine Bluff. Attacked by General James B. Fagan at Marks' Mills, west of the Saline, Drake lost the wagons and was captured with most of his men. Steele soon retreated through Jenkins' Ferry (25 April 1864).

Marmiton ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate General Sterling Price retreating south from defeat at Westport, Missouri, suffered terrible losses at Mine Creek, then attempted to make a stand at the Marmiton River, east of Fort Scott. Defeated by General John H. McNeil, Price destroyed an estimated 400 wagons to prevent their capture. His shattered force then continued south through Carthage to Newtonia (25 October 1864).

Marne ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As German commander Helmuth von Moltke swept into France through Belgium, his army was struck in the flank east of Paris along the Marne by the Anglo-French Allies under Marshal Joseph Joffre. One of history's decisive actions saw the German offensive halted and Paris was saved. The Germans had to withdraw to the Aisne and von Moltke was replaced (5–9 September 1914).

Marne ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

When German commander Erich von Ludendorff launched his fifth and final offensive on the Marne around Rheims, Generals Bruno von Mudra and Karl von Einem enjoyed initial success, then faced a massive Allied counter-offensive under Marshal Ferdinand Foch. Threatened in the flank, the Germans withdrew and the Allies soon won again at Amiens and Arras (15 July –5 August 1918).

Marqab ❙ 1285 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

Mamluk Sultan Qalawun led a renewed campaign against the Crusader States and laid siege to the Hospitallier fortress near the Syrian coast at Marqab. Attacking with siege machines from Damascus, he eventually forced the knights to surrender. They were permitted to leave without their arms and possessions and the Sultan marched south to capture Tripoli (17 April–25 May 1285).

Marsaglia ❙ 1693 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

Victory at Staffarda in 1690 gave France Savoy and Piedmont. However, the defeated Duke Victor Amadeus of Savoy obtained Austrian and English reinforcements and invaded Dauphiné. French Marshal Nicolas Catinat once more crossed the Alps and, at Marsaglia southwest of Turin near Staffarda, Catinat again defeated the Duke, who eventually made a separate peace (4 October 1693).

Marseilles ❙ 49 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

See Massilia

Marseilles ❙ 413 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Massilia

Marseilles ❙ 1524 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

After repulsing a French invasion of Lombardy, Imperial commanders Charles Duke of Bourbon and Fernando d'Avalos Marquis of Pescara invaded France and besieged Marseilles. With the Imperial navy defeated at sea off Marseilles, the garrison under Renzo da Ceri held out until Francis I aproached with a relief army. The invaders then had to withdraw (19 August–29 September 1524).

Marseilles ❙ 1536 ❙ 3rd Habsburg-Valois War

With Emperor Charles V occupied in Tunis, Francis I of France invaded northern Italy and Charles returned to attack in the south of France. Notwithstanding the costly Imperial repulse at Marseilles in 1524, Charles personally led a large force against the city. After two months of siege, disease and lack of ammunition forced his withdrawal and Pope Paul III negotiated a ten-year truce.

Marseilles ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

General Jean-Baptiste-Francois Carteaux was sent against Royalist insurrection in the south of France where he took 2,500 men down the Rhone and defeated the rebels at Orange and Cadenet, then continued south and forced his way into Marseilles. He soon marched east to join the siege of Toulon, but his military competence was called into question and he was relieved of command (25 August 1793).

Marseilles ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

When Allied forces invaded southern France along the Riviera, Free French Commander Jean de Lattre de Tassigny ordered General Joseph Goislard de Monsabert against Marseilles, France's largest port. Severe fighting, including a Resistance uprising in the city, forced the German garrison of 11,000 to surrender. Marseilles and Toulon became key Allied supply ports (22–28 August 1944).

Marshall Islands ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With the Gilbert Islands won, American Admiral Ray Spruance and General Holland Smith continued 500 miles north into the Marshalls. The key Kwajalein Atoll was secured at Roi-Namur and Kwajalein, followed by the Eniwetok Atoll 350 miles to the west (supported by a massive attack on Truk), opening the way for the next offensive north into the Mariana Islands (1–20 February 1944).

Mars-la-Tour ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Prince Friedrich Karl of Prussia attempting to intercept the French west of the Moselle after Colombey defeated Marshal Francois-Achille Bazaine's left flank at Mars-la-Tour, while General Konstantin von Alvensleben secured nearby Vionville. But at Rezonville the Prussians were checked by Marshal Francois-Antoine Canrobert, while Bazaine retired through Gravelotte (16 August 1870).

Marston Moor ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

Defending the Parliamentary siege of York, England, Prince Rupert and William Cavendish Earl of Newcastle were met on nearby Marston Moor by Ferdinando Lord Fairfax, Edward Montagu Earl of Manchester and Scots under Alexander Leslie Earl of Leven. More than 3,000 Royalists died in a bloody rout and the fall of York meant the north was effectively lost (2 July 1644).

Martaban ❙ 1824 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

When Burma conquered Arakan and attacked British India, General Sir Archibald Campbell secured Rangoon (May 1824), then sent Colonel (later General) Henry Godwin and naval Lieutenant Charles Keele 100 miles east against the fortress at Martaban, on the Salween opposite Moulmien. They stormed the stockade after three days, capturing a massive store of arms and ammunition (30 October 1824).

Martaban ❙ 1852 ❙ 2nd British-Burmese War

Britain resumed war with Burma for commercial gain and General Henry Godwin and Admiral Charles Austen attacked Martaban, at the mouth of the Salween opposite Moulmein, held by 5,000 experienced Burmese troops. The city fell by storm and a few days later Godwin secured Rangoon before advancing northwest against Bassein, Burma (5 April 1852).

Martinesti ❙ 1789 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

See Rimnik

Martín García ❙ 1814 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

During an attack on the Spanish fleet blockading Buenos Aires, Argentine Commodore William Brown was repulsed near the island of Martín García, with American-born Captain Benjamin Franklin Seaver killed. A second attack five days later saw Spanish commander Jacinto de Romarate defeated and he withdrew up the Uruguay River towards Arroyo de la China (11 & 16 March 1814).

Martinici ❙ 1796 ❙ Montenegran-Scutari War

Mahmud Pasha Bustalija of Shkoder (Scutari) and 18,000 Turks who invaded Montenegro were met in the Zeta Valley north of Podgorica at Martinici, near the fortress of Spuz, by a claimed 3,000 men under Peter I of Montenegro. Bustalija was wounded and badly defeated and his reinforced army suffered an even more decisive defeat two months later at Krusi (11 July 1796).

Martinique ❙ 1667 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

Shortly after arriving in the West Indies, new English Admiral Sir John Harman was repulsed attempting to recapture St Christopher, then took his large force against more than twenty French warships at Martinique following their defeat at Nevis. In a one-sided action, Admiral Joseph de La Barre suffered a major disaster, with just two or three ships escaping destruction (25 June 1667).

Martinique ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Caribbean)

British General Sir Peregrine Hopson and Commodore John Moore led an attempted offensive in the French West Indies, where they successfully landed on Martinique at Fort Royal. However, when heavy surf prevented unloading of their guns the ineffectual Hopson withdrew with over 100 casualties. The expedition then turned its attention instead to Guadeloupe (16–18 January 1759).

Martinique ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Caribbean)

Following the conquest of French Canada, Britain captured Dominica and Admiral George Rodney and General Sir Robert Monckton landed on Martinique. Reinforced by General Andrew Lord Rollo, Monckton captured Port Royal and Martinique soon surrendered. Nearby St Lucia was taken without fighting and both were returned to France after the war (16 January–12 February 1762).

Martinique ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When Admiral Luc-Urbain Comte de Guichen sailed from Martinique to attack Barbados, fleet and troop convoys were intercepted near Martinique by British Admiral George Rodney. After a confused drawn action, with heavy casualties on both sides, the French abandoned their expedition and withdrew to Guadeloupe. Rodney blamed his subordinates for the failure (17 April 1780).

Martinique ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British commander George Rodney took St Eustatius in the West Indies (3 February), then sent Admiral Sir Samuel Hood (1724–1816) with an inadequate force to intercept a large convoy from France, escorted by Admiral Francois-Joseph de Grasse. In battle off Martinique, Hood's outnumbered squadron was driven off with heavy damage and the French convoy arrived safely in Port Royal (29 April 1781).

Martinique ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

While campaigning against French territory in the West Indies, Admiral Sir Alan Gardner sailed from Barbados against Martinique with French Royalist troops and 3,000 British regulars. The troops under General Thomas Bruce landed but were repulsed after five days. Martinique remained under French Republican rule until a further attack the following February (16–21 June 1793).

Martinique ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

A British expedition from Barbados under Admiral Sir John Jervis and General Sir Charles Grey renewed the attack on France in the West Indies, where they landed on Martinique and quickly captured St Pierre. With the fall of the strongpoints Fort Royal and Fort Louis, Governor Donatien Rochambeau surrendered. Jervis and Grey went on to capture St Lucia (5 February–23 March 1794).

Martinique ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

The West Indian island of Martinique was returned to France in 1802, but the resumption of war saw Britain mount a fresh expedition to recover the colony. Captain Sir Thomas Cochrane and General Sir George Beckwith landed with their force and, after sharp fighting, French Governor Admiral Louis Villaret de Joyeuse was forced to surrender (30 January–24 February 1809).

Martinsbruch ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Determined to prevent the union in Switzerland of the French Army of the Rhine and General Jean-Joseph Dessoles advancing from Italy, Austrian Field Marshal Johann Loudon turned first against General Claude-Jacques Lecourbe approaching from the north. At Martinsbruch (modern Martina), the Austrian repulsed Lecourbe, but he was beaten by Desoles a week later at Tauffes (17 March 1799).

Martin's Point ❙ 1840 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

Marching towards Wacahoota from Fort Micanopy, south of Gainesville, Florida, Lieutenant Walter Sherwood and a small patrol were ambushed by Seminole under Halleck Tustenuggee at Martin's Point, close to a previous ambush site at Bridgewater, Florida. Before aid could be sent from the fort, Sherwood, four soldiers and an officer's wife under escort had been killed (28 December 1840).

Martin's Station ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Ruddle's Station

Marton ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

See Merton

Martynow ❙ 1624 ❙ Polish-Tatar Wars

Stanislas Koniecpolski was ransomed from captivity after Cecora (1620) and led a Polish force against Tatars at Martynow, in the southern Ukraine northeast of Ivano-Frankovsk. Koniecpolski won a decisive victory and was created Palatine of Sandomierz by a grateful Sigismund III. Over the next 20 years he defeated the Tatars again at Sasowy Rog, Kamieniec and Okhmatov (20 June 1624).

Martyropolis ❙ 588 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

Despite mutiny in the east against army pay reforms, Germanus invaded Persia, where he was checked by Sassanian General Marouzas and fell back to the frontier city of Martyropolis (modern Silvan in Armenia). Germanus killed Marouzas and took 3,000 prisoners, but the next year the city was betrayed to the Persians. It was later recovered for helping restore Chosroes II after Ganzak in 591.

Maruchak ❙ 1507 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

Uzbek conqueror Muhammad Shaybani Khan drove the Mughal Babur from Samarkand (1501), then marched southwest into the Khorasan, where he was met by Dhu'l-Nun, the Arghunid Mughal Governor of Kandahar. Dhu'l-Nun was defeated and killed in battle at Maruchak, on the Murghab River near Bala Morghab. His son Shah Beg retained Kandahar as an Uzbek vassal.

Masada ❙ 72–73 ❙ Jewish Rising against Rome

Facing rebellion in Judea, Roman forces stormed Jerusalem (70) then systematically crushed resistance, besieging the last Jewish stronghold near the Dead Sea at Masada, held by Zealots under Eleazor ben Yair. Threatened by perhaps 15,000 men under Flavius Silva, the entire garrison of over 900 men, women and children finally killed themselves rather than be captured (72 AD–15 April 73).

Masaguara ❙ 1856 ❙ Central American National Wars

Guatemala and Honduras agreed a truce following action at Omoa in 1853 to meet the threat of American Filibusters, later resuming their border war. In southwest Honduras at Masaguara, Honduran President José Trinidad Cabañas was defeated by Guatemalans under Juan López. Cabañas was soon overthrown and the combatants united again to meet the Filibusters at Granada, Nicaragua (6 October 1856).

Masaya ❙ 1856 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

With American Filibuster William Walker defeated in southwest Nicaragua at Rivas, the Central America allies took Masaya, 50 miles to the north. An attempt by Colonel John Waters to retake Masaya was repulsed by José Victor Zavala of Guatemala and Jose Maria Estrada of Nicaragua. After a second costly failure, Walker fell back on Granada (13 October & 15–17 November 1856).

Mascara ❙ 1835 ❙ French Conquest of Algeria

In the campaign to complete the conquest of western Algeria, France faced the Arab warrior Abd-el-Kader, who established his capital at Mascara, southeast of Oran. Following defeat at Moulay Ishmael and Macta, France sent fresh forces under Marshal Bertrand Clausel, who defeated Kader and took Mascara. However, the Arab fought on until eventual defeat at Smala and Isly (November 1835).

Maserfield ❙ 641 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Threatened by the growing power of Northumbria, Penda of Mercia challenged King Oswald at Maserfield (probably Oswestry) in Shropshire. In a repeat of his victory over Edwin of Northumbria at Heathfield, Penda now defeated and killed Oswald, who was Edwin's nephew and successor. Northumbrian supremacy was restored in 655 at Winwaed (5 August 641).

Masindi ❙ 1872 ❙ Egyptian Wars of Expansion

Sir Samuel Baker, Viceroy of the Egyptian Khedive, advanced south into the Nile basin, where he annexed Bunyoro in northern Uganda, then came under attack by King Kabarega. At Masindi, east of Lake Albert, Baker's 200-strong force repulsed the Bunyoro with heavy losses. However, continued skirmishing forced Baker to burn his stores and endure a costly retreat to the Nile (8 June 1872).

Maskat ❙ 1507 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in Arabia

See Muscat

Maskat ❙ 1650 ❙ Later Portuguese Colonial Wars in Arabia

See Muscat

Maskin ❙ 701 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

When Ibn al-Ash'ath in the east rebelled against the Umayyad Caliph, he was defeated near Kufa at Dayr al-Jamajim by Governor al-Hajjaj of Iraq and retreated north to Maskin on the Shatt al-Dujayl. There, al-Hajjaj inflicted a terrible defeat, with many drowned in the river trying to escape. Ibn al-Ash'ath fled and bloody retribution against his supporters ended the insurrection (October 701).

Massacre Canyon ❙ 1873 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

While hunting buffalo in southwest Nebraska under the protection of Fort McPherson, about 350 peaceful Pawnee were unexpectedly attacked near modern Trenton by a large war party of Brulé and Oglala Sioux under Chief Snow Flake. Army help arrived too late and up to 100 Pawnee were slaughtered, including Sky Chief. The site was later known as Massacre Canyon (5 August 1873).

Massacre Hill ❙ 1866 ❙ Red Cloud's War

See Fetterman Massacre

Massawa ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

After British forces in Eritrea captured Keren and Asmara, General Lewis Heath was sent east against Massawa. Italian Admiral Mario Bonetti demolished much of the Red Sea port before the British and Free French stormed in with tanks to seize the last Italian stronghold in Eritrea. Bonetti surrendered almost 10,000 men and the Allies turned south towards Amba Alagi (8 April 1941).

Massawa ❙ 1977 ❙ Eritrean War of Independence

At the high-water mark of their urban offensive, Eritrean forces attacked the port of Massawa and seized most of the city. However, a frontal assault on the nearby naval base was driven off, with 200 killed and 400 wounded, by Ethiopian tanks supported by shelling from Ethiopian and Soviet warships. The rebels tried to maintain a siege but were later forced to withdraw (21–31 December 1977).

Massawa ❙ 1990 ❙ Eritrean War of Independence

With rebel forces on the offensive throughout Eritrea, a land and sea attack was launched against Massawa, where speedboats sank most of the Ethiopian warships in the harbour. The city and naval base were taken with very heavy losses on both sides. After the surrender Ethiopian aircraft bombed the city for ten days, causing massive damage and civilian losses (8–16 February 1990).

Massilia ❙ 49 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Julius Caesar marched into Gaul and besieged Massilia (modern Marseilles) held for his rival Pompey by Lucius Domitius Ahenobarbus. He then departed for Spain, leaving Gaius Trebonius to maintain the siege, aided at sea by Decimus Brutus. Ships sent by Pompey were repulsed and, when Caesar returned from victory at Ilerda, Domitius fled and the city fell (March–6 September 49 BC).

Massilia ❙ 413 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

On campaign in southern Gaul, the Visigoth Ataulf took Toulouse and Narbonne, then besieged the key Roman city of Massilia (modern Marseilles) defended by the powerful Roman General John Bonifacius. However, Ataulf failed to take Massilia and later made peace with Emperor Honorius, marrying the Emperor's sister Placidia. He was later sent to recover Spain for the empire.

Masterby ❙ 1361 ❙ Wars of the Hanseatic League

See Visby

Masts ❙ 654 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Mount Phoenix

Mastung ❙ 1758 ❙ Baluchi Rebellion

After defeats in the Punjab for the Afghan ruler Ahmad Shah Durrani, his former General, Baluchi Chief Nasir Khan, declared independence. Ahmad sent his vizier to attack the rebel at Kalat, but further north near Mastung the Afghan army was badly beaten. Ahmad Shah himself then arrived to besiege Kalat. After failed assaults he made peace and accepted homage from Nasir Khan.

Masulipatam ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

To take pressure off the British in Madras, Governor Robert Clive of Bengal sent Colonel Francis Forde south from Calcutta to support Raja Ananda Raj against the French under Herbert de Brienne Comte de Conflans. After victory at Condore, Forde besieged then stormed the key coastal town of Masulipatam. Conflans surrendered with almost 3,000 men (6 March–8 April 1759).

Masumpur ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

Renewing the Mughal invasion of Bengal following defeat at Patna (April 1759), Emperor Shah Alam II and General Kamgar Khan marched on Patna, defended by Raja Ramnarain who met them at Masumpur, east of Futwar. Ramnarain was heavily defeated when three of his divisional commanders deserted on the battlefield, but the Imperials were beaten two weeks later at Sherpur (9 February 1760).

Masurian Lakes ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

German General Paul von Hindenberg destroyed a Russian army at Tannenberg (31 August), then turned north against the First Army of Pavel Rennenkampf. Heavy fighting around the Masurian Lakes cost 125,000 Russian and 40,000 German casualties before Rennenkampf eluded envelopment and abandoned East Prussia. Russia soon counter-attacked at Augustovo (9–14 September 1914).

Masurian Lakes ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

A massive mid-winter offensive from East Prussia saw Marshal Paul von Hindenberg attack north of the Masurian Lakes, with Generals Otto von Below and Hermann von Eichhorn. A Russian Corps was sacrificed holding Augustovo, costing General Thadeus Sievers 56,000 casualties and perhaps 100,000 captured. A counter-attack finally halted the German advance (7–21 February 1915).

Mata Carmelera ❙ 1898 ❙ Venezuelan Civil Wars

When President Joaquín Crespo fraudently secured election of his successor, Ignacio Andrade, General Jose Manuel Hernandez began the "Revolution of Queipa." In action at Mata Carmelera, in Cojedes, Crespo was shot and killed, though Hernandez was later defeated and captured by General Ramóin Guerra (12 June). Andrade was overthrown the following year after Tocuyito (16 April 1898).

Matamaros ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

Days after destroying an Imperial convoy at Santa Gertrudis, Liberal commander Mariano Escobedo marched west against Matamaros, held by just 300 men under General Tomás Mejía, who was forced to capitulate. Although Mejía was controversially permitted to withdraw with all his arms except 43 cannon, the loss of the city was a severe blow to the Imperial cause (23–24 June 1866).

Matanikau ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With Japanese forces on Guadalcanal reinforced after Cape Esperance, General Masao Maruyama launched a large-scale attack across the Matanikau River, west of General Alexander Vandergrift's Americans at Henderson Field. Two badly co-ordinated assaults were repulsed, with up to 3,500 Japanese casualties, ending the last major Japanese ground offensive (23–25 October 1942).

Matanzas ❙ 1628 ❙ Dutch-Spanish Colonial Wars

Dutch Admiral Piet Heyn returned to the West Indies the year after his victory at Salvador and led a large fleet to capture the King of Spain's annual silver shipment from America. Off Matanzas Bay, in western Cuba, Heyn intercepted and seized the galleons, securing a massive treasure for the West India Company and earning the title Lieutenant Admiral of Holland (8 September 1628).

Matapan ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

See Cape Matapan

Mataquito ❙ 1557 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Chile

On a fresh offensive against the Araucanian Indians of southern Chile, Governor Francisco de Villagrán took a large army against Lautaro, who had defeated him at Marigüeñu (1554). In battle at Mataquito, Lautaro was decisively defeated and killed, along with perhaps 600 of his guerrillas. Within a year, Chief Caupolicán was also defeated and killed and resistance was suppressed (29 April 1557).

Matará ❙ 1815 ❙ Peruvian War of Independence

In the rising by Indian leader Mateo Pumacahua against Peru's Spanish rulers, rebel leaders Manuel Hurtado de Mendoza and José Gabriel Bejar rebuilt their forces in Anadahuaylas after defeat at Huanta. They were beaten again by the Royalists at Matará and escaped east towards Cuzco. Both men were eventually executed after the rising was crushed in March at Umachiri (4 February 1815).

Mataram ❙ 1894 ❙ Dutch Conquest of Bali

Determined to avenge his defeat on Lombok, Dutch General Jacobus Vetter returned three months later with a much larger force to burn Cakranegara, then met the Balinese army just outside the capital Mataram on a hill called Gunung Sari. Crown Prince Anak Agung Nengah was killed in a terrible ritual defeat (puputan) and the elderly Raja went into exile in Batavia (22 November 1894).

Matarikoriko ❙ 1861 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Te Arei

Matawhero ❙ 1868 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Hauhau rebel Te Kooti returned to New Zealand's east coast after escaping from the Chatham Islands and descended on the remote settlement at Matawhero, west of Turanganui (modern Gisborne). In one bloody night, his followers killed 37 friendly Maoris and 33 Europeans, including Major Reginald Biggs and his family. They were soon checked further inland at Makaretu (9–10 November 1868).

Matchevitz ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Maciejowice

Matchin ❙ 1791 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

Advancing up the Danube after taking Izmail (December 1790), 40,000 Russians under General Prince Nikolai Repnin approached Vizier Yusuf Pasha with 100,000 men at Matchin (modern Macin). Without waiting for reinforcements from Prince Grigory Potemkin, Repnin and General Mikhail Kutuzov won a massive victory, ending the war with Russian gains on the Black Sea (28 June 1791).

Matehuala ❙ 1864 ❙ Mexican-French War

Five months after winning at San Luis Potosi, General Tomás Mejía and French under Colonel Alphonse-Édouard Aymard cornered Liberal commander Manuel Doblada further north at Matehuala, where he was supported by Florencio Antillón and Antonio Carbajal. Following heavy losses on both sides, Doblada fled to the United States. He died in New York in June 1865 (17 May 1864).

Mati ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

Despite checks at Nezeros and Vigla as he advanced into Thessaly, days later Edhem Pasha assembled a large Ottoman force near Mati against Greek Crown Prince Constantine, supported by Colonels Mastrapas and Mavromichalis. After action north from Tyrnavos, the Turks launched a bloody assault and the Greeks fled south through Larissa to Velestino and Pharsalus (22–23 April 1897).

Matmata Hills ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Mareth Line

Mato Grosso ❙ 1864 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Coimbra, Brazil

Matwy ❙ 1666 ❙ Lubomirski's Rebellion

Bitterly opposed to Royal reforms, former Polish Marshal Jerzy Lubomirski led a rebellion against John II Casimir, whose army under John Sobieski (later King) was routed at Matwy on Lake Goplo. Though Lubomirski later yielded and left for Silesia, the weakened Polish King was forced to cede the Eastern Ukraine, Kiev and Smolensk to Moscow. He abdicated in 1668 (13 July 1666).

Maubeuge ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Wattignies

Maubeuge ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

As the Allies advanced from Brussels, Courtrai and Oudenarde were taken before Karl August Duke of Weimer sent General Karl-Christian von Lecocq against Maubeuge. Facing a stout defence by Colonel Jean-Baptiste Schouller, Lecocq's Saxons were checked and withdrew after five days. However, the broad advance could not be stopped and the Allies drove on towards Paris (19–24 March 1814).

Mauku ❙ 1863 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Maori warriors campaigning against settlements south of Auckland were repulsed at Pukekohe East, then attempted to seize cattle further west near Mauku. Boldly counter-attacking in dense bush, 50 militia under Lieutenant Daniel Lusk met the raiders at nearby Titi Hill. In close quarters action, 20 Maoris and eight British were killed before the Maoris withdrew (23 October 1863).

Maumee ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

See Dudley's Defeat

Maupertuis ❙ 1356 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Poitiers

Mauriacus ❙ 451 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Chalons

Mauritius ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

After British failure at Grand Port (23 August), Admiral Albemarle Bertie and General John Abercomby with over 10,000 men attacked the Indian Ocean island of Mauritius (French Ile de France). Surrendered by General Charles Decaen, the island was confirmed as British at war's end and resumed its earlier name. Nearby Réunion had already been captured (24 September–3 December 1810).

Mauron ❙ 1352 ❙ Hundred Years War

French Marshal Guy de Nesle was ransomed after his capture at Saintes in April 1351 and seized Rennes. Then advancing west towards Brest he was intercepted at Mauron by Sir William Bentley. In perhaps the most decisive French defeat since Crecy (1346) the outnumbered English archers destroyed the French knights. Nesle was among up to 2,000 claimed killed (14 August 1352).

Maxen ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Following his disastrous defeat at Kunersdorf (12 August), Frederick II of Prussia sent an inadequate force under General Frederick von Finck against Marshal Leopold von Daun's Austrians at Maxen, south of Dresden. The massively outnumbered Prussians were overwhelmed and the entire army of 12,000 men surrendered. Finck was later court-martialled and imprisoned (20 November 1759).

Maya ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," French Marshal Nicolas Soult sent General Jean Baptiste d'Erlon to relieve besieged Pamplona, but he was blocked at the Pass of Maya by British General Sir William Stewart. As at Roncesvalles the same day, the outnumbered British fell back with heavy losses. However, they had successfully delayed the French advance (25 July 1813).

Mayals ❙ 1834 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Determined to spread the Carlist insurrection to Catalonia, Commander Manuel Carnicer crossed the Ebro and was met at Mayals, southwest of Lerida, by General José Carratalá, commanding in Tarragona, and Governor Manuel Breton of Tortosa. Despite a courageous attack by Colonel Ramón Cabrera, Carnicer was defeated and the Carlists suffered a major setback (10 April 1834).

Maychew ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

Although his armies in the north were destroyed at Amba Aradam, Tembien and Shire, Emperor Haile Selassie personally led 35,000 men to meet Marshal Pietro Badoglio at Maychew, east of Sekota. Haile Selassie was badly defeated in the battle, which decided the fate of his country. He fell back through disaster at Lake Ashangi to Addis Ababa, then fled into exile (31 March 1936).

May-en-Multien ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Ourcq

Mazar ❙ 633 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

Muslim General Khalid ibn al-Walid routed a Persian army at Hafir, Iraq before another Sassanian Persian force under Qarin ibn Quryana crossed the Tigris later the same year and attempted to block his advance into Mesopotamia at Mazar. Qarin was killed in a bloody action and his desperate army was destroyed. The Persian Emperor soon sent a fresh army, which met the invaders at Walaja (April 633).

Mazar-i-Sharif ❙ 2001 ❙ Afghanistan War

After widespread British and American bombing of Taliban and al-Qaeda targets in Afghanistan, the Northern Alliance ground offensive began towards the strategic northern city of Mazar-i-Sharif. Carpet bombing destroyed nearby defensive positions and the Taliban were forced to withdraw as the city fell. The main effort then turned east against Kunduz (9–10 November 2001).

Mazinan ❙ 1755 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

See Sabzavar

Mazra ❙ 1880 ❙ 2nd British-Afghan War

See Kandahar

Mazraa ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

With Syria in revolt against French rule, General Roger Michaud left Azra with 3,000 French, Syrian and Madagascan troops to relieve Suwayda, besieged by Druze leader al-Atrash. A few miles northwest at Mazraa, he was ambushed and lost about 800 men killed or wounded and 2,000 rifles. Michaud was recalled and another column was stopped six weeks later at Museifré (3 August 1925).

Mbutuy ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

In a sharp encounter at Mbutuy, northeast of Asunción near San Estanislao, a force of 400 Paraguayans led by Major José López met about 2,300 Brazilians under Colonels Antonio Fernandez Lima and Sezefredo Mesquita. The Brazilians lost about 100 casualties, but the Paraguayans, caught between two attacks, were forced to withdraw with 116 dead and 120 wounded (26 June 1865).

Mbwila ❙ 1665 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in West Africa

See Ambuila

McClellan Creek ❙ 1872 ❙ Red River Indian War

Colonel Ranald Mackenzie pursued Comanche forces across Western Texas and attacked Kotsoteka Chief Mow-way near McClellan Creek, on the north fork of the Red River near Lefors. At least 50 Indians were killed, with 124 women and children captured, the camp destroyed and 1,000 horses seized then recovered. The ensuing conflict was named for the Red River (29 September 1872).

McDowell ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Two weeks after defeat at Kernstown, Confederate General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson resumed the offensive in Virginia's Shenandoah Valley and intercepted Union troops under Generals Robert H. Milroy and Robert C. Schenck at McDowell, northwest of Staunton. Heavy fighting drove the Union force back into West Virginia and Jackson marched northeast to Front Royal (8 May 1862).

McNeill's Zareba ❙ 1885 ❙ British-Sudan Wars
See Tofrek

Mearcredesburn ❙ 485 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain
With victory on the west Sussex coast secured near Selsey (477), the Saxon adventurer Aella and his son Cissa faced an alliance of British and Welsh forces at the frontier on the banks of the Mearcredesburn. The battle was inconclusive and Aella received Saxon reinforcements before the decisive battle at Anderida (491). He eventually became King of the South Saxons.

Meaux ❙ 1421–1422 ❙ Hundred Years War
Henry V of England was recognised by Charles VI of France as his heir and moved to secure his heritage by besieging the town of Meaux, east of Paris, held by Jean de Gast, the Bastard of Vaurus. The mid-winter siege saw disease break out and the King fell seriously ill. Meaux finally surrendered and de Gast was hanged. Three months later Henry was dead (6 October 1421–10 May 1422).

Mecca ❙ 630 ❙ Campaigns of the Prophet Mohammed
Following repeated defeats by the Prophet Mohammed of Medina, the Koreish Arabs of Mecca signed a treaty permitting the Muslims to pray at the Ka'bah. When some Koreish breached the treaty their leader, Abu Sufyan, attempted to restore peace, but Mohammed took the opportunity to attack. Mecca fell with minimal losses and the local Arabs converted to Islam (11 January 630).

Mecca ❙ 683 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars
After the death of the Umayyad Caliph Mu'awiya (May 683), his son Yazid I faced a revolt in Arabia by Abdullah ibn Zubair, son of the conqueror of Egypt. An Umayyad army captured Medina, Saudi Arabia, but Zubair soon defended a brutal monthlong siege of Mecca by Syrian General Hosein ibn Numair. The siege was lifted when Yazid died and Zubair was recognised as Caliph in Arabia and Egypt.

Mecca ❙ 692 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars
Caliph Abdul-Malik resolved to end the rival Caliphate in the south and sent the brilliant General Hajjaj ibn Yusuf from Damascus with a large Umayyad army to recapture Mecca. The Arabian rebel, Abdullah ibn Zubair, now in his seventies, held out for six months against a brutal and destructive siege. However, he was killed in the final assault and the Umayyad Caliphate reclaimed Arabia.

Mecca ❙ 930 ❙ Sack of Mecca
As a climax to years of campaigning in Syria and Iraq, the radical Shi'ite Carmathians of Bahrain attacked and sacked the Holy City of Mecca. Thousands of Meccans and pilgrims were reported killed in a brutal assault and the raiders seized the Black Stone of the Ka'bah, one of Islam's holiest relics. The stone was eventually ransomed and returned about 20 years later (12 December 930).

Mecca ❙ 1924 ❙ Saudi-Hashemite Wars
See Taif

Mechanicsville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Beaver Dam Creek

Mechili ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)
Days after taking Tobruk, General Richard O'Connor headed into the desert against Italian armour at Mechili. Both sides suffered costly losses in one of the first tank battles of the desert war before General Valentino Babini broke off and eluded pursuit. O'Connor then gathered his forces to strike west through Msus to intercept the Italians south of Benghazi at Beda Fomm (24 January 1941).

Medak ❙ 1993 ❙ Croatian War
On a brutal offensive into the Medak Pocket in Serb-occupied Krajina, Croatian troops shelled and destroyed villages and executed Serb soldiers and civilians. Canadian UN peacekeepers eventually had to open fire to restore order before the Croats finally withdrew with 27 killed.

Croatian commander General Mirko Norac was later indicted and imprisoned for war crimes (9–17 September 1993).

Medellin ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Turning south from his victory at Uclés (13 January), French Marshal Claude Victor advanced towards Portugal and at Medellin, on the Guadiana, met the large Spanish force of General Gregorio Cuesta. Striking against the overextended Spanish lines, Victor inflicted a crushing defeat and General Marie Latour-Mauberge's cavalry drove the survivors south in a bloody pursuit (28 March 1809).

Médenine ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Field Marshal Erwin Rommel routed the Americans in southern Tunisia at Kasserine (22 February) and returned to his defences at Mareth, then launched a spoiling attack at Médenine against British General Sir Bernard Montgomery. A costly defeat saw 52 Axis tanks lost and Rommel, ill and tired, returned to Germany. Two weeks later Montgomery stormed the Mareth Line (6 March 1942).

Medina, Saudi Arabia ❙ 627 ❙ Campaigns of the Prophet Mohammed

The Arabs of Mecca were repulsed at Ohud in 625, but regrouped and joined local Jews to attack Mohammed in Medina. With insufficient men for another open battle, the Prophet defended a strong trench around the city. The Meccans abandoned the siege after five weeks in the face of costly losses. The Muslims then killed many of the Jews of Medina and expelled the rest (24 February 627).

Medina, Saudi Arabia ❙ 683 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

Faced by a revolt in Arabia following the death of the Ommayad Caliph Mu'awiya (May 683), his son and successor Yazid I sent an army from Damascus under the elderly General Muslim. The city of Medina was taken by storm after a short siege and was then put to a violent and destructive sack. General Muslim subsequently died while marching his army further south to attack Mecca.

Medina, Saudi Arabia ❙ 762 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

When Muhammad ibn Abd'Allah and his brother Ibrahim raised Shi'ite rebellion against Caliph al-Mansur, Muhammad won over the people of Medina and Mecca before the Caliph sent 4,000 men under Isa ibn Musa. The Abbasid General won back some of the rebels before he defeated and killed Muhammad at Medina. He then turned east to defeat Ibrahim at Bakhamra (6 December 762).

Medina, Saudi Arabia ❙ 1916–1919 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

With support from Britain and France, Sharif Hussein proclaimed the Arab Revolt against Turkey in the Hejaz. However, he was repulsed at the key Ottoman city of Medina, which held out under commander Fakhri en din Pasha against a loose three-year siege. After Turkey ended the war (October 1918), Fakhri refused to surrender until ordered by the Sultan himself (June 1916–10 January 1919).

Medina, Saudi Arabia ❙ 1925 ❙ Saudi-Hashemite Wars

Sultan Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Nejd secured Mecca at Taif (September 1924), then besieged the Hashemite Sharif Ali in Jeddah for a year, while his Ikhwan ally Faisal al-Dawish besieged Medina. Forced to surrender, the Holy City of Medina was occupied by Aziz's son Muhammad. Two weeks later Sharif Ali fled Jeddah and Aziz became the new King of Hejaz (5 December 1925).

Medina, Texas ❙ 1813 ❙ Gutiérrez-Magee Expedition

After seizing San Antonio in Spanish Texas with victory at Rosillo (29 March), Republican forces under José Álvarez Toledo marched out to prevent a junction between Royalist General Joaquin de Arredondo and Colonel Ignacio Elizondo. Near the Medina River, Toledo and his American Filibuster allies were routed with over 1,000 killed and they fled back to Louisiana (18 August 1813).

Medina del Rio Seco ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

An ill-advised decision to challenge Marshal Jean-Baptiste Bessières on the open plain of Old Castile saw Spanish Generals Gregorio de la Cuesta and Joachim Blake meet the outnumbered French north of Valladolid, at Medina del Rio Seco. The Spaniards were routed in a one-sided disaster and newly crowned King Joseph Bonaparte marched into Madrid (14 July 1808).

Mediolanum ❙ 268 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

While Emperor Gallienus fought the Goths in the east at the Nestus, his General Aureolus mutinied in Italy and Gallienus returned to Mediolanum (modern Milan), where the usurper was defeated and withdrew under siege. When Gallienus was murdered by his deputy Claudius, Aureolus surrendered. New Emperor Claudius II put him to death then returned to meet the Goths at Nish.

Medole ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Castiglione

Medway ❙ 43 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

When Emperor Claudius ordered the conquest of Britain, Aulus Plautius landed in Kent with 50,000 men and at the Medway between Aylesford and Rochester, defeated Togodumnus and Caratacus, sons of late King Cunobellin of the Catuvellauni (Togodumnus was killed). After the Romans seized Camulodunum (Colchester), Caratacus fled to Wales where he was defeated in 50 AD at Caer Caradoc.

Medway ❙ 1667 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

When peace attempts failed, Dutch Admiral Mihiel de Ruyter broke into the Medway and led a remarkable raid up the Thames almost to London and took Sheerness. After burning six warships at Chatham, the Dutch withdrew with the former flagship Royal Charles as a prize. With London recently ravaged by plague and the Great Fire, the raid convinced England to seek peace (20–23 June 1667).

Meeanee ❙ 1843 ❙ British Conquest of Sind

See Miani

Meeker Massacre ❙ 1879 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

See White River

Meerut ❙ 1399 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol Tamerlane concluded his devastating campaign in northern India and, with his plunder from the destruction of Delhi, marched northeast into the Himalayan foothills against the powerful fortress city of Meerut. Tamerlane's troops took the city by storm and massacred the garrison. The Mongols then deliberately destroyed Meerut before returning north to Samarkand.

Meerut ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

In a culmination to months of unrest among native troops in the Indian Army, troops at Meerut, northeast of Delhi, rose in mutiny after men were court-martialled for refusing to use greased cartridges. British officers and civilians were killed in confused fighting at Meerut and the mutineers marched on Delhi, triggering the bloody war which followed (10 May 1857).

Megalopolis ❙ 331 BC ❙ Macedonian Conquests

With Alexander the Great absent on campaign against Persia, King Agis III of Sparta raised revolution in Greece against Macedonian rule and besieged Megalopolis, on the Helisson on Arcadia. Attacked by Antipater—Alexander's Regent in Macedonia—Agis was defeated and killed. Revolt in Greece was effectively suppressed until after Alexander's death eight years later.

Megara ❙ 424 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

On a fresh two-pronged Athenian offensive into Boeotia, General Demosthenes advanced west from Athens against Megara and seized its nearby port of Nisaea. Before he could force Megara to surrender, a large army approached under the Spartan Brasidas and Demosthenes retired, leaving a garrison at Nisaea. Another Athenian force was repulsed to the northeast at Delium (August 424 BC).

Megiddo ❙ 1468 BC ❙ Egyptian-Syrian Wars

When Tuthmosis III of Egypt marched into Palestine to put down a revolt, he routed a Syrian-Palestinian force led by the King of Megiddo and Kadesh outside Megiddo, southeast of Haifa in modern Israel. The local force then withdrew into Megiddo, which fell after a seven-month siege. The battle is claimed to be the first for which there is a written record (trad date 1468 BC).

Megiddo ❙ 609 BC ❙ Egyptian Conquest of Judah

Marching into Judah to support the collapsing Assyrian Empire, Necho II of Egypt met King Josiah of Judah at Megiddo (Biblical Armageddon), southeast of Haifa in modern Israel. Josiah was defeated and killed and Necho seized Judah, then occupied Carchemish, where he was attacked and defeated by Babylon. Josiah's son Jehoiakim died in the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem in 597 BC.

Megiddo ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

General Sir Edmund Allenby rebuilt his army after the capture of Jerusalem, then launched his great offensive north through Megiddo. Attacking along a 65-mile front from Jaffa to the Jordan, he destroyed the Turkish army under General Liman von Sanders. Allenby's brilliant victories secured over 70,000 prisoners and opened the way to Damascus (19 September–30 October 1918).

Megray Hill ❙ 1639 ❙ 1st Bishops' War

When Covenanters under James Graham Earl of Montrose opposed King Charles I's attempt to impose a new prayer book on Scotland, James Gordon Viscount Aboyne and the incompetent Colonel William Burr attempted an offensive from Aberdeen. At nearby Megray Hill, the Royalists were heavily repulsed by Montrose. They lost again days later at the Bridge of Dee (15 June 1639).

Mehidpur ❙ 1817 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

Peshwa Baji Rao II of Poona and his ally Mulhar Rao Holkar of Indore renewed war against the British in central India and Holkar soon faced General Sir Thomas Hislop on the Sipra at Mehidpur. Hislop dispersed the Marathas with a frontal attack under heavy fire, inflicting heavy losses, and seized treasure and stores. Three weeks later the Marathas lost again at Rampura (21 December 1817).

Mehlsack ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See Queetz

Mehmandost ❙ 1729 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

Shah Tahmasp II resolved to recover Persia from its Afghan conquerors, capturing Meshed and Herat before the Afghan usurper Ashraf Shah led a large army against Persian General Nadir Kuli (later Nadir Shah). On the Mehmandost, east of Damghan in northeastern Persia, Ashraf suffered a massive defeat. He retired to Isfahan and soon lost again at Murchakhar (29 September 1729).

Mehran ❙ 1983 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Recovering from losses at Amara in February, Iran launched a large force further north against the border town of Mehran, southwest of Ilam. Despite shocking casualties in the face of fierce Iraqi fire, the Iranians secured the nearby strategic heights, then attacked in the north towards Haj Omran. Mehran was finally taken by a new Iranian offensive in October 1984 (31 July–10 August 1983).

Mehran ❙ 1986 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Determined to strike back after defeat in the south at Al Faw (14 February), about 25,000 Iraqi troops seized the lightly garrisoned border town of Mehran, 100 miles east of Baghdad. They claimed a symbolic victory though failed to consolidate the area. Iran later counter-attacked in force, inflicting costly Iraqi losses, to recapture the town and advance into Iraq (14–17 May & 20 June–3 July 1986).

Mehran ❙ 1988 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

After decisive victories in the south at Al Faw and Salamcheh, Iraqi forces on the central front, supported by anti-Khomeini Iranians, began a final offensive to retake the ruined border town of Mehran. The Iranians were rapidly and disastrously defeated and, with further losses to the south around Majnoon, Iran accepted a ceasefire to end the twentieth century's longest war (18–21 June 1988).

Meiktila ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

General Sir William Slim deceived the Japanese that he would cross the Irriwaddy north of Mandalay and attacked in the south towards the vital command centre at Meiktila, held by General Tomekichi Kasuya. When Meiktila fell (9 March), General Shihachi Katamura counter-attacked in force, but he was finally forced to withdraw after the fall of Mandalay (12 February–30 March 1945).

Mejicanos ❙ 1823 ❙ Central American National Wars

When El Salvador resisted annexation by Emperor Agustin Iturbide of Mexico, Spanish General Vicente Filísola invaded to defeat Salvadoran forces under Jose Manuel Arce at Mejicanos, just north of San Salvador. Filísola occupied the capital but had to withdraw after the fall of Iturbide (March 1823). Independent El Salvador joined the Central America Federation (3 February 1823).

Melanthius ❙ 559 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

When Zabergan of the Kutrigur Huns crossed the frozen Danube from Bulgaria to invade Macedonia and Thrace, threatening Constantinople itself, the great Byzantine General Belisarius was brought out of retirement. With a hastily assembled small force, he defeated the Bulgar horsemen and their Slav allies at Melanthius, west of the capital, forcing them to withdraw.

Meldorf ❙ 1500 ❙ Wars of the Kalmar Union

See Hemmingstedt

Melegnano ❙ 1515 ❙ War of the Holy League

See Marignano

Melegnano ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

French Marshal Achille d'Hilliers advancing east from victory at Magenta, soon sent General Achille Bazaine towards Melegnano (Marignano), southeast of Milan, where he attacked the Austrian rearguard under General Ludwig von Benedek. In a strategically pointless action, the French suffered costly casualties before Benedek withdrew behind the Mincio. Milan fell the same day (8 June 1859).

Melilla ❙ 1774–1775 ❙ Spanish-Moroccan Wars

The Spanish Moroccan enclave of Melilla had already withstood several sieges when Sultan Sidi Mohammed determined on a large-scale assault and sent 13,000 men against the town, held by Marshal Juan Sherlock. The Moors reportedly fired 9,000 shells during the siege, but eventually had to withdraw. Peace was concluded in early 1780 at Aranjuez (9 December 1774–6 March 1775).

Melilla ❙ 1893–1894 ❙ War of Melilla

When Rif tribesman in Morocco besieged the Spanish enclave of Melilla, killing General Juan García Margallo, General Arsenio Martínez

Campos despatched a large relief force. After naval shelling and a sharp action, the siege was lifted and the Sultan of Morocco paid a war indemnity. A more serious Rif War began with Spanish disaster in 1921 at Anual (29 September 1893–5 March 1894).

Melilla ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

At the start of the military rebellion against the Popular Front government, forces in Spanish Morocco under Colonels Juan Segui and Dario Gazapo seized the city of Melilla, where local commander General Manuel Romerales was shot. Tetuán and Ceuta then quickly fell, largely without fighting, though there was sharp resistance in Morocco that same night at Larache (17 July 1936).

Melitene ❙ 576 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

Three years after victory in Mesopotamia at Dara, Chosroes II of Sassanid Persia led a fresh invasion of Roman Armenia before withdrawing under pressure to Melitene in the northwest, where he was confronted by General Justinian. Facing encirclement on the Upper Euphrates at Melitene (modern Malatya), Chosroes and his army abandoned their baggage and fled across the river with heavy losses.

Melitene ❙ 1100 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Responding to an appeal from the Armenian Gabriel of Melitene, Crusader Prince Bohemund of Antioch took a small force of knights and infantry to combat Malik Ghazi, Danishmend Emir of Sebastea (Sivas). Near Melitene (modern Malatya on the Upper Euphrates), the Crusaders were ambushed and virtually destroyed. Bohemund was captured and held prisoner for three years.

Melitopol ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

After Poland took Kiev in April, new White commander Pyotr Wrangel began a bold offensive from the Crimea. General Iakov Slashev seized Melitopol and General Aleksandr Kutepov advanced even further north. When the Poles made peace, Red Commander Mikhail Frunze stormed into the Northern Taurida and in November, he drove the Whites back through Perekop (6–15 June 1920).

Melitopol ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

At the southern end of the Soviet offensive towards the Dnieper, General Fedor Tolbukhin's Fourth Ukrainian Front advanced west through Taganrog (30 August) and along the Sea of Azov to take the key city of Melitopol after heavy fighting. Tolbukhin then reached the Dnieper and joined the offensive towards Krivoy Rog before invading the Crimea at Perekop (14–23 October 1943).

Melloone ❙ 1826 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

General Sir Archibald Campbell advanced up the Irriwaddy from Rangoon in late 1824 and beat the Burmese at Danubyu and Watee-Goung. However, King Bagyipaw declined to stop fighting. When hostilities resumed, Campbell stormed Melloone (later Minhla), the last major fortress outside the ancient capital at Ava. Following further loss at Pagahm-mew the king made peace (19 January 1826).

Meloria ❙ 1241 ❙ Imperial-Papal Wars

A Genoese fleet carrying Prelates to Rome to help Pope Gregory IX resolve his dispute with Emperor Frederick II was attacked off northwest Italy, between Meloria and Montecristo, by Sicilian Admiral Ansaldo de Mari and Fredrick's illegitimate son, King Enzo of Sardinia. The English, French and Spanish Prelates were captured and the Papacy soon sued for peace (3 May 1241).

Meloria ❙ 1284 ❙ Genoese-Pisan War

The decisive battle between Pisa and Genoa saw a powerful fleet of 72 Pisan galleys under Mayor Alberto Morosini meet Genoese Admirals Oberta Doria and Benedetto Zaccaria off the island of Meloria, near Livorno (Leghorn). In a bitter clash, with Morosini captured, half the Pisan ships were sunk or captured and the rest were badly damaged, ending the maritime power of Pisa (6 August 1284).

Melrose ❙ 1526 ❙ Scottish Royalist War

Attempting to free 14-year-old James V of Scotland from virtual imprisonment by his stepfather Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, Borderer Chieftain Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch attacked the Regent at Melrose, on the Tweed southeast of Edinburgh, returning from an expedition on the border. Scott was heavily defeated and another attempt was soon defeated at Linlithgow Bridge (25 July 1526).

Melshtitsa ❙ 1443 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars (Long Campaign)

After invading Turkish Bulgaria, King Ladislas of Hungary and General Janos Hunyadi were turned back at Zlatitsa but two weeks later on Christmas Eve repulsed the pursuing Turks at Melshtitsa, near Sofia. Withdrawing across the Balkans in extreme winter conditions, the Christians defeated the Turks again at Kunovica in early January 1444 before finally reaching Hungary (24 December 1443).

Melun ❙ 1420 ❙ Hundred Years War

Charles VI of France recognised Henry V of England as his heir and together with Duke Philip of Burgundy they campaigned against the disinherited son—the Dauphin Charles VII. Having captured Sens and Montereau, the allies then besieged Melun, southeast of Paris, held for the Dauphin by Arnaud Guillaume Signeur de Barbazan, who was starved into submission (9 July–18 November 1420).

Membrillo ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Navas de Membrillo

Memel ❙ 1923 ❙ Lithuanian War of Independence

Lithuania had lost Vilna to Poland in 1920 and determined to regain the mainly German Baltic city and district of Memel (Lithuanian Klaipeda), which had been under French mandate since 1919. Lithuanian forces invaded Memel, forcing the French garrison to withdraw. The Allies reluctantly accepted Memel becoming an autonomous region within Lithuania (10–15 January 1923).

Memphis, Egypt ❙ 456–454 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

See Prosopitis

Memphis, Egypt ❙ 321 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

As war began between the successors of Alexander the Great, Perdiccas (accompanied by Alexander's widow Roxanne and her infant son) took a large army into Egypt against Ptolemy. Blocked on the Nile at Pelusium, Perdiccas marched south and attempted to cross near Memphis, where he was heavily repulsed, with many of his soldiers drowned. When his troops mutinied, he was killed by his officers.

Memphis, Tennessee ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Two months after capturing the Confederate fort on the Mississippi at Island Number Ten, Union naval forces led by Flag-Officer Charles H. Davis and Colonel Charles Ellet moved downstream to Memphis, Tennessee, where they destroyed seven out of eight Confederate gunboats under Captain James E. Montgomery. Memphis surrendered, opening the river to Vicksburg (6 June 1862).

Memphis, Tennessee ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Regrouping just weeks after defeat at Tupelo, Confederate General Nathan B. Forrest led a daring raid northwest from Oxford against Memphis, Tennessee, heavily occupied by Union General Cadwallader C. Washburn. Forrest's cavalry caused little damage, but withdrew with many prisoners and a large quantity of supplies, diverting Union troops from northern Mississippi (21 August 1864).

Menai Strait ❙ 1282 ❙ English Conquest of Wales

See Bangor

Menbij ❙ 1108 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Amid confused Muslim and Crusader alliances on the Upper Euphrates, Baldwin of le Bourg and Joscelin of Edessa allied themselves with Jawali Saqawa, Turkish Governor of Mosul, against the Muslim Ridwan of Aleppo and the Crusader Tancred of Antioch. At Menbij, northeast of Aleppo, Baldwin and Joscelin were routed but later regained the city of Edessa (October 1108).

Mendaza ❙ 1834 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Pursued through Navarre by the Spanish Liberal army, Carlist commander Tomás Zumalacárregui with 10,000 men unwisely accepted open battle against 14,000 troops of General Luis Fernández de Córdova and Colonel Marcelino Oráa. The Carlists were forced to withdraw after a bloody five-hour action at Mendaza, then made a stand at nearby Arquijas (12 December 1834).

Mendigorría ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

New Carlist commander Vicente González Moreno recovered from a costly repulse at Bilbao (1 July) and resolved to meet the Liberals in pitched battle. At Mendigorría, southeast of Estella, Liberal General Luis Fernández de Córdova lost perhaps 1,000 casualties in bloody fighting. However, Moreno lost 2,000 and this was followed a year later by disastrous Carlist defeat at Luchana (16 July 1835).

Mengibar ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In a prelude to Baylen, Spanish General Francisco Castanos began his offensive on the Guadalquivir by sending General Teodoro Reding against part of General Pierre Dupont de L'Etang's army at Mengibar. Overcoming a stubborn French defence under General Dominique Vedel, Reding won a valuable victory and crossed the river towards Baylen (14–16 July 1808).

Mengshan ❙ 1851 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Yung'an

Menin ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Days after victory over Frederick Augustus Duke of York at Hondschoote, French commander General Jean Nicolas Houchard took his poorly trained recruits against the Dutch army of William V Prince of Orange at Menin, seven miles west of Courtrai. Houchard defeated the Dutch force, but lost heavy casualties in subsequent manoeuvring and was guillotined for his failure (13 September 1793).

Menin Road ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Recovering from terrible losses around Pilkem Ridge and Langemark, British forces resumed the Third Battle of Ypres with General Sir Herbert Plumer's Second Army attacking east along the Menin Road. Advancing after heavy bombardment, he seized the Menin Road Ridge and followed up with fresh attacks northeast towards Polygon Wood and Broodseinde (20–25 September 1917).

Mentana ❙ 1867 ❙ Garibaldi's Second March on Rome

Giuseppe Garibaldi took advantage of war between Italy and Austria to renew his own invasion in support of insurgency in Rome. After defeating Papal troops at Monterotondo, his advance towards Rome was blocked a week after at Mentana, just 12 miles from the capital. French reinforcements had arrived just in time and Garibaldi's force was routed (3 November 1867).

Mequelle ❙ 1895–1896 ❙ 1st Italo-Ethiopian War

See Makale

Mequinenza ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Lérida

Mereton ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain
See Merton

Mergentheim ❙ 1645 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Encouraged by a decisive Bavarian defeat at Jankau in March, Marshal Henri de Turenne led a Franco-Weimar army into Bavaria. At the village of Herbsthausen, near Bad Mergentheim south of Würzburg, he was surprised by Imperial Baron Franz von Mercy and General Johann von Werth and withdrew with heavy losses. In August he invaded Bavaria again and won at Nördlingen (5 May 1645).

Merida ❙ 428 ❙ Vandal-Suevic War

As Vandal King Gaiseric prepared to invade North Africa after capturing southern Spain, he was attacked by the Suevi, the Germanic tribe who invaded Galicia and were spreading into Lusitania. At Merida, their King Hermigarius suffered a decisive defeat and drowned while fleeing in the nearby Guadiana. Gaiseric then crossed into Africa and succeeded in 431 at Hippo Regius.

Merida ❙ 713 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain

When the brilliant Muslim General Musa ibn Nusair took command from Tarik ibn Ziyad, he continued the advance into Visigothic Spain and captured Seville before meeting strong resistance at Merida on the Guadiana River in western Spain. After a lengthy siege, with heavy losses on both sides, the city was starved into surrender. In September Musa won decisively at Segoyuela (30 June 713).

Merida ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

When the Nationalist Army of Africa crossed from Morocco to Seville, advance units under Colonel Carlos Asenio dashed north towards Merida. They were halted at nearby Almendralejo until Colonel Juan Yagüe arrived and took Merida against heavy odds. Yagüe then led the main force north against Badajoz and Colonel Heli Tella repulsed a heavy counter-attack (11 August 1936).

Meridian ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union General William T. Sherman marching east from Vicksburg, pursued the retreating forces of General Leonidas Polk, who was forced to abandon the key transport junction at Meridian, Mississippi. Sherman destroyed railroads and much of the town, but did not wait to link up with forces advancing from the north through Okolona and retired to Vicksburg (14–20 February 1864).

Mersa Brega ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Just days after withdrawing from Sidi Rezegh to El Agheila, German commander Erwin Rommel launched a second offensive into western Cyrenaica. The under-strength British were defeated at Mersa Brega and Saunnu, then lost Benghazi with its stores of fuel. General Neil Ritchie ceded most of his gains and was driven back to the lines at Gazala (21 January–4 February 1942).

Mersah Matruh ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

After driving the British out of Libya at Gazala and taking Tobruk, newly created Field Marshal Erwin Rommel raced along the coast into Egypt and slammed into an attempted delaying action at Mersah Matruh. General William Gott's poorly organised defence was overwhelmed and the British fell back on El Alamein after losing 6,000 men and 40 tanks captured (26–29 June 1942).

Merseburg ❙ 933 ❙ Magyar Invasion of Germany
See Riade

Merseburg ❙ 1080 ❙ German Civil Wars

Amid civil war against Henry IV, Duke Rudolf of Swabia was elected rival King and joined nobles, including Berthold of Zahringen, in a bitter and costly campaign. At Merseburg, west of Leipzig, Rudolf was defeated and killed and the Emperor gave Swabia to his son-in-law, Frederick of Hohenstaufen. This in turn triggered war against Rudolf's son, Berthold of Rheinfelden.

Mers el Kebir ❙ 1505 ❙ Spanish Colonial Wars in North Africa

After King Ferdinand V completed the Reconquest of Spain at Granada (1492), Cardinal Francisco Jimenes de Cisneros equipped a crusade against Muslim Mers el Kebir, in northwest Algeria on the Gulf of Oran. The city was taken by storm and was held by Spain until 1792. In 1509 the Cardinal personally led a larger expedition against the great port of Oran (23 October 1505).

Mers el Kebir ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

In a controversial action to prevent Germany securing French warships, British Admiral James Somerville led a large force to Mers el Kebir, near Oran in Algeria, where Admiral Marcel Gensoul refused to yield his ships. A brief bombardment then saw three battleships lost and 1,297 French sailors killed. A fourth battleship escaped to Toulon, where the fleet was later scuttled (3 July 1940).

Mersivan ❙ 1101 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

An attempt to rescue Bohemund of Antioch, captured at Melitene (1100), saw a mixed French-German-Lombard army march east under Raymond of Toulouse, Stephen of Blois and Conrad, Constable of Germany. Reaching Mersivan, east of the Halys in northeast Anatolia, the so-called "Lombard Crusade" was destroyed by Malik Ghazi, Danishmend Turkish Emir of Sebastea (July 1101).

Merta ❙ 1790 ❙ Mughal-Maratha War of Ismail Beg

Mahadji Sindhia beat Ismail Beg's Mughals at Patan (20 June) and sent General Benoit de Boigne to besiege Ajmer in central Rajasthan, then attacked a large Rajput force under Bijai Singh of Jodhpur northeast at Merta. In a hard-fought battle, Rajput cavalry drove the Marathas from the field, but they were then destroyed by artillery fire. Bijai Singh soon made peace (10 September 1790).

Merton ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

Within weeks of defeat at Ashdown, Danish Vikings struck back at the West Saxon army at Basing. With reinforcements from the Baltic they then attacked again further west at Merton (Maeredun), near the Savernake Forest in Wiltshire. The Saxons were disastrously defeated, with King Aethelred fatally wounded. His brother Alfred soon lost again at Wilton (April 871).

Merv ❙ 999 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

When the Samanid Amir Abdul Harith Mansur of Bokhara was deposed and blinded, Mahmud of Ghazni marched north and forced the nobles Faiq and Begtuzun to give him Herat and Balkh. Mahmud then attacked and defeated the rebels and their nominee Amir Abdul Malik at Merv (modern Mary in Turkmenistan). The usurper fled and Mahmud seized the Khorasan (16 May 999).

Merv ❙ 1221 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

Genghis Khan attacked the Khwarezmian Empire (broadly Afghanistan and most of Iran), where he destroyed the capital Samarkand (1220) then sent his youngest son Tolui against the great city of Merv (modern Mary). When the inhabitants surrendered in return for mercy, the Mongols massacred them and destroyed Merv. Tolui took Balkh and in April destroyed Nishapur (25 February 1221).

Merv ❙ 1510 ❙ Persian-Uzbek Wars

Marching north to the Khorasan, Shah Ismail Safawi of Persia met a large army under Uzbek conqueror Muhammad Shaybani Khan, who attacked near Merv (modern Mary, Turkmenistan) without waiting for reinforcements. Shaybani was decisively defeated and killed. His Mongol mercenaries plundered the defeated Uzbeks as they withdrew into Transoxonia (2 December 1510).

Merxem ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

With the European allies crumbling before the French east of Paris, British General Sir Thomas Graham led a dawn attack on the village of Merxem (modern Merksem) just outside Antwerp. General Jean-Jacques Ambert initially repulsed the attack, but with Prussian aid Graham penetrated Merxem under cover of a snowstorm and the French withdrew to Antwerp (2 February 1814).

Mesa ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

See San Gabriel, California

Meshed ❙ 1726 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

In the campaign to recover Persia from its Afghan conquerors, Shah Tahmasp II and his General Nadir Kuli (later Nadir Shah) besieged Meshed (modern Mashad) held by the independent Afghan chief Malik Mahmud. The city was eventually betrayed by Malik Mahmud's commander Pir Mohammad, whose leader was captured and subsequently killed (29 September–11 December 1726).

Meshed ❙ 1754 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

Afghan ruler Ahmad Shah Durrani advanced into northeast Persia, where he besieged Meshed (modern Mashad), which was held by the independent chieftain Sharokh Shah Afshar. Sharokh was starved into surrender after a long siege, though he was then reinstated to rule the Khorasan as an Afghan vassal. Ahmad Shah was defeated a year later near Sabzavar (July–November 1754).

Meshik ❙ 244 ❙ Roman-Persian Wars

See Misiche

Mesolóngion ❙ 1822–1823 ❙ Greek War of Independence

See Missolonghi

Messana ❙ 264 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

When Carthage supported Mamertine mercenaries in Messana (modern Messina) against Hiero of Syracuse, they secured the city but were later driven out by Roman Consul Appius Claudius. The Carthaginians then joined Hiero to besiege Messana. However, Hiero was defeated and driven back to Syracuse. Outside Messana the Carthaginians were defeated and subsequently lost at Acragas.

Messana ❙ 48 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

With Julius Caesar and Pompey preparing for the showdown at Pharsalus, Pompeian Admiral Gaius Cassius Longinus surprised Caesar's galleys under Marcus Pomponius at Messana (modern Messina, Sicily). Attacked by fireships, Caesar's entire fleet of 35 ships was burned, though the city itself was protected by a strong Legion. Another attack by Cassius that year was repulsed at Vibo.

Messifré ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

See Museifré

Messina ❙ 843 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

As Muslim forces slowly conquered Byzantine Sicily, securing the city of Palermo in 831, the Arab General al Fadl ibn Djafar, with aid from Christian Naples, laid siege by land and sea to Messina in the northeast. Feigning a withdrawal on land, he launched a massive diversionary assault by sea then rushed the landward walls. The city capitulated and the next great objective was Castrogiovanni.

Messina ❙ 1061 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

At the start of the 30-year Norman conquest of Muslim Sicily, Roger d'Hauteville, in support of his brother Duke Robert Guiscard, landed with 2,000 foot-soldiers and knights to attack Messina in the northeast. Despite initial repulse in February, the city was captured at the second attempt. In 1063 Roger marched inland to meet the Muslims in the mountains at Cerami (May 1061).

Messina ❙ 1283 ❙ War of the Sicilian Vespers

When the uprising of the Sicilian Vespers in 1282 overthrew Charles I of Anjou, the newly established King Pedro III of Aragon fought a lengthy war to secure Sicily. Aragonese and Catalan ships under Admiral Roger di Loria defeated the Angevin fleet in a great naval battle off Messina. However, the French navy recovered for the decisive clash the following year off Naples (July 1283).

Messina ❙ 1676 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

With Sicily in rebellion against Spanish rule, Louis XIV of France sent troops to help seize and garrison Messina. After a Dutch-Spanish naval attack was driven off near Stromboli, French Marshal Louis Victor de Vivonne defeated the Spanish army on land near Messina. Further Spanish defeats at sea later that year off Augusta, Sicily and Palermo secured the island for France (25 March 1676).

Messina ❙ 1719 ❙ War of the Quadruple Alliance

Determined to regain losses from the War of the Spanish Succession, Spain's Jean de Bette Marquis de Lede reoccupied Sicily and besieged the citadel at Messina, where he was attacked by Austrian General Franz Wetzel, with English Admiral Sir George Byng (fresh from Cape Passaro). Despite heavy Austrian losses, the city capitulated and Austria gained Sicily (July–7 October 1719).

Messina ❙ 1860–1861 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Giuseppe Garibaldi beat Neapolitan troops in northeastern Sicily at Milazzo (20 July) then pursued the survivors to nearby Messina, which immediately opened its gates. But Messina's citadel stubbornly held out long after Francis II of Naples abdicated following defeat at Gaeta. The garrison finally surrendered after bombardment by General Enrico Cialdini (25 July 1860–12 March 1861).

Messina ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

The Allies broke through the Etna Line, from Troina to Catania, and Axis commanders Alfredo Guzzoni and Hans Hube fell back to northeast Sicily. While American General George Patton's self-defined "race" beat Sir Bernard Montgomery to Messina, 100,000 Axis troops and 10,000 vehicles escaped to the mainland, where they helped resist the advance on Salerno (16 August 1943).

Messines ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As British forces in Flanders attacked through La Bassée and Armentières, just to the north General Edmund Allenby's Cavalry Corps led an advance through Messines towards Comines on the Lys. The attack was blunted by a massive counter-offensive, which retook Messines. The Germans then tried to drive a wedge south of the salient at Ypres (12 October–2 November 1914).

Messines ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

British commander Sir Herbert Plumer was determined to seize the strategic Messines Ridge and ordered a prolonged bombardment, followed by detonation of 19 massive mines. General Friedrich von Arnim was driven off with very heavy losses and British and French troops exploited the break-through to prepare the way for the planned July offensive further north at Ypres (7–14 June 1917).

Metaurus ❙ 207 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

When the Carthaginian Hasdrubal invaded Italy to support his brother Hannibal, Gaius Claudius Nero checked Hannibal at Grumentum, then left a holding force and marched north to join Marcus Livinius Salinator against Hasdrubal at the Metaurus River. The fresh invaders were utterly destroyed and Nero returned south to catapult Hasdrubal's severed head into his brother's camp.

Metaurus ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars
See Fano

Metemma ❙ 1889 ❙ Sudanese-Ethiopian War
See Gallabat

Methone ❙ 431 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War
Shortly after the outbreak of war between Athens and Sparta, a large Athenian fleet was sent to ravage the western Peloponnesian coastline. At the small town of Methone (Modon), Brasidas inspired his outnumbered garrison to such a defence that the invaders were driven back to their ships. Brasidas was honoured as a hero and became one of Sparta's greatest generals (July 431 BC).

Methone ❙ 355–354 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War
A year after capturing the colony of Potidaea, Philip II of Macedon attacked Methone, the last Athenian stronghold on the Thermaic Gulf. After a long and bitter siege (the King lost his right eye to an arrow) the citizens were eventually forced to surrender, reputedly allowed to leave with just a single garment. The fall of Methone opened the way for Philip to invade Thessaly two years later at Pagasae.

Methone ❙ 31 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate
As he prepared to attack his rival Mark Antony at Actium, Octavian sent Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa and half the fleet against Methone (Modon) in southwestern Greece, held by Bogud of Mauretania, who had been driven out by his brother Bocchus, an ally of Octavian. The town was taken by storm and Bogud executed, providing Octavian an important naval base on Antony's flank.

Methven ❙ 1306 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce
Robert the Bruce Earl of Carrick had himself crowned King of Scotland then took a force towards Perth. Surprised just to the west at Methven by an English army under Aymer de Valence Earl of Pembroke, the Scots were routed and scattered. Bruce was driven into hiding until he raised a fresh army in 1307 and met Pembroke again at Glentrool and Loudon Hill (19 June 1306).

Metsovo ❙ 1947 ❙ Greek Civil War
Three months after their costly repulse at Grevena, Communist forces (now equipped with Yugoslav artillery) continued their offensive in northwest Greece and attacked further south at Metsovo. The insurgents failed to secure the heights before assaulting the town and were eventually driven off. However, it is claimed by some as the first large-scale open battle of the war (18–25 October 1947).

Metulum ❙ 34 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate
On campaign in the Balkans, Octavian progressively subdued the warlike Iapudae, before besieging their capital at Metulum (probably modern Metlika) on the Kupa in Slovenia, southwest of Zagreb. In a ferocious assault, supported by Marcus Agrippa, Octavian took the town by storm, though he was badly wounded. Metulum was razed and later that year Octavian marched east against Siscia.

Metz ❙ 1552 ❙ 5th Habsburg-Valois War
Henry II of France invaded Lorraine where he seized Metz, Toul and Verdun, then faced a major counter-offensive by Emperor Charles V of Spain. Investing Metz with over 100,000 men, Charles inflicted heavy damage. However, the defence under Francis Duke of Guise held firm and, after enduring massive casualties, the Emperor lifted the siege (19 October–26 December 1552).

Metz ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
Driven east from Mars-la-Tour and Gravelotte, French Marshal Achille Bazaine meekly led about 180,000 men into siege at Metz on the Moselle. After a costly sortie towards Noiseville and the French disaster at Sedan (1 September), Bazaine disgracefully surrendered his entire army, freeing Prince Friedrich Karl's Prussians to reinforce the siege of Paris (19 August–27 October 1870).

Metz ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Noyon-Montdidier

Metz ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Soon after the fall of Nancy in Lorraine, American General Walton Walker attacked the fortified city of Metz. Following costly failure at nearby Fort Driant, heavy losses and lack of supplies halted the assault until a new attack in shocking weather later surprised and captured Metz. American commander George Patton then turned north to help in the Ardennes (27 September–21 November 1944).

Meuse ❙ 900 ❙ German Imperial Wars

In order to defend against Vikings and the rival rulers of Burgundy, German King Arnulf established his illegitimate son Zventibold on the throne of Lorraine. However, the arrogant young ruler quickly alienated the people, who rebelled against him. Zventibold was defeated and killed in battle at the River Meuse and Arnulf was forced into a more lenient policy in Lorraine (13 August 900).

Meuse-Argonne ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

American commander John Pershing and French General Henri Gourard eliminated the German salient south of Verdun at St Mihiel and days later attacked north of Verdun through the Argonne to the Meuse. General Max von Gallwitz and Prince Friedrich Wilhelm were defeated in heavy fighting and the Allies took Sedan before Armistice ended the war (26 September–11 November 1918).

Mewe ❙ 1626 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

While Sweden besieged Danzig, Sigismund III of Poland advanced to besiege Mewe (modern Gniew) on the Vistula, 35 miles to the southeast. Gustavus Adolphus was repulsed from an early probing expedition but succeeded in a second attack a week later. Sigismund was forced to withdraw, though Gustavus Adolphus soon abandoned Mewe for winter quarters (12 & 21 September 1626).

Mexico City ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

See Chapultepec

Mexico City ❙ 1867 ❙ Mexican-French War

As Liberal forces regained Mexico after French withdrawal, General Porfirio Diaz captured Puebla then besieged Mexico City, held by General Leonardo Márquez and an Austrian-Hungarian garrison under Count Carlos Khevenhuller. The city eventually surrendered (the day after Emperor Maximilian was shot at Querétaro) and the Republic was re-established (13 April–20 June 1867).

Mexico City ❙ 1913 ❙ Mexican Revolution

In a bloody coup against Mexican President Francisco Madero, General Félix Diaz (nephew of the former dictator) fought Federal troops in Mexico City led by General Victoriano Huerta. About 500 soldiers and civilians were killed in ten days of shelling (La Decena Trágica) before Huerta went over to the rebels. Madero was arrested and killed and Huerta became President (9–19 February 1913).

Meza de Ibor ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When French Marshal Claude Victor turned south from victory at Uclés, Spanish General Gregorio Cuesta ordered Lorenzo Duke del Parque to hold the steep ravine at Meza de Ibor, between Almaraz and Arzobispo. Although General Jean Francois Leval suffered heavy losses storming the heights, La Parque dumped his guns in the ravine and withdrew towards Deleytosa (17 March 1809).

Mezo Keresztes ❙ 1596 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Keresztes

Mhlatuze ❙ 1819 ❙ Rise of Shaka Zulu

The young Zulu King Shaka was flushed with victory at Gqokli (April 1818) and led a fresh offensive against his rival Zwide of the Ndwandwe. Zwide was routed in a decisive, bloody action on the Mhlatuze, northwest of Bulawayo. Shaka then destroyed the Ndwandwe capital at Emgazeni, slaughtering the population and consolidating his dominance over the Zulu nation.

Miahuatlán ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

With the war turning in his favour, Republican commander General Porfirio Diaz marched against Miahuatlán, held by 3,000 Mexican and French Imperialists under General Carlos Oroñoz. When Oroñoz was forced to withdraw after bloody fighting and heavy losses on both sides, abandoning his guns and baggage, Diaz advanced south against the key city of Oaxaca (3 October 1866).

Miajadas ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Gregorio Cuesta was falling back before the French advance in the southwest when his rearguard under Colonel Juan Henestrosa ambushed General Antoine Lasalle at Miajadas, north of Don Benito. The French vanguard of Colonel Jacques-Gervais Subervie was driven off with costly losses. Cuesta withdrew to Medellin, where he was lost heavily a week later (21 March 1809).

Miami ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Lochrey's Defeat

Miani ❙ 1843 ❙ British Conquest of Sind

In an opportunistic war against the Baluchi Amirs of Sind (in Pakistan), British General Sir Charles Napier advanced to relieve the besieged Residency at Hyderabad and met a massive Baluchi force under Sher Muhammad six miles north at the Fulailee River, near Miani. The elderly British General personally led a brilliant victory then continued towards Hyderabad, Pakistan (17 February 1843).

Micanopy ❙ 1840 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

See Bridgewater, Florida

Michelberg Heights ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

See Haslach

Michilimackinac ❙ 1763 ❙ Pontiac's War

Encouraged by Pontiac's ongoing siege of Detroit, Ojibwa Chief Minweweh (Minavavana) surprised Fort Michilimackinac (modern Mackinaw) between Lakes Huron and Michigan. About 20 of the British garrison were killed, including Lieutenant John Jamet, and the fort was destroyed. Captain George Etherington and 12 others taken prisoner were eventually released (2 June 1763).

Michilimackinac ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

American Colonel George Croghan attempting to open the route from Lake Huron into Lake Michigan took five ships and 700 men against the fortress of Michilimackinac on Mackinac Island, seized by the British in July 1812. Croghan was heavily repulsed by Captain Robert McDouall and two armed schooners left to blockade the island were subsequently captured (26 July–4 August 1814).

Michmash ❙ 1013 BC ❙ Philistine-Israel Wars

As Philistines and Israelites fought to secure central Israel, Saul of Judah advanced northeast of Jerusalem against a large Philistine force in a powerful position near Geba at Michmash (modern Mukmas). A brutal frontal attack by Saul and his son Jonathan secured a brilliant victory and the Philistines fled northwest to Bethel. They were later avenged at Mount Gilboa (trad date 1013 BC).

Middelburg, Netherlands ❙ 1572–1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

In the face of early Dutch success in the war against Spain in the Netherlands, the Spanish garrison of Middelburg on Walcheren Island held out for 15 months under the veteran

Christoforo de Mondragón. Eventually, a Spanish relief fleet sent from Bergen-op-Zoom was destroyed off Walcheren and Middleburg surrendered less than a month later (November 1572–18 February 1574).

Middleburg, Virginia ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate commander Robert E. Lee advanced north towards Gettysburg and part of his cavalry screen led by General James "Jeb" Stuart came under attack near Middleburg, southwest of Leesburg, Virginia, by Union General David M. Gregg. While Stuart was eventually forced back, he managed to hold the key passes and soon repulsed another attack at Upperville (17–19 June 1863).

Middle Creek ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Despite a check in eastern Kentucky at Ivy Mountain (November 1861), a fresh Confederate advance by General Humphrey Marshall was met at Middle Creek, north of Prestonburg, by Union Colonel James Garfield. Marshall withdrew south after an indecisive engagement. A much larger action a week later at Mill Springs drove the Confederates back to Virginia (10 January 1862).

Middleton ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Cedar Creek

Midea ❙ 368 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

With Sparta at war against her neighbours, led by Thebes, Persia intervened and provided Sparta with Spanish and Syracusan mercenaries. At the pass of Midea in Laconia, Archidamus, son of King Agesilaus of Sparta, ambushed and routed a force from Argos, Arcadia and Messenia. The Spartans claimed to have suffered no casualties and called it the "Tearless Battle."

Midway ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While a diversionary force attacked the Aleutians, Japanese Admiral Isoruku Yamamato led a massive armada against Midway, where American Admiral Ray Spruance secured a great, decisive victory, sinking six aircraft carriers for one American carrier lost. With the previous check in the Coral Sea, Japanese expansion was halted. The Allies soon struck back at Guadalcanal (4–6 June 1942).

Mier ❙ 1842 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

In reponse to Mexican raids on San Antonio, Texan volunteers captured Laredo then William S. Fisher marched down the Rio Grande and occupied Mier. Attacked by General Pedro de Ampudia, 176 Texans surrendered after heavy fighting. Three months later, 17 were selected by lottery for execution—the Black Bean Incident. The survivors were eventually released (25 December 1842).

Mikata ga hara ❙ 1572 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Advancing to attack Oda Nobunaga in Kyoto, Takeda Shingen of Kai was blocked southeast of Nagoya at Hamamatsu Castle, held for Nobunaga by Tokugawa Ieyasu. At nearby Mikata ga hara, Ieyasu was badly defeated, though when he fell back to Hamamatsu the Takeda withdrew. Shingen was killed in a minor siege the next year and his clan was routed in 1575 at Nagashino (November 1572).

Milan ❙ 268 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

See Mediolanum

Milan ❙ 1158 ❙ Frederick's 2nd Expedition to Italy

Emperor Frederick Barbarossa on campaign in northern Italy, defeated the Milanese at Cassano and soon laid siege to Milan. Lacking sufficient equipment to storm such a large city, he ravaged the countryside to destroy food and forced a surrender in little over a month. His unexpectedly lenient terms required acknowledgement of his Imperial authority (August–September 1158).

Milan ❙ 1161–1162 ❙ Frederick's 3rd Expedition to Italy

Having surrendered to Emperor Frederick Barbarossa in 1158, Milan began to reassert its independence. Following over a year of renewed warfare, Milan was once more besieged by the German army and its Italian allies and was again starved into surrender after nine months. This time Frederick was less lenient and much of the city was razed to the ground (June 1161–6 March 1162).

Milan ❙ 1449–1450 ❙ Milanese War of Succession

Amid confusion following the death of Filippo Visconti Duke of Milan, his son-in-law Francesco Sforza beat Venice at Caravaggio (1448) and his allies held Borgomanero against Savoy. When Milan itself made a separate peace with Venice, Sforza turned on the city and placed it under siege. The starving city finally capitulated and he became Duke of Milan (1449–25 February 1450).

Milazzo ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

After invading Sicily for victory at Calatafimi and Palermo, Giuseppe Garibaldi advanced against Neapolitan Colonel Ferdinando del Bosco at Milazzo, west of Messina. Although Garibaldi suffered greater losses, the demoralised Neapolitians were driven out and fell back on Messina. Garibaldi later crossed to the mainland and marched through Naples to the Volturno (20 July 1860).

Miletopolis ❙ 85 BC ❙ 1st Mithridatic War

While Roman General Lucius Sulla repulsed a Pontic invasion of Greece at Orchomenus, his rival Flavius Fimbria in Asia Minor attacked Mithridates the younger, son of the King. On the Rhyndacus, near Miletopolis (modern Karacabey, Turkey) the Pontic army was routed, with up to 6,000 killed. Following a subsequent naval defeat off Tenedos, King Mithridates VI sued for peace.

Miletus ❙ 494 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

See Lade

Miletus ❙ 412 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Spartan General Chalcideus and the Athenian Alcibiades captured Chios, then seized the powerful Athenian ally Miletus, on the Greek coast of Asia Minor, and faced a fresh Athenian fleet under Phrynicus. A Spartan and local army was defeated, but before Phrynicus could assault the walled city, Spartan reinforcements approached and the outnumbered Athenian ships withdrew to Samos.

Miletus ❙ 334 BC ❙ Conquests of Alexander the Great

Crossing the Dardanelles into Asia Minor, Alexander the Great advanced through Granicus to besiege Miletus, on the Latmian Gulf. Pledging to defeat Persia on land (he later disbanded his navy), Alexander declined a battle at sea with the blockading Persian fleet and instead took Miletus by assault. The Persian fleet then withdrew south to Halicarnassus, which soon came under siege.

Miletus ❙ 201 BC ❙ 2nd Macedonian War

See Lade

Milingo ❙ 1827 ❙ Central American National Wars

Two months after repulsing Salvadoran Liberals in Guatemala at Arrazola, President Manuel José Arce of the Central American Federation invaded El Salvador. However, Arce withdrew after his decisive defeat outside the capital San Salvador at Milingo. Within two years, Liberal forces routed the Federal army in El Salvador at Gualcho and overthrew Arce at Guatemala City (18 May 1827).

Milk River ❙ 1879 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

See Red Canyon

Mill Creek ❙ 1839 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

The so-called "Córdova Rebellion" saw Mexican Loyalists and Indians under Captain Vicente Córdova attack settlers in eastern Texas. Returning to Mexico they were intercepted on Mill Creek, north of modern Austin near Seguin, by Colorado Volunteeers under Colonel Ed Burleson. Córdova lost 25 killed—about a third of his force—and he died in September at the Salado (29 March 1839).

Millesimo ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

The day after Austrian defeat at Montenotte, west of Genoa, French General Pierre Augereau turned west against the Piedmontese. Despite stubborn resistance by General Giovanni Provera at nearby Cosseria, Austrian Baron Michael Colli was cut off at nearby Millesimo from the main Austrian force and driven back. He was finally defeated a week later at Mondovi (13–14 April 1796).

Milliken's Bend ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

In support of the Union siege of Vicksburg on the Mississippi, Union Colonel Hermann Lieb attempted a reconnaisance from further upstream towards Richmond, Louisiana. Driven back to the river at Milliken's Bend by Confederate General Henry E. McCulloch, Lieb suffered heavy losses before two Union gunboats arrived in support and the Confederates were forced to withdraw (7 June 1863).

Mill Springs ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Days after a Confederate advance in eastern Kentucky was checked at Middle Creek, a larger action occurred at Mill Springs, near Somerset, where Confederate General George B. Crittenden met General George H. Thomas. Crittenden was routed in heavy fighting and fled across the Cumberland, securing eastern Kentucky. Fresh fighting soon started further west at Fort Henry (19 January 1862).

Milne Bay ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As Japanese forces in Papua fought across the Kokoda Trail towards Port Moresby, about 2,400 others landed further east at Milne Bay, defended by Australian General Cyril Clowes. Very heavy fighting saw costly losses on both sides before the invaders were forced to withdraw, yielding the claimed first Allied victory on land against the Japanese (25 August–9 September 1942).

Milvian Bridge ❙ 312 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

When Constantine invaded Italy from Gaul, he defeated his rival Maxentius at Turin and Verona, then met him in final battle that year at the Milvian Bridge, outside Rome. With very heavy casualties in both armies, Maxentius tried to withdraw across the Tiber and was among many drowned when the bridge collapsed. Constantine went on to seize the Roman Capital (27 October 312).

Mimikawa ❙ 1578 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

While the Shimazu of Satsuma expanded their territory in southern Kyushu, rival Otomo Sorin of Bungo in the northeast sent Tawara Chikakata to besiege Takajo in Hyuga. The Shimazu brothers Yoshihiro and Ieshira led a large relief force and at the nearby Mimikawa, the Otomo army was routed. The Shimazu occupied Hyuga and marched west in 1581 to attack Minamata (10 December 1578).

Minamata ❙ 1581 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Rapidly expanding their territory in Kyushu, the Shimazu of Satsuma secured Hyuga in the east with victory at the Mimikawa (1578) then later attacked Higo in the west, laying siege to Minamata. The massive Shimazu army forced the garrison to surrender, securing the whole of southern Kyushu for the Shimazu, who subsequently conquered the northwest in 1584 at Okita Nawate (17 September 1581).

Minarica ❙ 1835 ❙ Ecuadorian Civil Wars

As General José Félix Valdivieso extended his faction's influence south from Quito, José Vicente Rocafuerte in Guayaquil sent a small army under General Juan José Flores, who met and crushed the Quito force at Minarica, near Ambato. Valdivieso fled to Colombia and Flores governed in Quito for several months before Rocafuerte assumed the Presidency of the Republic (20 January 1835).

Minatogawa ❙ 1336 ❙ Ashikaga Rebellion

Ashikaga Takauji secured victory in Kyushu at Tatarahama in April, then returned east along the Inland Sea to meet Japan's Imperial army at the Minatogawa, near Kobe, led by Nitta Yoshisada and the great Kusunoki Masashige. The Imperial troops were routed in a famous action. The badly wounded Kusunoki committed seppuku and Takauji captured Kyoto, establishing a rival Emperor (5 July 1336).

Mincio ❙ 197 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

Three years after the Gauls were defeated at Cremona, Consul Gaius Cornelius Cethegus launched a fresh offensive in northern Italy and met the Insubres on the Mincio. When their Cenomani allies changed sides, the Insubres were routed, with perhaps 35,000 killed and 5,000 captured, including Carthaginian General Hamilcar. The survivors were beaten again the following year at Lake Como.

Mincio ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General Guillaume Brune launched an offensive against Austria in northern Italy just weeks after the disastrous Austrian defeat in Bavaria at Hohenlinden. In a poorly managed action to force passage of the Mincio, Brune succeeded only through the timely arrival of General Louis Suchet. However, this further defeat helped convince Austria to sue for peace (25–27 December 1800).

Mincio ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Borghetto

Mindanao ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While American forces struggled to secure Luzon, General Robert Eichelberger attacked the southern Philippines, where many islands fell quickly. However, there was fierce resistance on Mindanao led by General Sosaku Suzuki. The southern campaign cost about 2,500 Americans killed and 50,000 Japanese dead. Last pockets on Mindanao held out to the end of the war (17 April–15 July 1945).

Mindelheim ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As General Jean Victor Moreau pursued Archduke Charles Louis of Austria across southern Germany, the French right wing under General Pierre-Marie Ferino advanced on Memmingen. At nearby Mindelheim, Ferino's forward units under General Charles Abbatucci routed the Austrians under Prince Louis-Joseph Condé and hastened the withdrawal towards Augsburg (13 August 1796).

Minden ❙ 16 ❙ Rome's Germanic Wars

See Weser

Minden ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Despite defeat at Bergen, Hesse (13 April) Prussians, Brunswickers and British led by Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick attacked French Marquis Louis de Contades near Minden, on the Weser southwest of Hanover. De Contades was badly defeated in hard fighting though he was able to withdraw when British Cavalry commander George Lord Sackville refused to advance (1 August 1759).

Mine Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

As he retreated south from defeat at Westport, Missouri, Confederate General Sterling Price was pursued by Union General Alfred Pleasonton through Marais des Cygnes to Mine Creek, east of Mound City, Kansas. Generals John S. Marmaduke and William L. Cabell were among about 600 captured in a rearguard disaster and Price continued south towards the Marmiton (25 October 1864).

Mine Run ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union commander George G. Meade pursued General Robert E. Lee south of the Rapidan after victory at Rappahannock Station, where he advanced on Lee in a strongly fortified position along Mine Run, northeast of Orange. Following some preliminary skirmishing, Meade prudently pulled back before a full battle and withdrew northwest to Culpeper (27 November–2 December 1863).

Mingolsheim ❙ 1622 ❙ Thirty Years War (Palatinate War)

See Wiesloch

Minhla ❙ 1826 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

See Melloone

Minhla ❙ 1885 ❙ 3rd British-Burmese War

King Thebaw of Burma began to threaten British trading interests and Britain determined to invade and overthrow the monarch. General Sir Harry Prendergast and a large land and naval force advanced up the Irriwaddy from Thayetmyo to bombard then storm the fortress at Minhla. The King surrendered and was exiled in India, losing Burma her independence until 1948 (17 November 1885).

Minisink ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When the Mohawk Chief Joseph Brant and Loyalist allies raided and destroyed the settlement of Minisink, west of Goshen New York (19 July) 150 local militia under Colonel Benjamin Tusten set out in pursuit and were ambushed at the Minisink Ford on the Lackawack. A four-hour action cost the militia 44 killed, including Tusten, and the raiders escaped with their booty (22 July 1779).

Minorca ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

A combined assault on Spanish Minorca saw British Admiral Sir Edward Whitaker seize forts at Fornelle and Ciudadella, while General Sir James Stanhope besieged Fort St Philip, guarding Port Mahon. Although the commander's brother Captain Philip Stanhope was killed during a costly assault by General George Wade, Fort St Philip surrendered next day and Minorca was secured (3–18 September 1708).

Minorca ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Attempting to relieve the French siege of Port Mahon on the Mediterranean island of Minorca, British Admiral John Byng was heavily repulsed by Admiral Marquis Augustine de la Galissonière and withdrew to Gibraltar without landing his reinforcements. Byng was shot for dereliction of duty "to encourage the others" and Port Mahon later surrendered (20 May 1756).

Minorca ❙ 1781–1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

A Franco-Spanish force under Louis Duc de Crillon attacked the Mediterranean island of Minorca and occupied it all except Port Mahon, boldly defended by a British garrison under General James Murray. After a six-month siege, Murray was forced to surrender with heavy losses to disease and casualties. At war's end the island was ceded to Spain (July 1781–5 February 1782).

Minorca ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Three months after victory at the Battle of the Nile, a British force under General Sir Charles Stuart attacked the Spanish-held island of Minorca. Supported by Commodore John Duckworth, Stuart captured most of the island before Governor Juan Quesada surrendered, giving the British a key naval base in the Mediterranean, reputedly without the loss of a man (7–15 November 1798).

Minsk ❙ 1919 ❙ Russo-Polish War

Polish General Stanislaw Szeptycki helped secure Vilna (19 April), then led 15,000 men further south against Minsk, where Russians were outflanked by cavalry Colonel Wladislaw Anders. Following a last stand just north of Minsk at Radoszkowice, the Russians withdrew east and Poland established a line on the Berezina until the following year's offensive towards Kiev (1–8 August 1919).

Minsk ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

When Germany invaded Russia, Panzer Generals Heinz Guderian and Herman Hoth circled behind Minsk, where they trapped 15 Soviet divisions. The double encirclement of Minsk and Bialystok yielded 320,000 prisoners, 2,500 tanks and 1,400 guns, and Russian Commander Dmitri Pavlov was arrested and shot. The Germans continued east towards Smolensk (22 June–9 July 1941).

Minsk ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As Soviet forces raced into Belorussia, General Ivan Chernyakovsky from Vitebsk and Konstantin Rokossovsky from Bobruysk encircled a large German force at Minsk. The Belorussian capital fell after heavy fighting (3 July) with survivors trapped east of the city. The pocket was crushed with up to 70,000 killed and 30,000 captured, opening the way to Vilna (29 June–11 July 1944).

Mir ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

At the beginning of Napoleon Bonaparte's advance into Russia, French light cavalry under Alexander Roznicki were attacked at Mir, near Stolsty southwest of Minsk, by Cossacks led by General Matvei Platov. The Russians were driven off with heavy casualties and had to withdraw. Platov attacked the invaders again a few days later at Romanov (10 July 1812).

Miraflores ❙ 1881 ❙ War of the Pacific

Chilean General Manuel Baquedano resumed the offensive against Peru, advancing on Lima to take the defensive line at Chorrillos. After a failed armistice, Baquedano attacked again two days later at Miraflores, defended by General Andrés Avelino Cáceres, who suffered a crushing defeat. Lima was quickly occupied, though Cáceres fought on until defeat at Huamachuco in 1883 (15 January 1881).

Miraj ❙ 1762–1763 ❙ Maratha Wars of Succession

Having defeated his nephew Peshwar Madhav Rao at Alegaon in November 1762, ambitious Maratha Regent Raghunath Rao moved against the Patwardhans in western India at Miraj, defended by veteran General Govind Hari. Two months' fighting saw Govind Hari surrender, but the Marathas soon patched up an alliance to meet a fresh invasion by Hyderabad (29 December 1762–3 February 1763).

Miranda ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Pancorbo

Mirandola ❙ 1511 ❙ War of the Holy League

In the wake of breakup of the League of Cambrai, Pope Julius II formed a new alliance with Venice against France in Italy. The Papal army repulsed a French attack on Bologna, then marched north and stalled besieging Mirandola. The Pope himself rose from his sickbed to take field command in heavy snow and captured the castle. It was lost again a few months later (January 1511).

Miranpur Katra ❙ 1774 ❙ Rohilla War

When Afghan Rohillas joined Marathas against Nawab Shuja-ud-Daula of Oudh, Bengal Governor Warren Hastings loaned the Nawab East India Company troops under Colonel Alexander Champion. On St George's Day at Miranpur Katra, near Bareilly, Champion defeated and killed Hafiz Rahmat Khan and secured a massive booty. However, Hastings was later impeached (23 April 1774).

Mirbat ❙ 1972 ❙ Dhofar War

Despite defeat at Jebel Akhdar, about 250 leftist rebels in southern Oman attacked a small post east of Salalah at Mirbat, held by nine British SAS and about 40 local militia under Captain Mike Kealy. Heroic defence saw two SAS and two militia killed before Mirbat was relieved by air-strikes and reinforcements. The rebels lost about 70 killed and the back of the rebellion was broken (19 July 1972).

Mire ❙ 1365 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

See Tashkent

Mirischlau ❙ 1600 ❙ Balkan National Wars

German Emperor Rudolf II encouraged rebellion in Transylvania, sending General George Basta against Prince Michael of Wallachia, who had seized the principality after victory at Selimbar. A year later near Mirischlau, north of Alba Iulia, Michael was defeated and Sigismund Bathory was put on the throne of Transylvania. Michael soon also lost Wallachia after defeat at Bucov (18 September 1600).

Misar ❙ 1806 ❙ 1st Serbian Rising

A year after repulsing a Turkish force at Ivanovatz, Serbian forces under Kara George took a strong entrenched position on the Sava at Misar, near Shabatz west of Belgrade, where they faced two days of costly assault by a Turkish army and its Bosnian allies. The Turks were routed by Serbian cavalry on the third day and the citadels at Shabatz and Belgrade soon fell (13 August 1806).

Mishmar Hayarden ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

Defeated south of the Sea of Galilee around Deganiya in May, Syrian General Husni el Zaim moved north and stormed Mishmar Hayarden on the Upper Jordan after costly fighting. In the Ten Days Offensive, a converging Jewish counter-attack under General Moshe Carmel was very sharply repulsed and the Arabs held their beachhead into the Second Truce (6–10 June & 9–14 July 1948).

Misiche ❙ 244 ❙ Roman-Persian Wars

After Roman victory in Iraq at Resaena in 243, the teenage Emperor Gordian III attempted to march on the Persian capital at Ctesiphon. West of Baghdad at Misiche (modern Fallujah), he suffered a decisive defeat and was killed by his troops at the instigation of Philip the Arab. The usurper promptly bought peace with Shapur I of Persia, who invaded Syria in 260 for victory at Edessa.

Misilmeri ❙ 1068 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

The Norman Roger d'Hauteville secured eastern Sicily after victory at Cerami in 1063 and gradually conquered towards the northwest, where he met a strong Arab force under the Emir Ayub just southeast of Palermo at Misilmeri (Menzil el emir). The Muslims were brutally defeated in a rout, which was said to have broken the back of their resistance. Palermo itself fell after a brutal siege in 1072.

Miskolc ❙ 1919 ❙ Hungarian-Czech War

See Salgótarján

Missionary Ridge ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Chattanooga (2nd)

Mississinewa ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

Attacking Britain's Indian allies, Colonel John Campbell took 600 men northwest from Greenville, Ohio against the Miami village at Mississinewa, near modern Marion, Indiana. The Miami were driven out and their village burned, before they counter-attacked fiercely. Harrison withdrew, with 60 casualties and 300 cases of frostbite, but the Miami had been neutralised (17–18 December 1812).

Missolonghi ❙ 1822–1823 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Omer Vironi and Kurshid Pasha leading a fresh Turkish advance into western Greece were stopped before Missolonghi, held by 600 Greeks under Alexandros Mavrocordatos and Marcos Botzaris. When his final assault was repulsed with very heavy losses, Vrioni abandoned the siege (Kurshid Pasha killed himself) and the town was soon refortified (6 November 1822–6 January 1823).

Missolonghi ❙ 1825–1826 ❙ Greek War of Independence

A renewed Ottoman offensive in western Greece saw Reshid Pasha (later joined by Ibrahim Pasha) again besiege Missolonghi, now better fortified and boldly held by 4,000 men under Notaris Botzaris. After a year of bloody defence, the starving garrison sortied and were routed. Missolonghi fell by storm and Reshid Pasha advanced on Athens and the Acropolis (7 May 1825–23 April 1826).

Mitau ❙ 1621–1622 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden renewed war against Poland in Livonia where he captured Riga (September 1621), then seized Mitau (modern Jelgava) 25 miles to the southwest. The town was soon retaken by Polish General Christopher Radziwill (December), but the citadel under Anders Hastehufvud held out six months before capitulating. A truce was quickly signed (3 October 1621–25 June 1622).

Mitau ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Aa River

Mitla Pass ❙ 1956 ❙ Arab-Israeli Sinai War

Determined to regain her blocked access to the Red Sea, Israel attacked Egypt in the Sinai, sending paratroops and then tanks under Colonel Ariel Sharon against Mitla Pass, guarding the route to Suez. A rash frontal assault cost heavy Israeli losses and failed to take the pass, though the Egyptians eventually withdrew. Sharon then turned south to the disputed Straits of Tiran (29–31 October 1956).

Mitla Pass ❙ 1967 ❙ Arab-Israeli Six Day War

Israeli General Avraham Yoffe drove from Jebel Libni deep into the Sinai, where he took Bir el-Hassne and Bir-Tamade while Colonel Yiska Shadmi raced ahead to Mitla Pass. Out of fuel and ammunition, Shadmi was almost overwhelmed. However, he blocked the withdrawing Egyptians tanks, which were then destroyed by Yoffe, aided by Ariel Sharon arriving from Abu Ageila (7 June 1967).

Miyajima ❙ 1555 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

In order to avenge his master Ouchi Yoshitaka, overthrown by former ally Sue Harukata, Mori Motonari built a fortress on Miyajima, an island off Hiroshima, and allowed Sue to capture it. Motonari then besieged the fortress and took it by a brilliant assault. Harukata and his defeated troops committed mass sepukku and the Mori secured virtual control of western Japan (1 October 1555).

Mizushima ❙ 1183 ❙ Gempei War

Minamoto Yoshinaka seized Kyoto after victory at Shinowara (12 June), then advanced west into Taira territory. At Mizushima Bay, near modern Kurashiki, Yoshinaka was soon heavily defeated by Taira cavalry. Another initiative under his uncle Yukiie was soon repulsed at Muroyami in Harima. Yoshinaka then turned against former Emperor Go-Shirakawa at Hojuji (17 November 1183).

Mobile ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Six months after taking Baton Rouge, Spanish Governor Don Bernardo de Galvez of Lousiana landed 1,400 men in British West Florida outside Mobile, where Fort Charlotte was held by 300 men under Governor Elias Durnford. With relief under General John Campbell approaching from Pensacola, Galvez stormed the fort. Campbell turned back and a year later lost Pensacola (14 March 1780).

Mobile Bay ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

In a combined attack on Mobile Bay, Alabama, Union Admiral David G. Farragut, supported by General Gordon Granger, led four monitors and 14 gunboats against the small Confederate squadron. Admiral Franklin Buchanan surrendered his ships after a bloody action and General Richard L. Page lost Forts Morgan and Gaines. However, Mobile itself was not captured (2–23 August 1864).

Mobile Point ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812
See Fort Bowyer

Mockern (1st) ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)
The Allies under Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein marched west across Germany and Napoleon Bonaparte sent Prince Eugène de Beauharnais across the Elbe near Mockern, south of Magdeburg, to stem the advance. After a widespread action against General Hans Yorck, Eugène withdrew over the river. However, Yorck's battered force was unable to press any pursuit (3–5 April 1813).

Mockern (2nd) ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)
At the start of the three-day Battle of Leipzig, General Gebhard von Blucher's advancing Prussians were blocked on the Elster, just to the northwest at Mockern, by French General Auguste Marmont. In a brutal struggle vital to the overall battle, Prussian General Hans Yorck drove Marmont's veterans back to Leipzig (16 October 1813).

Modder ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
As British General Lord Paul Methuen advanced to relieve besieged Kimberley, he drove the Boers out of Belmont, South Africa and Graspan, then faced Piet Cronjé and Jacobus de le Rey dug in at the Modder near its junction with the Riet. In very heavy fighting, with about 500 casualties on either side, the Boers were outflanked and Cronjé withdrew northeast to Magersfontein (28 November 1899).

Modderspruit ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
See Nicholson's Nek

Modena ❙ 193 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy
See Mutina

Modena ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
French General Jacques Macdonald marched north through the Apennines and attacked Austrian advance units under Prince Herman Hohenzollern at Modena, northwest of Bologna. The Austrians were defeated and Macdonald sent General Joseph Montrichard in pursuit northeast towards Ferrara, while he himself advanced to the decisive battle on the Trebbia (12 June 1799).

Modon ❙ 431 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War
See Methone

Modon ❙ 355–354 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War
See Methone

Modon ❙ 31 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate
See Methone

Moedwil ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
Boer commanders Jacobus de la Rey and Jan Kemp campaigning in the western Transvaal attacked Colonel Robert Kekewich and about 1,300 men in camp at Moedwil, on the Selons Rivers west of Rustenberg. Kekewich lost 214 casualties and over 300 horses in a courageous defence, while the Boers lost 60 irreplaceable experienced troops and were forced to withdraw (30 September 1901).

Möerskirch ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Mosskirch

Moesia ❙ 86 ❙ Domitian's Dacian War
See Tapae

Mogadishu ❙ 1990–1991 ❙ Somalian Civil War
Despite crushing rebellion in the north at Hargeisa, the military government of President

Siad Barre of Somalia faced renewed attack by rebel movements which combined to advance on Mogadishu. Bloody fighting in the capital is claimed to have cost up to 5,000 lives before Barre fled into exile. Somalia then entered a decade of clan-based warlord rivalry and famine (December 1990–2 January 1991).

Mogadishu ❙ 1993 ❙ Somalian Civil War

With Somalia starving and torn by rival warlords, when Mohammed Farah Aidid was blamed for killing 24 Pakistani peacekeepers, 160 US Rangers under General William Garrison went to arrest Aidid. The heliborne raid on Mogadishu was ambushed, with 18 Americans killed and 84 wounded. Hundreds of Somalis also died. Within six months all UN and US forces were withdrawn (3 October 1993).

Mogaung ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

On campaign in northern Burma, General Joseph Stilwell's Chinese divisions advanced down the Hukawng towards Mogaung, while British Chindits under Brigadier Mike Calvert advanced northeast from Indaw. The small Japanese garrison from General Masaki Honda's division fought a courageous defence before withdrawing. The Allies then turned east to Myitkyina (6–26 June 1944).

Mogilev ❙ 1620 ❙ Polish-Turkish Wars

See Cecora

Mogilev ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As Napoleon Bonaparte advanced into Russia, he tried to prevent the junction of two Russian armies under Prince Pyotr Bagration and General Mikhail Barclay de Tolly. On the Dnieper in the south, Marshal Louis Davout repulsed Bagration at Mogilev with massive losses, forcing his continued retreat until the two Russian forces were eventually able to unite at Smolensk (23 July 1812).

Mogilev ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

At the centre of the Russian offensive into Belorussia, General Georgi Zakharov's Second Belorussian Front broke through German defences on the first day to encircle Mogilev (modern Mahilyow) on the Dnieper. Mogilev fell by storm, along with Vitebsk to the north and Bobruysk to the southwest. Zakharov then fought his way across the Berezina towards Minsk (26–28 June 1944).

Mohacs ❙ 1526 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

On a fresh invasion of Hungary through Peterwardein, Sultan Suleiman I and Grand Vizier Ibrahim Pasha led a large force to Mohacs, on the Danube south of Buda, against a Christian force under Louis II of Hungary. A disastrous defeat saw the King and half his army killed, including the flower of Hungarian nobility, and Suleiman occupied Budapest (29 August 1526).

Mohacs ❙ 1687 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Harkany

Mohaka ❙ 1869 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Hauhau rebel Te Kooti recovered from defeat at Ngatapa and continued ravaging the East Coast, where he attacked the river-mouth settlement at Mohaka. Residents at Te Huke stockade were murdered under a flag of truce and Constable George Hill bravely defended the Hiruharama stockade until relieved. The raid cost 60 lives before Te Kooti withdrew inland to Te Porere (10 April 1869).

Mohammerah ❙ 1857 ❙ Anglo-Persian War

Following defeat in the Persian Gulf at Khoosh-Ab (8 February), Persia signed a peace in Paris agreeing to evacuate Afghanistan. However, the news did not reach British General Sir James Outram, who took 5,000 men and stormed Mohammerah (modern Khorramshahr) at the mouth of the Euphrates. The Shah's army under Prince Khanzler Mirza fled and peace was ratified at Tehran (26 March 1857).

Mohi ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Invasion of Europe
See Sajo

Mohilev ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)
See Mogilev

Mohilow ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)
See Mogilev

Mohrungen ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)
At the start of Russia's mid-winter offensive against Napoleon Bonaparte in eastern Prussia, an advance force under General Evgenii Markov met French Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte in a sharp action southeast of Danzig at Mohrungen (modern Morag). Bernadotte is credited with victory, though he withdrew south while Bonaparte advanced from Warsaw to battle at Eylau (25 January 1807).

Mojkovac ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)
Austrian General Herman Kovess von Kovesshaza captured Belgrade in October 1915, then invaded Montenegro and tried to intercept the Serbians retreating to the sea from Kossovo. While Montenegran commander Janko Vukotic fought a brilliant delaying action at Mojkovac near Brskovo, his country was occupied. After the war, Montenegro was absorbed into Serbia (6–7 January 1916).

Mokundra Pass ❙ 1804 ❙ 2nd British-Maratha War
See Monson's Retreat

Mokuohai ❙ 1782 ❙ Hawaiian Wars
On the death of King Kalanipu of Hawaii, the Big Island was divided between his son Kiwalao and his nephew Kamehameha, soon leading to war between the cousins. At Mokuohai, on the west coast of the Big Island, Kiwalao was defeated and killed. By 1795 Kamehameha had gradually conquered the entire island group, including victories at Kepaniwai and Nuuanu (July 1782).

Molino del Rey ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War
With expiry of a brief truce after victory at Contreras and Churubusco, American General Winfield Scott advanced on Mexico City and sent General William Worth on a major diversionary attack against Generals Antonio Léon and Joaquin Rangel at nearby Molino del Rey. Worth withdrew after very heavy fighting and days later Scott attacked through Chapultepec (8 September 1847).

Molins de Rey ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
Barcelona fell after Cardedeu and days later French General Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr sent General Louis-Francois Chabot west against Spanish forces on the Llobregat River under Generals Francois Vives and Teodoro Reding. Attacking at the Bridge of Molins de Rey, Chabot drove off the blockade, capturing over 1,200 prisoners and 30,000 English muskets (21 December 1808).

Mollerusa ❙ 1102 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain
In the years following the great Muslim victory at Zallaka (1086), the Muslim offensive in northern Spain continued with the fall of Valencia in March 1102 and a threat to Barcelona itself. Count Armengol V of Urgel attempted a Christian counter-offensive, but at Mollerusa, 14 miles east of Lerida, he was routed with terrible losses (14 September 1102).

Molln ❙ 1225 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion
Six years after conquering Estonia with victory at Reval, Waldemar II of Denmark was treacherously seized by former vassal Heinrich of Schwerin. The King's nephew, Albert of Orlamunde, led a substantial rescue force, but at Molln, south of Lubeck, Albert was defeated by Heinrich and Adolf of Schauenberg (later Holstein). Waldemar was later ransomed, then lost in 1227 at Bornhoved.

Mollwitz ❙ 1741 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

The first major battle of the European war saw Austrian Marshal Count Wilhelm von Neipperg sent to meet the invasion of Silesia by Fredrick II of Prussia. Southeast of Breslau at Mollwitz, the Prussian cavalry were repulsed and Frederick left the field. However, his disciplined infantry under Count Kurt von Schwerin secured victory, bringing the other powers into the war (10 April 1741).

Molodi ❙ 1572 ❙ Russian-Tatar Wars

A year after burning part of Moscow, Khan Devlet Girai of Crimea returned with a reported 120,000 men in a further attack. South of Moscow at Molodi, Prince Mihkail Ivanovitch Vorotinski secured a brilliant defensive victory and the invaders were forced to withdraw. Vorotinski was later executed after being accused of negotiating with the Tatars (26 July–3 August 1572).

Mombasa ❙ 1505 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in East Africa

Soon after the first Portuguese expedition to East Africa by Vasco da Gama (1498), 21 ships under Francisco d'Almeida (later Viceroy of India) sacked Kilwa then arrived in Mombasa, where they met resistance by the King's troops. The royal army was routed, with over 1,000 reported killed. The Portuguese sacked the city and burned it to the ground, then sailed away and did not return for 15 years.

Mombasa ❙ 1528 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in East Africa

The East African city of Mombasa, burned by Portuguese adventurers in 1505, was largely rebuilt within a relatively short period. A fresh Portuguese fleet then arrived under Nuno de Cunha (Viceroy of India 1529–1328). After sharp fighting, Mombasa was once more looted and sacked. Parts of the city were again burned to the ground and the Portuguese sailed away.

Mombasa ❙ 1589 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in East Africa

With Turkish adventurers active off East Africa, Portuguese Governor in India Manuel de Sousa Coutinho sent a large force under his brother Tomé to support their ally, the King of Malinde. Bloody fighting saw the King of Mombasa killed and Turkish commander Mir Ali Beque captured. Portugal finally secured Mombasa and built the powerful Fort Jesus (7 March–15 April 1589).

Mombasa ❙ 1631–1633 ❙ Later Portuguese Wars in East Africa

Rising against the Portuguese in Mombasa, Don Jerónimo, Christian son of the murdered Sultan of Malindi, resumed the Islamic faith as Yusuf ibn al-Hasan and seized Fort Jesus, slaughtering commander Pedro Leitao de Gamboa, along with his garrison and many civilians. A relief force under Francisco de Moura was bloodily repulsed before Yusuf later razed Mombasa and withdrew.

Mombasa ❙ 1696–1698 ❙ Later Portuguese Wars in East Africa

With Portugal driven out of Muscat, Sayf ibn Sultan, Imam of Oman, besieged Fort Jesus, outside Mombasa, Portugal's greatest stronghold in East Africa. General Luís de Mello de Sampaio brought a relief force from Goa, but starvation and plague forced the surrender. Mombasa was briefly regained (1728–1729) before the Portuguese finally withdrew (13 March 1696–13 December 1698).

Mombasa ❙ 1728–1729 ❙ Later Portuguese Wars in East Africa

Aided by the King of Pate, Portuguese forces from Goa made a last attempt to regain Mombasa and General Sampoya seized the city. However, Patean support soon waned and Mombasa townsmen attacked outlying posts. When the Omani Arabs returned in force to besiege Fort Jesus, the Portuguese had to surrender and finally abandoned Mombasa (12 March 1728–29 November 1729).

Mome ❙ 1906 ❙ Bambatha Rebellion

With rebel forces concentrating in northern Natal, Colonel Duncan McKenzie launched a converging dawn assault, which trapped Zulus in the Mome Gorge. Facing artillery and Maxim guns the rebels were slaughtered, with leaders Bambatha and Mehlokazulu killed. Chief Siganada surrendered a few days later and, apart from some minor skirmishing, the rebellion was over (10 June 1906).

Monacacy ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Monocacy

Monash Valley ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

See Baby 700

Monastir ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

Invading Serbs routed Turkey's Western Army in Macedonia at Kumanovo (24 October) and seized Skopje, then detached forces to help Bulgaria besiege Adrianople before advancing south on Monastir (modern Bitola). Three days' heavy fighting north of the city saw the Turks routed and they fled, abandoning their guns. Monastir itself fell the following day (16–18 November 1912).

Monastir ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

After a failed offensive from Salonika towards Florina, Allied commander Maurice Sarrail attempted another advance against Bulgarian General Nikola Zhekov. While a British attack stalled near Lake Doiran, Franco-Serb forces in the west seized Monastir (modern Bitola) before winter halted the offensive. Sarrail later attacked again towards Lake Prespa (13 September–18 November 1916).

Moncada ❙ 1953 ❙ Cuban Revolution

Fidel Castro and about 160 young militants opened the revolution against President Fulgencio Batista with a much-celebrated attack on the Moncada Barracks in Santiago. However, over 1,000 regular troops easily repulsed the attackers with about half killed or subsequently murdered. Castro was imprisoned, but was freed in an amnesty after two years and resumed the revolution (26 July 1953).

Monck's Corner ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

To disrupt American communications during the British siege of Charleston, South Carolina, Colonels Banastre Tarleton and James Webster attacked rebel cavalry 30 miles north at Monck's Corner, near Lake Moultrie. American General Isaac Huger was routed attempting to use mounted troops in defence and Tarleton struck again a few weeks later at Lanneau's Ferry (14 April 1780).

Moncontour ❙ 1569 ❙ 3rd French War of Religion

Following defeat at Jarnac in March, French Huguenots rallied behind 15-year-old Henry of Beárnais (later Henry IV), son of Anthony of Navarre (killed at Rouen in 1562 fighting for the Catholics). Marshal Gaspard de Tavennes—with Spanish, Italian and Swiss support—surprised and slaughtered the Protestants at Moncountour, near Loudon, leading to peace (3 October 1569).

Mondovi ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

When defeat at Dego split the Austrian and Piedmontese armies in northwest Italy, Napoleon Bonaparte pursued the Piedmontese under Baron Michael Colli, who withdrew towards their capital at Turin. Colli lost at Millesimo, then attempted to make a stand at Mondovi, 14 miles east of Cuneo. He was routed and two days later sued for peace, taking Piedmont out of the war (21 April 1796).

Monemvasia ❙ 1689–1690 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

With his reputation established at the capture of Castelnuovo, Albania in 1687, Venetian Captain-General at Sea Girolamo Cornaro attacked the great fortress of Monemvasia, the last Turkish possession in southeastern Greece. The 1,200-strong Turkish garrison surrendered after a hard-fought siege and Cornaro captured 78 cannon. He died just a few weeks later (April 1680–12 August 1690).

Monemvasia ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Demitrius Ipsilantis attacked Ottoman positions in Peloponnesia, where he first besieged the powerful fortress at Monemvasia in the far southeast. Cut off at sea by Greek ships, the starving garrison finally surrendered to Ipsilantis on promise of safe passage to Asia Minor. However, his irregulars attacked and slaughtered the prisoners. He then marched west to attack Navarino (April–5 August 1821).

Monett's Ferry ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks withdrew down Louisiana's Red River from the costly actions at Mansfield and Pleasant Hill and was intercepted at Monett's Ferry, above Grand Ecore, by Confederate cavalry under General Hamilton P. Bee. Attacked in front and flank, Bee was forced to withdraw. Another attempt to slow the Union army was driven off at Mansura, Louisiana (23 April 1864).

Monghyr ❙ 800 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Nagabhata II of Pratihara secured much of northern India, but when he seized Kanauj, his great rival Dharmapala of Pala counter-attacked. In battle at Monghyr, Nagabhata and his feudatory allies Kakka of Jodhpur, Vahukadhavala Chalukya and Sankaragana of Dhod routed Dharmapala and Chakrayudha of Kanauj. Nagabhata himself soon lost in the Bundelkhand (disputed date c 800).

Mongkus ❙ 1964 ❙ Indonesian-Malaysian Confrontation

Patrolling close to Borneo's southwest border, a Gurkha platoon led by Sergeant Barmalal Limbu was ambushed at Mongkus by a greatly superior Indonesian force. In an action typical of this undeclared war, the Gurkhas fought off three assaults and were down to their last rounds when failing light saw the invaders withdraw, carrying their casualties back into Indonesia (5 October 1964).

Monitor* vs Merrimac ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Hampton Roads

Monjuich ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As part of the French siege of Gerona in Catalonia, General Jean-Antoine Verdier attacked the outlying strongpoint of Castle Monjuich, southeast of the city. After extreme French losses in a foolhardy frontal assault (7 July), Verdier reverted to traditional siege works. The Spanish garrison finally evacuated to Gerona with half killed and most others wounded (3 July–10 August 1809).

Monjuich ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish commander Luis Gonzalez Torres Marquis of Campoverde preparing a fresh offensive in Catalonia sent a force of 1,800 men against Monjuich, southeast of Gerona, which he believed was ready to surrender as a result of treachery. However, his force was intercepted outside the town by French forces under General Maurice Mathieu and was driven off with heavy losses (19 March 1811).

Monmouth ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As he evacuated Philadelphia, British General Sir Henry Clinton was intercepted to the northeast at Monmouth, where General Charles Lee attempted a weak assault but withdrew prematurely. General George Washington then attacked. In extreme heat and with costly losses on both sides, Clinton eventually prevailed and reached New York. Lee was cashiered (28 June 1778).

Mono ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Treasury Islands

Monocacy ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate General Jubal A. Early marched north along the Shenandoah after victory at Lynchburg (18 June), crossing the Potomac into Maryland, where he was met on the Monocacy near Frederick by General Lew Wallace. In the "battle that saved Washington" Wallace was defeated, but the delay permitted reinforcement of the Capital, where Early was repulsed at Fort Stevens (9 July 1864).

Monongahela ❙ 1755 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

British regulars and colonials led by General Edward Braddock advancing towards Fort Duquesne (modern Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania) were attacked at the Monongahela River by French and Indians under Captains Liénard de Beaujeu (killed) then Jean-Daniel Dumas. Braddock and over half his men were killed in a one-sided rout before Colonel George Washington evacuated the survivors (9 July 1755).

Monopoli ❙ 1042 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

With Byzantine forces defeated by Normans and Lombards in 1041 at Montemaggiore, Olivento and Monte Siricolo, Constantinople sent a fresh force to southern Italy under the successful George Maniakes. A bloody assault recovered Monopoli, southeast of Bari, along with Matera. Maniakes then turned against Constantine IX and was killed in May 1043 at Ostrovo.

Monroe's Cross Roads ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As Union commander William T. Sherman crossed North Carolina, his left flank under General H. Judson Kilpatrick was attacked at Monroe's Cross Roads, near Fayetteville, by Confederate Generals Joseph Wheeler and Wade Hampton. After initial repulse, with Kilpatrick nearly captured, the Confederates were driven off and Sherman marched on towards Averasborough (10 March 1865).

Mons ❙ 1572 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Encouraged by victory at Brielle (1 April) Louis of Nassau captured Mons (23 May), where he was besieged by Spanish under Don Fadrique Alvarez, son of the Duke of Alva. With hope of French aid ended by the St Bartholomew's Eve massacre and the repulse of a relief army at Havré, the city surrendered, though Louis and his garrison escaped the ensuing butchery (3 June–19 September 1572).

Mons ❙ 1678 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See St Denis, France

Mons ❙ 1691 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

French Marshal Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg followed his decisive victory at Fleurus (1 July 1690) by laying siege to the key city of Mons, in modern Belgium, assisted by his monarch Louis XIV. Although William III of Holland and England was at Brussels with a large army, he failed to intervene to relieve Mons, which fell by storm after just three weeks (15 March–8 April 1691).

Mons ❙ 1709 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Soon after capturing the French fortress of Tournai, John Churchill Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugène of Savoy marched southeast and laid siege to Mons, on the Scheldt southwest of Brussels. Leaving enough men to sustain the siege, the Allies then turned south to defeat Marshal Claude Villars at nearby Malplaquet. Mons fell a few weeks after (4 September–26 October 1709).

Mons ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As German forces swept through Belgium, the British Expeditionary Force led by Sir John French found itself facing a massively superior army under Alexander von Kluck around Mons, west of Namur. The British fought a bold delaying action but, with the French defeated at Charleroi, they began the Retreat from Mons through Le Cateau towards the Marne (23–24 August 1914).

Mons ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

While the British seized Antwerp, American General Courtney Hodges drove across southern Belgium and sent General Joseph Collins against a German concentration around Mons. The Mons Pocket was eliminated with 25,000 prisoners taken. Within a week Hodges had liberated Namur, Liège and Luxembourg before crashing into the Siegfried Line at Aachen (3 September 1944).

Mons Badonicus ❙ 497 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

Cerdic of the West Saxons established the Kingdom of Wessex, fighting a series of encounters against Britons under the semi-mythical King Arthur. In the last and decisive battle at Badon or Mons Badonicus (possibly Caer Vadon near Bath), Cerdric was heavily defeated, leading to a long period of peace before the great Saxon victory in 577 at Deorham (trad date c 497).

Mons-en-Pevele ❙ 1304 ❙ Franco-Flemish Wars

Two years after the great victory of Flemish infantry over Philip IV's mounted French knights at Courtrai, Flanders was decisively defeated at Mons-en-Pevele, southeast of Lille. Lacking defensive cover, the Flemish infantry of Philip de Thiette, son of Guy of Dampierre, were destroyed and French reputation was restored. Peace followed and Philip IV gained parts of Flanders (18 August 1304).

Mons Graupius ❙ 84 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

In a brilliantly successful campaign, Governor Gnaeus Julius Agricola extended Roman control of Britain north to the Forth and defeated Caledonians under Calgacus at Mons Graupius (traditionally Bennachie northwest of Aberdeen). Agricola's army reputedly killed 10,000 Highlanders, though he lacked the men to conquer Scotland. Forty years later Hadrian's Wall was built to mark the border.

Monson's Retreat ❙ 1804 ❙ 2nd British-Maratha War

Sent into northwest India to support the Raja of Jaipur against Jaswant Rao Holkar of Indore, Colonel William Monson was ordered to defend Kotah on the Chambal River. But he advanced beyond and faced a massive Maratha army, which drove him back through the Mokundra Pass. Harried and pursued, Monson finally reached Agra with less than half his original force (8 July–30 August 1804).

Mons Seleucus ❙ 353 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars

Despite victory at Pavia in 351 after his defeat at Mursa, the usurper Flavius Magnus Magnentius was pursued back to Gaul by Emperor Constantius II, who later took an army west from Milan to finally deal with his rival. In eastern France at Mons Seleucus (near modern Gap), Magnentius suffered a decisive defeat. He fled northwest to Lugdunum, where he took his own life (11 August 353).

Montagne-Noire ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Figueras

Montaigu ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Republican Generals Jean-Baptiste Kléber and Jean-Michel Beysser advancing south from victory over Royalist rebels at Nantes (29 June), defeated rebel leader Francois-Athanese Charette at Montaigu, driving him further east. Returning from success at nearby Torfou, Charette then drove Beysser out of Montaigu and seized a large amount of stores (16 & 22 September 1793).

Montana Barracks ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

See Madrid (1st)

Montaperti ❙ 1260 ❙ Guelf-Ghibelline Wars

In the continuing factional war in northern Italy, Ghibellines driven out of Florence by Guelfs were supported by Siena and Manfred, King of the Two Sicilies. In a massive battle at Montaperti, near Siena, the more numerous Guelfs were crushed by Farinata degli Uberti. His Ghibelline party then re-took Florence and formed a government loyal to Manfred (4 September 1260).

Montargis ❙ 1427 ❙ Hundred Years War

Having secured most of northern France, the English army led by Richard Beauchamp Earl of Warwick advanced towards the Loire and besieged Montargis, south of Paris. The Dauphin Charles VII sent a large relief army under his cousin, Jean Count of Dunois, who attacked and destroyed the camps of Sir John de la Pole and Henry Bassett, forcing Warwick to withdraw to Normandy.

Montauban ❙ 1621 ❙ 1st Huguenot Rebellion

Louis XIII's French army won at St Jean d'Angely (25 June) then marched against Huguenot Marshal Armand Nompar Duke de la Force at Montauban in Quercy. Duke Henry of Mayenne was killed in a Catholic assault and, after Duke Henry of Rohan broke in with Huguenot reinforcements, the King's Minister Alfred de Luynes lifted the siege and made peace (18 August–2 November 1621).

Montbéliard ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Héricourt

Mont Cassel ❙ 1677 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Cassel

Montdidier ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Noyon-Montdidier

Monte Aperto ❙ 1260 ❙ Guelf-Ghibelline Wars

See Montaperti

Monte Baldo ❙ 1637 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

While campaigning in northern Italy after victory at Tornavento (June 1636), a French-Savoyard army under Duke Victor Amadeus and Marshal Charles de Crequi reached Monte Baldo, near the Adige east of Lake Garda, where a force of Spanish cavalry was heavily defeated and put to flight. Just a month later the Duke of Savoy was dead of a mysterious illness (8 September 1637).

Monte Battaglia ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Apennines

Montebello ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General Jean Lannes advanced to relieve Genoa, which had fallen five days earlier, and met Austrian Generals Karl Ott and Andrew O'Reilly marching north after the siege. Saved by the timely arrival of General Claude Victor, Lannes drove off the Austrians at Montebello. The two sides withdrew to regroup for the decisive battle a week later at Marengo (9 June 1800).

Montebello ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

When King Victor Emmanuel II of Sardinia-Piedmont mobilised in support of independence, he faced an Austrian invasion under General Philipp Stadion von Thannhausen. Marching against the Austrians east of Verona at Montebello, a Franco-Piedmontese force under General Elie-Frederic Forey repulsed the Austrians with heavy losses and drove them back to Stradella (20 May 1859).

Monte Caseros ❙ 1852 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

See Caseros

Monte Cassino ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Key to the German Gustav Line across Italy was Monte Cassino, where an American assault was thrown back followed by heavy bombing, then two costly failures by New Zealand General Bernard Freyberg. The strategic monastery was finally taken at terrible cost by Polish General Wladislaw Anders as part of the offensive into the Liri Valley (5 & 16 February, 15 March & 11–17 May 1944).

Montecatini ❙ 1315 ❙ Guelf-Ghibelline Wars

Following a defeat at Lucca, the pro-Papal Guelf forces of Florence were besieged in Montecatini, northeast of Florence, by the Ghibelline-Pisan army of Ugoccione da Faggiuola, supported by German cavalry and other Imperial allies. A relief force under Neapolitan Princes Philip of Taranto and Peter of Anjou was routed nearby. Philip later sought a truce (10–29 August 1315).

Monte Christi (1st) ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

The 64-gun British warship Lion (Captain William Cornwallis) with three other ships cruising north of Haiti intercepted a French convoy from Martinique to Cap Francois, escorted by Admiral Toussaint-Guillaume de La Motte-Picquet. Manoeuvring off Monte Christi in near calm, one British ship was badly damaged. However, reinforcements arrived and de le Motte withdrew (20–22 March 1780).

Monte Christi (2nd) ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

While escorting a convoy with 6,000 French troops for Rhode Island, Commodore Charles de Ternay was met north of Haiti off Monte Christi by a smaller force under Captain William Cornwallis. In an action of manoeuvre, Cornwallis rescued one of his ships which had become isolated, but the over-cautious French commander failed to use his superior numbers and withdrew (20 June 1780).

Montecristo ❙ 1241 ❙ Imperial-Papal Wars

See Meloria

Monte de las Cruces ❙ 1810 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

As they advanced through Guanajuato towards Mexico City, Miguel Hidalgo's peasant army was blocked west of the capital at Monte de las Cruces by Spanish Colonel Torcuato de Trujillo. The smaller yet well-equipped Spanish force was defeated and fled. However, scarce ammunition and heavy losses forced Hidalgo back towards Guadalajara and he was soon beaten at Aculco (30 October 1810).

Monte Grappa ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

Austro-German commander Otto von Below routed the Italians after Caporetto and attempted a further offensive on the Piave against Italian General Mario di Robilant. Heavy fighting around Monte Grappa halted the advance and Anglo-French reinforcements under Generals Herbert Plumer and Marie Fayolle helped check a fresh attack (14–26 November & 11–21 December 1917).

Monte Grappa ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

When Austrian forces renewed their offensive along the Piave, General Conrad von Hotzendorf in the north on the Upper Brenta attacked the Italian Fourth Army under General Gaetano Giardino around Monte Grappa. Aided by Anglo-French forces, the Italians halted the Austrian advance and later joined the broad offensive which routed the Austrians at Vittorio Veneto (15–16 June 1918).

Montejurra ❙ 1873 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

Determined to recapture the key city of Estella, in Navarre, Spanish Republican General Domingo Moriones advanced on the Carlists under General Joaquín Elío at nearby Montejurra. Both sides claimed victory after very heavy fighting, though Moriones withdrew. Estella remained in Carlist hands for almost two years until after a further action at Montejurra (7 November 1873).

Montejurra ❙ 1876 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

Near the end of war, new Republican commander General Fernando Primo de Rivera followed victory at Treviño (July 1875) by marching on the remaining Carlist stronghold at Estella. Despite a courageous and costly defence by about 1,600 men under General Carlos Calderón at nearby Montejurra, Calderón was forced to withdraw. Estella finally fell two days later (17 February 1876).

Monte Lacteria ❙ 553 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Mount Lactarius

Montélimar ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

American General Lucian Truscott invaded southern France through the Riviera, then pursued General Friedrich Weise's Nineteenth Army up the Rhone, where General Frederick Butler circled north to trap the Germans at Montélimar. Despite a brutal Panzer counter-attack, Wiese suffered severe losses in men and equipment before eventually breaking through to escape (2–28 August 1944).

Montemaggiore ❙ 1041 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

During a fresh offensive in southern Italy, Norman and Lombard forces beat a Byzantine army at the Olivento (17 March). The Norman William d'Hauteville then attacked again at Montemaggiore, on the Ofanto near Cannae. Byzantine Catapan Michael Doukeianus was defeated once more and was sent to Sicily. His successor was beaten later the same year at Monte Siricolo (May 1041).

Montemuro ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

See Estella

Montenaeken ❙ 1465 ❙ Franco-Burgundian Wars

Encouraged by Louis XI of France in the months following battle at Montlhéry, the people of Liège revolted against Philip Duke of Burgundy, who sent a large force under his son Charles the Bold. Just north of Liège at Montenaeken the rebels suffered a costly defeat, but two years later the revolt was renewed. The rebels were finally crushed at Brusthem and Liège itself was burned (15 October 1465).

Montenotte ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Facing Napoleon Bonaparte's advance from the Italian Riviera, Austrian commander Jean Pierre Beaulieu sent General Eugène von Argenteau to seize the Ligurian Alpine pass at Montenotte, 25 miles west of Genoa. Argenteau drove out General Jean-Baptiste Cervoni, though he was routed next day by the full French army. He was defeated again two days later at Dego (12 April 1796).

Montepulciano ❙ 225 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

See Faesulae

Montereau ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Napoleon Bonaparte defeated Blucher's Army of Silesia east of Paris, then marched towards Troyes to meet the Austrians and Russians of Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg. A sharp defeat at Mortmant forced Schwarzenberg to continue withdrawing southeast and at Montereau next day his rearguard under Prince Eugene of Württemberg was badly defeated (18 February 1814).

Monterey ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

On the offensive against Spanish California, American Commodore John Sloat landed near Monterey, held by Spanish-Californian forces under Captain Mariano Silva. The port had to capitulate after a brief action and Sloat then claimed the annexation of California and captured nearby San Francisco. His successor Commodore Robert Stockton won next January at San Gabriel, California (7 July 1846).

Monterotondo ❙ 1867 ❙ Garibaldi's Second March on Rome

Giuseppe Garibaldi took advantage of war between Italy and Austria to renew his own offensive in support of insurgency in Rome. He met with early success, defeating Papal troops at Monterotondo, near the Tiber northeast of Rome. However, some of his men were killed in a futile raid at Villa Glori and just over a week later his army was routed at Mentana (25 October 1867).

Monterrey ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

Crossing the Rio Grande into Mexico after victory at Resaca de la Palma (9 May), American General Zachary Taylor took 6,000 men against Monterrey, defended by a large force of regulars and militia under General Pedro de Ampudia. Ampudia capitulated after a three-day action, with costly losses on both sides, and surrendered the citadel known as the Black Fort (20–24 September 1846).

Monterroso ❙ 982 ❙ War of Leonese Succession

See Portela

Monte Santiago ❙ 1827 ❙ Argentine-Brazilian War

Just weeks after routing a Brazilian fleet near Buenos Aires at Quilmes, Argentine commander William Brown and four ships met a large Brazilian squadron off Monte Santiago, outside Ensenada. Scottish-born Francis Drummond in Independencia was killed and his ship captured by Brazil in a prolonged action. Brown returned to Buenos Aires, but Brazil soon made peace (23 March 1827).

Montes Claros ❙ 1665 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese Wars

Two years after Spain was routed at Ameixial, Luis Marquis of Caracena led a fresh attempt to reconquer independent Portugal. Advancing towards Villaviciosa, Caracena was badly beaten at nearby Montes Claros by Franco-Portuguese forces under Antonio de Marialva and Frederick Herman Schomberg. Spain eventually recognised Portuguese independence (17 June 1665).

Monte Siricolo ❙ 1041 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

Soon after Byzantine defeats in the field at Olivento and Montemaggiore, Catapan Boioannes (kinsman of Emperor Basil) tried to besiege Melfi. The Normans and Lombards counter-attacked against his camp at Monte Siricolo, near Montepeloso, where Boioannes was routed and captured. Constantinople sent George Maniakes who was avenged in 1042 at Monopoli (3 September 1041).

Monte Suella ❙ 1866 ❙ 3rd Italian War of Independence

Despite Italy's disastrous defeat at Custozza (24 June) Giuseppe Garibaldi and his volunteers took the offensive in the Tyrol, marching north from Salò on Lake Garda against Austrian General Franz Kuhn at Monte Suella. On the same day as Prussia's great victory over Austria at Königgratz, Garibaldi was wounded and repulsed. Within weeks his forces advanced again at Bezzecca (3 July 1866).

Montevideo ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

British General Sir Samuel Auchmuty was sent to retake Buenos Aires (recently recovered by the Spanish), but had insufficient forces and instead attacked the smaller city of Montevideo, defended by French General Jacques Liniers Bremont. While Auchmuty took the city after losing about 400 men, it was abandoned in July after the disastrous British expedition against Buenos Aires (3 February 1807).

Montevideo ❙ 1811 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

See Las Piedras

Montevideo ❙ 1814 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Despite defeat on the Uruguay River at Arroyo de la China in March, the Argentine Patriot fleet under Irish-born Admiral William Brown blockaded Montevideo, later supported on land by General Carlos de Alvear. Following victory for Brown off Montevideo near Lobos Island (16 May) Gaspar Vigodet, the last Spanish Viceroy of La Plata, surrendered the city (April–20 June 1814).

Montevideo ❙ 1823–1824 ❙ Brazilian War of Independence

With Portugal under attack in northern Brazil at Salvador, forces loyal to Brazilian Regent Pedro led by General Carlos Frederico Lecor besieged Montevideo, in recently occupied Uruguay. Portuguese commander Don Alvaro Da Costa de Sousa Macedo was eventually forced to evacuate to Lisbon and Brazilian independence was assured (January 1823–28 February 1824).

Montevideo ❙ 1843–1851 ❙ Argentine-Uruguayan War

Argentine General Manuel Cerefino Oribe intervened in Uruguay to support the Conservative Blanco faction against Liberal Colorado leader José Fructuoso Rivera at Arroyo Grande (December 1842), then besieged him at Montevideo. Argentine rebel Justo José de Urquiza drove off Oribe after eight years and fighting continued until Caseros in early 1852 (16 February 1843–8 October 1851).

Montfaucon ❙ 886 ❙ Viking Raids on France

During the long Viking siege of Paris, Odo (Eudes), Marquess of Neustria and Count of Paris, took a force against the invaders in northeast France at Montfaucon, near Verdun. The Vikings were heavily defeated and, after being unable to capture Paris, were brought off by the Frankish King Charles III—the Fat. Charles was later deposed by Odo.

Montgisard ❙ 1177 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

On a major campaign against Palestine, Saladin of Egypt besieged the coastal city of Ascalon before advancing towards Jerusalem. In a desperate counter-offensive, King Baldwin IV of Jersualem, supported by the Knights Templar, ambushed the Muslim army at Montgisard, near Ramleh. Saladin was badly defeated and withdrew to Egypt with heavy losses (25 November 1177).

Montgomery's Tavern ❙ 1837 ❙ Canadian Rebellion

See Toronto

Montiel ❙ 1369 ❙ Castilian War of Succession

Two years after Prince Edward of England—the Black Prince—restored Pedro IV to the throne of Castile following Navarette, Pedro faced renewed rebellion by his brother Henry of Trastamara and his French ally Bertrand du Guesclin. At the castle of Montiel, east of Valdepenas, Pedro was defeated and murdered by his brother, who took the throne as Henry II of Castile (23 March 1369).

Montijo ❙ 1644 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese Wars

When Spain lost the throne of Portugal in 1640, she continued her attempts to reassert control and John IV of Portugal sent General Mathias de Albuquerque against the former rulers. At Montijo, west of Badajoz, Albuquerque routed a Spanish army. War continued intermittently for another 20 years before Phillip II finally recognised Portuguese independence (26 May 1644).

Montison ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See La Carolina

Montjuich ❙ 1705 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

See Barcelona, Spain (1st)

Montlhéry ❙ 1465 ❙ Franco-Burgundian Wars

Faced by the rebellious "League of the Public Weal," the autocratic Louis XI of France took the field at Montlhéry, south of Paris, against dissident nobles led by his own brother, Charles Duke of Berry and Charles the Bold, son of Philip of Burgundy. After suffering a narrow cavalry defeat, Louis was forced to surrender land in Normandy to his brother and in Burgundy to Charles (13 July 1465).

Montmartre ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Paris

Montmirail ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Napoleon Bonaparte led a brilliant campaign against General Gebhard von Blucher east of Paris, where he destroyed part of Blucher's Prussian-Russian army at Champaubert, then turned next day against a separate Corps under General Dimitri Osten-Sacken. At Montmirail, Sacken's Corps was also destroyed and Bonaparte moved against a third force at Chateau-Thierry (11 February 1814).

Montmorency Gorge ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

During the British siege of Quebec, General James Wolfe sent General George Townshend against the French camp at the nearby Gorge of Montmorency, defended by Marquis Louis de Montcalm. Advancing without waiting for Brigadier Robert Monckton, the British grenadiers suffered over 400 casualties and were forced to withdraw. However, Quebec fell six weeks later (31 July 1759).

Montreal ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

Following a failed French attempt to recover Quebec (27 April), British forces converged on Montreal, where a siege was established by General Jeffrey Amherst, supported by Generals James Murray from Quebec and William Haviland from Lake Champlain. French Governor Pierre Rigaud, Marquis de Vaudreuil, capitulated after two days and Canada became British (6–8 September 1760).

Montreal ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

American commander Richard Montgomery was investing St Johns when he sent Major Ethan Allen northwest against Montreal, defended by General Guy Carleton. Allen was captured (25 September) in a failed assault with Colonel John Brown. After victory at Longueuil and St Johns, Montgomery attacked and captured Montreal. Carleton escaped to Quebec (13 November 1775).

Montréjeau ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

When Royalists in southwestern France were routed at Toulouse (9 August), Republican forces pursued the survivors 60 miles down the River Garonne to Montréjeau. Just west of Montréjeau, on the road to Cuguron, the Royalists were completely shattered, losing perhaps 2,000 killed and 1,000 captured out of 4,000, effectively ending the counter-revolution (20 August 1799).

Montrevel ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

With Germans in southern France withdrawing along the Rhone, further east Colonel Charles Hodge tried to hold Montrevel, near Bourg, to block a secondary escape route. Attacked by General Wend von Wietersheim's Panzer Division, which had broken through at Montélimar, the Americans were overwhelmed and surrendered and German withdrawal continued (3 September 1944).

Montserrat ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

While French forces besieged Figueras in Catalonia, newly created Marshal Louis Suchet took 10,000 men against the hilltop monastery of Montserrat, overlooking the Llobregat, northwest of Barcelona. Although General Jean-Francois Abbé took the monastery by storm in a brilliant assault, most of the garrison of Spanish irregulars managed to escape down the mountain (25 July 1811).

Mont St Jean ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

See Waterloo

Mont Valerian ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

On the day the last outside attempt to relieve besieged Paris was defeated at St Quentin, General Louis Jules Trochu reluctantly agreed to a sortie from the capital with nearly 90,000 men, advancing west through Mont Valerian to Buzenval and Malmaison. Lacking proper coordination, the French were driven back with over 4,000 casualties. Paris capitulated a week later (19 January 1871).

Monzon ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Advancing along the Cinca Valley in northeast Spain, French General Pierre Habert sent a force across the river near the Spanish-held town of Monzon, southeast of Huesca, where they were trapped by rising water. Habert's rescue attempt was driven back from the bridge at Monzon and, after almost 1,000 of his men surrendered, Habert withdrew to Villafranca (16–19 March 1809).

Moodkee ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st British-Sikh War

See Mudki

Mookerheyde ❙ 1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Spanish Viceroy Don Luis de Zuniga y Requesens withdrew troops from the siege of Leyden and sent a large force under Sancho d'Avila to the Mookerheyde, near Mook on the Meuse, held by Counts Louis and Henry of Nassau, younger brothers of William of Orange. The Dutch were utterly crushed, with both Louis and Henry killed, and the siege of Leyden resumed (14 April 1574).

Moonlight Battle ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Cape St Vincent

Moonlight Raid ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

See Virta bro

Moorefield ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

On return from a raid into Maryland, Confederate General John McCausland was ambushed at Cumberland. Then a week later he was attacked at Moorefield, on the south branch of the Potomac in West Virginia by pursuing Union cavalry under General William W. Averell. McCausland was badly defeated, but commander Jubal A. Early soon struck back at Summit Point (7 August 1864).

Moore's Creek Bridge ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Facing revolution in North Carolina, British commander Thomas Gage sent General Donald McDonald to lead Scottish and other local Loyalists against rebel Colonel James Moore. Marching to support the British at Wilmington, the Tories were routed to the northwest at Moore's Creek Bridge. About 50 were killed with another 800 captured, including General McDonald (27 February 1776).

Moorosi's Mountain ❙ 1879 ❙ Baputhi War

Baputhi Chief Moorosi in Lesotho threatened increasing resistance and about 500 Cape colonial troops tried to assault his steep mountain stronghold along the Orange near Qthing in Lesotho. Despite modern arms, the whites were bloodily repulsed. However, after a long siege, reinforcements arrived and the fortress fell by storm. Moorosi died in the final assault (17 March–20 November 1879).

Mopsuestia ❙ 1152 ❙ 2nd Crusade

With Constantinople distracted by the Second Crusade, the Armenian leader Thoros gradually seized Cilicia and Emperor Manuel I sent an army under his cousin Andronicus. The Greeks retook Tarsus, but near Mopsuestia (Crusader Mamista) Thoros routed the invaders with over 3,000 killed. In 1159 Cilicia was recovered by Manuel, who later ceded control to Armenian vassal Princes.

Mór ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

As Habsburg Field Marshal Alfred Windischgratz advanced into Hungary, nationalist General Moritz Perczel attempted to hold Mór, 50 miles west of Budapest. Attacked by Croat commander Joseph Jellacic, Perczel withdrew south towards Stuhlweissenberg with over 1,000 prisoners lost. Windischgratz captured Budapest, then continued east to Kapolna (30 December 1848).

Mora, Cameroon ❙ 1915–1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

Despite the loss of Garua in upper German Cameroon (June 1915), a small force under Hauptmann von Raben held out further north in the small fortress of Mora. With little ammunition, and the fall of the German "capital" in the south at Yaunde (1 January 1916), the Germans surrendered to General Charles Dobell and withdrew north into Spanish territory (October 1915–18 February 1916).

Mora, New Mexico ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

Threatened by resistance to American annexation of New Mexico, Captain Israel Hendley occupied Las Vegas (NM) then marched north against about 200 insurgents at nearby Mora. Hendley and four others were killed in a sharp action and the survivors withdrew to Santa Fe. Other Mexican rebels were beaten the same day at La Cañada and a week later at Pueblo de Taos (24 January 1847).

Morales ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advanced across the Duoro towards his great victory at Vitoria, British Hussars under Colonel Colquhoun Grant caught up with French regiments led by General Alexandre Digeon. Grant smashed the French rearguard in a one-sided action at Morales, east of Toro, and the Allied advance continued (2 June 1813).

Moramanga ❙ 1947 ❙ Madagascan Insurrection

Malagasy nationalists who rose against French rule in Madagascar, attacked a military camp in the railway junction city of Moramanga, where Senegalese troops repulsed the insurgents then exacted brutal reprisals. As insurrection spread, French reinforcements crushed the 21-month rising at terrible cost. The attack is commemorated in independent Madagascar as Insurrection Day (29 March 1947).

Morar ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Hugh Rose advanced west from Kalpi to reach Morar, just east of Gwalior, where he was blocked by a rebel force twice as large under Tantia Topi. A hard-fought hand-to-hand action, with costly losses on both sides, forced the rebels to flee. Rose then joined the siege of Gwalior and sent General William Smith against the Rhani of Jhansi at Kotah-ki-Serai (16 June 1858).

Morat ❙ 1476 ❙ Burgundian-Swiss War

Three months after defeat at Grandson, Charles the Bold of Burgundy returned to Switzerland with a large force and besieged Morat (modern Murten) on Lake Murten west of Bern. Attacking in heavy rain, a Swiss army under Hans Waldmann and Adrian von Bubenberg routed the Burgundians. Thousands were killed trapped against the lake and Duke Charles fled to Lorraine (22 June 1476).

Morava ❙ 285 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

See Margus

Morava ❙ 1190 ❙ Byzantine-Serbian War

When Stephen Numanja of Serbia overthrew Byzantine rule and seized territory in coastal Dalmatia, Emperor Isaac II marched into Serbia and defeated him in battle on the Morava. Isaac then pardoned Numanja, who accepted the Byzantine title Sebastocrator and married his son to the Emperor's niece. However, Isaac's new prestige was soon destroyed by the Bulgarians at Berroea.

Moraviantown ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812
See Thames

Morazzone ❙ 1848 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence
Despite an armistice after Custozza, Giuseppe Garibaldi continued the war against Austria and repulsed an attack near Lake Maggiore at Luino (15 August), then faced a much larger force sent by Baron Konstantin d'Aspre further south at Morazzone. Heavily bombarded by General Ferdinand von Simbschen, Garibaldi had to withdraw and retreated into Switzerland (26 August 1848).

Morbihan Gulf ❙ 56 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars
Soon after subjugating the Belgae at Aduatuca, Julius Caesar turned on the seafaring Veneti people of Brittany and had a fleet built at the mouth of the Loire. Watched by Caesar from the land, Decimus Brutus took his hastily built ships close to the opposing fleet and, after slashing their rigging, boarded and burned the Veneti ships. The Veneti and the rest of Brittany quickly sued for peace.

Morella ❙ 1837–1838 ❙ 1st Carlist War
While Carlist forces were defeated in north and northwest Spain, Carlist leader Ramón Cabrera took the offensive in Catalonia, where he besieged Morella. With insufficient resources to take the city by assault, the siege was close to being called off when Catalan Lieutenant Pablo Alió and about 80 men scaled the walls by night. The Cristino garrison surrendered (9 December 1837–26 January 1838).

Morella ❙ 1838 ❙ 1st Carlist War
With Carlist forces defeated in north and northwest Spain, Liberal General Marcelino Oráa marched on the key stronghold city of Morella in Catalonia. After an incompetent siege, and under persistent attack in the field by Carlist leader Ramón Cabrera, Oráa withdrew to avoid further losses. He was dismissed while Carlos V named Cabrera as Count of Morella (24 July–18 August 1838).

Morella ❙ 1840 ❙ 1st Carlist War
Despite Carlist Commander Rafael Maroto signing the peace (August 1839), Ramón Cabrera fought on in Catalonia, where Liberal General Baldomero Espartero besieged Morella. With the capture of outlying positions, the emblematic Carlist city was doomed and a nighttime break out was repulsed with heavy losses. Morella surrendered and Cabrera fled into exile, ending the war (19–23 May 1840).

Morgarten ❙ 1315 ❙ Habsburg Wars of Succession
In the struggle for the German throne between the Habsburg Frederick of Austria and the Wittelsbach candidate Louis of Bavaria, Frederick's brother Leopold took an army to punish the Swiss for supporting Louis. In Morgarten Pass southeast of Zug, the invading Habsburg army was utterly destroyed, though war continued until the decisive battle in 1322 at Mühldorf (15 November 1315).

Morhange ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)
See Lorraine

Morlaix ❙ 1342 ❙ Hundred Years War
William Bohun Earl of Northampton relieved Brest in August then joined Robert of Artois to besiege Morlaix 30 miles to the northeast. Facing the approaching army of Charles of Blois at nearby Lanmeur, English longbowmen secured a decisive victory over French knights. However, Northampton chose to retire. Edward III of England soon arrived and secured a truce in Brittany (30 September 1342).

Morogoro ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)
Regrouping after defeat at Salaita (12 February), new British commander in German East Africa, Jan Smuts, attacked east of Kilimanjaro, aided by British from Rhodesia and Belgians advancing from the Congo. The so-called Morogoro Offensive secured Dar Es Salaam and the key railways of East Africa. The Germans were soon driven out at Tabora and Mahiwa (March–September 1916).

Morpeth ❙ 629 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Reportedly to avenge British defeat at Chester (615), Caedwalla of Gwynned (North Wales) invaded the territory of his foster-brother, King Edwin of Northumbria. But at Morpeth, on the Wansbeck River north of Newscastle, Caedwalla and his son Cadfan were heavily defeated and fled to Ireland. The Welsh King returned in 633 to help defeat Edwin at Heathfield.

Morro Castle ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Caribbean)

See Havana

Mortain ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Determined to cut off the Allied breakout from Normandy, commander Marshal Günther von Kluge counter-attacked towards Avranches, where he was blocked at Mortain by infantry of General George Patton's Third Army. Fighting around the town developed into the largest tank action in Normandy before Mortain was relieved. The Germans then withdrew towards Falaise (6–12 August 1944).

Mortara ❙ 1849 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

Resuming his campaign for Italian independence after Custozza (July 1848), King Charles Albert of Sardinia sent his son Victor Emmanuel and General Giacomo Durando to challenge Marshal Josef Radetzky's Austrians at Mortara, south of Novara. The town was stormed by General Baron Konstantin d'Aspre and the Italians withdrew to Novara with heavy losses (21 March 1849).

Mortemer ❙ 1054 ❙ Rise of William of Normandy

Henry I of France helped William of Normandy beat rebellious nobles at Val-ès-Dunes (1047) then turned against the Normans. Defending a two-pronged invasion of Normandy, Duke William (later William I of England) routed Henry's brother Odo (Eudes) at Mortemer near Neufchatel. Henry and his ally Charles Martel Count of Anjou withdrew, but invaded again four years later through Varaville.

Mortimer's Cross ❙ 1461 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Just days after the death of Richard Duke of York at Wakefield, his son Edward intercepted a Lancastrian army marching from Wales under Jasper Tudor Earl of Pembroke and James Butler Earl of Wiltshire. At Mortimer's Cross, north of Hereford, Edward secured a decisive victory, then executed several Lancastrian captives, including Pembroke's father Owen Tudor (2 February 1461).

Mortlack ❙ 1010 ❙ Later Viking Raids on Britain

A renewed Viking invasion of Scotland saw King Sweyn Forkbeard (Svend I) of Denmark defeat Malcolm II at Nairn. The following year he returned to meet the Scots at Mortlack, northwest of Aberdeen. Malcolm defeated the Danes after a desperate struggle, driving them back to their ships. Sweyn then turned his attention instead to the conquest of England.

Mortmant ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Napoleon Bonaparte defeated Blucher's Army of Silesia four times in five days east of Paris, then marched south to meet the Austrians and Russians of Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg. At Mortmant, Russian advance units under General Count Pyotr Pahlen were beaten by Marshal Étienne Gérard and fell back through Nangis and Valjouan to Montereau (17 February 1814).

Morton's Ford ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

On a diversionary offensive against the Confederates in northern Virginia, Union General John C. Caldwell, with General Alexander Hays, advanced across the Rapidan against General Richard Ewell. In the heaviest fighting, at Morton's Ford, the Union forces met unexpected resistance and withdrew during the night after being held down by Confederate fire all day (6–7 February 1864).

Morval ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

General Sir Henry Rawlinson quickly regrouped after losses around Flers-Courcelette during the Battle of the Somme and renewed the offensive east towards Morval. The British secured Morval and Lesboeufs and the following day took Combles, while further west the offensive secured Thiepval. The advance then continued further east against the Transloy Ridges (25–28 September 1916).

Moscow ❙ 1238 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia

While campaigning in Russia, the Mongol Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) and his General Subetai destroyed Ryazan, then marched into the Princedom of Vladimir-Suzdal and attacked newly established Moscow. The young city fell after a brief siege and was plundered and destroyed by fire before the Mongols marched east against the city of Vladimir.

Moscow ❙ 1382 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

Two years after Grand Prince Dimitri of Moscow defeated Mongol Chief Mamai at Kulikovo, Mamai was in turn overthrown at the Kalka by his rival Toktamish, who then led a fresh Mongol offensive to crush the Russian rebellion. Toktamish captured Moscow after Dimitri fled. The city then suffered a terrible massacre and destruction as Mongol overlordship was reimposed (23 August 1382).

Moscow ❙ 1571 ❙ Russian-Tatar Wars

On campaign deep in Russia, Khan Devlet Girai of Crimea led 100,000 men to Moscow, where Princes Ivan Mstislavsky, Ivan Belsky, Mikhail Vorotinski and others were unable to defend the city. The Tatars burned part of Moscow—with a claimed 60,000 killed—before withdrawing with thousands of prisoners. Another attack a year later was repulsed at Molodi (24–26 May 1571).

Moscow ❙ 1611–1612 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles

Sigismund III of Poland captured Moscow with his victory at Klushino (July 1610), but Russians then besieged the city and the Polish garrison under Jan Karol Chodkiewicz was defeated by Prince Dimitri Pozharski (22–25 August 1612). The survivors led by Colonel Mikolaj Strus withdrew into the Kremlin, where they were starved into surrender and then massacred (27 October 1612).

Moscow ❙ 1618 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles

At the end of the Time of Troubles, 22-year-old Prince Ladislav of Poland, supported by Hetman Jan Karol Chodkiewicz and Cossacks under Pyotr Sahaidachny, marched on Moscow to claim the throne. Assaulting Moscow itself, he was repulsed by Prince Dimitri Pozharski. However, Russia soon sued for peace in which Poland kept its conquests, including Smolensk (1 October 1618).

Moscow ❙ 1941–1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Soon after victory at Bryansk and Vyazma, German forces reached 25 miles from Moscow before being stalled by bloody defence and extreme cold. General Georgi Zhukov then launched a massive counter-offensive west of the capital. The Germans fell back with heavy losses, but soon stabilised the front. They later checked a Russian advance at Kharkov (4 December 1941–March 1942).

Mosega ❙ 1837 ❙ Boer-Matabele War

Determined to avenge Boer defeat at Vegkop (October 1836), Andreis Hendrik Potgieter and Gert Maritz led 100 whites and 100 Africans across the Vaal against Mzilikazi's Matabele at Mosega, near Zeerust, northeast of Mafeking. A surprise assault destroyed the camp and recovered over 7,000 cattle, but Mzilikazi was absent. In November Potgieter attacked again at Kapain (17 January 1837).

Moskva ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Borodino

Mosquiteros ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Spanish irregulars led by José Tomás Boves defeated a Patriot force at Santa Catalina in western Venezuela, then faced 2,500 Republicans under General Vicente Campo Elías at Mosquiteros, east of Calabozo. A disastrous rout saw Boves beaten with terrible slaughter, though Spanish Royalists advancing from the east turned the tables a month later near Barquisimeto (14 October 1813).

Mosskirch ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General Jean Victor Moreau pursued the Austrians after their twin defeats at Engen and Stockach, continuing his offensive across the Rhine north of Lake Constance by chasing defeated General Paul Kray north towards the Danube. At Mosskirch two days later, Kray fought and lost a stubborn rearguard action. He soon counter-attacked at Biberach and Erbach (5 May 1800).

Mossy Creek ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

On campaign east of Knoxville, Tennessee, after victory at Fort Sanders, Union General Samuel D. Sturgis advanced against Confederate forces under General William T. Martin. At Mossy Creek (modern Jefferson City), Martin attacked an isolated Union brigade under Colonel Archibald P. Campbell. But the main force soon arrived and the Confederates withdrew (29 December 1863).

Mostar ❙ 1993–1994 ❙ Bosnian War

After Bosnian Croats and Muslims ejected Serbs from Mostar (June 1992), Muslim refugees entered Herzogovina's capital and Croats west of the Neretva besieged Muslim east Mostar. Croat shelling caused massive damage (including the historic Ottoman bridge) and Muslims from Mostar and nearby villages were brutalised before a peace agreement ended the siege (9 May 1993–January 1994).

Mosul ❙ 1743 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars of Nadir Shah

Nadir Shah of Persia captured Karkuk in Mesopotamia then besieged Mosul on the Upper Tigris, defended by Husain Shah. Using 160 cannon and 230 mortars, Nadir inflicted a terrible bombardment on the city, though the Persian assaults were repulsed with heavy losses. Faced by a rising at home, Nadir negotiated a truce and withdrew (14 September–20 October 1743).

Mosynopolis ❙ 1185 ❙ 2nd Byzantine-Sicilian War

See Strymon

Mota ❙ 629 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

See Muta

Motien Pass ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

While Russians on the Liaodong Peninsula north of Port Arthur tried to halt Japanese forces in the south at Delisi, General Tamemoto Kuroki's First Army advanced from the east and captured the vital Motien Pass, on the Liaoyang-Dandong Road. Russian General Feodor Keller tried to recapture Motien, but was caught in artillery fire and withdrew with heavy losses to Liaoyang (17 July 1904).

Moti Talav ❙ 1771 ❙ Maratha-Mysore Wars

See Chinkurli

Moturoa ❙ 1868 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Colonel George Whitmore assumed command in Wanganui after disaster at Te Ngutu-o-te-manu and attacked the Hauhau chief Titokowaru at Moturoa. An unwise frontal assault saw his armed constabulary routed with 40 casualties, including Major William Hunter killed. They fell back to nearby Wairoa, but Whitmore later marched to attack the Hauhau at Ngatapa (7 November 1868).

Motya ❙ 397–396 BC ❙ 1st Dionysian War

When Dionysius the Elder, Tyrant of Syracuse, attacked the island city of Moyta, just off the west coast of Sicily, the Carthaginian garrison cut the causeway. However, Dionysius eventually took the city by storm and massacred the residents. The following year the Carthaginian General Himilco easily recaptured Motya, re-establishing its residents at nearby Lilybeaum, then attacked Syracuse.

Moulay Ishmael ❙ 1835 ❙ French Conquest of Algeria

See Macta

Moulmein ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

General Hiroshi Takeuchi invaded Burma through Kawkareik (22 January) and attacked Moulmein, Burma's third largest city, held by units of General Thomas Hutton's army under Brigadier Roger Ekin. A fierce struggle ensued for the airfield with costly hand-to-hand fighting before the British withdrew across the Salween to Martaban, which was soon abandoned (30–31 January 1942).

Mountain Meadows ❙ 1857 ❙ Mormon War

With Federal government relations strained, Mormon fanatics led Paiute Indians against a wagon train from Arkansas passing through southern Utah to California. In a valley called Mountain Meadows, deceived by a ceasefire proposed by white men, about 120 emigrants were murdered. Twenty years later, John D. Lee was convicted for the crime and was executed on the site (7–11 September 1857).

Mount Badon ❙ 497 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

See Mons Badonicus

Mount Barbosthene ❙ 192 BC ❙ Spartan-Achaean Wars

On a renewed offensive against the Achaean League, Nabis of Sparta recovered the recently liberated port of Gytheum, then faced a counter-invasion by Achaeans under Philopoemen. Attempting to block Philopoemen in the Barbosthene Mountains, ten miles northeast of Sparta, Nabis was utterly crushed. Rome then intervened to enforce a truce and the Tyrant was assassinated soon afterwards.

Mount Gaurus ❙ 342 BC ❙ 1st Samnite War

Rome went to war with the Samnites to win supremacy in central Italy and Marcus Valerius Corvus and Decius Mus secured a victory just west of Naples at Mount Gaurus (modern Barbaro). Unable to fully conquer the Sammites, Rome turned to crush the Latins at Trifanum, before resuming war with the Samnites and suffering a decisive defeat in 321 BC at the Caudine Forks.

Mount Gilboa ❙ 1010 BC ❙ Philistine-Israel Wars

Despite victories against Philistines (including Michmash in 1013 BC), King Saul of Judah found himself under attack on Mount Gilboa, above the Plain of Jezreel east of Megiddo in the north of modern Israel. In a bloody and decisive defeat, Saul's three sons, including the outstanding commander Jonathan, were all killed. The King fell on his sword to avoid capture (trad date 1010 BC).

Mount Grammos ❙ 1948 ❙ Greek Civil War

See Grammos

Mount Haemus ❙ 981 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Tsar Samuel

Byzantine Emperor Basil marched into Bulgaria against the newly established Tsar Samuel and failed in a poorly managed siege of Sardica (modern Sofia). He then faced attack as he withdrew through the passes of Mount Haemus, south of the Danube. The Imperial army was heavily defeated, with substantial quantities of valuable baggage lost. Basil himself was lucky to escape with his life.

Mount Hermon ❙ 1973 ❙ Arab-Israeli Yom Kippur War

At the start of the Syrian offensive on the Golan Heights, helicopter-borne troops surprised the key fortified position in the north on Mount Hermon (6 October). When Israeli forces counter-attacked on the plain, paratroops under Colonel Hezi retook part of the strategic position. Commando forces finally secured the 8,200-foot peak just as a ceasefire ended the war (20–22 October 1973).

Mount Hope ❙ 1676 ❙ King Philip's War

With his allies destroyed at the Great Swamp Fight (December 1675), the Wampanoag Chief Metacomet—King Philip—returned to his tribal home at Mt Hope (Bristol, Rhode Island), where he was ambushed by colonial militia under Colonel Benjamin Church. Philip was shot by Alderman—a Wampanoag scout—ending resistance to white settlement in southern New England (12 August 1676).

Mount Kenya ❙ 1955 ❙ Mau Mau Revolt

Following his offensive against Mau Mau rebels north of Nairobi in the forest of Aberdare, Kenya, General Sir George Erskine sent his forces further east against guerrilla strongholds on Mount Kenya (Operation First Flute). While the big sweep saw fewer than 300 Mau Mau killed or captured, the tide had begun to turn. Erskine's successor soon attacked again at Aberdare (February–April 1955).

Mount Lactarius ❙ 553 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

A year after the disastrous defeat of Totila at Taginae, Goths in Italy and their newly elected leader Teias resolved to avenge the death of their great Chief. The hopeless last battle against Roman General Narses took place on Mount Lactarius, near the Sarnus (modern Sarno) River, south of Vesuvius. Teias and thousands of his warriors died and the Goths submitted to Emperor Justinian.

Mount Leburnion ❙ 1091 ❙ Byzantine-Pecheneg Wars

Emperor Alexius I faced a fresh incursion from Bulgaria into Thrace by the Pechenegs and secured aid from the Pechenegs' former Kipchaq allies. When Alexius attacked at Mount Leburnion, at the mouth of the Maritza, the Pechenegs were routed and a subsequent massacre virtually destroyed their power. A final Pecheneg offensive was destroyed in 1122 at Eski Zagra (29 April 1091).

Mount Longdon ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

British troops captured San Carlos, Falklands, then advanced towards Stanley and attacked to the northwest at Mount Longdon, with other actions at Two Sisters and Mount Harriet. Despite artillery support, Longdon was finally taken at bayonet-point, with 23 British killed and 47 wounded, and heavy Argentine losses. The final attack then went in at Mount Tumbledown (11–12 June 1982).

Mount Lyceum ❙ 227 BC ❙ Cleomenic War

As part of his ambition to bring the whole Peloponnese into the Achaean League, Aratus of Sicyon led a force into Elis in the northwestern Peloponnese, which sought aid from Cleomenes III of Sparta. Cleomenes defeated the Achaeans in battle at Mount Lycaeum, near Megalopolis. Aratus recovered to surprise and capture Mantinea and he soon fought Cleomenes again at Ladoceia.

Mount Oeta ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

See Vasilika

Mount Phoenix ❙ 654 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

At the head of an expedition against Constantinople, the Saracen General Mu'awiya was met by the Emperor Constans, personally in command at sea off Mount Phoenix, near Rhodes in Asia Minor. The Byzantines suffered heavy casualties in a great naval battle, but the victorious Muslim fleet was also badly damaged and withdrew to allow Mu'awiya to contest for the Caliphate.

Mount St Nicholas ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Turkish Commander Suleiman Pasha determined to clear Russians from the strategic Shipka Pass through the Balkan Mountains in Bulgaria to relieve besieged Plevna and attacked the nearby Mount St Nicholas. Suleiman was repulsed with over 3,000 casualties and the campaign settled into a three-month stalemate until the Russian attack on the Turkish camp at Senova (16–17 September 1877).

Mount Suribachi ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Iwo Jima

Mount Tabor ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

During Napoleon Bonaparte's siege of Acre, a Turkish and Mamluk relief army from Damascus under Ahmed Pasha surrounded French General Jean-Baptiste Kléber at Mount Tabor, south of Tiberias near the Jordan. Bonaparte marched east in time to save Kléber and destroy the Muslims, though he was unable to capture Acre and was forced to withdraw to Egypt (16–17 April 1799).

Mount Talipao ❙ 1913 ❙ American-Moro Wars

Soon after the massacre of Philippine Muslims at Bud Bagsak on Jolo, the Moro leader Datu Sabtal and his supporters fortified themselves on nearby Mount Talipao, where they were routed by Major George Shaw, losing perhaps 100 killed. The Moro later returned and, in virtually the last action of the war, they were again defeated and forced to surrender (13 August–22 October 1913).

Mount Tifata ❙ 83 BC ❙ Sullan Civil War

General Lucius Cornelius Sulla returned from Asia Minor to support the Senate against Gaius Marius the Younger and landed with 40,000 men at Brundisium, then marched north gathering support. On the Volturno near Mount Tifata he met and destroyed the Marian General Gaius Norbanus, who fled under siege to Capua. Sulla soon defeated Marius himself further north near Rome at Sacriportus.

Mount Tumbledown ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

As British forces advanced across East Falkland to Stanley, there was fierce fighting in the mountains to the west at Mount Longdon, then at Mount Tumbledown as Scots Guards attacked the most heavily defended Argentine position on the island. Despite their massive artillery fire, the British suffered costly losses storming entrenched troops before the final peak was taken (13–14 June 1982).

Mount Vesuvius ❙ 339 BC ❙ Latin War

See Suessa

Mount Vesuvius ❙ 71 BC ❙ 3rd Servile War

See Silarus

Mount Zion Church ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

In order to secure northeastern Missouri, Union General Benjamin M. Prentiss marched from Palmyra against secessionists near Sturgeon. After a check at nearby Hallsville, he defeated Colonel Caleb Dorsey near Mount Zion Church, inflicting over 200 casualties, then returned to Sturgeon. The rebels dispersed, but some fought again ten days later at Roan's Tan Yard (28 December 1861).

Mouquet Farm ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Pozières

Mouscron ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Prince Friedrich Josias of Saxe-Coburg resolved to stem a new French offensive in the north and sent Count Charles von Clerfayt towards Menin. However, Clerfayt was attacked and overwhelmed at Mouscron, just southwest of Courtrai, by the much larger force of General Joseph Souham. Further Allied defeats followed within weeks at Courtrai and Tourcoing (29 April 1794).

Moutoa ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

As they descended the North Island's Wanganui River, religio-military Hauhau led by Matene Rangi-Tauira were blocked at the mid-river island of Moutoa by loyal Ngati Hau under Tamehana te Aewa as well as Ngati Pamoana under Haimona Hiroti. A fierce semi-ritualistic action saw the lower river Maoris defeat the Hauhau, who lost 50 killed, including the prophet Matene (14 May 1864).

Moyry Pass ❙ 1600 ❙ Tyrone Rebellion

Two years after victory at Blackwater for Irish rebel Hugh O'Neill Earl of Tyrone, English commander Charles Blunt Lord Mountjoy attempted to march from Dundalk into Tyrone and was blocked by O'Neill at the Moyry Pass. Mountjoy captured some rebel entrenchments before being driven back with heavy losses. However, O'Neill was later bypassed and withdrew (2–5 October 1600).

Moys ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Withdrawing west across Saxony to meet the Allies after defeat at Kolin (18 June), Frederick II of Prussia left his brother Duke August-Wilhelm and General Hans Karl von Winterfeldt to hold an Austrian advance into Silesia. At Moys (modern Zgorzelec) near Gorlitz, Winterfeld was overwhelmed and killed. Duke August-Wilhelm was soon defeated near Schweidnitz (8 September 1757).

Mpukonyoni ❙ 1906 ❙ Bambatha Rebellion

In support of rebellion in Natal, the veteran Zulu leader Mehlokazulu (son of Chief Sihayo, killed at Ondini in 1883) gathered forces and marched towards the Nkandla, but was intercepted at Mpukonyoni by government troops marching north across the Tugela. Mehlokazulu suffered a costly defeat and withdrew to join up with Bambatha near the Mome Gorge (28 May 1906).

Msebe ❙ 1883 ❙ Zulu Civil War

After the British-restored Zulu King Cetshwayo returned to his kingdom following defeat at Ulundi (4 July 1879), about 5,000 of his uSuthu were ambushed in the Msebe Valley by the Mandlakazi faction under Zibebhu. Over 4,000 uSuthu were reported killed in the bloodiest ever Zulu battle. A few months later Zibebhu attacked Cetshwayo himself in his capital at Ondini (30 March 1883).

Mstislavl ❙ 1501 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War

Duke Ivan III of Moscow routed a Lithuanian army at the Vedrosha (July 1500) then sent a fresh force under Princes Vasily Shemyachich and Semen Mozhaysky against Alexander of Lithuania and Poland. At Mstislavl, south of Smolensk, Lithuanian commanders Astafy Dushkovich and Mikhail Zheslasky were routed with perhaps 7,000 killed but Ivan failed to take Smolensk (4 November 1501).

Muar ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While Australian forces tried to stall the Japanese in Malaya's northwest Johore at Gemas, further west Brigadier Herbert Duncan tried to hold the Muar River. Japanese Imperial Guards advancing under General Takumo Nishimura drove the allies back with heavy losses. Despite Australian reinforcements, nearby Bakri was also lost and the withdrawal continued to Singapore (15–20 January 1941).

Mucuritas ❙ 1817 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Determined to crush Venezuelan insurrection, Spanish commander Pablo Morillo sent General Miguel de La Torre, who unexpectedly met 1,300 llaneros under General Antonio José Páez west of San Fernando near Apurito at Mucuritas. De La Torre's force withstood the rebel cavalry until Páez set fire to dry grass. The Spanish were defeated and withdrew to the Apure (28 January 1817).

Muddy Creek ❙ 1877 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

In a final campaign against the Sioux following the Little Big Horn, General Nelson Miles routed Crazy Horse at Wolf Mountain then pursued a small Miniconjou band under Lame Deer. At Muddy Creek, an eastern tributary of the Rosebud in southern Montana, effectively the last action of the war saw 14 Indians killed, while the whites lost four killed and seven wounded (7 May 1877).

Mudgal ❙ 1443 ❙ Vijayanagar-Bahmani Wars

When Deva Raya II of Vijayanagar invaded Raichur Doab, Bahmani general Malik Tajjur relieved Raichur and Bankapur, while Sultan Ala-ud-din and a claimed 100,000 men drove the invaders back under siege at Mudgal, south of the Krishna. Three battles were fought over two months, the first won by Deva Raya, but Ala-ud-din then won twice. Deva Raya withdrew and agreed to pay tribute.

Mudki ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st British-Sikh War

A large Sikh army crossed the Sutlej into British East Punjab where they attacked a British force under General Sir Hugh Gough at Mudki, 20 miles southeast of Ferozepur. The Sikhs under Tej Singh were eventually repulsed after very hard fighting, losing heavy casualties and most of their guns. They suffered an even worse defeat three days later at Ferozeshah (18 December 1845).

Mughulmari ❙ 1575 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

See Tukaroi

Muhamdi ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

When Ahmadullah Shah, Maulvi of Faizabad, attacked Shahjahanpur, General Sir Colin Campbell sent Brigadier John Jones northeast from Fategarh to meet the Maulvi in a strong position just northeast of Shahjahanpur at Muhamdi. After cavalry reinforcements arrived Muhamdi fell by assault and the Maulvi fled to Oudh, virtually ending resistance in the Rohilkhand (18–24 May 1858).

Mühlberg ❙ 1547 ❙ War of the German Reformation

At war with the Schmalkaldic League of Protestant German states, Emperor Charles V and the Duke of Alva, supported by loyal Protestants under Maurice of Saxony, took a large army to Mühlberg, near Leipzig. In a massive blow to the Protestant cause, the Leader of the League, Elector John Frederick of Saxony (cousin of Maurice), was utterly defeated and captured (24 April 1547).

Mühldorf ❙ 1322 ❙ Habsburg Wars of Succession

Following the death of Henry VII, the Habsburg Frederick of Austria and the Wittelsbach candidate, Louis of Bavaria, fought a bitter civil war ending in battle at Mühldorf, east of Munich. Attacking rapidly before Frederick could be reinforced by his brother Leopold, Louis defeated and captured his rival and secured the German throne to reign as Louis IV (28 September 1322).

Mühlhausen ❙ 58 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars

With the Helvetii repulsed at Bibracte (July 58 BC), Julius Caesar marched into Upper Alsace against another Germanic invasion, led by Ariovistus. At an uncertain site, between Belfort and Mühlhausen, Ariovistus was routed and died fleeing across the Rhine. With the Germans expelled from Gaul, Caesar turned on the Belgae the following year at the Aisne and Sambre (10 September 58 BC).

Mühlhausen ❙ 1674 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

After an apparent withdrawal, French Marshal Henri de Turenne made secret mid-winter marches from Lorraine and surprised the Imperial army by a sudden reappearance in southern Alsace. At Mühlhausen, west of the Rhine, Turenne routed a large force under Prince Alexandre de Bournonville. Within days, he drove on north towards Strasbourg and battle at Turckheim (29 December 1674).

Mühlhausen ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As German forces swept into Belgium through Liège, French Commander Joseph Joffre sent General Louis Bonneau into German-occupied Alsace where he captured Altkirch and Mühlhausen. General Josias von Heeringen then counter-attacked in force and Bonneau withdrew into France. He was replaced by General Paul Pau, who led a fresh advance a week later into Lorraine (7–10 August 1914).

Mukden ❙ 1621 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

See Shenyang

Mukden ❙ 1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

In the final land battle of the war, Marshal Iwao Oyama launched a massive offensive against General Aleksei Kuropatkin, entrenched south of the Manchurian city of Mukden (modern Shenyang). Three weeks later—after the Japanese had lost about 75,000 casualties and the Russians 70,000 plus 20,000 captured—Kuropatkin withdrew north and Mukden fell (22 February–9 March 1905).

Mukden ❙ 1931 ❙ Manchuria Incident

Threatened in Manchuria by Chiang Kai-shek's unification of China, Japan's Guandong Army exploited an explosion on the railway to seize Mukden (modern Shenyang). Without authority from Tokyo, they proceeded to occupy Manchuria and create the puppet state of Manchukuo. Jehol (Inner Mongolia) was later added after victory at the Great Wall in 1933 (18 September 1931).

Mukden ❙ 1946 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

As Soviet forces withdrew from their post-war occupation of Manchuria, Communist Chinese General Lin Biao moved in and seized Mukden (modern Shenyang). When the Nationalist 25th Army, and later the 52nd, arrived in force, the Communists were driven out after very heavy fighting. They withdrew north to defend the important railway city of Siping (10–15 March 1946).

Mukden ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Concluding the Liaoshen offensive in Manchuria, about 200,000 men under Communist General Lin Biao encircled Mukden. Commander Wei Lihuang sent General Liao Yaoxiang west to relieve Jinzhou, but Liao was killed and his force was destroyed near Heishan (26–28 October). Mukden fell after a ten-month siege and was renamed Shenyang (October–1 November 1948).

Mukden-Jinzhou ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Liaoshen

Muktsar ❙ 1705 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

Sikh Guru Gobind Singh, relentlessly pursued by Mughal forces after battle in 1704 at Anandpur and Chamkaur, was attacked in a semi-desert area of the Punjab at Khidrana-ki-Dhab (modern Muktsar), south of Ferozepur. The Mughals were held off in this final battle, but 40 Sikhs of the Majha, who had deserted the Guru at Anandpur, died to a man and are revered as martyrs (8 May 1705).

Mulaydah ❙ 1891 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

Emir Abd al-Rahman overthrew Rashidi Governor Salim ibn Subhan and retook Riyadh, then he drove off a siege by Muhammad ibn

Rashid and raised revolt among his Qasim allies under Zamil. At Mulaydah, west of Buraydah, Zamil was routed and killed and Abd al-Rahman fled into exile. His son Abd al-Aziz eventually regained Riyadh by coup in 1902 (21 January 1891).

Mulbagal ❙ 1768 ❙ 1st British-Mysore War

When Haidar Ali of Mysore captured the British fort at Mulbagal, east of Kolar, Colonel Joseph Smith sent Colonel John Wood with a force of 5,000 European and Sepoy troops. Surrounded and heavily outnumbered, Wood lost over 200 men repulsing Mysorean attacks before Smith arrived with the main force and drove Haidar Ali off. The war ended early the next year (4 October 1768).

Mulheim ❙ 1605 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Forced back to the Rhine, Spanish commander in the Netherlands, Ambrogio de Spinola, took up position at Mulheim, near Duisberg, where he was attacked by Maurice of Orange and his brother Frederick Henry. The Dutch cavalry were repulsed in a hard-fought action, though infantry under Sir Horace Vere allowed Maurice to withdraw and save his army from destruction (9 October 1605).

Mulher ❙ 1671–1672 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

See Salher

Mulhouse ❙ 1674 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Mühlhausen

Multan ❙ 1398 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol conqueror Tamerlane began a huge invasion of northern India by sending his grandson Pir-Mohammed through the Hindu Kush into the southern Punjab against Multan on the Chenab. Local commander Sarang Khan surrendered after a bloody six-month siege and the Mongols continued east with Tamerlane to the decisive battle in December near Delhi (May–October 1398).

Multan ❙ 1818 ❙ Afghan-Sikh Wars

When Sikh leader Ranjit Singh sent Misr Dewan Chand against the great trading city of Multan, on the Chenab River near its junction with the ancient Ravi, Afghan Nawab Muzaffar Khan was defeated nearby and withdrew into the city under siege. He was killed in a last desperate sortie after three months and Multan fell, effectively ending Afghan presence in the Punjab (March–2 June 1818).

Multan ❙ 1848–1849 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

In renewed war against the Sikhs of the Punjab, Lieutenant Herbert Edwardes and a force of Indian irregulars won at Kineyre and Sadusam, and drove the rebels back to Multan. While Edwards was forced to lift his siege (July), it was renewed by General William Whish, who took the city by storm and forced Governor Dewan Mulraj to surrender the citadel (4 September 1848–22 January 1849).

Mulwagal ❙ 1768 ❙ 1st British-Mysore War

See Mulbagal

Münchengratz ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Prussian Prince Friedrich Karl invaded Austrian Bohemia through Liebenau and Podol, and joined General Herwarth von Bittenfeld advancing through Huhnerwasser, to attack Münchengratz (Mnichovo Hradiste) northeast of Prague. Austrian commander Count Edouard von Clam-Gallas was heavily defeated then driven back to further loss within days at Gitschin and Königgratz (28 June 1866).

Munda, Solomon Islands ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See New Georgia

Munda, Spain ❙ 45 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

With the sons of Pompey defeated in North Africa at Thapsus (46 BC), Julius Caesar marched against Pompey's son Gnaeus, who had fled to Spain. At Munda (an uncertain site south of Cordoba) Caesar secured a decisive victory. Pompeian commander Titus Labienus was killed, while Gnaeus was pursued and executed. Caesar went home in triumph but was soon assassinated (17 March 45 BC).

Munderkingen ❙ 1703 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

On campaign in the upper Danube Valley, Imperial forces under Prince Louis Margrave of Baden advancing towards Augsburg were attacked by Marshal Claude Villars, in the service of Elector Maximilian Emanuel of Bavaria. Upstream of Ulm at Munderkingen, Villars defeated Prince Louis then marched northeast to defeat another Austrian force in September at Höchstädt (31 July 1703).

Munfordville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Confederate commander Braxton Bragg led a invasion of Kentucky from Tennessee and attacked Munfordville, southwest of previous victory at Richmond, Kentucky, where General James R. Chalmers was initially repulsed. When the main Confederate army arrived, Colonel John T. Wilder surrendered the garrison of over 4,000 men. Bragg then continued northeast to Perryville (14–17 September 1862).

Munger ❙ 800 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

See Monghyr

Munster ❙ 1534–1535 ❙ German Religious Wars

When Anabaptists took over Munster in Westphalia it was besieged by Catholic Bishop Franz von Waldeck. Anabaptist commander Jan Matthys died in a sortie (5 April 1534) and the communalist city was eventually betrayed by a deserter. Jan van Leyden, Bernhard Knipperdolling and other leaders were tortured and executed and Anabaptism was brutally suppressed (February 1534–June 1535).

Munychia ❙ 403 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

In the aftermath of the Peloponnesian War, Lysander of Sparta established the oligarchy of the Thirty Tyrants in Athens, Greece. However, the Athenian Thrasybulus raised a Theban force, which captured Phyle and Piraeus, while a Spartan relief force was repulsed at nearby Munychia, with the Tyrant Critias killed. King Pausanius withdrew Spartan troops, Lysander was deposed and democracy was restored.

Muong-Khoua ❙ 1953 ❙ French Indo-China War

When Viet Minh commander Vo Nguyen Giap launched a large-scale spring offensive into Laos, local Lao-French forces were utterly overwhelmed. Ordered to make a stand at Muong-Khoua Captain Teullier's Lao Battalion fought a brilliant defence before being virtually wiped out. Only late reinforcements and the monsoon saved the royal capital at Luang-Prabang (12 April–18 May 1953).

Muottothal ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

General Alexander Suvorov defeated General Claude Lecourbe at Airolo (23 September), but arrived from Italy too late to prevent Russian disaster at Zurich and advanced into the Muottothal Valley between Altdorf and Shwyz, east of Lake Lucerne. Lecourbe was joined by General André Masséna yet Suvorov again drove off the French and managed to reach the Rhine (30 September 1799).

Murchakhar ❙ 1729 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

Advancing to reover Persia from its Afghan conquerors, General Nadir Kuli (later Nadir Shah) routed the usurper Ashraf Shah on the Mehmandost (29 September). Ashraf withdrew to Isfahan to regroup and took a defensive position to the north at Murchakhar (modern Murcheh Khvort). However, he was again routed and fled south to Shiraz and to further defeat at Zarghan (6 November 1729).

Muret ❙ 1213 ❙ Albigensian Crusade

When Pope Innocent III proclaimed a Crusade against Albigensian heretics in southern France, Anglo-Norman knight Simon de Montfort led the campaign. Concluding years of warfare, Raymond IV of Toulouse and his Spanish brother-in-law, Peter of Aragon, besieged de Montfort's garrison at Muret, south of Toulouse. However, they were routed and Peter was killed (12 September 1213).

Murfreesboro (1st) ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As Union General Don Carlos Buell advanced east towards Chattanooga, Tennessee, Confederate cavalry under General Nathan Bedford Forrest raided the Union rear to the northwest at Murfreesboro. Surprised by a brilliant dawn attack, General Thomas T. Crittenden and his garrison of over 1,000 surrendered and Buell's advance was diverted north towards Nashville (13 July 1862).

Murfreesboro (2nd) ❙ 1862–1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Stones River

Murfreesboro ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Despite defeat at Franklin (30 November), Confederate commander John B. Hood continued towards Nashville, Tennessee, sending General Nathan B. Forrest northeast against General Lovell H. Rousseau at Murfreesboro. After inconclusive fighting, a counter-attack by General Robert Milroy forced Forrest to withdraw. A week later Hood was routed at Nashville (5–7 December 1864).

Mursa ❙ 260 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

When Valerian was captured at Edessa, Ingenuus, Roman commander on the Danube, rose in revolt against the new Emperor Gallienus, who led a force into Pannonia. At Mursa (modern Osijek, Croatia), Ingenuus was defeated and killed by Roman cavalry under Aureolus, who then defeated another usurper, Macrianus, in Illyricum before turning against Gallienus himself in 268 at Mediolanum.

Mursa ❙ 351 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars

Roman General Flavius Magnus Magnentius in Gaul murdered Constans, brother of the Emperor Constantius, and rose in rebellion, taking a large army to Lower Pannonia. On the Drava River at Mursa (modern Osijek, Croatia), Constantius skillfully used his cavalry to defeat the usurper in the "bloodiest battle of the century." Magnentius then fled to Pavia (28 September 351).

Murviedro ❙ 75 BC ❙ Sertorian War

Soon after defeat at the Sucro, Rome's commanders in Spain, Gnaeus Pompey and Quintus Metellus Pius, were attacked in camp north of Valencia at Murviedro (modern Sagunto) by the combined rebel armies of Quintus Sertorius and Marcus Perpenna. While Metellus defeated Perpenna in a complex action, Pompey was badly beaten by Sertorius and both sides dispersed for the winter.

Murviedro ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Sagunto

Mus ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

See Bitlis

Musa Bagh ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Colin Campbell advancing on Lucknow sent General Sir James Outram against the Musa Bagh, a fortified palace about four miles to the northeast held by an estimated 9,000 rebels said to be under Hazrat Mahal, Begum of Oudh. Supported by artillery fire across the Gumti, Outram secured the position in a brilliant action. Lucknow itself fell two days later (19 March 1858).

Muscat ❙ 1507 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in Arabia

The great Portuguese commander Afonso de Albuquerque resolved to protect the sea-route to India, taking seven ships and a reported 500 men against the port of Muscat, on the southeastern shore of the Gulf of Oman. Muscat fell by bloody assault, followed by a terrible sack and massacre. The Portuguese then sailed northwest across the mouth of the Persian Gulf to attack Hormuz.

Muscat ❙ 1650 ❙ Later Portuguese Colonial Wars in Arabia

Following Portugal's expulsion from Hormuz (1622), Imam Sultan ibn Sayf of Oman attacked Muscat, across the Persian Gulf. After a siege in 1648 forced the Portuguese to yield neighbouring fortresses, the Imam led a fresh assault on Muscat itself. The garrison finally surrendered, ending Portugal's presence in the Gulf. In 1652 Oman turned south against Zanzibar (January 1650).

Museifré ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

After a French column nearing Suwayda in southeast Syria was destroyed at Mazraa, Foreign Legion Captain René Landriau reached Museifré, to the southwest, and built rough defences against Druze rebels. An heroic defence inflicted terrible Bedouin losses before Landriau was relieved just as ammunition was running out. Suwayda was relieved a week later (17 September 1925).

Mushahida ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Anglo-Indian commander Sir Frederick Maude secured the prized city of Baghdad, then quickly sent General Sir Alexander Cobbe in pursuit to Mushahida, on the railway 20 miles to the north, strongly defended by about 5,000 Turks. A frontal assault by General Vere Fane cost over 500 British casualties before the Turks withdrew north through Istabulat towards Samarra (14 March 1917).

Musian ❙ 1982 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Despite terrible losses advancing on Basra in July, Iran launched a fresh offensive towards Basra in the area southwest of Musian. Renewed fighting further north towards Mandali was intended to provide support and the Iranians managed to take Abu Ghurab. However, seasonal rains and strong Iraqi resistance ended Iran's offensive with heavy losses and Basra little closer (1–11 November 1982).

Musjidiah ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Colin Campbell pursuing Nana Sahib across the Gaghara, drove the rebels from Burgidiah to Musjidiah, northeast of Nanpara, said to be the strongest fortress in Oudh. After bombardment with guns and mortars Campbell stormed Musjidiah to find it abandoned. The fortress was demolished and within days the rebels were defeated near the Rapti at Banki (27 December 1858).

Muta ❙ 629 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

In the first clash between the Byzantine Empire and the spreading power of Islam, a raid into Syria was repulsed at Muta, east of the Dead Sea, by Byzantine and Christian Arab troops of Emperor Heraclius. When Muslim leaders Zaid and Jafar (the Prophet's adopted son and cousin) were killed, their army was saved by Khalid ibn al-Walid, who became Islam's greatest warrior (September 629).

Muthul ❙ 108 BC ❙ Jugurthine War

Rome's new commander in North Africa Caecilius Metellus was determined to avenge Roman defeat the previous year at Suthul and led a large army against King Jugurtha of Numidia. On the Muthul, an unidentified river inside modern Tunisia near the Bagradas, Metellus and Gaius Marius secured a brilliant decisive victory. Jugurtha then withdrew to his desert stronghold at Thala.

Mutina ❙ 193 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

In the years after crushing the Insubre Gauls at the Mincio and Lake Como, Rome continued to campaign against the Boii, established around Bologna. In battle at Mutina (modern Modena) Consul Lucius Cornelius Merula inflicted a decisive defeat, with perhaps 15,000 Gauls killed, although up to 5,000 Romans and their allies also died. Eventually the Boii too submitted to Rome.

Mutina ❙ 44–43 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Amid civil war after the murder of Julius Caesar, Decimus Brutus was besieged by Mark Antony at Mutina (modern Modena) and a relief army repulsed at nearby Forum Gallorum. However, Mark Antony was then defeated outside Mutina by Aulus Hirtius and Caesar's nephew Octavian, though Hirtius was killed at the moment of victory. Antony was forced to flee (December 44–21 April 43 BC).

Muye ❙ 1045 BC ❙ Wars of the Western Zhou

The Zhou people expanded into the Wei River Valley and King Wu led a large force across the Yellow River to threaten the ruling Shang Dynasty at Anyang. About 30 miles south at Muye, in modern Henan, the Shang army was decisively defeated. Di Xing, the last Shang King, killed himself and Wu established the Western Zhou Dynasty, which ruled until 771 BC at Zongzhou (trad date 1045 BC).

Muysers Bay ❙ 1625 ❙ Dutch-Spanish Colonial Wars

Despite Dutch defeat off Manila in 1609, a second fleet comprising six vessels was sent to the Philippines under Commander Carel Lievensz. Governor Jeronimo de Silva sailed out with seven ships to meet the Dutch and action between Bolinea and Los Dos Irmanos, known as Muysers Bay, saw one small Dutch ship abandoned. However, Lievensz eventually secured a decisive victory.

Mycale ❙ 479 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

At the same time as Persian defeat at Plataea, the Greek fleet under Leotychidas trapped a Persian force at Mycale, on the mainland of Asia Minor. The Persians beached their ships to join an army under Tigranes and at first held off the Greeks. However, their Ionian allies changed sides and in the ensuing rout, Tigranes was killed and Persian naval commander Artayntes fled (August 479 BC).

Myer's Drift ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

Sent to escort an incoming wagon train in northern Zululand, British Captain David Moriarty and 103 men left Luneburg, northwest of Paulpietersburg, and were ambushed at Myer's Drift on the flooded Ntombe by about 1,000 Zulus under Mbilini. A terrible rout saw Moriarty, 62 soldiers and 18 wagon-crew killed before reinforcements arrived under Major Charles Tucker (12 March 1879).

Myitkyina ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

General Joseph Stilwell's Chinese divisions and Merrill's Marauders advanced down the Hukawng and secured the vital airfield at Myitkyina. However they had to besiege Myitkyina city itself, bravely defended by 3,000 Japanese under General Genzu Mizukami. With the fall of Mogaung to the west, Mizukami committed suicide and about 800 survivors withdrew north (17 May–3 August 1944).

Mylae ❙ 260 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

Two years after escaping Carthaginian defeat in southern Sicily at Acragas (later Agrigentum), Carthaginian naval commander Hannibal, contemptuous of Roman naval experience, led his small fleet against Roman ships off Mylae (modern Milazzo) in northeast Sicily. Hannibal was decisively defeated and fled to Carthage, while Consul Gaius Duilius was awarded a victory column in the Forum.

Mylae ❙ 36 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

In the first of three naval battles off Sicily, Octavian's Admiral Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa cruised west while Octavian guarded the Straits of Messina. Agrippa encountered Sextus Pompeius (Pompey the Younger) off Mylae in northeast Sicily. However, an indecisive engagement saw Sextus elude Agrippa's heavier ships and he withdrew until two days later at Tauromenium (13 August 36 BC).

My Lai ❙ 1968 ❙ Vietnam War

On a search and destroy mission in Quang Ngai, US infantry under Lieutenant William Calley stormed the supposedly Viet Cong village of My Lai, where they killed more than 200 unarmed old men, women and children. When revealed a year later, news of the massacre caused unprecedented political and public outcry. Calley was eventually imprisoned, but only briefly (16 March 1968).

Mylapore ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

See St Thomé

Mynydd Carn ❙ 1081 ❙ Welsh Dynastic War

Gruffydd ap Cynan was driven from the throne of Gwynnedd (North Wales) by Trahaiarn ap Caradog after defeat at Bron yr Erw (1075). He later joined Rhys ap Tewdwr of Deheubarth (South Wales) against Trahaiarn and the Princes Caradog ap Gruffydd and Meilyr ap Rhiwallon. In battle at Mynydd Carn, in the Pencelly Mountains, Trahaiarn was killed and Gruffydd regained the throne.

Myongyang ❙ 1597 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Admiral Yi Sun-shin was recalled to command after Korean naval disaster at Kyo Chong (27 August) and surprised the Japanese fleet in the narrow strait of Myongyang near the island of Chido, off southwestern Korea. The "miracle of Myongyang" saw the hugely outnumbered Koreans secure a brilliant victory with Japanese Admiral Kurushima Michifusa routed and killed (26 October 1597).

Myonnesus ❙ 190 BC ❙ Roman-Syrian War

In naval war against the Seleucid Antiochus, Rome's Rhodian allies secured victory in July off Eurymedon before the main Seleucid fleet under Polyxenidas attacked Lucius Aemilius Regillus outside Ephesus off Myonnesus, in Ionia. Polyxenidas was routed in a large-scale action, losing 42 ships, allowing Rome to soon invade Asia Minor for victory at Magnesia (September 190 BC).

Myriocephalum ❙ 1176 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars

Emperor Manuel I Comnenus renewed his offensive against the Turks and took a large army into Anatolia, supported by his Crusader brother-in-law Baldwin of Antioch. Seljuk Sultan Kilij Arslan II destroyed the allies at Myriocephalum (southeast of modern Ankara) where Baldwin was killed. After the worst Byzantine defeat in over 100 years since Manzikert Manuel sued for peace (17 September 1176).

Mystic ❙ 1637 ❙ Pequot Indian War

When Pequot in Connecticut attacked Wethersfield and threatened Fort Saybrook, commander Lion Gardiner was reinforced by Captain John Mason, who led militia (supported by Mohegans under Uncas) against the Indian stronghold at Mystic, near modern Stonington. A decisive action saw the Pequot virtually annihilated, with perhaps 600 killed, which effectively ended the war (26 May 1637).

Mytilene ❙ 428–427 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

With Athens diverted by the siege of Plataea, five cities on Lesbos attempted an insurrection and Athens sent a fleet under Paches to besiege the city of Mytilene (modern Mitilini). Spartan Admiral Alcidas was sent to relieve their ally, but the Spartan fleet was intimidated and driven off. The garrison of Mytilene was forced to surrender and the rebel leaders were executed (September 428–June 427 BC).

Mytilene ❙ 406 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

See Arginusae

Mytilene ❙ 1462 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

Vizier Mahmud Pasha was determined to capture the Aegean island of Lesbos and took a large fleet against the capital Mytilene, held by Niccolo Gattilusio. Two weeks of bombardment, watched by Sultan Mehmed II from the Asian shore, destroyed city walls and Gattilusio surrendered the city and the island. A Venetian siege two years later failed to recover Lesbos (19 September 1462).

Myton ❙ 1319 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

As Edward II of England besieged Berwick, Robert the Bruce sent Sir James "Black" Douglas and Thomas Randolph Earl of Moray into Yorkshire. On the Swale near Myton they routed a local force raised by William Melton Archbishop of York and Chancellor John Hotham. With the Scots now threatening his rear, Edward abandoned his siege of Berwick and withdrew (12 September 1319).

N

Naarden ❙ 1572 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Advancing into Holland from the capture of Mons (19 September), Don Fadrique Alvarez (son of the Duke of Parma) reached the fortress city of Naarden, east of Amsterdam. While the city surrendered with little resistance, its loss was significant as the citizens were butchered and the defences demolished. As a result other Dutch cities resolved to fight to the death (1 December 1572).

Naas ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

At the start of the rising in Ireland, about 1,000 rebels under Michael Reynolds attacked the garrison at Naas, 20 miles southwest of Dublin, comprising 150 Armargh Militia and dragoons under Colonel Arthur Acheson Lord Gosford. In the early morning the rebels penetrated into the town, where they were mown down by intense rifle fire and fell back with heavy losses (24 May 1798).

Nabdura ❙ 741 ❙ Berber Rebellion

See Bakdura

Nablus ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

See Megiddo

Nablus ❙ 1967 ❙ Arab-Israeli Six Day War

On the offensive in the north, Israeli tank commander Uri Ram circled behind the key city of Nablus while Colonel Moshe Bar-Kochva's tanks turned south from Jenin. With other Jewish forces advancing north from Jerusalem, Jordanian General Runkun al-Ghazi suffered further severe losses before the Jews entered Nablus and soon effectively secured the West Bank (6–7 June 1967).

Nacaome (1st) ❙ 1844 ❙ Central American National Wars

Honduran General Joaquín Rivera went into exile with Francisco Morazán following defeat at Guatemala City. After Morazán was executed in Cartago (1842), Rivera invaded from Nicaragua against President Francisco Ferrera of Honduras. He raised Morazánista insurrection in the east at Texiguat, but was routed by government forces at Nacaome and lost again at Danli (24 October 1844).

Nacaome (2nd) ❙ 1845 ❙ Central American National Wars

See Comayagua

Nacaome ❙ 1903 ❙ Honduran Civil War

During a disputed election in Honduras, former President Terencio Sierra tried to annul the result and install his nominee Juan Angel Arías. However, American-born commander Lee Christmas changed sides to support Presidential claimant Manuel Bonilla and Sierra was heavily defeated at Nacaome. He and Arías fled into exile and Bonilla was declared elected (22 February 1903).

Nachod ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

While the Prussian Army of Silesia invaded Austrian Bohemia through Trautenau, further east Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm sent advance units under General Karl Friedrich von Steinmetz against the Vysokov Plateau, just west of Nachod. Austrian forces led by General Wilhelm Ramming were sharply repulsed and withdrew west to battle next day at Skalitz (27 June 1866).

Nacimiento ❙ 1873 ❙ Kickapoo Indian Wars

Colonel Ranald Mackenzie retaliated for attacks on the Texas border by taking 400 men into northern Mexico against the Kickapoo villages at Nacimiento, near the Remolina. Attacking while the men were away hunting, Mackenzie killed 19 and captured 40, mainly old men, women and children. Over 300 Kickapoo later voluntarily joined the hostages in Indian Territory (18 May 1873).

Naco ❙ 1914–1915 ❙ Mexican Revolution

A brave action on Mexico's northern border saw badly outnumbered forces loyal to President Venustiano Carranza defend Naco against Governor José María Maytoreno, a supporter of Francisco (Pancho) Villa. Colonels Plutarco Elías Calles and Benjamín Hill held out for over three months until Maytoreno withdrew. In November 1915 Calles defended Agua Prieta (October 1914–January 1915).

Nacogdoches ❙ 1812 ❙ Gutiérrez-Magee Expedition

In support of the revolutionary cause in Spanish Texas, American Filibuster forces under Lieutenant Augustus W. Magee invaded from Louisiana with Bernardo Gutiérrez against Royalist Governor Manuel Maria de Salcedo. The self-styled Republican Army of the North quickly seized Nagocdoches, then towards year's end marched inland against La Bahía (2 August 1812).

Nacogdoches ❙ 1832 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Just weeks after success at the east Texas town of Anahuac, Texan Patriots under Captain James Bullock opposed Mexican commander Colonel José de las Piedras at Nagocdoches. After a brief fierce action—with three Texans and more than 40 Mexicans killed—Piedras surrendered command to his Federalist deputy, Don Francisco Medina. He was then escorted to San Antonio (2 August 1832).

Nacori ❙ 1886 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

See Aros

Nadaun ❙ 1691 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

When the Mughal commander in the northern Punjab, Mian Khan, sent his son Alif Khan to levy tribute from the hill Rajas, some Rajas under Bhim Chand of Kahlur joined their former enemy, the Sikh Guru Gobind Singh, while others supported the Imperial troops. Alif Khan was defeated and driven back in battle at Nadaun, on the Beas south of Kangra, though the rebel Rajas soon made peace.

Ñaembé ❙ 1871 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Federalist General Ricardo López Jordán seized power in Entre Rios and a government force under General Ignacio Rivas beat him at Santa Rosa. They met again three months later at Ñaembé, just east of Goya, where López Jordán was even more decisively defeated and fled to Brazil. He eventually returned after six years and was repulsed at Don Gonzalo (26 January 1871).

Nafels ❙ 1352 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

When troops from Zurich occupied the Upper Linth Valley attempting to extend the newly founded Swiss confederacy to include Habsburg Glarus, Duke Albert of Austria sent Walter de Stadion, who was defeated and killed near Nafels. Glarus then joined the Confederacy, but was soon restored to the Habsburgs until the more famous battle at Nafels 36 years later (2 February 1352).

Nafels ❙ 1388 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

Two years after the rout at Sempach, a fresh force under Albert III of Austria invaded Glarus in Switzerland and was ambushed in a steep mountain pass above Nafels. As at Morgarten 75 years earlier, the outnumbered Swiss rolled boulders down on the invaders before attacking and destroying them. A subsequent truce recognised Swiss independence within the German Empire (9 April 1388).

Nagakute ❙ 1584 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Determined to secure power after the death of Oda Nobunaga, Toyotomi Hideyoshi defeated the son Oda Nobutaka at Shizugatake, then attacked Oda Nobuo, who had joined Tokugawa Ieyasu. In a complex battle at Nagakute, east of Nagoya, Ieyasu defeated and killed Hideyoshi's Generals Ikeda Nobuteru and Mori Nagakazu. He later submitted and fought alongside Hideyoshi (18 May 1584).

Nagal ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Brigadier John Jones marched from Roorkee across the Ganges into the Rohilkund, where he met a rebel force just four miles beyond the river near Nagal. A brilliant assault across a dry canal, supported by Colonel John Coke, routed the mutineers. They fled into the jungle, while Jones advanced southeast through Najibabad towards a larger rebel concentration at Nagina (17 April 1858).

Nagapatam ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

See Negapatam

Nagapatam ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

See Negapatam

Nagapatam ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

See Negapatam

Nagapatam ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Negapatam

Nagashino ❙ 1575 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

A renewed offensive against Oda Nobunaga after the action at Mikata ga hara, southeast of Nagoya (1572), saw new Takeda leader Katsuyori besiege nearby Nagashino Castle. Determined to crush his enemy, Nobunaga took a massive relief force supported by Tokugawa Ieyasu and Toyotomi Hideyoshi. Using effective musketry they secured a bloody and decisive victory (29 June 1575).

Nagina ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Crossing the Ganges into the Rohilkund, Brigadier John Jones defeated rebels near Nagal and days later continued southeast through Najibabad against a much larger concentration at Nagina, said to comprise 10,000 infantry, 2,000 cavalry and 15 guns. After a bold assault, bravely supported by Colonel Charles Cureton's Multanis, the rebels fled and Bijnor was reoccupied (21 April 1858).

Nagpur ❙ 1817 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

Raja Appa Sahib of Nagpur took advantage of renewed war in central India between the British and Peshwa Baji Rao II to beat his local British garrison, but was checked at Sitibaldi (26 November). He then faced a large British force under General Sir John Doveton (1768–1847) and was routed outside Nagpur. The Marathas surrendered the city after a brief siege and heavy assault (16–24 December 1817).

Nagy Sallo ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

As Austrian Imperial forces were driven out of Hungary after defeat at Hatvan, Isaszeg and Waitzen, a 10,000-strong rearguard tried to hold Nagy Sallo, north of Gran (Esztergom). Hungarian General Artur Gorgey and 25,000 Nationalists won decisively to secure the strategic crossing on the Gran before returning southeast to besiege the isolated Imperial garrison at Buda (19 April 1849).

Nagyszollos ❙ 1662 ❙ Transylvanian National Revolt

George Rákóczi II of Transylvania died after Gilau (May 1660) and Janos Kemény was elected Prince. However, in battle against Mehmed Kucuk in the Ukraine near Mukachevo at Nagyszollos (modern Vinogradov) Kemény too was defeated and killed. The defeat effectively ended Romania's struggle against the Turks, who appointed Mihaly Apafi as vassal Prince (22 January 1662).

Nagyvarad ❙ 1660 ❙ Transylvanian National Revolt

Just after George Rákóczi II of Transylvania died of wounds following Gilau, a Turkish army which had invaded Transylvania under the Sirdar Kose Ali Pasha laid siege to Nagyvarad (modern Oradea) on the Koros near the Hungarian border. Having resisted more than a month until gunpowder ran out, the siege ended when a mere 300 men marched out to surrender (14 July –17 August 1660).

Nahavand ❙ 641 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iran

See Nehavend

Nahawand ❙ 641 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iran

See Nehavend

Naic ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

On a fresh offensive south of Manila after victory in March at Imus, new Spanish Governor Fernando Primo de Rivera led a massive assault on Revolutionary leader Emilio Aguinaldo at Naic, southwest of Cavite. Following very heavy fighting, with costly rebel losses, Aguinaldo was forced to retreat northeast towards Montalban, where he made a stand in the mountains at Puray (3 May 1897).

Nairn ❙ 1009 ❙ Later Viking Raids on Britain

King Sweyn Forkbeard of Denmark led a renewed Viking invasion of Scotland, landing on the Moray Firth to besiege Nairn. To the east between Forres and Kinloss, Malcolm II of Scotland was wounded and defeated trying to drive off the siege. However, the Danes eventually withdrew for the winter. They returned the following year to meet Malcolm again at Mortlack.

Naissus ❙ 269 ❙ 3rd Gothic War

See Nish

Najaf ❙ 2003 ❙ 2nd Gulf War

American forces advancing north from Nasiriya met unexpectedly strong resistance by Iraqi Republican Guards at the strategic city of Najaf, where fierce fighting saw perhaps 500 Iraqis killed. Further heavy fighting ensued when Iraq counter-attacked against Americans attempting to break out to the north towards Baghdad and Najaf was finally secured (25 March–2 April 2003).

Najafghar ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

While British forces besieged Delhi, a new siege train under General John Nicholson, fresh from success at Trimmu Ghat, was intercepted by 7,000 rebels just west of Delhi at Najafghar. Nicholson routed the rebels, who lost 800 killed in a 24-hour action. However, a month later the 35-year-old "Lion of the Punjab" was killed taking Delhi. He was posthumously knighted (25 August 1857).

Najera ❙ 1367 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Navarette

Nakfa ❙ 1977–1988 ❙ Eritrean War of Independence

On the offensive in northern Eritrea, Liberation forces besieged then seized the highland city of Nakfa (23 March 1977). Despite rebel withdrawal from most cities in 1978, the mountain stronghold resisted years of Ethiopian siege, including the massive Red Star offensive of February 1982. Nakfa held out as a symbol of resistance until rebel victory at Afabet (March 1988) secured the north of the country.

Nakheila ❙ 1898 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

See Atbara

Naklo ❙ 1109 ❙ Polish-German Wars

Boleslaw III of Poland overthrew his brother Zbigniew (1107), then faced an offensive in the north by Pomeranians in support of the former King. In battle at Naklo, near Bydgoszcz, Boleslaw secured a decisive victory over Pomerania, which was later incorporated into Poland. He then returned south to meet an invading Imperial army later that year at Glogow and Psie Pole (August 1109).

Naktong Bulge (1st) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

With American and South Korean forces driven southeast into the Pusan Perimeter, North Koreans launched the first major offensive across a u-shaped bend in the Naktong River southwest of Taegu. The invaders were finally halted by desperate defence in the Naktong Bulge, and further north in the valley known as the Bowling Alley, but only after severe losses on both sides (5–19 August 1950).

Naktong Bulge (2nd) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

North Korean forces recovered from losses while attempting to breach the Pusan Perimeter, then launched a renewed assault towards Taegu, Korea's third largest city. After brutal fighting at the Naktong Bulge and further east around Yongchon, the invaders were driven back. The American and South Korean Allies were soon able to counter-attack towards Seoul (2–16 September 1950).

Nalagarh ❙ 1814 ❙ British-Gurkha War

General David Ochterlony responded to Nepalese expansion into northern India, advancing from the Punjab to attack the fortress at Nalagarh, north of Chandigarh, held by troops of Amar Singh Thapa's army. Unlike the costly resistance further east at Kalanga, the Gurkhas surrendered after 30 hours bombardment. Ochterlony continued north through Mangu to Malaon (2–5 November 1814).

Nalapani ❙ 1814 ❙ British-Gurkha War

See Kalanga

Namabengo ❙ 1905 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

One month after raising a siege by Maji Maji rebels at Mahenge in German East Africa, a well-armed column under Captain Ernst Nigmann marched on Namabengo (near Songea in Tanzania), which was threatened by over 5,000 Ngoni tribesmen. The rebels were destroyed by machine-gun fire, ending faith in the protection of Maji Maji magic, and the rebellion was soon crushed (21 October 1905).

Namasigue ❙ 1907 ❙ Nicaraguan-Honduran War

As President José Santos Zelaya of Nicaragua invaded Honduras, San Marcos fell and further south General Roberto González was met at Namasigue, southeast of Choluteca, by Salvadoran-Honduran troops under General José Preza. When General Nicasio Vázquez arrived with the main Nicaraguan force Preza was routed. Hondurans lost again days later at Maraita (18–20 March 1907).

Nam Dinh ❙ 1883 ❙ French Conquest of Indo-China

Captain Henri Rivière on campaign in northern Vietnam (Tonkin) captured Hanoi and later attacked Nam Dinh, to the southeast on the Red River, strongly defended by Prince Hoang supported by 500 Chinese mercenaries. The French and some Vietnamese levies took the port by storm after a heavy naval bombardment. Rivière was killed a few weeks later near Hanoi (27 March 1883).

Nam Dong ❙ 1964 ❙ Vietnam War

Following heavy mortar bombardment, a reported 900 Viet Cong attacked the remote camp at Nam Dong in northwest Vietnam near the Laotian border, manned by 300 Vietnamese troops, Nung irregulars and Allied Special Forces, who drove them off in fierce fighting. US Captain Roger Donlon won the first Congressional Medal of Honour of the war and Australia had its first fatality (6 July 1964).

Namka Chu ❙ 1962 ❙ Sino-Indian War

After weeks of skirmishing in the border dispute in northeast India, Chinese forces began their assault across the Namka Chu River, north of Tawang. Suffering from lack of artillery and political interference, the Indians under General Brij Mohan Kaul were driven off with heavy losses. Tawang fell three days later and the Indians withdrew south to Se La and Bomdila (20 October 1962).

Namozine Church ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

On the day that Confederate Petersburg, Virginia, formally surrendered, Union forces under General George A. Custer attacked the rearguard of the withdrawing Confederates to the west at Namozine Church. Following inconclusive action, General Fitzhugh Lee's Confederate cavalry eluded pursuit and withdrew further west towards Amelia Springs (3 April 1865).

Namsi ❙ 1951 ❙ Korean War

Nine B-29 bombers set out from Okinawa on a daylight raid against Namsi Airfield in North Korea. Despite heavy fighter escort, Soviet-manned MiG jets shot down three of the veteran bombers and four were damaged beyond repair. With 28 American aircrew killed, "Black Tuesday" was one of the bloodiest air actions of the war and B-29s were restricted to night operations (23 October 1951).

Namsos ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Andalsnes

Nam Tha ❙ 1962 ❙ Laotian Civil War

Rightist General Phoumi Nosavan secured Vientiane then resolved to combat the Communist Pathet Lao in northern Laos, sending heavy reinforcements to besieged Nam Tha. When a government column was ambushed and routed nearby, the 5,000 strong garrison panicked and fled, alarming US President John F. Kennedy who deployed troops to northeast Thailand (May 1962).

Namur ❙ 1692 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

A decisive siege saw French Marshal Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg invest Namur, the most powerful fortress in the Netherlands. Supported by the great engineer, Marshal Sebastien Vauban, Luxembourg drove off a relief attempt by William III of England and Holland. Garrison commander Baron Menno von Coehoorn was then forced to capitulate (25 May–5 June 1692).

Namur ❙ 1695 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

The powerful Netherlands fortress of Namur, taken by French siege in 1692, was later besieged by William III of England and Holland and Dutch engineer Baron Manno von Coehoorn, who had built its defences. French commander Francois de Neufville Marshal Villeroi was unable to relieve Namur and Louis Duke de Boufflers had no choice but to surrender the town (1 July–1 September 1695).

Namur ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

In the pursuit following Waterloo, Prussian Generals Georg von Pirch and Johann Adolf Thielmann were sent to cut off Marshal Emmanuel de Grouchy from the French frontier. Grouchy inflicted a sharp repulse on Thielmann's advance guard at Namur, though when Pirch's main army arrived he skilfully escaped across the Meuse and retired on Laon (20 June 1815).

Namur ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

General Karl von Bulow led over 100,000 Germans sweeping through Belgium to attack the supposedly impregnable fortress at Namur, defended by about 37,000 Belgians under General Augustin Michel. Following bombardment by heavy artillery used at Liège, Namur fell with thousands captured, just two days after French defeat at nearby Charleroi (21–25 August 1914).

Namwon ❙ 1597 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Renewing the war in Korea, Japanese forces under Konishi Yukinaga, Kato Kiyomasa and Kobayakawa Hideaki besieged the strategic fortress of Namwon, northeast of Kwangju, held by Chinese cavalry and Koreans under Yi Boknam. The garrison was routed and slaughtered in a bloody night assault. The Japanese advance on Seoul was blocked next month at Chiksan (September 1597).

Nanawa ❙ 1933 ❙ Chaco War

Four months after losing Boquerón in the Chaco Boreal to Paraguayan forces, Bolivians under German General Hans Kundt attacked the heavily entrenched fortress at nearby Nanawa—the "Verdun of America"—defended by Colonel Luís Irrázabal. Despite air, tank and artillery support, assaults in January and July failed and Kundt withdrew northwest to attack Gondra (20 January–14 July 1933).

Nanchang ❙ 1363 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

Amid bitter fighting for the Yangzi Valley, Han commander Chen Yuliang took a large armada to besiege Nanchang, held by Zhu Wenzheng for his uncle, the great Zhu Yuanzhang. After very costly losses on both sides, Zhu Yuanzhang sailed upriver with the Ming fleet to relieve Nanchang. Chen broke off the siege and the two forces met in a decisive battle on Poyang Lake (5 June–28 August 1363).

Nanchang ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

With Nanjing captured in March to become Taiping capital, their Western Expedition under Shi Dakai secured Anqing, then besieged Nanchang, defended by Governor Zhangfei and General Zhiang Zhongyuan. The Taiping eventually withdrew after repeated failed assaults and a 90-day siege. They later seized Hankou and Hanyang before attacking Wuchang (24 June–24 September 1853).

Nanchang ❙ 1913 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolution

President Yuan Shikai of Republican China seized arbitrary power and cracked down on the Kuomintang, provoking a military response, which was strongest in Jiangxi under Governor Li Liejun. Heavy fighting saw government forces capture the provincial capital Nanchang before the fall of Nanjing in September ended the so-called Second Revolution (1 August 1913).

Nanchang ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

While General Chiang Kai-shek took Wuchang, he sent Zheng Qian east to seize Nanchang. He was driven out by Lu Xiangting for warlord Sun Zhuanfang and Chiang suffered heavy losses failing to retake the city. When a new offensive took Sun's base at Kuikiang, Nanchang fell and the Nationalists continued downstream towards Hangzhou (19 September–8 November 1926).

Nanchang ❙ 1939 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

When Japan had secured Wuhan, General Yasuji Okamura led a major force south against Nanchang. The strategic city fell by storm and Chiang Kai-shek ordered a massive counter-offensive under General Luo Zhuoyin. The Chinese reached Nanchang, where they were eventually repulsed. In September Okamura advanced on Changsha (18–27 March & 21 April–8 May 1939).

Nancy ❙ 1477 ❙ Burgundian-Swiss War

Swiss forces twice routed Charles the Bold of Burgundy in Switzerland in early 1476—at Grandson and Morat—then invaded Lorraine to support Rene of Lorraine against Burgundian occupation. Attempting to recapture Nancy, west of Strasbourg, Charles was killed in a heavy defeat at nearby Jarville, finally curbing the ambition of the Duchy of Burgundy (5 January 1477).

Nancy ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Following defeat in Lorraine, French forces fell back on Nancy and Lunéville, where the Germans soon began a fresh offensive. Very heavy fighting in the nearby Grand-Couronné hills eventually checked the German advance. Despite regular bombardment by air and artillery, the French bravely held the line east of Nancy for the rest of the war (31 August–11 September 1914).

Nancy ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

American General George Patton was driving deep into Lorraine, when General Manton Eddy attacking the city of Nancy met unexpectedly stiff resistance from newly arrived Panzers. The city finally fell by storm, after which Eddy had to repulse severe German counter-attacks with both sides suffering heavy losses in tanks. The Americans then turned north against Metz (11–16 September 1944).

Nandi Drug ❙ 1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

When Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war against Britain, Governor-General Charles Earl Cornwallis captured Bangalore in March, then sent General William Medows north against the mountain fortress of Nandi Drug, near Chik Ballapur. The reputedly impregnable position fell to a courageous assault and Earl Cornwallis marched on Seringapatam (22 September–17 October 1791).

Nangis ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Mortmant

Nanjing ❙ 1129 ❙ Jin-Song Wars

With Emperor Qin Zong captured by Jin invaders in defeat at Kaifeng (1127), his brother Gao Zong fled to Nanjing and established the Southern Song Dynasty. However, Nanjing fell by storm and Gao Zong withdrew further south. The great General Yue Fei later checked the invaders and established a boundary between Jin and Song China. In 1161, the Jin were repulsed at Chenjia and Caishi.

Nanjing ❙ 1356 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

During widespread uprising against China's ailing Mongol Yuan Dynasty, the former monk Zhu Yuanzhang led a force across the Yangzi, where repeated assaults secured the key city of Nanjing. In a prolonged and bloody war, he defeated rivals including the Han at Poyang Lake and the Wu at Suzhou, to secure China and establish the Ming Dynasty as Hong Wu. The Ming ruled until 1644 (10 April 1356).

Nanjing ❙ 1659 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

Despite the Manchu taking Beijing in 1644, remnants of the Ming Dynasty fought on in the east until Ming General Zheng Chenggong (Koxinga) and a reported 200,000 men attempted to retake Nanjing. The over-confident Ming army suffered a terrible defeat, effectively ending resistance on the mainland. Zheng soon crossed to Taiwan and seized Fort Zeelandia (24 August–9 September 1659).

Nanjing ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Taiping commander Shi Dakai advancing down the Yangzi through Anqing with perhaps 100,000 men reached Nanjing, held by disgraced Comissioner Lu Jianying with Generals Fuzhu Hang'a and Xiang Hou. When explosives breached the walls, Nanjing was taken by storm with all three Imperial leaders killed. After a shocking massacre it became the Taiping capital (6–20 March 1853).

Nanjing ❙ 1856 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Determined to relieve the Imperial siege of Nanjing, Shi Dakai (from victory at Changshu) and Qin Rigang (from victory at Zhenjiang) led a massive attack on the Southern Imperial Barracks, outside the capital. Imperial Generals Xiang Rong and Zhang Guoliang were routed in a humiliating defeat and fled. However, the Taiping were then wracked by fratricidal war (17–20 June 1856).

Nanjing ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

After years of costly fighting in the provinces, new Taiping commander Hong Rengan and Li Xuicheng feinted towards nearby Zhenjiang, then led a huge converging attack on the Southern Imperial Barracks outside besieged Nanjing. Imperial Commissioner He Zhou and General Zhang Guoliang suffered a terrible defeat and the capital was again saved from siege (1–6 May 1860).

Nanjing ❙ 1862–1864 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

As Imperial forces converged on Nanjing, the siege began at Yuhuatai and by late 1863 Zeng Guoquan had encircled the Taiping capital, defended by Li Xuicheng. Soon after Taiping King Hong Xiuquan died (1 June) the city was taken by storm, followed by widespread massacre. Li was captured and executed and China's greatest civil war was virtually over (30 May 1862–19 July 1864).

Nanjing ❙ 1911 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolution

When Hankou was lost to a Manchu counter-attack (30 October) Republican forces marched on the Imperial capital Nanjing, where advance units were routed at nearby Yuhuatai by General Zhang Xun (9 November). However, Nanjing fell by storm and boy-Emperor Puyi (Xuan Tong) abdicated. President Yuan Shikai then moved the capital to Beijing (28 November–2 December 1911).

Nanjing ❙ 1913 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolution

President Yuan Shikai of Republican China seized arbitrary power, then crushed the Kuomintang in Jiangxi at Nanchang and KMT leader Huang Xing was forced to abandon Nanjing. But local commander He Haiming held out against the government army of Zhang Xun, who finally stormed and sacked the city, ending the so-called Second Revolution (29 July–1 September 1913).

Nanjing ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

While his Nationalist army attacked Shanghai, Chiang Kai-shek's General Zheng Qian attacked and stormed Nanjing. In the so-called "Nanjing Incident" troops then looted foreign embassies, killing and destroying, and a British cruiser used shellfire to protect foreigners before Zheng restored order. In August Northern forces counter-attacked to the east at Longtan (23–24 March 1927).

Nanjing ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Japanese forces captured Shanghai (11 November) then marched inland against Nanjing, where Chiang Kai-shek moved his capital to Chonqing. General Tang Shengzhi led a courageous defence before the city fell by storm, followed by the notorious "Rape of Nanjing," which reportedly cost over 100,000 lives. The Japanese then advanced northwest against Xuzhou (6–16 December 1937).

Nanjing ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

After decisive victory at Huaihai in January, Communist Generals Chen Yi and Liu Bocheng advanced south to the Yangzi and converged on Nanjing, held by General Zhang Yaoming for commander Tang Enbai. The Nationalist capital fell by storm, quickly followed by other major cities including Shanghai, effectively ending the Kuomintang government (20–23 April 1949).

Nanking ❙ 1129 ❙ Jin-Song Wars

See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1356 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1659 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1856 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1862–1864 ❙ Taiping Rebellion
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1911 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolution
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1913 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolution
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War
See Nanjing

Nanking ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War
See Nanjing

Nanning ❙ 1939 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Japanese forces frustrated at Changsha in Hunan in October, opened a new front in Guangxi, where General Kinichi Imamura landed near Qinzhou and advanced to take Nanning. He then captured nearby Kunlun Guan and Binyang (modern Binzhou), though lost them both to a Chinese counter-attack under Bai Chongxi. Japan eventually evacuated Nanning in October 1940 (15–23 November 1939).

Nanshan ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

An attempt to seal off the Liaodong Peninsula saw General Yasukata Oku land on the isthmus at Jinzhou, where Colonel Nikolai Tretyakov tried to defend the town but was refused reinforcements. In the face of suicidal Japanese attacks and naval bombardment, Tretyakov had to abandon the nearby fortress of Nanshan and Port Arthur (modern Lüshun) was cut off (25–26 May 1904).

Nantes ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Three weeks after victory at Saumur for the Royalists in western France, 30,000 rebels under Jacques Cathelineau, supported by Francois-Athanese Charette in the south, advanced down the Loire against Nantes, defended by the Marquis de Canclaux. In a turning point for the whole rebellion, the Vendéeans were crushed attempting a frontal attack, with Cathelineau fatally wounded (29 June 1793).

Nantwich ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

Anglo-Irish Royalist troops under Sir John Byron were recalled from Ireland and besieged the Parliamentary stronghold at Nantwich, Cheshire, where they were in turn attacked by a relief force under Sir Thomas Fairfax. A bitter mid-winter defeat saw the Royalists lose 500 killed as well as 1,500 prisoners. More than half of the captives switched sides to join the victors (25 January 1644).

Naoussa ❙ 1946 ❙ Greek Civil War

At the start of a large-scale guerrilla offensive in Macedonia, insurgent forces besieged Naoussa and were driven off by Liberal and government forces. Following a major action further south at Deskarti, the rebels attacked again and overwhelmed the small National Guard garrison. Naoussa was held briefly until fresh government forces arrived (6–8 August & 1 October 1946).

Naoussa ❙ 1948–1949 ❙ Greek Civil War

Insurgent forces attempting to regain the initiative in northern Greece were badly repulsed at Serres (1 December 1948) then at the key industrial city of Naoussa. Attacking again three weeks later, they overpowered the garrison. So-called economic warfare saw Nouassa's factories and shops destroyed before new government forces drove them out (21 December 1948 & 12–16 January 1949).

Napata ❙ 593 BC ❙ Egyptian-Nubian War

Determined to punish the Nubian kingdom of Kush, which continued to claim the Egyptian throne, Psammetichus (Psamthek) II of Egypt led a large force, comprising Egyptians and Greek mercenaries, up the Nile. After defeating the Nubian army he sacked and burned the city of Napata, near the Fourth Cataract. King Aspelta of Kush withdrew his capital further south to Meroe.

Napata ❙ 23 BC ❙ Roman-Nubian War

When Nubian Meroe on the Upper Nile raided into Roman Egypt, Governor Petronius marched south with 10,000 men and 800 horses. Petronius defeated the Meroite army near Primis (Qasr Ibrim) then attacked Napata, burned it to the ground and sold several thousand prisoners into slavery. Queen Candace Amanirenas fled Napata and made peace. Rome soon pulled back to Hiera Sykaminos.

Naples ❙ 1284 ❙ War of the Sicilian Vespers

In war for Sicily between Pedro III of Aragon and Charles I of Anjou, the Anjevin fleet was beaten off Messina (July 1283), then virtually destroyed off Naples by Aragonese Admiral Roger di Loria. The King's son Charles was captured and forced to acknowledge the separate throne of Sicily. Charles later revoked the treaty and war raged for 20 years until Aragon won the island (5 June 1284).

Naples ❙ 1442 ❙ Aragon's Conquest of Naples

René of Anjou was finally released from captivity after defeat at Bulgnéville (1431) and went to Italy to claim the disputed Kingdom of Naples. At the end of four years' war against Alfonso V of Aragon, René was beaten at Naples and had to withdraw. René returned to France, abandoning his claim on the kingdom. His son Jean was beaten 20 years later in Appulia at Troia (2 June 1442).

Naples ❙ 1528 ❙ 2nd Habsburg-Valois War

Genoese Admiral Filippino Doria supporting a French siege of Naples, intercepted Spanish galleys off Naples bringing supplies from Sicily. Imperial commander Ugo de Moncada was killed and his fleet destroyed. However, Doria and his uncle Andrea soon switched sides to the Imperial cause and the French had to withdraw. Further defeat followed in June 1529 at Landriano (28 April 1528).

Naples ❙ 1647 ❙ Masaniello's Insurrection

Taxes imposed by Spanish Viceroy Rodrigo Ponce de Léon Duke of Arcos provoked people in Naples to rebel under Masaniello (Tommaso Aniello), seizing armouries and opening the prisons. However, Masaniello was soon murdered by his disillusioned followers. Spain suppressed a similar rising in Palermo then retook Naples in 1648 and executed the remaining rebel leaders (7–16 July 1647).

Naples ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

When the Neapolitan army was crushed at Civita Castelana by French General Jean-Étienne Championnet (December 1798), Admiral Horatio Nelson took King Ferdinand IV and his family to Palermo. Championnet then advanced on Naples itself, which fell after hard fighting. Although Championnet was recalled, Naples was held by French forces until the following June (23 January 1799).

Naples ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Soon after breaking out from the hard-won bridgehead at Salerno, Anglo-American forces led by General Mark Clark drove 50 miles north towards Naples against a brutal fighting withdrawal under General Heinrich von Vietinghoff. The Germans demolished bridges to slow the advance, then destroyed much of Naples and its port before falling back to defend the Volturno (1 October 1943).

Narbonne ❙ 436–437 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

Theodoric the Visigoth broke the peace with Rome and was again repulsed at Arles (435) before taking heavy siege machines against Narbonne. With the Mediterranean city virtually starving, Roman General Litorius broke in to raise the siege. Theodoric was then defeated by a largely Hun army under the Roman General Flavius Aetius and withdrew to his capital at Toulouse.

Naris ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

With Herero rebels fighting in the north of German Southwest Africa, Nama tribesmen in the south joined in, led by the 80-year-old Hendrik Witbooi. At Naris, northwest of Marienthal, Colonel Berthold von Deimling surprised the Nama camp and more than 50 rebels were killed. Witbooi escaped and continued guerrilla war until killed in late 1905 near Vaalgras (4 December 1904).

Narmada ❙ 620 ❙ Indian Dynastic Wars

Harsha Vardhana of Kanauj conquered all of northern India, but when he attempted to invade the Deccan he was halted in a decisive battle at the Narmada by the warrior-King Pulakesin II of Chalukya. After further fighting, the Narmada was accepted as the boundary between the two empires and Harsha made no further attempt to expand southwards (disputed date c 620).

Narnaul ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Colonel John Gerrard led 2,500 men southwest from Delhi and met rebels under Sanand Khan, who had seized the fort at Narnaul then lost it to Gerrard through incompetence. Attempting to recover the position, the Erinpuram mutineers were defeated in very heavy fighting and fled, abandoning the fort and their camp. Gerrard was killed in the pursuit (16 November 1857).

Naroch ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Lake Naroch

Narrow Seas ❙ 1602 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

English Admiral Sir Robert Mansell was sent to intercept six Spanish galleys under Frederigo Spinola sailing to the Netherlands from Lisbon and began the attack off Dungeness. Action continued across the Narrow Seas towards Dunkirk, where Dutch Admiral Jan van Cant and a violent gale completed the destruction. Two galleys were sunk and three were driven ashore (23–24 September 1602).

Narungombe ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

During a relative lull in fighting in German East Africa, General Louis van Deventer sent British and South African forces against Hauptmann Eberhard van Lieberman at Narungombe, on the Lukuledi 40 miles upstream from Kilwa. Very heavy fighting caused unexpectedly high losses on both sides before the Germans were forced to withdraw (19 July 1917).

Narva ❙ 1558 ❙ Livonian War

Determined to conquer Livonia, Ivan IV of Russia sent a large army under the Tatar Segelei and Grandmaster Wilhelm Furstenberg of the Livonian Order soon negotiated a ceasefire. However, Livonians at Narva (in modern Estonia) attacked the nearby Russian fort at Ivangorod and Narva was taken by storm. Dorpat and other cities also fell before an armistice in May 1559 (11 May 1558).

Narva ❙ 1581 ❙ Livonian War

In support of Poland fighting Moscow over Livonia, Swedish forces under French-born Pontus de la Gardie (son-in-law of King John III) launched an offensive against Russian cities in Karelia and Estonia. In his greatest victory, de la Gardie captured the key port of Narva. This action, along with the continuing Polish siege of Pskov, soon persuaded the Tsar to sue for peace (6 September 1581).

Narva ❙ 1700 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Charles XII of Sweden defeated Denmark at Copenhagen in August, then moved against Russian Tsar Peter I and Field Marshal Fedor Golovin besieging the Estonian city of Narva. Attacking during a snowstorm with only one-fifth as many troops, Charles utterly destroyed the huge Russian army and Peter fled, leaving Charles to attack the Saxons at Riga (4 October–20 November 1700).

Narva ❙ 1704 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

A spring offensive saw Tsar Peter I of Russia besiege the powerful Baltic fortress of Narva, held by Swedish Count Arvid Horn against Scottish-born Russian Field Marshal George Ogilvie. With the fall of Dorpat (24 July), the Tsar and Marshal Boris Sheremetev reinforced the siege to 45,000 men. Narva was then bombarded and fell by storm, followed by a terrible massacre (June–20 August 1704).

Narva ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

With a White Russian and Estonian offensive repulsed at Petrograd (12 November), Red forces advanced on the Narva against Estonian General Jaan Tönnisson, later reinforced by General Johan Laidoner. Outnumbered Estonians withstood six weeks of heavy assault before the Bolsheviks accepted an armistice. They soon recognised Estonian Independence (16 November–30 December 1919).

Narvik (1st) ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

At the start of the German invasion of Norway, naval forces seized the vital northern port of Narvik, where they were attacked by Royal Navy destroyers under Captain Bernard Warburton-Lee. Two German destroyers and seven transports were sunk, though the British lost two destroyers and Warburton-Lee was killed. He was awarded a posthumous Victoria Cross (10 April 1940).

Narvik (2nd) ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

In a renewed assault on German ships at Narvik, in northern Norway, Admiral William Whitworth in the British battleship Warspite led a second destroyer raid into Ofot Fjord, where the remaining eight large German destroyers were sunk or scuttled. The two actions effectively halved Germany's destroyer fleet and helped the brief Allied recapture of Narvik (13 April 1940).

Narvik (3rd) ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Although the German destroyer flotilla at Narvik was destroyed, continued fighting for the vital northern port was the hardest of any in the Norwegian campaign. Anglo-British forces under General Pierse Mackesy eventually retook Narvik from General Eduard Dietl (28 May). However, Britain had decided to evacuate Norway and the Allies abandoned their hard-fought gain (14 April–8 June 1940).

Naseby ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

Charles I captured Leicester (31 May) then turned against a Parliamentary relief force under Sir Thomas Fairfax. Southwest of Market Harborough at Naseby, while Prince Rupert recklessly pursued Parliamentary cavalry, the Royalist infantry was destroyed with 1,000 killed and 4,000 prisoners. Apart from some minor actions, the defeat virtually ended the King's war (14 June 1645).

Nashville ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Despite a terrible defeat at Franklin, Tennessee, Confederate commander John B. Hood continued north against Nashville, defended by General George H. Thomas, supported by General James Steedman. Outnumbered two to one, Hood suffered another decisive defeat, losing over 4,000 prisoners. The Army of Tennessee was virtually destroyed and Hood soon resigned (15–16 December 1864).

Nasiriya ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

While commander Charles Townshend sailed up the Tigris towards Kut-al-Amara, General George Gorringe followed success at Ahwaz by marching northwest from Basra along the Euphrates to protect the other British flank. After a very difficult advance, supported by naval guns, Gorringe stormed Nasiriya, where the Turks lost 1,000 captured and 2,000 killed or wounded (22–24 July 1915).

Nasiriya ❙ 2003 ❙ 2nd Gulf War

Bypassing the southern Iraqi city of Basra, American forces raced northwest towards Nasiriya, where they met stiff resistance. While the main American thrust continued north through Najaf, hard fighting continued to secure the city and its strategic crossing of the Euphrates. Nasiriya was finally taken and a subsequent Iraqi counter-attack was later repulsed (22–23 March 2003).

Nasratpur ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Chanda, Uttar Pradesh

Nassau ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See New Providence

Nations ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

See Leipzig

Natural Bridge ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Union General John Newton took the offensive in northwest Florida near the end of the war, landing with a mainly black force south of Tallahassee to advance up the St Mark's River. While attempting to cross at Natural Bridge, eight miles northeast of Newport, Newton was heavily defeated by Confederate General Sam Jones and had to withdraw to his ships (6 March 1865).

Naukluf ❙ 1894 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

With his camp destroyed at Hornkranz in German Southwest Africa (April 1893), Nama leader Hendrik Witbooi fought a guerrilla war until cornered in the Naukluf Mountains by new German commander Theodor Leutwein. Witbooi was decisively beaten and submitted after a two-week action. He rose in rebellion again ten years later but was defeated at Naris (27 August–9 September 1894).

Naulochus ❙ 36 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Two weeks after defeating Octavian off Tauromenium, Sextus Pompeius—Pompey the Younger—was forced into battle with Octavian's remaining fleet under Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa. Off Naulochus, in the Straits of Messina, most of Pompey's ships were destroyed, virtually ending the war. Sextus was pursued to Asia Minor, where he was captured and executed (3 September 36 BC).

Naupactus ❙ 429 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

When Sparta sent a large fleet under Admiral Cnemus to attack Acarnania, the Athenian Phormio routed a supply convoy off Patras, then sailed out from Naupactus (modern Navpaktos) in the Gulf of Cornith to attack the main fleet. With just 20 ships against 77, Phormio lost some ships captured before recovering through superior seamanship. Cnemus was forced to retire (September 429 BC).

Nauplia ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

At the head of Russia's Baltic fleet in the Mediterranean, Scots-born Admiral John Elphinston attacked Turkish ships in the Gulf of Argolis in southeast Greece using newly invented explosive shells. The Turks withdrew to anchor at Nauplia, where Elphinston's squadron continued the attack. However, he could not force a decisive outcome until six weeks later at Chesme (27–28 May 1770).

Nauplia ❙ 1821–1822 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Governor Ali Pasha of Nauplia, in eastern Greece, had been under siege since the start of the war when an Ottoman relief army under Dramali (Mohamet Ali Pasha) approached. While some advance units reached the city, Dramali withdrew through disaster at Devernaki. The garrison finally surrendered, saved from massacre by the presence of a British ship (April 1821–22 December 1822).

Naushera ❙ 1823 ❙ Afghan-Sikh Wars
See Nowshera

Navalcarnero ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War
As the Nationalist army advanced on Madrid through Chapinería and Ilescas, Republican forces determined to hold the well-entrenched positions southwest of the capital at Navalcarnero. Nationalist General Juan Yagüe, with veterans from Africa and supported by Italian tanks, smashed through the defences in heavy fighting and the Republicans fell back on Madrid (21 October 1936).

Navarette ❙ 1367 ❙ Hundred Years War
Crossing the Pyrenees to restore Pedro IV of Castile, Edward the Black Prince led an English army against Pedro's brother Henry of Trastamara and French allies under Bertrand du Guesclin. In a one-sided victory near the Ebro River between Najera and Navarette, Edward's archers routed the French and Spanish army. Pedro was restored, but was overthrown in 1369 at Montiel (3 April 1367).

Navarino ❙ 425 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War
See Pylos-Sphacteria

Navarino ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence
After the bloody surrender of Monemvasia, in southeast Peloponnesia in early August, Greek commander Dimitrius Ipsilantis marched west to the siege of Navarino. Ipsilantis offered honourable terms, agreeing to transport the Turks to Egypt, though his irregulars again slaughtered the prisoners. The Greeks then advanced northeast towards the wealth of Tripolitza (29 March–19 August 1821).

Navarino ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence
Egyptian commander Ibrahim Pasha invaded southwestern Greece from Crete and besieged Navarino and neighbouring Pylos, defended by Alexandros Mavrocordatos and Georgios Sachtouris. With Greek defeat at Krommydi, and the fall of nearby Sphakteria, Pylos surrendered. Navarino fell soon afterwards while Ibrahim defeated a Greek force at Maniaki (21 March–21 May 1825).

Navarino ❙ 1827 ❙ Greek War of Independence
With Turkey again controlling Greece after Missolonghi and Navarino, British Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, French Henri Comte de Rigny, and Count Lodewijk Heiden's Russians attacked and destroyed the Egyptian-Turkish fleet under Tahir Pasha at Navarino. The Turks lost 60 out of 89 ships and 8,000 men, effectively ending the war and securing Greek independence (20 October 1827).

Navarro ❙ 1828 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars
General Juan Galo Lavalle opposed Argentina's peace with Brazil after victory at Ituzaingó (February 1827) and led a revolt against Governor Manuel Dorrego of Buenos Aires and General Juan Manuel de Rosas. Southwest of the capital at Navarro, Lavalle's veterans won a decisive victory. While Rosas escaped, Dorrego was seized and executed. Lavalle made himself Governor (9 December 1828).

Navas de Membrillo ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
General Sir Rowland Hill advanced into southwest Spain to relieve Tarifa and sent cavalry to attack 300 French infantry on patrol from Merida under Captain Neveux. Forming a square in wooded country, Neveux's men courageously drove off the cavalry, inflicting about 40 British casualties. The French abandoned Merida that night and marched south to Almendralejo (29 December 1811).

Navas de Tolosa ❙ 1212 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain
See Las Navas de Tolosa

Navsari ❙ 738 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Sind
Arab forces seized Sind after victory at Raor (712) and the next 20 years saw expansion into Malwa and Broach before Governor Tamim attempted to invade Gujarat. His forces were decisively defeated at Navsari by the Chalukya Prince Avanijanasraya Pulakesin, checking Muslim expansion. The Arabs had to abandon parts of Sind until control was restored by the new Governor Hakam.

Nawabganj ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

On campaign northeast from Lucknow, Colonel Sir Hope Grant attacked a reported 15,000 rebels under Beni Madhav in a strong defensive position 20 miles away at Nawabganj. At the end of an overnight march in terrible heat, Hope Grant inflicted a decisive defeat with a surprise dawn assault. About 600 rebels were killed and the disheartened survivors withdrew east (13 June 1858).

N'Axama ❙ 1878 ❙ 9th Cape Frontier War

As war continued in the Transkei after Xhosa defeat at Ibeka (September 1877), the Galekas of Krieli were joined by the veteran warrior Sandile and their large combined force attacked Regulars and Frontier Armed Police at N'Axama. The Xhosa were driven off with about 150 men killed for no European loss. The final action was fought a month later at Kentani (12 January 1878).

Naxos ❙ 376 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

Determined to support Thebes against Sparta, Athens sent Admiral Chabrias against the Spartan fleet under Pollio, which was based at Aegina to intercept Athenian grain supplies. During a decisive action near Naxos, in the Cyclades, the outnumbered Spartans reportedly lost 49 out of 63 triremes and Athens secured mastery of the Aegean for the next decade (September 376 BC).

Nazareth ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

During the so-called Ten Days Offensive, Israeli General Moshe Carmel moved northeast from Haifa to secure the Valley of Zebulon, then launched his main attack southeast towards Nazareth against a mixed Palestinian and Lebanese army under Fawzi el Kaukji. A brilliant advance through defended Arab villages saw Kaukji forced to flee and Nazareth fell before the Second Truce (12–16 July 1948).

Ncome River ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War

See Blood River

N'Djamena ❙ 1979 ❙ Chad Civil Wars

With Chad descending into chaos, Defence Minister Hissen Habré broke with President Félix Malloum and heavy fighting broke out in the streets of N'Djamena. Malloum was overthrown and rebel leader Goukouni Oueddei was named President, with Habré in support. The allies soon fell out and next year Goukouni used Libyan aid to defeat Habré and retake the capital by force (March 1979).

N'Djamena ❙ 1980 ❙ Chad Civil Wars

Supported by about 5,000 Libyan troops and 100 tanks, nominal President Goukouni Oueddei began a broad offensive towards N'Djamena, where Libyan air-strikes caused heavy damage. Although severe fighting outside the capital cost perhaps 50 Libyan tanks, former Defence Minister Hissen Habré was forced to withdraw. In 1982 Habré ousted Goukouni to become President (15 December 1980).

Ndondakusuka ❙ 1856 ❙ Zulu Wars of Succession

In the violent struggle to succeed Zulu King Mpande, his sons Mbulazi and Cetshwayo eventually went to war and met at Ndondakusuka near the mouth of the Tugela. Outnumbered, and with his back to the river, Mbulazi and five of his brothers were killed in a bloody rout. Cetshwayo became undisputed heir and later virtual Regent until Mpande's death in 1872 (3 December 1856).

Neaje ❙ 1016 ❙ Scandinavian National Wars

See Nesjar

Nebi-Samweil ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

See Jerusalem

Nebovidy ❙ 1422 ❙ Hussite Wars

Despite Imperial defeats at Vitkov Hill and Zatec, Sigismund of Hungary led a third expedition into eastern Bohemia and drove the Hussite Jan Zizka out of Kutna Hora, southeast of Prague. In a brilliant counter-offensive, Zizka soon attacked and routed the Imperial army at Nebovidy, three miles to the northwest. Sigismund then retreated southeast through Habry to Nemecky Brod (6 January 1422).

Neches ❙ 1839 ❙ Cherokee Indian Wars

Commander Kelsey H. Douglass led Texan troops against local Cherokees, sending Generals Thomas J. Rusk and Ed Burleson against 700 Indians along the Neches River, west of modern Tyler. A two-day battle and pursuit saw the Cherokee routed, with the veteran Chief Bowle killed. While most survivors fled to Oklahoma, a few fought again in December at the San Saba (15–16 July 1839).

Nechtanesmere ❙ 685 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Dunnichen Moss

Nedao ❙ 454 ❙ Hun-Ostrogoth Wars

In the struggle for power following the death of Attila the Hun (453), his former ally Ardaric of the Gepids attacked and defeated Attila's sons in Pannonia at the Nedao (Netad), probably a tributary of the Sava. Attila's eldest son Ellac was killed and his brothers fled towards the Black Sea. Thereafter, apart from a few minor incursions, the Huns virtually disappeared from European history.

Neerwinden ❙ 1693 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

The Anglo-Dutch army of William III of England and Holland defended a strongly entrenched position at Neerwinden, west of Liège near Landen, and appeared well protected. However, they were utterly routed by French veterans under Marshal Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg. The French also suffered high casualties and the Marshal did not pursue his defeated enemy (29 July 1693).

Neerwinden ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French General Charles-Francois Dumouriez, driven back after invading Holland, was defeated at Neerwinden, northwest of Liège, by Austrians under Friedrich Josias Prince of Saxe-Coburg. When he lost again three days later at Louvain, Dumouriez was accused of treason and went over to the Allies, who reoccupied Belgium, which had been lost in late 1792 with defeat at Jemappes (18 March 1793).

Negapatam ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

After the British fleet established itself on the southeastern coast of India, French Admiral Bertrand Mahé de la Bourdonnais arrived from Mauritius with eight ships and attacked the British squadron of Commodore Edward Peyton, cruising between Negapatam and Fort St David. Peyton withdrew after a long-range battle leaving Bourdonnais to besiege Madras (25 June 1746).

Negapatam ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years's War (India)

In resumed warfare against Britain in India, French Admiral Ann-Antoine d'Aché arrived on the southeast coast in support of new Governor General Comte Thomas Lally. After a previous clash off Cuddalore, d'Aché and Admiral Sir George Pocock fought another indecisive action off Negapatam, with heavy French casualties. They met again in September 1759 off Pondicherry (3 August 1758).

Negapatam ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

At the outbreak of war in Europe, Haidar Ali of Mysore allied himself with the Dutch in southern India, prompting a British expedition to Dutch-held Nagore. Advancing towards Negapatam, General Sir Hector Munro gradually captured the outlying Mysorean redoubts and trenches until Haidar Ali withdrew. The garrison then surrendered (21 October–12 November 1781).

Negapatam ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

The third of five indecisive naval actions off the east coast of India saw British Admiral Edward Hughes intercept French Admiral Pierre André Suffren supporting an attempt from Cuddalore to capture Negapatam. Suffren withdrew with two ships heavily damaged after a bloody engagement. The fleets met again three months later off Trincomalee (6 July 1782).

Negro Fort ❙ 1816 ❙ 1st Seminole Indian War

Colonel Duncan Clinch was determined to protect American trade on the Apalachicola River, through Spanish West Florida, and took a force, including Creek warriors, against Negro Fort, held by Seminole harbouring escaped slaves. Clinch destroyed the fort in a bloody assault with 270 Negroes and Seminole killed. In the ensuing war, General Andrew Jackson seized Pensacola (27 July 1816).

Negroponte ❙ 1470 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

After years of campaigning against Venice's Greek and Adriatic colonies, Sultan Mehmed II sent Vizier Mahmud Pasha with a massive fleet against the city of Negroponte (modern Khalkis) on the Greek island of Euboea. Venetian Admiral Niccolo Canale failed to drive off the attack and the Turks took the city, massacring the population. Canale was exiled for life (15 June–12 July 1470).

Nehavend ❙ 641 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iran

In four years after conquering Iraq at Qadisiyya and Jalula, Caliph Omar consolidated before sending his army into the Iranian highlands against Sassanian commander Firuzan. At Nehavend, near ancient Ecbatana in western Iran, General Nohman's bloody victory ended organised Persian resistance, though both commanders were killed. Arabs called it the "Victory of Victories."

Nekujyal ❙ 1612 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Thirty years after the Mughals completed their conquest of Bengal at Rajmahal, the local Afghan leader Usman Khan Lodi, son of Isa Khan, took advantage of a change of Governors to rebel against Mughal Emperor Janhagir. However, Usman was defeated and killed in battle at Nekujyal by the new Governor Islam Khan, ending Afghan influence in Bengal (12 March 1612).

Nemea ❙ 394 BC ❙ Corinthian War

After the Spartan victory at Haliartus (395 BC), the four-power alliance of Thebes, Argos, Corinth and Athens challenged the Spartans at the Nemea, southwest of Corinth. A classic hoplite action proved indecisive, though Sparta inflicted heavy casualties as their opponents withdrew. King Agesilaus of Sparta soon returned from Asia Minor to win at Coronea and lay siege to Corinth.

Nemecky Brod ❙ 1422 ❙ Hussite Wars

Sigismund of Hungary was driven out of Kutna Hora, southeast of Prague, by Hussite General Jan Zizka and retreated southeast through Habry to Nemecky Brod (modern Havlickuv Brod) on the Sásava, held by Polish Baron Zawiza of Garbow. Zizka's outnumbered force destroyed almost half the Imperial army of 23,000 and Sigismund was forced to withdraw from Bohemia (9–10 January 1422).

Nemiga ❙ 1067 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

Kievan Princes Iziaslav, Sviatoslav and Vsevolod (sons of Yaroslav the Wise) were determined to punish Vseslav of Polotsk for raiding Novgorod and attacked him at the Nemiga River, outside Minsk. Vseslav was beaten in a bloody action and Minsk was destroyed. Vseslav was taken captive to Kiev, where he was elected to rule after the brothers' defeat a year later at the Alta (10 March 1067).

Neoheroka ❙ 1713 ❙ Tuscarora Indian War
See Nohoroco

Neon ❙ 354 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War
In the war between Greek city-states, Philomelus of Phocia, supported by Achaean allies, invaded Locria and was met at Neon, north of Mount Parnassus, by 13,000 Thebans and Locrians. The badly wounded Philomelus killed himself after a terrible defeat and his successor Onomarchus led the withdrawal. Onomarchus himself was killed two years later at Pagasae (August 354 BC).

Neresheim ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
French General Jean Victor Moreau pursued Archduke Charles Louis of Austria into Germany, where he sent General Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr against the Austrians at Neresheim, southwest of Nördlingen. After an indecisive battle, with heavy losses on both sides, Moreau showed no sign of action next day and Charles drew off undisturbed towards Donauwörth (11 August 1796).

Néry ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)
During the Retreat from Mons, British forces under General Charles Briggs were attacked by German cavalry and artillery at Néry, south of Compiègne. The bloody rearguard action included an heroic stand by the Royal Horse Artillery—which saw three Victoria Crosses won—before the British had to withdraw with over 500 men lost then continued south towards the Marne (1 September 1914).

Nesbit ❙ 1355 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars
Despite a decisive Scottish defeat at Neville's Cross (1346), Scottish forces under Gilbert de Umfraville Earl of Angus and Patrick Dunbar Earl of March advanced towards Berwick and at nearby Nesbit defeated and captured English commander Sir Thomas Gray. While the Scots then took Berwick by surprise, Edward III later returned from France and easily recaptured the town (August 1355).

Nesbit ❙ 1402 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars
When Sir Patrick Hepburn of Hailes led Scottish horsemen raiding into Northumberland, he was defeated and killed on his return at Nesbit, near Berwick, by a large force under Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland and George Dunbar Earl of March. While only a minor action, Hepburn's defeat led directly to a large-scale Scottish attack and disaster in September at Homildon Hill (22 June 1402).

Nesjar ❙ 1016 ❙ Scandinavian National Wars
Olaf II Haraldsson was determined to regain Norwegian independence, lost at Svolde in 1000, and seized Danish parts of the country. He then attacked and defeated Swedish Earls under Sweyn Hakonsson in a great naval battle at Nesjar, near Larvik. Olaf was soon recognised as King of Christian Norway, but lost his crown ten years later at Helgeaa and died in 1030 at Stiklestad (25 March 1016).

Nesri ❙ 1674 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars
In order to allow Pratap Rao Gujar to atone for having let General Bahlol Khan escape at Umrani (April 1673), Maratha commander Shivaji sent his disgraced general against the Bijapur army at Nesri, 45 miles south of Kolhapur, near Belgaum. Pratap Rao was killed in a suicidal charge and the Muslim forces of Bijapur destroyed his disheartened army (24 February 1674).

Nestus ❙ 267 ❙ 2nd Gothic War
When the Heruls overran Moesia, Emperor Gallienus marched to attack the invaders, who met him at the Nestus, on the border of Macedonia and Thrace. A bloody action saw a reported 3,000 tribesmen killed, before the Herul Chief Naulobatus surrendered. Gallienus had to go home Italy to face a rebellion at Mediolanum.

His successor Claudius later returned to defeat the Goths at Nish.

Netad ❙ 454 ❙ Hun-Ostrogoth Wars
See Nedao

Netherlands ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)
See Rotterdam

Nether Wroughton ❙ 825 ❙ Later Wars of Wessex
See Ellandun

Neubrandenburg ❙ 1631 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)
Imperial commander Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly attempting to isolate Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in northern Germany, advanced against Neubrandenburg, in Mecklenberg, held by Marshal Dodo von Knyphausen. The city fell by storm with the garrison of about 3,000 slaughtered, triggering further outrages at Frankfort and Magdeburg (February–19 March 1631).

Neu-Breisach ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
With Schlettstadt taken, German General Hermann von Schmeling took his siege train further south along the Rhine against Neu-Breisach fortress. Following the fall of nearby Fort Mortier (6 November), Neu-Breisach capitulated, yielding a reported 5,000 prisoners and 100 guns. Schmeling then moved his heavy artillery southwest to the siege of Belfort (27 October–10 November 1870).

Neubrunn ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War
See Helmstadt

Neuhausel ❙ 1663 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars
Turkish Grand Vizier Ahmed Fazil Koprulu crossed the Danube with 120,000 men, then stalled at the fortress of Neuhausel (modern Nove Zamky) in Slovakia, defended by Adám Forgách, who held out for six weeks before capitulating. The siege delayed the advance on Vienna and the Imperial army was able to rally against the invaders in August 1664 at St Gotthard (August–October 1663).

Neuhausel ❙ 1685 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars
Two years after the decisive Turkish repulse at Vienna, Austrian Field Marshal Aeneas Caprara advanced to besiege the powerful fortress of Neuhausel (modern Nove Zamky) in Slovakia, defended by Bohemian troops converted to Islam. Charles V of Lorraine defeated a relief army at Gran and three days later took Neuhausel by storm, killing most of the garrison (19 August 1685).

Neumarkt ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
As French General Jean-Baptise Jourdan advanced across the Rhine into Germany, Archduke Charles Louis of Austria counter-attacked from the Danube and repulsed General Jean Baptiste Bernadotte at Deining, southeast of Nuremberg. Bernadotte suffered another sharp repulse next day further north at Neumarkt, but had managed to protect Jourdan's retreat (23 August 1796).

Neumarkt-St-Viet ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)
After the failed Austrian invasion of Bavaria, Baron Johann Hiller was driven south following defeat at Landshut (21 April), then turned on the pursuing Franco-Bavarian army of Marshal Jean-Baptiste Bessières at Neumarkt-St-Viet, north of Mühldorf. Hiller inflicted over 1,000 casualties in a tactical victory, but had to continue withdrawing through Ebelsberg towards Vienna (24 April 1809).

Neuss ❙ 1474–1475 ❙ Franco-Burgundian Wars
Charles the Bold of Burgundy interfered in a dispute involving the Archbishop of Cologne and besieged the Archbishop's fortified town of Neuss, close to Dusseldorf. Emperor Frederick III arrived with German forces though full-scale battle was avoided. Frederick agreed to withdraw, while Louis XI of France made peace and allowed Charles to conquer Lorraine (June 1474–March 1475).

Neuve Chappelle ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Determined to demonstrate offensive action to aid the French in Champagne, General Sir Henry Rawlinson attacked the German salient, southwest of Lille. Initial success secured strategic Neuve Chappelle before Prince Rupprecht sent reinforcements and battle ended with about 12,000 casualties on either side. Two months later the British attacked again towards Aubers (10–13 March 1915).

Neuwarp ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Swedish galleys campaigning against Prussian shipping off Pomerania attacked a Prussian flotilla at Neuwarp (modern Nowe Warpno), 25 miles northwest of Stettin. A four-hour fight saw the Swedes capture all the larger vessels, taking 600 prisoners. However, Prussia's flotilla was quickly rebuilt and Swedish involvement remained peripheral to the war in Europe (10 September 1759).

Neuwied ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

While Archduke Charles Louis of Austria was pursuing General Jean Victor Moreau along the Upper Rhine, further north near Coblenz other Austrian forces made a determined attack on the French rearguard at Neuwied. General Jean-Baptiste Kléber drove the Austrians off with heavy losses but, shortly afterwards he withdrew west across the Rhine (20–21 October 1796).

Neuwied ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

General Louis Lazare Hoche led a renewed French offensive across the Rhine north of Coblenz and, east of Neuwied near the Lahn, he routed an Austrian army under General Paul Kray, who suffered massive losses in men and guns. After French victory the same day at Altenkirchen, then on the Upper Rhine at Dierscheim (21 April), Austria sued for peace and withdrew from the war (18 April 1797).

Neva ❙ 1240 ❙ Rise of Russia

Prince Alexander of Novgorod faced an advance on Novgorod by the outstanding Swedish General Birger Magnusson and his Danish allies. On the banks of the Neva near its junction with the Izhora he met and destroyed the invasion. Following his decisive victory, Alexander was recognised with the honorific Nevski. Two years later he achieved an even greater victory at Lake Peipus.

Nevel ❙ 1564 ❙ Livonian War

When war resumed between Russia and Poland over Livonia, Russia suffered a terrible loss south of Polotsk at Chashniki and the previously successful Russian General Andrei Kurbsky later met a Polish force at Nevel, north of Vitebsk. Kurbsky was ignominiously defeated and, fearing the wrath of Ivan IV "the Terrible," he defected to the Poles. The angry Tsar arrested and killed Kurbsky's family.

Neville's Cross ❙ 1346 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

With Edward III occupied in France, David II of Scotland invaded England and was met just west of Durham at Neville's Cross by a large force under Ralph Baron Neville and Henry Percy of Alnwick. Despite the efforts of Robert the Steward and Sir William Douglas of Liddesdale, King David was defeated with terrible losses. He spent ten years as a prisoner in London (17 October 1346).

Nevis ❙ 1667 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

Threatened by Franco-Dutch forces in the West Indies, English Captain (later Admiral) John Berry in the frigate Coronation and a squadron of armed merchantmen attacked the rival fleet preparing to assault Nevis. After sharp action off Nevis Point, Dutch Commodore Abraham Crijnssen sailed north against Virginia and French Commander Joseph de La Barre withdrew to Martinique (20 May 1667).

Nevis ❙ 1799 ❙ Franco-American Quasi War

During America's undeclared war with Revolutionary France, the French frigate L'Insurgente (36) captured a schooner off Guadeloupe, but was later attacked off Nevis by Captain Thomas Truxton in Constellation (40). French Captain Michel Barreaut surrendered with 70 casualties after very heavy fighting. Truxton won another bloody action a year later off Guadeloupe (9 February 1799).

Newark ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

After a rapid march to relieve Newark-upon-Trent, held by Royalist Sir Richard Byron, Prince Rupert launched a heavy attack against the Parliamentary siege force of General Sir John Meldrum, who commanded over 6,000 men. Facing heavy losses, Meldrum surrendered his Parliamentary troops and their siege train and the Royalists retained the strategic city (21 March 1644).

New Bern ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Ambrose E. Burnside opened his coastal expedition against North Carolina by capturing Roanoke Island (8 February), then sailed south against General Lawrence O'Bryan Branch at New Bern on the Neuse. The Union captured the town after heavy fighting and held it for the rest of the war. Burnside then sent a force southeast against Fort Macon (14 March 1862).

New Britain ❙ 1943–1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Determined to isolate Rabaul, on eastern New Britain, American forces landed at Arawe and Cape Gloucester to secure the western end of the island. Seizure of the Admiralty Islands to the west and Green Islands to the east further isolated over 100,000 Japanese at Rabaul, who were heavily bombed and remained cut off until surrender at the end of the war (December 1943–April 1944).

Newburn ❙ 1640 ❙ 2nd Bishops' War

In a renewed struggle against King Charles I trying to impose a new prayer book on Scotland, over 4,000 Scottish veterans under Sir Alexander Leslie invaded Northumbria. West of Newcastle at Newburn they met a Royalist force led by Edward Viscount Conway. The English fled under heavy artillery fire and the Scots occupied Durham before Charles sued for peace (28 August 1640).

Newbury ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

King Charles I faced an approaching Parliamentary army under Robert Devereux Earl of Essex and raised his siege of Gloucester (6 September) to march south to Newbury, Berkshire, where Essex blocked the road to London. Despite a day of very heavy losses on both sides, the Royalists claimed the victory. However, they withdrew during the night to Oxford (20 September 1643).

Newbury ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

Returning from victory in Cornwall at Lostwithiel in early September, King Charles I was blocked at Newbury, Berkshire, by the Parliamentary forces of Robert Devereux Earl of Essex, Edward Montagu Earl of Manchester, Sir William Waller and Oliver Cromwell. An indecisive action saw the King cut his way through, though Manchester refused to pursue and was replaced (27 October 1644).

New Carthage ❙ 209 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

To avenge the death of his father and uncle in the Baetis Valley (211 BC), which cost Rome all of southern Spain, Publius Scipio the Younger took a large force against the great Carthaginian fortress at New Carthage (modern Cartagena). A brilliant assault gave him the city, along with its massive military stores. It was the first major victory for the 24-year-old, later famous as Scipio Africanus.

Newchwang ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Niuzhuang

Newfoundland ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

Emerging from Boston, the American frigate Constitution (Captain Isaac Hull) met and destroyed the British frigate Guerrière (Captain James Dacres) south of Newfoundland. With heavy losses the wounded Dacres surrendered his ship. The action is regarded as the first American naval victory of the war and earned Constitution the nickname "Old Ironsides" (19 August 1812).

New Georgia ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With Guadalcanal secured, Admiral Kelly Turner and General John Hester (later General Oscar Griswold) moved west against New Georgia, defended by General Noboru Sasaki. The guns at Enogai Inlet were destroyed (10 July) and Munda airfield fell after very heavy fighting (5 August). While the island was being cleared, attention turned to nearby Vella Lavella (2 July–25 August 1943).

New Hope Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union commander William T. Sherman pursued General Joseph E. Johnston through Georgia towards Atlanta, advancing through Adairsville. He then circled west towards Dallas to outflank the Confederates at Allatoona. At New Hope Church, Johnston repulsed Union General Joseph E. Hooker, then beat another Union advance further northeast next day at Pickett's Mill (25–26 May 1864).

New Lisbon ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Salineville

New Madrid ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Island Number Ten

New Market ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

In an attempted advance south along the Shenandoah Valley from Winchester towards Lynchburg, Union General Franz Sigel was blocked north of Staunton at New Market, Virginia, by General John C. Breckinridge and a mixed Confederate force. Sigel was badly beaten and withdrew, and was replaced by General David Hunter who soon resumed the offensive at Piedmont (15 May 1864).

New Market Heights ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Supporting the Union offensive in Virginia at Poplar Springs Church, Union General Benjamin F. Butler crossed the James, southeast of Richmond at Chaffins Bluff, against General Richard S. Ewell. He captured New Market Heights and nearby Fort Harrison, but a week later the Confederates counter-attacked at the Darbytown and New Market Roads (29–30 September 1864).

New Market Road ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

When Union forces crossed the James River southeast of Richmond, Virginia, and seized Fort Harrison, Confederate General Robert E. Lee counter-attacked and repulsed General Augustus V. Kautz further north at the Darbytown Road. At the New Market Road, Union General David B. Birney held firm and Lee was forced to withdraw with over 1,300 casualties (7 October 1864).

New Orleans ❙ 1815 ❙ War of 1812

British General Sir Edward Pakenham led a southern offensive against the United States, taking a large force to capture New Orleans, held by General Andrew Jackson. A frontal assault cost the British over 2,000 casualties, including Pakenham killed, for minimal American losses. The British withdrew east and attacked Fort Bowyer, only to find peace had been signed in Europe (8 January 1815).

New Orleans ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Union Flag-Officer David G. Farragut advanced up the Mississippi past Confederate Forts Jackson and St Philip, and seized New Orleans, Louisiana, from General Mansfield Lovell (who was subsequently court-martialled).

Following capture of the downstream forts, the Confederate city formally surrendered and was occupied by General Benjamin F. Butler (25 April–1 May 1862).

Newport, Rhode Island ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Supported by French ships, American General John Sullivan landed on Rhode Island to besiege Newport, held by General Sir Robert Pigot. After indecisive action between Admirals Charles-Hector d'Estaing and Sir Richard Howe (11 August), both fleets were dispersed by a storm. Following defeat on land (29 August), Sullivan withdrew from Rhode Island (29 July–31 August 1778).

Newport, Wales ❙ 1265 ❙ 2nd English Barons' War

After Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester defeated and captured King Henry III at Lewes (May 1264), the King's son Prince Edward gathered a powerful army in the west and repulsed de Montfort north of the Bristol Channel at Newport. The Earl withdrew into Wales and when he re-crossed the Severn a month later against Edward, he was defeated and killed at Evesham (8 July 1265).

Newport News ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Hampton Roads

New Providence ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In a well co-ordinated operation, American Commodore Esek Hopkins and Marine Captain Samuel Nicholas sailed from Philadelphia to attack New Providence (modern Nassau) in the British West Indies. Forts Montague and Nassau were seized after only light resistance, along with many guns and mortars. Governor Montfort Browne was captured and later exchanged (3–4 March 1776).

New River Bridge ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Cove Mountain

New Ross ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

The first major battle of the Rebellion saw a force of perhaps 30,000 insurgents under Bagenal Harvey attack New Ross, near Waterford, defended by 1,400 regulars under General Henry Johnson and Colonel Robert Crauford. Despite capturing part of the town, the rebels were repulsed, losing about 2,600 men and most of their field guns. Harvey was promptly deposed as leader (5 June 1798).

Newtonia ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Six months after defeat at Pea Ridge, Confederate forces returned to southwest Missouri to threaten General James B. Blunt's Union army. At Newtonia, south of Carthage, Confederate cavalry led by Colonel Douglas H. Cooper defeated advance units under Colonel Friedrich Salomon. Cooper was then pursued west towards Old Fort Wayne by Blunt's approaching army (30 September 1862).

Newtonia ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

At the end of his bold expedition across Missouri, Confederate General Sterling Price retreated through defeat at Mine Creek and Marmiton to Newtonia, south of Carthage, where his shattered survivors were attacked by General James G. Blunt. With fresh Union forces arriving, Price withdrew west into Indian Territory, eluding pursuit until the end of the war (28 October 1864).

Newtown ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

American Generals John Sullivan and James Clinton led a punitive expedition against pro-British Indians, who had taken part in the Wyoming and Cherry Valley Massacres in 1778, and marched into New York State. At Newtown, near modern Elmira, they routed a joint force of Tories and Iroquois and over the next three months, they virtually destroyed the Iroquois nation (29 August 1779).

Newtown Butler ❙ 1689 ❙ War of the Glorious Revolution

A few days after James II failed at Londonderry in northern Ireland, he sent Justin Macarthy Viscount Mountcashel to conclude the siege of Protestant Enniskillen on Lough Erne. However, at nearby Newtown Butler, Macarthy's Catholics were routed by Colonel William Wolesley, losing over 1,000 killed, 500 captured and all their cannon. Enniskillen was saved (2 August 1689).

New Ulm ❙ 1862 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

With Little Crow of the Santee Sioux wounded besieging Fort Ridgely, 500 warriors under Mankato attacked the German settlement at New Ulm, on the Minnesota. About 150 volunteers under Judge Charles Flandrau burned outlying buildings to deny the attackers cover. After very fierce fighting the Indians were driven off and withdrew with their prisoners and plunder (23 August 1862).

Nezeros ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

In response to Greek border incursions, Ottoman commander Edhem Pasha marched into Thessaly and in the east, sent forces through Analipsis towards Nezeros, where Colonel Louros and 1,200 Greeks defended Mount Annunciation and Marcasi Hill. While repeated assaults were repulsed, Crown Prince Constantine forbade an offensive action until the advance on Vigla (17–18 April 1897).

Nezhatina Niva ❙ 1078 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

When Sviatoslav of Kiev died, his brothers Iziaslav and Vsevolod attacked their nephews Oleg Sviatoslavich and Boris Vseslavich, who were threatening Chernigov. At nearby Nezhatina Niva, Boris was defeated and killed and Oleg fled. However, Iziaslav was also killed and Vsevolod became Grand Prince of Kiev. Oleg returned from exile 15 years later to retake Chernigov (3 October 1078).

Nezib ❙ 1839 ❙ 2nd Turko-Egyptian War

Egyptian Viceroy Mohammed Ali renewed his war against Turkey by sending his son Ibrahim Pasha with a large force into northern Syria, where he defeated the Turkish army of Hafiz Pasha and Prussian advisor Helmuth von Moltke at Nezib, near Aleppo. Ottoman Sultan Mahmud II died a week later and when his fleet surrendered, European forces intervened at Beirut and Acre (24 June 1839).

Ngakyedauk ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

See Admin Box

Ngasaunggyan ❙ 1277 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

While campaigning in southern Burma, the Mongol Kubilai Khan sent Nasir-al-din and 10,000 men against King Narathihapate of Pagan. In a decisive battle at Ngasaunggyan, the Mongols panicked the Burmese elephants with fire arrows and routed Narathihapate. A second expedition under Kubilai's grandson Esen Temur in 1287 forced the pliable new King Kyawswa to pay tribute.

Ngatapa ❙ 1869 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Hauhau rebel Te Kooti was pursued into the hills behind Poverty Bay to defeat at Makaretu, then withdrew southwest to his stockade at Ngatapa, where he was cornered by Colonel George Whitmore and friendly Maoris. A bloody siege and assault cost the Hauhau 136 men killed (many after being captured). However, Te Kooti escaped and attacked Mohaka in April (1–4 January 1869).

Nghia Lo ❙ 1951 ❙ French Indo-China War

Re-equipping during the rainy season after costly defeats in the Red River Delta, Viet Minh commander Vo Nguyen Giap crossed the upper Red River at Yen Bai and attacked Nghia

Lo, 75 miles northwest of Hanoi. However, daylight brought French air attack and paratroop reinforcements. Giap was badly defeated, encouraging a French offensive west of Hanoi at Hoa Binh (2–4 September 1951).

Nghia Lo ❙ 1952 ❙ French Indo-China War

General Vo Nguyen Giap resolved to draw French forces beyond defensive lines and attacked between the Black and Red Rivers around Nghia Lo (11 October). General Raoul Salan launched 30,000 men on Operation Lorraine, with a paratroop drop at Phu Doan. Viet Minh guerrilla attacks cost over 1,200 French casualties and Salan finally withdrew without success (29 October–17 November 1952).

Nguyen Hue ❙ 1972 ❙ Vietnam War

See Eastertide Offensive

Nhembucu ❙ 1867 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

On campaign in the Nhembucu district northeast of Humaitá, Allied forces led by Brazilian commander Jose Joaquim de Andrade Neves routed Paraguayan Colonel Gorgônio Rojas. Victory enabled Andrade Neves to seize the river port of Pilar on the Paraguay and he was created Baron de Triunfo. He defeated Rojas again in 1868 at the Tebicauri, but died at Ita Ybate (20 September 1867).

Nhu-Guacu ❙ 1869 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Acosta-Ñu

Niagara ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

See Fort Niagara

Niagara ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

See Fort Niagara

Nianzhuang ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

As the Communist Huaihai offensive converged on Xuzhou, General Chen Yi attacked an approaching Nationalist force under Huang Bodao 20 miles east at Nianzhuang. A decisive defeat saw Huang's army surrounded and destroyed, with 90,000 men and over 1,000 guns lost. Huang committed suicide and Chen swung south towards Shuangduiji (7–22 November 1948).

Nibley Green ❙ 1470 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Amid anarchy caused by the war, a long-standing feud flared and the claimed last private battle fought in England was arranged between William Lord Berkeley and Thomas Talbot Viscount Lisle, grandsons of the great John Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury. At Nibley Green, near Berkeley Castle west of Stroud, Lisle was killed and his seat at Wotton Manor was plundered (20 March 1470).

Nicaea ❙ 194 ❙ Wars of Emperor Severus

Emperor Septimius Severus marched into Asia against Pescennius Niger and defeated his rival's army at Cyzicus, then pursued Niger himself into Bithynia. East of Nicaea, on modern Lake Iznik in northern Turkey, Niger was heavily defeated by the General Tiberius Claudius Candidus. Faced by the arrival of fresh Severan Legions, Niger withdrew to Antioch. He was routed later that year at Issus.

Nicaea ❙ 1077 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Succession

Political instability following Christian disaster at Manzikert (1071) saw Byzantine General Nicephorus Botaniates gather Turkish support and march against the army of Emperor Michael VII near Nicaea (modern Iznik). The Imperial troops were decisively defeated, after which Botaniates seized the throne in Constantinople as Nichephorus III. He turned on his rival Briennes in 1079 at Calavryta.

Nicaea ❙ 1096 ❙ 1st Crusade

See Xerigordon

Nicaea ❙ 1097 ❙ 1st Crusade

In return for assistance while passing through Byzantium, Crusaders under Godfrey de Bouillon marched east to besiege Nicaea (modern Iznik) on behalf of Emperor Alexius. Kilij Arslan ibn-Suleiman, Sultan of Rum, failed in two attempts to raise the siege and eventually negotiated to surrender the city personally to Alexius to avoid a sack by the Crusaders (14 May–19 June 1097).

Nice ❙ 1543 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Turkish Admiral Khair-ed-Din Barbarossa took his fleet to the French Riviera, then started home and attacked the port of Nice, held by Duke Emmanuel Philibert of Savoy, an ally of Emperor Ferdinand I. Nice surrendered after Turkish artillery smashed the city walls, though the citadel held out. Barbarossa then broke the terms of capitulation and sacked Nice before burning it to the ground.

Nicholson's Nek ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As Boer forces advanced deep into Natal, British commander Sir George White at Ladysmith attacked a small force at Rietfontein, then led a larger offensive northeast to Nicholson's Nek, attempting to emulate success at Elandslaagte. White was repulsed by Christiaan de Wet with humiliating losses (almost 1,000 men surrendered) and he fell back to Ladysmith (30 October 1899).

Nicomedia ❙ 782 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

In retaliation for the sack of Hadath in 779, Arab forces captured Samalu, then Caliph al-Mahdi sent his teenage son Harun al-rashid and General Yazid ibn Mayzad al-Shaybani on a second expedition into Byzantine Anatolia. Victory at Nicomedia (modern Izmit) enabled Harun to reach the Bosphorus and Empress Irene (Regent for Constantine VI) was forced to accept a humiliating peace.

Nicomedia ❙ 1331–1337 ❙ Byzantine-Ottoman Wars

Sultan Orkhan Gazi completed expansion of Ottoman power in northern Turkey by besieging Nicomedia (modern Izmit) on the eastern extremity of the Sea of Marmara. With the capture of Brusa (1326) and the surrender of Nicaea after Pelacanon (1328), the fall of this last remaining Byzantine outpost after a six-year siege effectively ended Imperial influence south of the Sea of Marmara.

Nicopolis, Armenia ❙ 66 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War

See Lycus

Nicopolis, Armenia ❙ 48 BC ❙ Roman-Pontian Wars

Taking advantage of civil war in Rome, King Pharnaces of Bosporus attacked Rome in Asia Minor and marched into Cappadocia. In the Lycus Valley at Nicopolis (possibly modern Devriki, Turkey) he repulsed Julius Caesar's General Domitius Calvinus. The following year Caesar himself entered the war and destroyed Pharnaces at Zela (October 48 BC).

Nicopolis, Bulgaria ❙ 1396 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Caught up in a surge of Crusading zeal against Turks in the Balkans, a massive multi-national army set out led by King Sigismund of Hungary and Count John of Nevers. Facing a large Ottoman force under Sultan Bayazid at Nicopolis (modern Nikopol, Bulgaria), the Crusaders were badly defeated then pursued and slaughtered, ending the so-called "Crusade of Nicopolis" (25 September 1396).

Nicopolis, Bulgaria ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Russian Grand Duke Nicholas led a surprise crossing of the Danube at Svistov (27 June), then marched upstream against the Turkish fortress at Nicopolis (modern Nikopol). A two-day artillery barrage convinced the garrison of 7,000 to surrender to General Nikolai Krudener, along with their 40 guns. The main Russian army then moved south against the key fortress at Plevna (15–16 July 1877).

Nicopolis ad Istrum ❙ 250 ❙ 1st Gothic War

When the Goth Kniva crossed the Danube in force, he led part of his army to besiege Nicopolis ad Istrum (modern Nikyup, north of Veliko Turnovo, Bulgaria). The new Emperor Decius himself marched north from Rome and near Nicopolis secured a major victory, inflicting heavy losses. Kniva turned south into Thrace and joined up with another part of his army that was besieging Philippopolis.

Nicosia ❙ 1570 ❙ Venetian-Turkish War in Cyprus

Sultan Selim II renewed war against Venice and sent Lala Mustafa and 50,000 men to Cyprus to besiege the well-fortified city of Nicosia. Venetian Governor Nicolo Dandolo repulsed two assaults before he was overwhelmed and killed in a third massive attack. The population was massacred and the Turks then turned their attention to Famagusta (22 July–9 September 1570).

Niebla ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Facing a Spanish offensive in Andalusia led by General Joachim Blake, French Marshal Nicolas Soult marched south to relieve Niebla, west of Seville. He defeated the Spanish general and forced him to lift the siege. However, Allied naval control off southern Spain ensured Blake was able to withdraw by sea to Cadiz (2 July 1811).

Nieder-Sasbach ❙ 1675 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Sasbach

Niellim ❙ 1899 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

While travelling along the Chari, southeast of Lake Chad, the military explorer Henri-Étienne Bretonnet and 50 riflemen were surrounded at Niellim, by about 3,500 supporters of Muslim leader Rabih az-Zubayr. While Rabih lost over 500 troops in a six-hour action, Bretonnet and all but three of his men were also killed. The French were avenged in October at nearby Kouno (17 July 1899).

Nieman ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Augustovo

Nieman ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

Routed near Warsaw by Polish commander Josef Pilsudki (25 August), Russian General Mikhail Tukhachevski fought a bloody withdrawal northeast to the Nieman and attempted to make a stand around Grodno. Outflanked to the north, Tukhachevski suffered very heavy losses and sections of his retreating army were then defeated again further south on the Szczara (20–28 September 1920).

Nienchuang ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Nianzhuang

Nieuport ❙ 1600 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Prince Maurice of Orange invaded Flanders to besiege Nieuport, west of Ostend, then faced a large Spanish relief army under Archduke Albert, who heavily repulsed Allied (largely Scots) troops attempting to hold the line at the Yser. In the dunes near Nieuport Albert was wounded and routed. However, Maurice also suffered heavy casualties and raised the siege (2 July 1600).

Nieuport ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

See Gabbard Bank

Nieuport ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As he advanced against the remaining Allied strongholds in the Netherlands, French General Jean Victor Moreau captured Ostend then sent Dominique Vandamme's brigade west to besiege Nieuport. The port fell after two weeks, with the garrison of 2,000 Hanoverians taken prisoner. Further east ten days later, Moreau began his attack on L'Ecluse (4–18 July 1794).

Nijmegen ❙ 1672 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

French Marshal Henri de Turenne crossed the Rhine at Tolhuis and days later laid siege to Nijmegen, southwest of Arnhem, defended by Dutch General Jan van Welderen. Despite severe French losses during the siege, the city eventually surrendered, though the delay is said to have cost Turenne final victory on his resumed advance into the Dutch Republic (16 June–9 July 1672).

Nijmegen ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Arnhem

Nile ❙ 47 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

With Julius Ceasar besieged by Egyptian forces at Alexandria, Mithridates of Pergamum raised a relief force in Syria but was blocked at the mouth of the Nile by an army under personal command of Egyptian ruler Ptolemy XII. When Caesar himself arrived with additional troops Ptolemy was defeated, then drowned while attempting to flee. Alexandria was relieved.

Nile ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

A month after disembarking the French army at Alexandria, Admiral Francois-Paul Brueys was attacked at Aboukir Bay, near the mouth of the Nile, by British Admiral Horatio Nelson. Brueys was killed in a brutal and decisive nighttime action and all but two French ships of the line were taken or destroyed. The great naval victory ensured British control of the Mediterranean (1 August 1798).

Nimach ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Firoz Shah of Mandasur lost at Jiran, then joined Kusal Singh, Thakur of Awah, to attack Nimach. Up to 4,000 rebels secured the town, but the garrison under Captain Charles Bannister held the strongly fortified citadel. When a heavy assault was repulsed (19 November) Firoz withdrew. He soon lost at Goraria and abandoned Mandasur. The Thakur was later beaten at Awah (9–22 November 1857).

Nimaraq ❙ 634 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

Following defeat near Babylon in July, a fresh Sassanian Persian army under General Rustam advanced into Mesopotamia to retake Hira. Muslim commander Muthanna sent General Abu Ubayd, who defeated Rustam at Nimaraq, between the Euphrates and Tigris. The Persians also suffered a check at nearby Kaskar, but soon recovered for a great victory at the Battle of the Bridge (September 634).

Nimla ❙ 1809 ❙ Afghan Wars of Succession

Former Afghan Amir Mahmud Shah escaped from imprisonment and seized Kabul, then marched towards Peshawar against his brother Shah Shuja, whose advancing army made a stand at Nimla, near Gandamak, southwest of Jalalabad. Attacked by Mahmud Shah and his Vizier Fath Khan, Shah Shuja was utterly defeated and fled. Mahmud was then restored as ruler of Afghanistan.

Nineveh ❙ 653 BC ❙ Assyrian Wars

With Assyria distracted by war with Babylon, King Phraortes of Media, supported by Cimmeria, laid siege to the Assyrian capital at Nineveh. Phraortes was defeated and killed by Assyria's Scythian allies, who then ruled Media. However, the Scythians were subsequently overthrown by Phraortes' son Cyaxares, who joined with Babylon and returned 40 years later to destroy Nineveh.

Nineveh ❙ 612 BC ❙ Babylon's Wars of Conquest

King Nabopolassar of the Chaldeans overthrew Assyrian rule in Babylon (648 BC), then joined Cyaxares of Media and Scythian allies to attack the Assyrian capital Nineveh, defended by King Sin-shar-ishkun. After bloody assaults the city was taken by storm and sacked. The Assyrian Empire effectively died with the King in the flames of his palace, although some of the army escaped to Harran.

Nineveh ❙ 627 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

Emperor Heraclius repulsed an Avar and Persian threat against Constantinople (August 626), then renewed his campaign against the empire with a crushing victory near the Tigris at Nineveh. Persian General Rhazates and most of his army were killed and, with Heraclius advancing on Ctesiphon, Shah Chosroes II was killed in a coup by his son Seoses, who quickly sued for peace (12 December 627).

Ningbo ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st Opium War

With the fall of Ningbo after Zhenhai (October 1841), new Chinese Commissioner Yijing—cousin of the Emperor—attempted a counter-attack at Ningbo. His forces broke into the city, but were driven out in bloody street fighting with over 400 killed. Yijing was also repulsed at Zhenhai and was recalled in disgrace. The British soon withdrew to support the attack on Zhapu (10 March 1842).

Ningbo ❙ 1862 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

While the Taiping besieged Shanghai, Allied forces supported former pirate Zhang Jingqu attacking the nearby treaty port of Ningbo, across Hangzhou Bay, seized by Taiping troops on 9 December 1861. Bombarded by four British and two French warships, Generals Huang Chengzhong and Fan Ruceng were defeated and withdrew. Zhang's men then sacked the city (10 May 1862).

Ningxia ❙ 1227 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

See Yellow River

Ningxia ❙ 1592 ❙ Ningxia Mutiny

In the last Mongol resistance to Ming authority, former commissioner Pübei and his son Pu Cheng'en joined Ming officer Liu Dongyang in mutiny at the border city of Ningxia. Government forces under Li Rusong besieged the rebels and, despite Mongol aid, Ningxia fell after a river was diverted to destroy the walls. Pu and Liu were executed and Pübei killed himself (February–20 October 1592).

Ningyuan ❙ 1626 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

Five years after securing Manchuria at Shenyang, Manchu leader Nurhachi advanced into China against Ningyuan (modern Xingcheng), the last Ming city outside the Great Wall, defended by Yuan Chonghuan. In a major setback, Nurhachi's bowmen were driven off by Imperial artillery and he died later of wounds. His successors seized Beijing and the throne in 1644 (February 1626).

Nipe ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

American Admiral William T. Sampson destroyed the Spanish fleet off Santiago Bay in southern Cuba (3 July), then sent Commander John Hunker with four warships to capture Bahia de Nipe, on the north coast. A fierce exchange of gunfire saw the American squadron sink the Spanish warship Jorge Juan to secure the port for possible use by the army, but the war soon ended (21 July 1898).

Niquitao ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

When Simón Bolívar returned to Venezuela to assume leadership of the Revolution, he sent José Félix Ribas against José Martí on the heights of Niquitao, south of Trujillo, where the larger Royalist force was decisively defeated. About 400 captured Americans joined the Patriot army, but many Spanish prisoners were executed. Ribas pursued other Royalists at Los Horcones (1 July 1813).

Nirmohgarh ❙ 1702 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

The year after Mughal defeat in the northern Punjab at Anandpur, Emperor Aurangzeb sent a fresh army under Wazir Khan against Sikh Guru Gobind Singh. Reinforced by the hill Rajas, Wazir Khan met the Sikhs just outside Anandpur on the banks of the Sutlej at Nirmohgargh. The Imperial army was forced to withdraw after two days of fighting and heavy losses on both sides.

Nisa Col ❙ 1895 ❙ Chitral Campaign

A force of 400 Punjab Pioneers under Colonel James Kelly, advancing west from Gilgit to relieve a British force besieged by rebels in Chitral (in northern modern Pakistan), was blocked by 1,500 Chitralis under Muhammad Isa at the precipitous ravine of Nisa Col on the Mastuj River. Opening fire with his mountain batteries, Kelly drove the tribesmen off and relieved Chitral (14 April 1895).

Nish ❙ 269 ❙ 3rd Gothic War

After defeating the Alemanni at Lake Benacus, new Emperor Claudius II returned east to deal with the Goths, who had been checked at the Nestus. A decisive action at Nish, in modern Serbia, saw Claudius inflict a terrible defeat on the Goths, with a claimed 50,000 killed. Victory earned Claudius the honorific "Gothicus" and secured lasting stability in the Balkans, but he died soon afterwards of plague.

Nish ❙ 1443 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars (Long Campaign)

As they led a determined advance across the Danube into Serbia, King Ladislas of Hungary and General Janos Hunyadi met Kasim Bey, Governor of Rumelia and Ishak Bey near Nish. Aided by Serbian forces, the Christians crushed the Turkish army and captured Kasim. They seized Nish and Pirot then traversed the Balkans to sack Sofia before being checked at Zlatitsa (3 November 1443).

Nish ❙ 1689 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Sultan Suleiman II personally led another Ottoman advance into the Balkans, taking a fresh army as far as Sofia before sending part of his vanguard northwest to Nish, where they were attacked and routed by an Imperial force under Prince Louis of Baden. The alarmed Sultan withdrew through Philippopolis, but a renewed Turkish offensive regained Nish the following year (23 September 1689).

Nish ❙ 1690 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Despite Turkish defeats at Vienna, Harkany and Belgrade, Grand Vizier Fazil Mustafa Pasha personally led a renewed Turkish offensive in Europe and marched against Nish, between Sofia and Belgrade. Following victory over Austrian General Ferdinand-Bernhard Seckendorf, Mustafa took Nish after a 23-day siege. He then went on to recapture Semendria and Belgrade (9 September 1690).

Nish ❙ 1737 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

A poorly organised expedition down the Morava from Belgrade saw Austrian Commander Count Friedrich von Seckendorff diverted by the flooded Danube from attacking Vidin and he instead besieged and captured Nish. However, when he marched into Bosnia, the Austrians were defeated at Valjevo. Nish was soon lost (20 October) to an Ottoman counter-offensive (1 August 1737).

Nish ❙ 1809 ❙ 1st Serbian Rising

A Patriot army under Milan Obrenovich and Peter Dobrynias advanced into Ottoman Serbia and took an entrenched position on the heights north of Nish, where they were attacked by a reported 80,000 Turks under Grand Vizier Yusuf Ziya Pasha. After heavy fighting and costly losses on both sides, Kara George arrived too late to help and the Serbs were forced to withdraw (19 May 1809).

Nishapur ❙ 1037 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

The Seljuk Turk brothers Toghril and Caghri Beg marched into Khorasan, in eastern Iran and northern Afganistan, and attacked the key city of Nishapur (modern Neyshabur) held for the Ghaznavid Sultan Masud ibn Mahmud of Afghanistan. The Seljuks heavily defeated a combined Persian-Afghan army then three years later they secured Khorasan with victory at Dandanaqan.

Nishapur ❙ 1221 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

With the great Khwarezmian city of Merv destroyed, the Mongol Tolui (youngest son of Genghis Khan) took Balkh then marched against Nishapur in northeastern Iran, where his brother-in-law Toghachar Bahadur had been killed in an unsuccessful siege (November 1220). Tolui took Nishapur by storm, then massacred the entire population and destroyed the city (7–10 April 1221).

Nishapur ❙ 1750–1751 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

After the death of Nadir Shah of Persia (June 1747), the Afghan Ahmad Shah Durrani captured Herat, then besieged Nishapur (modern Neyshabur) defended by Jafar Khan Bayat and, when he was killed, by his teenage son Abbas Kuli Khan. While Ahmad withdrew in the face of an extreme winter, the following year he besieged Nishapur and took it by assault. He soon won again at Torbat-i-Jam.

Nisibis ❙ 338 ❙ Later Roman-Persian Wars

Following the death of Emperor Constantine in 337, Shapur II of Sassanid Persia invaded Roman Mesopotamia and laid waste to the country, then besieged Nisibis (modern Nusaybin, Turkey) with a huge army, including elephants and massive siege machine. Bishop Jacob inspired a brilliant defence and, after 70 days, Shapur was forced to withdraw. A three-month siege in 344 also failed.

Nisibis ❙ 350 ❙ Later Roman-Persian Wars

After failure in Roman Mesoptamia at Singara (348), Shapur II of Sassanid Persia again invaded and began a third siege of Nisibis (modern Nusaybin, Turkey). The Persians diverted the river Mygdonius around the city to bring water-borne siege machines closer and undermine the walls, but with limited success. Shapur failed once more and withdrew, agreeing to a truce with Emperor Constantius.

Nissan ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Green Islands

Niumaozhai ❙ 1619 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

On campaign in Manchuria against Manchu leader Nurhachi, Ming General Yang Hao's army was defeated piecemeal at Sarhu and Siyanggiayan, and Nurhachi's son Amba Beile marched southeast against Ming and Korean forces under Liu Ting. Beyond Yaku Pass at Niumaozhai the allies were routed (Liu Ting was killed) and Nurhachi captured Shenyang (later Mukden) in 1621 (20 April 1619).

Niuzhuang ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Japanese General Taro Katsura finally drove off the Chinese attacking Haicheng, in southern Manchuria, and soon advanced northwest against the well-defended city of Niuzhuang. Bloody house-to-house fighting cost the Chinese 1,800 killed and over 2,000 captured, as Katsura seized the city and its massive supplies. He then marched west against Yingkou (4 March 1895).

Nive ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In the wake of victory in the Pyrenees, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington's Anglo-Portuguese army crossed the Nivelle, then advanced against Marshal Nicolas Soult in southern France, west of the Nive. Despite a courageous French counter-attack, Soult was defeated when his German troops changed sides. He then fell back through St Pierre d'Irube towards Bayonne (9–10 December 1813).

Nivelle ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Following his victories in the Pyrenees at Sorauren, and the fall of Pamplona (31 October), Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advanced on Marshal Nicolas Soult across the River Nivelle near the Franco-Spanish border. Wellington succeeded right along the French lines with a cleverly planned attack and Soult fell back on Bayonne, west of the Nive (10 November 1813).

Nivelle Offensive ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

New French commander Robert Nivelle was determined to break through on the Western Front and launched a massive assault along the Aisne, while further north the British attacked at Arras. Though the British secured some success, the Allies suffered 350,000 casualties and the Germans lost about 260,000. Nivelle was dismissed and the French army mutinied (9 April–17 May 1917).

Nizip ❙ 1839 ❙ 2nd Turko-Egyptian War

See Nezib

Noche Triste ❙ 1520 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Mexico

See Tenochtitlan

Noemfoor ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

To prevent Japanese reinforcements to Biak, off northern New Guinea, General Edwin Patrick leapfrogged west to Noemfoor, held by Colonel Suesada Shimizu. The airfield was quickly seized, although there was severe fighting at Hill 201 (4–5 July) and prolonged mopping up before the island was secured at the cost of 66 Americans and about 1,800 Japanese killed (2 July–30 August 1944).

Nogent ❙ 486 ❙ Fall of the Western Roman Empire

See Soissons

Nohoroco ❙ 1713 ❙ Tuscarora Indian War

When Tuscarora Indians renewed attacks on settlers in North Carolina, after previous peace at Cotechna, Colonel James Moore led 30 whites and 1,000 Indian allies from South Carolina against the rebels at Nohoroco, north of modern Snow Hill. A three-day assault saw the Tuscarora fortress overrun, with 400 prisoners sold into slavery, leading to a humiliating peace (20–23 March 1713).

Noi Bang ❙ 1288 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

Withdrawing from defeat at the Bach Dang in Annam (northern Vietnam), a Mongol army under Toghon (son of Kubilai Khan) was ambushed and suffered a bloody rout at the Noi Bang Pass. The vengeful Kubilai executed the surviving Mongol commanders and exiled his son for life, swearing to never again look on his face. The Khan soon made peace with Annam and neighbouring Champa.

Noiseville ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

French Marshal Achille Bazaine attempted to break out of siege at Metz, leading a badly organised and confused night-time sortie northeast towards Noiseville. The French were driven back with more than 3,000 casualties, although Prince Friedrich Karl of Prussia lost almost as many men. The main French army was routed the same day at Sedan (31 August–1 September 1870).

Nojpeten ❙ 1698 ❙ Spanish-Itzá War

For 150 years after the Spanish Conquest of northern Yucatan, the Itzá Maya continued to resist in the forests around Lake Petén Itzá in modern Guatemala. After a prolonged campaign, a Spanish force under Martin de Ursua stormed the fortified island of Nojpeten (Spanish Tayasal, modern Flores) at the western end of the lake. The Itzá capital fell, and with it ended the last Maya Kingdom (13 March 1697).

Nola ❙ 216 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Recovering from Roman disaster at Cannae, Marcus Claudius Marcellus soon marched south to secure Nola, northeast of Naples, which was threatening to defect to Hannibal. When the great Carthaginian leader approached the city, Marcellus led a powerful sortie. Hannibal was defeated outside the walls of Nola and withdrew. A fresh attempt was made on Nola the following year.

Nola ❙ 215 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

The Carthaginian General Hannibal was reinforced by his brother Hanno with fresh forces from North Africa and made a second attempt to capture the walled city of Nola, northeast of Naples, which was defended by the great Roman Marcus Claudius Marcellus. Very heavy losses in killed and prisoners forced Hannibal to return to his camp at Mount Tifata and he later withdrew into Apulia.

Nola ❙ 214 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Despite the terrible defeat of his brother Hanno at Beneventum, the great Carthaginian general Hannibal made a third attempt to capture Nola, northeast of Naples. In a bold counter-offensive, Marcus Claudius Marcellus marched west from Nola and attacked Hannibal's camp. Forced to depend on unreliable local levies, Hannibal had to retreat, though most historians regard it as a drawn action.

Nomonhan Incident ❙ 1939 ❙ Russo-Japanese Border Wars

See Khalkan Gol

Nompatelize ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Etival

No Name Line ❙ 1951 ❙ Korean War

When the Communist Spring Offensive was checked at Kapyong and the Imjin, other Chinese forces further west attacked across the Soyang River in the eastern peninsula. While General James Van Fleet's so-called No Name Line was breached, reinforcements halted the Communist advance, which proved to be the last major Chinese offensive. Futile truce talks then began (15–20 May 1951).

Nong Bua Lamphu ❙ 1827 ❙ Siamese-Laotian Wars

King Chao Anou of Laos falsely believing British forces threatened Bangkok, rose against Siamese hegemony and invaded Siam. Forced to withdraw, he tried to shield his capital Vientiane against a large Siamese army by a brave stand on the Mekong at Nong Bua Lamphu. When he was defeated and fled, Vientiane was razed and Siam ruled until the French took over in 1893.

Nong Sarai ❙ 1593 ❙ Burmese-Siamese Wars

Ending his rising against Burmese rule (which began in 1585 at Pa Mok), Naresuan of Siam met Burmese Crown Prince Minkyizawa in a famous action at Nong Sarai, near modern Suphanburi. The Crown Prince was defeated and killed, reputedly in hand-to-hand combat with King Naresuan, who restored Siamese independence, then attacked his former ally Cambodia at Lovek (8 January 1593).

No-Niang ❙ 1598 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

See Noryang

Nonne Boschen ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Two weeks after a German offensive along the Menin Road was checked at Gheluvelt, the elite Prussian Guard were sent to break the Allied line east of Ypres. In a remarkable victory near Hooge at Nonne Boschen, outnumbered British infantry threw back the attack. The ensuing attempt to "pinch out" the Ypres Salient failed and the front settled into trench warfare (11 November 1914).

Nooitgedacht ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Jacobus de la Rey captured a British supply convoy at Buffelshoek (3 December), then joined with Christiaan Beyers to attack General Ralph Clements in camp at Nooitgedacht Gorge, 20 miles southeast of Rustenberg. The Boers inflicted over 600 casualties and seized the British guns, but Clements defended nearby Yeomanry Hill, then cut his way out towards Pretoria (13 December 1900).

Noonday Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Marietta

Noordhorn ❙ 1581 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Following the death of Count Rennenberg after defeat at Kollum, new Spanish commander

Francisco Verdugo took a large force against Noordhorn, just northwest of Groningen, commanded by Sir John Norris and Count William Louis of Nassau. After initial success by Dutch cavalry, Verdugo's infantry began to prevail and the Dutch and English had to withdraw (30 September 1581).

Nördlingen ❙ 1634 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

With Regensberg on the Danube secured, Imperial commander Ferdinand of Hungary was joined by Ferdinand Cardinal-Infante of Spain besieging the Swede Eric Debitz at Nördlingen, near Donauwörth. A decisive victory saw the Catholic Allies destroy a German-Swedish relief army under Bernard of Saxe-Weimar and Gustavus Horn. Nördlingen then surrendered (6 September 1634).

Nördlingen ❙ 1645 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Marshal Henri de Turenne regrouped after Mergentheim (5 May) and was joined by Louis II Duke d'Enghien for a fresh advance into Bavaria. At the village of Allerheim, near Nördlingen, Imperial commander Baron Franz von Mercy was defeated and killed. However the Franco-Weimar army had suffered heavy losses attacking strongly entrenched positions and did not pursue (3 August 1645).

Noreia ❙ 113 BC ❙ Rome's Gallic Wars

When Cimbri and Teuton tribesmen spread south to the Danube and threatened the Taurisci (allies of Rome), Consul Papirius Carbo marched north of the Alps into Corinthia and met them at Noreia, near the Magdalensberg in modern Austria. The invaders won a decisive victory, but ignored Italy and turned west to Gaul, where they defeated the Romans in Provence, at Aginnum and Arausio.

Norfolk ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Soon after defeat at Great Bridge, Virginian Governor John Murray Earl of Dunmore withdrew to ships in Norfolk Harbour while the town was occupied by American Colonels William Woodford and later Robert Howe. After failed talks, Dunmore bombarded and burned much of the town. However, British landing parties were repulsed and Dunmore withdrew north to Gwynn Island (1 January 1776).

Normandy ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

After massive bombing and airborne drops, Allied armies under Generals Omar Bradley and Sir Bernard Montgomery landed on Normandy in the D-Day invasion of Europe. Despite a tenacious defence under General Friedrich Dollman, the beachhead was secured, followed by bitter fighting at Caen, Cherbourg and St Lo before the breakout towards Avranches and Falaise (6 June 1944).

Norridgewock ❙ 1724 ❙ Dummer's War

During struggle between English and French settlers in New England, Governor William Dummer of Massachusetts sent about 200 men against the village of Norridgewock on the Kennebec in Maine, where the Abnaki were led by French Jesuit Sebastian Rasle. Unlike a failed raid in 1721, the Abnaki were surprised and routed, with Father Rasle and about 80 killed (23 August 1724).

Northallerton ❙ 1138 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Territorial Wars

See Standard

Northampton ❙ 1264 ❙ 2nd English Barons' War

In support of a fresh Baronial rebellion against Henry III by Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester, the Earl's son Simon the Younger occupied Northampton, where he was besieged in Northampton Castle by the King and his son Prince Edward. Simon was captured when the garrison fell. He was freed a few weeks later after his father defeated the Royalists at Lewes (5 April 1264).

Northampton ❙ 1460 ❙ Wars of the Roses

On their return from France after fleeing at Ludford Bridge (October 1459), Richard Neville Earl of Warwick and Edward Earl of March (son of Richard Duke of York) secured Sandwich, then marched north against the approaching Lancastrian army. At Northampton the Yorkists won a decisive victory and Henry VI was taken prisoner. Richard of York was then proclaimed heir (10 July 1460).

North Anna ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union commander Ulysses S. Grant continued his offensive in Virginia, moving south from Spotsylvania Court House to attack General Robert E. Lee's lines on the North Anna River near Hanover Junction, about 25 miles north of Richmond. Withdrawing after inconclusive fighting, Grant again attempted to turn the Confederate flank and was met at Totopotomoy Creek (23–26 May 1864).

North Brittany ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

A badly conceived night sortie from Plymouth saw the British anti-aircraft cruiser Charybdis (Captain George Voelcker) and six destroyers attempt to intercept the blockade-runner Munsterland. Tracked by German radar, they were ambushed off North Brittany by five fleet torpedo boats. Charybdis and the destroyer Limbourne were sunk with over 500 men lost (23 October 1943).

North Cape ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

When German Admiral Erich Bey took the battle-cruiser Scharnhorst against Russian convoy JW55B, he was ambushed off North Cape by Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser in the battleship Duke of York and the converging cruiser squadron of Admiral Robert Burnett. Scharnhorst was sunk in a dramatic night action and only 36 out of more than 1,800 crew survived to be rescued (26 December 1943).

North Foreland ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

See Gabbard Bank

North Foreland ❙ 1666 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

Just two months after losing the Four Days Battle, English Admiral George Monck broke through the Dutch blockade of the Thames. Between North Foreland and Orfordness, Admiral Mihiel de Ruyter lost two ships and heavy casualties (including Admirals Jan Evertsen and Tjerk Hiddes de Vries killed). Monck and Prince Rupert then drove him back to the Dutch coast (4–5 August 1666).

North Fork of the Red River ❙ 1872 ❙ Red River Indian War

See McClellan Creek

North Inch ❙ 1396 ❙ Scottish Clan Wars

To settle a long-running feud between the MacPherson and Davidson clans, dating back to Invernahavon (1370), Robert III of Scotland witnessed a judicial fight to the death between 30 champions from each side. The battle was fought on the North Inch of Perth and reputedly ended when only one Davidson escaped alive, leaving 11 injured MacPherson survivors (28 September 1396).

North Point ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

See Baltimore

Northwest Africa ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Torch

Northwich ❙ 1659 ❙ Royalist Rising

See Winnington Bridge

Norton St Philip ❙ 1685 ❙ Monmouth Rebellion

James Duke of Monmouth rebelled against his Catholic uncle James II, raising a Protestant revolt in the west and unsuccessfully attempting to capture Bath. While withdrawing at nearby Norton St Philip, Monmouth ambushed and defeated his half-brother Henry Fitzroy Lord Grafton, who escaped after great gallantry.

Monmouth was defeated ten days later at Sedgemoor (27 June 1685).

Norway ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Determined to protect their northwest flank and secure iron-ore shipments from Sweden, German forces invaded Norway and seized Oslo. Despite costly German naval losses, the Norwegians and Anglo-French allies were defeated, including heavy action around Andalsnes, Valdres and Narvik. King Haakon left for Britain and his remaining forces surrendered (9 April–9 June 1940).

Norwich ❙ 1075 ❙ Norman Conquest of Britain

When Ralph Guader Earl of Norfolk and his brother-in-law Roger Fitzwilliam Earl of Hereford rebelled against King William I, the Lords William Warenne Earl of Surrey and Baron Robert Malet imprisoned Hereford, then besieged Norfolk and his Breton allies in Norwich Castle. Three months later Norfolk and his Bretons surrendered on terms of banishment. Norfolk died on Crusade in 1099.

Norwich ❙ 1549 ❙ Kett's Rebellion

A landholder named Robert Kett led a rural insurrection from Norfolk and took a reputed 20,000 against the city of Norwich. William Parr Marquess of Northampton attempted to relieve the siege, but was easily defeated and his ally Edmund Lord Sheffield was killed. Northampton was then replaced by John Dudley Earl of Warwick, who defeated the rebels at Dussindale (1 August 1549).

Noryang ❙ 1598 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

As Japanese forces abandoned the last coastal fortresses in southern Korea, Konishi Yukinaga withdrew from Sunchon, supported by Shimazu Yoshihiro sailing west from Sachon. In the Noryang Strait, Chinese Admiral Chen Lin and Korean Yi Sun-shin attacked the Japanese as they withdrew, sinking over 200 ships. Yi was killed in the moment of victory as the war ended (16 December 1598).

Noteborg ❙ 1702 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Despite his terrible defeat at Narva (1700), Russian Tsar Peter I marched into Swedish Ingria and attacked the fortified island of Noteborg (Oreshka), where Lake Ladoga flows into the Neva near Novgorod. The tiny garrison fell to overwhelming assault and Peter changed its name to Schlusselberg (The Key). He then proceeded down the Neva to Nyenskans (September–October 1702).

Notium ❙ 406 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Sparta recovered from disastrous defeat at Cyzicus (410 BC) and rebuilt her fleet at Ephesus, where it was threatened from nearby Notium by Athenian Admiral Alcibiades. Left in command of the Athenian fleet, Antiochius was lured into battle by Spartan leader Lysander and lost 15 ships. Alcibiades was replaced by Conon, who soon fought at Arginusae and Aegospotami (March 406 BC).

Nouakchott ❙ 1976 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

When Polisario forces launched a large-scale offensive across 1,200 miles of desert to attack Nouakchott, capital of Mauritania, they shelled the city before being driven off. Attacked next day by reinforcements arriving from Zouerate, the Polisario suffered heavy losses, included Secretary General El-Ouali Mustapha Sayad killed. They returned a year later to shell Nouakchott again (8–9 June 1976).

Nouart ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

French General Pierre-Louis de Failly was manoeuvering near the Meuse, southeast of Sedan, when he encountered advance units under Prince George of Saxony as the Prussian army advanced through the Ardennes. Both sides fell back after sharp fighting around the village of Nouart, though de Failly was attacked and heavily defeated next day at nearby Beaumont-en-Argonne (29 August 1870).

Nova Carthago ❙ 209 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War
See New Carthage

Novara ❙ 1500 ❙ Italian War of Louis XII
Louis XII of France had secured northern Italy when Ludovico Sforza of Milan raised a rebellion in Lombardy and the French King sent an army under Louis de le Trémouille, heavily suppported by Swiss mercenaries. Duke Ludovico was defeated at Novara and taken to France, where he died after ten years captivity. Meanwhile the Emperor recognised French rule in Milan (8 April 1500).

Novara ❙ 1513 ❙ War of the Holy League
Fearful of French power in Italy, Pope Julius II recruited Germany and Switzerland to the Holy League and Swiss troops occupied Lombardy. After French under Prince Louis de la Trémouille captured Milan and besieged Novara, a Swiss relief force attacked after an overnight march. At the Riotta, near Novara, the French army was destroyed and withdrew from Italy (6 June 1513).

Novara ❙ 1821 ❙ Italian Revolt against Austria
Encouraged by a revolt in Naples which deposed Ferdinand IV, the Piedmontese unexpectedly revolted in the rear of the Austrian army which had marched south to defeat the Neapolitans at Rieti. An Austro-Sardinian force under Count Ferdinand Bubna crushed the Piedmontese at Novara, west of Milan, and the King was restored as Ferdinand I of the Two Sicilies (8 April 1821).

Novara ❙ 1849 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence
Two days after defeat at Mortara, Charles Albert of Sardinia fought the decisive battle in Italy's resumed campaign for Independence from Austria. Taking a strong position between two small rivers at Novara, west of Milan, Charles Albert and Polish commander Adalbert Chrzanowsky were routed by Austrian Marshal Josef Radetzky. The King abdicated to his son (23 March 1849).

Noveleta ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence
See Binakayan

Nove Zamky ❙ 1919 ❙ Hungarian-Czech War
On campaign in western Slovakia after victory further east at Salgótarján, Hungary's Red Army advanced towards Bratislava and took Nove Zamky (Ersekujvar). Czech forces under French General Eugène Mittelhauser then counter-attacked and bloody fighting saw Nove Zamky retaken. Dictator Béla Kun soon agreed to withdraw from Slovakia to defend Budapest (2–7 June 1919).

Novgorod ❙ 1456 ❙ Muscovite Wars of Expansion
Grand Prince Vasili II of Moscow was determined to punish Novgorod for sheltering his rival Dimitri Shemiaki and marched on the city with his 16-year-old son Ivan. The Archbishop of Novgorod's cavalry was routed by a much smaller Muscovite force, but the harsh peace terms imposed eventually drove Novgorod to support Lithuania. Ivan returned 15 years later to win again at the Shelon.

Novgorod ❙ 1471 ❙ Muscovite Wars of Expansion
See Shelon

Novgorod ❙ 1614 ❙ Russo-Swedish Wars
See Bronnitsa

Novgorod Seversk ❙ 1604 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles
At the start of his march on Moscow, a pretender claiming to be Dimitri—murdered son of former Tsar Ivan IV—led a Polish army into the Ukraine, where the "First False Dimitri" captured Chernigov, then besieged Novgorod Seversk. A large Tsarist army arrived under Fedor Mstislavski, but was attacked and routed. Mstislavski was avenged a month later at Dobrynitchi (21 December 1604).

Novi Ligure ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

A month after French defeat at the Trebbia, General Barthélemy Joubert concentrated in the hills north of Genoa at Novi Ligure against a massive force of Russians under General Alexander Suvorov and General Paul Kray's Austrians. Joubert was routed and killed and General Jean Victor Moreau resumed command to lead the defeated French out of the Piedmont (15 August 1799).

Noviodunum ❙ 369 ❙ 4th Gothic War

When Visigoths under Athanaric threatened northern Greece, the Eastern Emperor Valens initially repulsed the invaders at Daphne, after which he secured a decisive victory on the Danube at Noviodunum in Moesia Inferior. Athanaric accepted an advantageous treaty (September 369), but peace with the Goths was short-lived and Valens was killed ten years later at Adrianople.

Novi Slankamen ❙ 1691 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Slankamen

Novo Brdo ❙ 1455 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

Sultan Mehmed II and Isa Bey Evrenos launched a fresh invasion of southern Serbia, where they attacked the mountain fortress of Novo Brdo, on the Morava near Pristina, a wealthy Christian bastion in the southeast famous for its silver mines. Novo Brdo surrendered after siege guns destroyed its walls. Isa Bey then marched towards Berat while Mehmed soon captured Belgrade (May–1 June 1455).

Novocherkassk ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

When a few White Cossacks seized Novocherkassk, northeast of Rostov (14 April), they were driven out after three days but regained the city a month later. Initially repulsed once more, they were reinforced by Colonel Mikhail Drozdovsky, who had led 1,000 men on a remarkable march from the Romanian front. The Red Cossacks and Red Guards were driven out (6–8 May 1918).

Novocherkassk ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Rostov

Novorossisk ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

As Red forces stormed into the Kuban through Torgovaya, White General Aleksandr Kutepov fell back on the Black Sea port of Novorosissk, where General Vladimir Sidorin tried to defend the perimeter. The defeated survivors of Anton Denikin's once-victorious White Army were evacuated to the Crimea in British ships and he was replaced by Pyotr Wrangel (27 March 1920).

Novorossisk ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

While Soviet forces swept across the Ukraine, General Ivan Petrov sent General Konstantin Leselidze against the last German bridgehead in the Kuban around Novorossisk, which had been under virtual siege since September 1942. Very heavy fighting saw the Russians break through strong lines and General Erwin Jaenecke withdrew across the straits to Kerch (9–16 September 1943).

Nowo Georgiewsk ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Days after Warsaw fell, German General Hans von Beseler took his siege train against the huge fortress of Nowo Georgiewsk (later Modlin, modern Novy Dwor), west of the capital. Russian command believed the fortress could hold out, with 90,000 garrison, 1,600 guns and almost a million shells. But it was quickly forced to surrender, as was fortress Kovno, further north (8–19 August 1915).

Nowshera ❙ 1823 ❙ Afghan-Sikh Wars

The great Ranjit Singh threatened the Afghan-held city of Peshawar and faced a massive army under Vizier Mohammad Azim Khan, who unwisely permitted his force at nearby Nowshera to be divided by the Kabul River. As a result, the Afghan army was utterly routed. After Ranjit seized Peshawar, he gave the Governorship to Azim Khan's brother Sultan Mohammad Khan (14 March 1823).

Nowy Dwor ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

With Warsaw captured by Charles X of Sweden after action at Sobota, Swedish General Gustav Otto Stenbock marched north against about 11,000 Poles under Jan Krasinksi near Pultusk, where the outnumbered Swedes secured a sharp victory in battle at Nowy Dwor. A few days later Charles himself decisively defeated John II Casimir southwest of Warsaw at Opoczno (20 September 1655).

Noyon ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Albert

Noyon-Montdidier ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

German commander Erich von Ludendorff won on the Aisne, then launched a fourth offensive between Noyon and Montdidier. While General Oscar von Hutier drove General Georges Humbert back ten miles, General Max von Boehn advancing from Soissons was checked by French and Americans under General Charles Mangin. Germany's last offensive was on the Marne (9–13 June 1918).

Ntombe ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

See Myer's Drift

Nuits Saint George ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

While campaigning in eastern France, Prussian General Karl August von Werder sent General Adolf von Glumer and the Baden Division on a reconnaissance in force south of Dijon, where they met French General Camille Cremer marching north from Beaune. In heavy fighting near Nuits Saint George, both sides lost about 1,000 men then withdrew to avoid further casualties (18 December 1870).

Nukumaru ❙ 1865 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

With the religio-military Hauhau continuing to threaten Wanganui, despite a check at Moutoa, General Sir Duncan Cameron led 1,250 men to Nukumaru, 15 miles to the north, believing the Maoris would not attack. About 600 Hauhau were eventually repulsed in a bloody two-day action, though at a cost of 15 British killed and 31 wounded, and Cameron had to withdraw (24–25 January 1865).

Numa ❙ 1086 ❙ Later Three Years War

In renewed war in northeastern Japan, Minamoto Yoshiie turned against the Kiyohara, who had helped his father Yoriyoshi defeat the Abe at Kuriyagawa. Intervening in a clan feud, Yoshiie and 3,000 men besieged Kiyohara Iehira at Numa Stockade (southwest of modern Yokote in Akita), but were driven off by starvation and heavy snow. The next year he attacked again further north at Kanazawa.

Numantia ❙ 133 BC ❙ Numantian War

When Numantia, north of modern Soria, rebelled and humiliated a Roman force under Gaius Mancinus, the Senate sent a fresh army to Spain under Publius Scipio Aemilianus (famous for destroying Carthage). Scipio built a rampart around the city, which was starved into surrender after eight months. Numantia was then razed, with its population killed or enslaved, securing Roman rule in central Spain.

Numistro ❙ 210 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Shortly after destroying Herdonea, Carthaginian General Hannibal was attacked in camp at Numistro, southwest of Venusia in eastern Italy, by an avenging Roman force under the great Marcus Claudius Marcellus. The hard-fought action which followed is regarded as a narrow victory for Hannibal, though the Carthaginian declined further action next day and withdrew towards Tarentum.

Nundy Droog ❙ 1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

See Nandi Drug

Nuranang ❙ 1962 ❙ Sino-Indian War

See Se La

Nuremberg ❙ 1632 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

See Alte Veste

Nuremberg ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Britain's costliest air attack occured when 795 bombers sent against Nuremberg without long-range escort were hounded by German night-fighters to and from the target. Bomber Command lost 94 aircraft and a further 71 damaged at the cost of 500 killed, while fewer than ten German fighters were destroyed. Such raids ceased until long-range fighter escort became available (30–31 March 1944).

Nuuanu ❙ 1795 ❙ Hawaiian Wars

Kamehameha completed his conquest of Hawaii by assaulting Oahu, held by Kalanikupulu, who had been routed at Kepaniwai in 1790. Landing near modern Honolulu, Kamehameha attacked and destroyed his enemy on the cliff-tops at Nuuanu. Kalanikupulu fled (he was later captured and executed) and his ally Kaiana was killed. Kamehameha soon ruled a unified Hawaii (April 1795).

Nyborg ❙ 1659 ❙ 1st Northern War

Dutch ships intervening to support Denmark against Charles X of Sweden, defeated the Swedish navy in The Sound. Admiral Michael de Ruyter then transported Danish and Brandenburg troops to Funen, where Philip of Sulzbach was heavily entrenched at Nyborg. The Swedish invaders surrendered after Nyborg was stormed and war soon ended when Charles died (24 November 1659).

Nyenskans ❙ 1703 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Having captured the Swedish fortress at Noteborg, where Lake Ladoga flows into the Neva, Russian Tsar Peter I and Marshal Boris Sheremetev marched to the mouth of the Neva, where Nyenskans capitulated after a two-day bombardment. Peter thus gained his outlet to the Gulf of Finland and immediately began construction of the port of St Petersburg (11–12 May 1703).

Nyezane ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

On the same day as the British disaster at Isandhlwana, a column in the south under Colonel Charles Pearson was attacked at the Nyezane by perhaps 4,000 Zulus under Godide. In reputedly the first British battlefield use of the Gatling gun, the Zulus were driven off with about 400 men killed. Pearson then continued north to establish a fortified position at Eshowe (22 January 1879).

Nykarleby ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

After halting the Russian invasion of Finland at the Siikajoki, Swedish forces pursued the invaders down the west coast towards Revolax and attempted to surround the Russians at Nykarleby, northeast of Vasa. Swedish General Karl Adlercreutz found only a rearguard under General Ivan Fedorovich Jankovich, which fought briefly before being forced to evacuate the town (24 June 1808).

O

Oak Grove ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

The first of the Seven Days' Battles saw Union commander George B. McClellan's attempt to close on the Confederate capital at Richmond blocked to the east at Oak Grove, Virginia, by a Confederate offensive under General Robert E. Lee. Both sides lost over 500 men in an inconclusive action and the following day Lee led a bold assault at Beaver Dam Creek (25 June 1862).

Oak Hills ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Wilson's Creek

Oaxaca ❙ 1865 ❙ Mexican-French War

Marshal Achille Bazaine led a French offensive south from Puebla, where he took 8,000 men against Oaxaca, held by 3,000 Mexicans under Porfirio Diaz. Taking time to build roads for his siege guns, Bazaine launched a terrible bombardment. Diaz surrendered after suffering heavy losses to casualties and desertion, though he later escaped from captivity (1 January–9 February 1865).

Oaxaca ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

Republican General Porfirio Diaz advanced south from Miahuatlán and again besieged his birthplace, Oaxaca, held by Imperial commander Carlos Oroñoz. When a relief column was driven off at La Carbonera, Oroñoz surrendered his exhausted garrison of about 300—mainly Austrians, with some French and Mexicans. Diaz went on to secure Mazatalán and Jalapa (5–30 October 1866).

Oaxaca ❙ 1876 ❙ Diaz Revolt in Mexico

At the start of a new rising against President Sebastián Lerdo de Tejada, General Fidencio Hernandez and 2,000 rebels defeated a smaller force of Federal troops and national guards at San Felipe del Agua outside Oaxaca, capturing 2,500 rifles and half a million rounds. Hernandez then seized Oaxaca and proclaimed Porfirio Diaz Commander of a new revolutionary army (27 January 1876).

Oberalpsee ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Devil's Bridge

Oberhollarbrunn ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

See Hollarbrunn

Ober-Kamlach ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Mindelheim

Oberndorf ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Biberach

Obertyn ❙ 1531 ❙ Polish-Moldavian War

When Hospodar Petrylo of Moldavia invaded southern Poland over the disputed Hungarian succession, Polish Hetman Jan Tarnowski beat the invaders at Gwozdiec and soon after met their main army at nearby Obertyn, in modern Ukraine. Although massively outnumbered, Tarnowski held a defensive position. He then counter-attacked for a brilliant victory and Petrylo withdrew (22 August 1531).

Obidos ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In a prelude to the battle at Rolica, a British force under General Sir Arthur Wellesley, which had landed at Mondego Bay in central Portugal, repulsed pickets sent out by General Henri Delaborde at Obidos, north of Rolica. While the skirmish was not significant, it was said to be the first action between British and French troops in the Peninsular Campaign (15 August 1808).

Obligada ❙ 1845 ❙ Argentine-Uruguayan War

See Vuelte de Obligada

Obrajuela ❙ 1845 ❙ Central American National Wars

When Honduras tried to restore President Francisco Malespín of El Salvador, a Salvadoran invasion was repulsed at Comayagua. Honduran General José Santos Guardiola then marched into El Salvador and seized La Union (5 July) and San Miguel (7 August). At Obrajuela, near Quelepa, General Nicolás Angulo repulsed the invasion, ending support for Malespín (15 August 1845).

Ocaña, Colombia ❙ 1841 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders

As newly elected President of Colombia, General Pedro Alcántara Herrán marched north against the rebel forces of General Lorenzo Hernández. Near Ocaña, Herrán won the last major victory of the northern campaign, effectively securing the Atlantic coast. He then returned to Bogotá to resume his official duties and the war ended early the following year (9 September 1841).

Ocaña, Spain ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

The Army of La Mancha under General Carlos Areizaga prepared a Spanish offensive from the south against French-held Madrid, assembling at Ocaña, south of Madrid beyond the Tagus. However, King Joseph Bonaparte and Marshal Nicolas Soult destroyed Areizaga in a bloody rout, capturing many men and guns, opening the way to French conquest of Andalusia (19 November 1809).

Occaneechee Island ❙ 1676 ❙ Bacon's Rebellion

When Governor Sir William Berkeley of Virginia declined to act against Indian tribes which had attacked settlers, Nathaniel Bacon led 70 colonists against the Susquehanna and the formerly friendly Occaneechee. In an unauthorised attack at Occaneechee Island, on the Roanoke, 130 Indians were killed. Bacon was declared a rebel and in September he attacked Jamestown (10 May 1676).

Ocean Pond ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

See Olustee

Ochagavía ❙ 1829 ❙ Chilean Conservative Revolution

During disorder following the overthrow of Chilean Dictator Bernardo O'Higgins, rebellious Conservative General Joaquín Prieto met government troops led by General Francisco Lastra de la Sotta at Ochagavía, near Santiago. An armistice was agreed following indecisive action, though fighting soon broke out again and in April 1830 the government was routed at the Lircay (14 December 1829).

Ochakov ❙ 1737 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

Marshal Count Burkhard Christoph von Münnich led a major Russian offensive into the Turkish Ukraine, sweeping the Turks before his advance to the mouth of the Dnieper. There he inflicted a sharp defeat to storm and sack the key city of Ochakov. The Russian army was then halted by disease, delaying Münnich's advance into Moldavia, where he met the Turks in 1738 at Bender (July 1737).

Ochakov ❙ 1788 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

At the end of a lethargic siege of Ochakov at the mouth of the Dnieper, Russian General Prince Grigori Potemkin arrived and ordered a midwinter advance across a frozen marsh to take the Black Sea fortress by storm. The subsequent massacre is said to have cost 20,000 Turkish lives. The Russians then marched into Wallachia for victory at Focsani and Rimnik (June–17 December 1788).

Ochomogo ❙ 1823 ❙ Central American National Wars

Emperor Agustin Iturbide of Mexico tried to annex Costa Rica, supported by conservative forces in the capital Cartago. In battle on the nearby heights of Ochomogo, the Allies were defeated by Republican militia from San José and Alajuela under Gregorio José Ramirez. San José then became the capital of independent Costa Rica in the Central American Federation (5 April 1823).

Ochomogo ❙ 1948 ❙ Costa Rican Civil War

Following a disputed presidential election in Costa Rica, the Conservative José María Figueres Ferrer fought a 40-day war against the Christian Socialist government of Dr Rafael Calderón Guardia and Teodoro Picado. When Figueres seized Cartago and the nearby heights of Ochomogo, threatening San José, Picado surrendered and the Conservative Otilio Ulate became President (12 April 1948).

Ockley ❙ 851 ❙ Viking Raids on Britain

See Aclea

O'Connell Street ❙ 1922 ❙ Irish Civil War

Irish Republican forces seized key positions in Dublin and were driven out of the Four Courts, although they held "the block" of buildings in O'Connell Street against General Tom Ennis. Government artillery and heavy fighting forced the defenders to surrender with costly losses, including leader Cathal Brugha killed. The survivors withdrew towards Limerick (2–5 July 1922).

Octavem ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Oitaven

Odasu ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd British-Ashanti War

Advancing inland against Ashanti forces threatening British territory in modern Ghana, General Sir Garnet Wolseley secured victory at Abakrampa and Amoafo, then crossed the Oda, just south of the capital Kumasi. At the village of Odasu just days later the Royal army was defeated. Wolseley entered Kumasi the same day, accepting the submission of King Kofi Karikari (4 February 1874).

Odawara ❙ 1590 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Hideyoshi Toyotomi conquered Kyushu at Kagoshima (July 1587) then turned east against the Hojo clan of Kanto. Hideyoshi besieged Odawara for months before Hojo Ujimasa finally yielded and was made to commit seppuku, while his son Ujinao was exiled. When Date Masamune of Matsu then quickly submitted, Hideyoshi had effectively completed unification of Japan (March–12 August 1590).

Odessa ❙ 1854 ❙ Crimean War

When Russian guns at the Black Sea port of Odessa reportedly fired on the frigate Furious under a flag of truce a week after war was declared, British Admiral Sir James Dundas took a fleet to bombard the military port. While an attempt was made to avoid damage to the commercial port and city, it was claimed that all but one of the Russian warships in harbour was destroyed (22 April 1854).

Odessa ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)
See Sevastopol

Odessa ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

Intervening to assist the White cause in the south, French General Philippe d'Anselm, aided by Greek units, landed at Odessa (18 December 1918) to support Governor Aleksei Grishin-Almazov. The campaign was a disorganised fiasco. With Red General Nikifor Grigorev advancing through Nikolayev, the French and others evacuated, abandoning their White allies (12 March–4 April 1919).

Odessa ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As German forces swept across the Ukraine towards Kiev, the Romanian Fourth Army under General Nicolai Ciuperca (later Iosif Iacobini) besieged Odessa, cut off behind enemy lines. A bloody defence cost over 90,000 Romanian casualties and about 40,000 Russians before General Ivan Petrov withdrew. The Romanians took 12,000 prisoners and held Odessa until 1944 (5 August–16 October 1941).

Odessa ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

While the Russians attacked west through Uman, General Rodion Malinovsky circled south across the Bug towards the German and Romanian divisions on the Black Sea. Marshal Ewald von Kleist evacuated many men through Odessa before the key city fell with heavy losses, but he was dismissed after withdrawing across the Dniester to escape encirclement (6 March–10 April 1944).

Oenoparas ❙ 145 BC ❙ Syrian Dynastic War

Ptolemy VI of Egypt married his daughter Cleopatra Thea to Alexander Balas, who seized Seleucid Syria at Ptolemais. However, Ptolemy later invaded against his son-in-law to support the legitimate heir, Demetrius. Alexander was killed in battle at the Oenoparas, near Antioch, but Ptolemy also died of wounds. The victor became Demetrius II Nicator, but was soon overthrown by Syrian Greeks.

Oenophyta ❙ 457 BC ❙ 1st Peloponnesian War

Just two months after being heavily defeated at Tanagra, Athenian commander Myronides resumed the offensive to the north against Boeotia and, at Oenophyta, defeated a combined Theban-Boeotian army. The victory enabled Athens to extend control over central Greece, creating a sizeable land empire as a counter to the threat of a Spartan-led confederacy until defeat at Coronea.

Ofen ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War
See Buda

Ogaden ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

With the war effectively decided by Ethiopia's rout at Maychew, General Rodolfo Graziani attacked Ras Nasibu of the Ogaden in the triangle Dejeh Bur-Harar-Jijiga, east of Addis Ababa. Heavy fighting cost about 2,000 Italian casualties before Generals Guglielmo Nasi, Luigi Frusci and Augusto Augustini destroyed the "Hindenburg Wall." Graziani entered Harar on 5 May (15–25 April 1936).

Ogdensburg ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

American Major Benjamin Forsyth crossed the frozen St Lawrence River to raid Morristown (7 February) and Canadian Colonel George Macdonell led the Glengarry Light Infantry Fencibles on a reprisal across the ice from Fort Wellington to attack Forsyth at Ogdensberg. When the Americans were defeated and fled, Macdonell destroyed the fort and withdrew (22 February 1813).

Ognon ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
See Chatillon-le-Duc

Ognot ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)
See Bitlis

Ohaewai ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

With Hone Heke defeated in New Zealand's far north at Te Ahuahu, Colonel Henry Despard led 600 soldiers and volunteers against Kawiti and Hone Heke's pa (fortified village) at Ohaewai, near Waimate. After a long bombardment, Despard lost 40 killed and 80 wounded in a suicidal assault before the Maoris slipped away. In December Despard attacked again at Ruapekapeka (23 June–1 July 1845).

Ohamakarai ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

See Waterberg

Ohud ❙ 625 ❙ Campaigns of the Prophet Mohammed

Despite his defeat at Badr (January 624), Abu Sufyan of Mecca took a large force of Koreish to attack Medina. On the nearby Mount of Ohud, the Prophet Mohammed and his heavily outnumbered warriors were almost defeated when the Prophet was wounded and thought to be dead. However, they regrouped and repulsed Abu Sufyan with heavy losses on both sides (21 March 625).

Oitaven ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Facing a French offensive in northwestern Spain by Marshal Michel Ney, General Gaspar de Norona took a position with about 13,000 men behind the Oitaven Estuary near the city of Vigo. Several French attempts to force the bridge of San Payo were repulsed, though it was largely a feint to keep the Spanish occupied. Ney later withdrew to join Marshal Nicolas Soult at Zamora (8 June 1809).

Ojinaga ❙ 1913–1914 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Generals Pascual Orozco and José Inez Salazar were decisively defeated at Tierra Blanca and evacuated Chihuahua, withdrawing northeast to Ojinaga, the last garrison in northern Mexico loyal to President Victoriano Heurta. They stubbornly resisted revolutionary forces under Pánfilo Natera until Francisco (Pancho) Villa arrived and Ojinaga fell by storm (December 1913–10 January 1914).

Okaharui ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

Weeks after a bloody ambush at Owikokorero, northeast of Windhoek in German Southwest Africa, Major Franz-Georg Glasenapp and 300 Germans marched southwest from Onjatu towards Onganjira and were ambushed at Okaharui by about 1,000 Herero rebels. Glasenapp lost 32 killed and 17 wounded, and fell back on Onjatu, where his column was later decimated by typhus (3 April 1904).

Okaihau ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

See Puketutu

Oka River ❙ 1572 ❙ Russian-Tatar Wars

See Molodi

Okehazama ❙ 1560 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Imagawa Yoshimoto of Mikawa marched on Kyoto with 25,000 Samurai, including the young Tokugawa Ieyasu, and was blocked by Oda Nobunaga of Owari, who attacked the invaders near Okehazama, east of Kyoto, with perhaps just 2,000 men. In a brief, bloody action Yoshimoto was defeated and killed. Ieyasu then joined Nobunaga, who eventually secured Kyoto (12 June 1560).

Okhmatov ❙ 1644 ❙ Polish-Tatar Wars

After decades of fighting Cossacks and Tatars, Polish Hetman Stanislas Koniecpolski again marched south to meet the Crimean Tatars he had repulsed at Martynow (1624) and Kamieniec (1633). Aided by Jeremi Wisniowiecki, he secured a savage victory over Tuhai-Bei at Okhmatov, south of Kiev, but died just two years later. Tuhai-Bei was avenged in 1648 at Korsun (30 January 1644).

Okhmatov ❙ 1655 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Following the fall of Smolensk (September 1654), Poland attacked in the Ukraine, where Stanislas Potocki and Stefan Czarniecki besieged Uman. To the north at Okhmatov, they were met by a massive Russian force under Vasili Sheremetev and the Cossack Bogdan Chmielnicki. Despite terrible Russian losses, the Poles were checked and in September Chmielnicki besieged Lvov (29 January 1655).

Okinawa ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

When American General Simon Buckner led over 150,000 men to Okinawa, south of Japan, there was severe fighting against General Mitsuru Ushijima and also heavy losses at sea. The war's largest and bloodiest island campaign saw Okinawa secured at the cost of 12,500 American troops and sailors killed, over 100,000 Japanese soldiers killed and many civilians dead (1 April–21 June 1945).

Okita Nawate ❙ 1584 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

The Shimazu of Satsuma secured southern Honshu at Mimikawa (1578) and Minamata (1581), and Shimazu Iehisa marched northwest to aid Arima Harinobu against Ryuzoji Takanobu of Saga, besieging Shimabara. At nearby Okita Nawate, Takanobu was defeated and killed. The Shimazu later began their fateful invasion of Bungo, leading to destruction in 1587 at Kagoshima (4 May 1584).

Okolona, Arkansas ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Elkin's Ferry

Okolona, Mississippi ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union commander William T. Sherman marched east from Vicksburg towards Meridian, Mississippi, while General William S. Smith advanced southeast from Memphis in support. After running action against Confederate General Nathan B. Forrest, Smith turned back. At Okolona, Mississippi, Forrest inflicted a decisive defeat and Smith returned to Memphis (22 February 1864).

OK Pass ❙ 1919 ❙ Wars of the Mad Mullah

As war against Muhammad Abdullah Hassan of Somaliland dragged on after Dul Madoba, Major Charles Howard led an offensive northeast from Burao and left Captain Richard Simons to hold the OK Pass, where he was attacked by 400 Dervishes. In their worst defeat since Jidballi (1904) the Dervishes lost about 200 killed for just two British dead. Fighting continued until Taleh (1 March 1919).

Okpo ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Japanese invaders secured Pusan before Korean naval commander Yi Sun-shin and Admiral Won Kyun attacked the Japanese supply fleet and troopships to the southwest off Okpo, on Kyo-che Island. Here, and in further fighting the same day at Happo and next day at Chokjinpo, Japanese commander Mori Terumoto lost 42 ships. Yi soon won again off Sachon (16–17 June 1592).

Oksnebjerg ❙ 1535 ❙ Danish Counts' War

In a dispute over the Danish throne following the death of Frederick I (1533), his Lutheran son Duke Christian initially lost to Catholic nobles and Lubeck forces under Count Christopher of Oldenberg. However with Swedish aid, Christian's General Johan Rantzau secured a decisive victory at Oksnebjerg near Assens. The Hanseatic navy was defeated days later off Bornholm (11 June 1535).

Oland (1st) ❙ 1564 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War

Swedish commander Jakob Bagge recovered from the costly drawn action off Gotland (September 1563) attacking a Danish-German flotilla off Oland, where intense gunfire sank the Swedish flagship Mars before Bagge was forced to withdraw with heavy losses. While defeat cost Bagge his command, Swedish naval forces were avenged three months later in the same waters (30–31 May 1564).

Oland (2nd) ❙ 1564 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War

Following Sweden's defeat in the eastern seas off Oland, new commander Klas Kristersson Horn attacked Danish and German ships in the same waters north of the strategic island, where a decisive victory by Horn prevented a naval attack on Stockholm. Meanwhile an advance on land ended when 300 Danish supply wagons were destroyed and Denmark's German mercenaries withdrew (14–15 August 1564).

Oland ❙ 1566 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War

In perhaps the decisive naval action of the war, Swedish Commander Klas Kristersson Horn took 68 ships from Stockholm to meet the Danish fleet north of Oland. After a heavy defeat, the Danes withdrew into Visby where a storm that night sank 15 ships and cost about 4,000 lives. Sweden regained control of the eastern seas, though war dragged on until the fall of Varberg in 1569 (26 July 1566).

Oland ❙ 1676 ❙ Scania War

Danish Admiral Niels Juel defeated a Swedish fleet at Jasmund and a week later, supported by Dutch Admiral Cornelius van Tromp, met the Swedes again south of Oland in southeast Sweden. Swedish Admiral Lorenz Creutz was killed in this second defeat, with three ships lost. Despite Danish defeats on land, Juel went on to further victory the following year off Koge Bay (1 June 1676).

Oland ❙ 1789 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

After defeat off Bornholm (26 June), Duke Charles of Sodermanland, brother of Gustav III of Sweden, sailed from Karlskrona in southeast Sweden and intercepted a small Russian squadron under Admiral Paul Vasili Tchitchakov off nearby Oland. In a disorganised action, the Swedes failed to inflict any major damage on the outnumbered Russians, squandering an invaluable opportunity (25 July 1789).

Old Baldy ❙ 1952 ❙ Korean War

A Chinese spring offensive to secure key outposts between the lines saw very heavy fighting for Old Baldy (Hill 266), west of Chorwon. After a failed first assault, the reinforced Chinese took the hill, then lost it. A third attempt after heavy bombardment saw the Chinese seize the crest before Allied tanks finally helped drive them off (26 June–3 July; 17 July–4 August & 18–21 September 1952).

Old Baldy ❙ 1953 ❙ Korean War

As peace talks dragged on, North Koreans renewed the attack on Old Baldy (Hill 266), west of Chorwon. A small force of Colombians was overwhelmed and American infantry suffered heavy losses failing to retake the hill. New commander General Maxwell Taylor decided Old Baldy was not worth more casualties, but it was later used by the Communists to attack Pork Chop Hill (23–26 March 1953).

Old Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While the Union and Confederate armies fought out an inconclusive confrontation northeast of Richmond at Totopotomoy Creek, Virginia, Union cavalry under General Alfred T. Torbert probed south and met Confederate General Wade Hampton at Old Church. Hampton was repulsed in a sharp action and fell back to help meet the Union army next day at nearby Cold Harbour (30 May 1864).

Old Fort Wayne ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union General James G. Blunt pursued Confederate Colonel Douglas H. Cooper out of southwestern Missouri after Newtonia and attacked him in Indian Territory at Old Fort Wayne, near Maysville, Oklahoma. Cooper and the Cherokee Chief Stand Watie were outnumbered and defeated, and Blunt soon entered northeastern Arkansas to fight at Cane Hill and Prairie Grove (22 October 1862).

Oldorobo ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

See Salaita

Old River Lake ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Attacking the Confederates just west of the Mississippi, General Joseph A. Mower, supported by Colonel Lucius F. Hubbard, disembarked at Sunnyside Landing, then marched towards Lake Village, Arkansas. In a sharp action, with about 100 men lost on either side, he defeated Colonel Colton Greene and seized Lake Village, then returned to the Mississippi at Columbia (6 June 1864).

Olinda ❙ 1630 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

See Recife

Olivento ❙ 1041 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

Norman forces on a fresh offensive in southern Italy secured Melfi, then joined with their Lombard allies to meet a large Byzantine army advancing from Bari under Michael Doukeianus. At the Olivento, near Venosa, the Greeks and their Varangian (Viking) mercenaries suffered a terrible defeat, with many drowned in the river. They were soon beaten again at Montemaggiore (17 March 1041).

Olivenza ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Nicolas Soult was marching west from central Spain to support Marshal André Masséna in Portugal, when he attacked the small fortress of Olivenza, 15 miles southwest of Badajoz. Spanish commander Manuel Herck surrendered after 12 days and Soult moved on to besiege the major frontier fortress at Badajoz (11–22 January 1811).

Oliwa ❙ 1627 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

During Swedish blockade of Danzig (modern Gdansk) in Polish Prussia, ten Polish ships under the Dane Arend Dickman made a surprise sortie against Swedish Admiral Nils Stiernskold. While four of his ships fled, Stiernskold was killed in the capture of his flagship off nearby Oliwa and a second Swedish vessel blew herself up. However, Danzig remained under blockade (28 November 1627).

Olmedo ❙ 1445 ❙ Spanish Wars of Succession

Castilian nobles rebelling against King Juan II of Castile and his unpopular Constable, Don Alvaro de Luna, were supported by an invasion by Henry of Aragon and his brother, Juan of Navarre. Taking the field in person, the King of Castile defeated the brothers at Olmedo, south of Valladolid, where Henry died of wounds. De Luna later fell from Royal favour and was beheaded for murder.

Olmütz ❙ 1642 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Soon after victory at Schweidnitz in Silesia, Swedish Marshal Lennart Torstensson advanced into Moravia and seized and sacked the capital, Olmütz (modern Olomouc), 40 miles northeast of Brno. He then fortified the historic city, but with Archduke Leopold William and General Ottavio Piccolomini threatening, he was forced to withdraw into Saxony for his great victory at Breitenfeld (June 1642).

Olmütz ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia campaigning against Moravia attempted to besiege Austrian General Ernst Dietrich von Marschall on the March at Olmütz (modern Olomouc, Czech Republic). However, Marshal Leopold von Daun maintained lines to the fortress and the day after a Prussian convoy was destroyed at Domstadtl, Frederick broke off the siege and withdrew (May–1 July 1758).

Olpae ❙ 426 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

A fresh offensive in west-central Greece saw Peloponnesian forces under Spartan commander

Eurylochus join local Ambraciots to besiege Olpae, northeast of Argos. Arriving with an Athenian squadron, Demosthenes won a decisive victory against superior forces, with Eurylochus killed. Demosthenes returned to Athens in triumph and was later sent to fortify Pylos-Sphacteria (November 426 BC).

Oltenitza ❙ 1853 ❙ Crimean War

When Russia occupied Moldavia and Wallachia, Turkey sent Omar Pasha (Michael Lattas) north across the Danube. At its junction with the Arges near Oltenitza he overwhelmed Russian General Pyotr Andreevich Dannenberg. However, the Russians recovered and within six months counter-attacked across the Danube at Silistria, provoking British and French intervention (4 November 1853).

Olustee ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Determined to secure northern Florida, Union General Quincy Gillmore sent General Truman Seymour southwest from Jacksonville against Confederate forces under General Joseph Finegan at Olustee, just south of Ocean Pond. In the war's largest battle in Florida, Seymour attacked with over 5,000 men, but was repulsed with 1,800 casualties and withdrew to Jacksonville (20 February 1864).

Olympieum ❙ 415 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

See Syracuse

Olynthus ❙ 348 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War

Philip II of Macedon renewed his offensive against Greek cities in the northern Aegean after taking Pagasae and invaded Chalcidice to attack Olynthus, on the Gulf of Toroni, which had earlier helped him take Potidaea. Forces sent from Athens under Chares arrived too late and a pro-Macedonian faction surrendered the city. Olynthus was razed and her citizens were enslaved (September 348 BC).

Omaha Beach ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See D-Day

Omata ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Waireka

Omdurman ❙ 1898 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

Moving up the Nile to reconquer the Sudan and avenge the death of General Charles Gordon at Khartoum in 1885, General Herbert Kitchener's British-Egyptian-Sudanese army defeated the Mahdists at the Atbara, then met the Khalifa Abdullah-al-Taaishi at Omdurman (Karala), near Khartoum. The Dervish army was destroyed—with perhaps 10,000 dead and 15,000 wounded (2 September 1898).

Omoa ❙ 1853 ❙ Central American National Wars

During a border war between Guatemala and Honduras, Guatemala won in the east at Atulapa, then Guatemalan President Rafael Carrera launched a surprise attack in the west, where Colonel José Victor Zalava landed from the sea to storm the Honduran fortress of Omoa. The combatants agreed to a truce to fight American Filibusters then in late 1856 resumed the war at Masaguara (19 August 1853).

Omsk ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

Defeated in the Urals, White commander Admiral Aleksandr Kolchak lost a costly defensive action at the Tobol, then withdrew east to Omsk, where he had seized authority in November 1918. Massively defeated by General Mikhail Tukhachevski, Kolchak fled along the Trans-Siberian railway to Irkutsk, where he was later handed over to the Bolsheviks and executed (14 November 1919).

Oncativo ❙ 1830 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Federalist leader Juan Facundo Quiroga refused to sign the peace following his defeat at La Tablada (June 1829) and regrouped his forces, then attempted to invade Córdoba Province in western Argentina. He was again beaten by Unitarist General José Maria Paz in the valley of Oncativo, southeast of Córdoba, but recovered for victory a year later at Rodeo de Chacón (25 February 1830).

Ondini ❙ 1883 ❙ Zulu Civil War

When the British-restored Zulu King Cetshwayo returned to his kingdom, his uSuthu forces were routed at Msebe. A few months later the Mandlakazi faction under Zibebhu attacked the King's capital at Ondini. About 500 uSuthu died in a bloody battle and subsequent massacre, though Cetshwayo escaped. His son and successor Dinuzulu was avenged a year later at Tshaneni (21 July 1883).

Onganjira ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

On campaign against Herero rebels north of Windhoek, in German Southwest Africa, Colonel Theodor Leutwein relieved Okahanja then advanced northeast towards Onganjira. Ambushed by Samuel Maherero, Leutwein lost 14 killed and 12 wounded, though the Hereros suffered heavy casualties to artillery and machine-gun fire. The Germans soon marched on through Oviumbo (9 April 1904).

Ongon ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

As Russian forces advanced into Manchuria along the Chinese Eastern Railway in the aftermath of the Boxer Rebellion, General Orlov attacked a large Chinese force at Ongon. With the Mongol cavalry defeated, Orlov seized the nearby city of Hailar, along with a massive supply of food and stores, then continued east along the railway towards Xing-an (30 July 1900).

Onitsha ❙ 1967–1968 ❙ Biafran War

After driving back a Biafran offensive through Benin, Nigerian Federal Colonel Murtala Mohammed rashly tried to storm the Niger against Onitsha, held by Colonel Joe Achuzie. Repulsed with severe losses, Mohammed failed twice more before crossing upstream to besiege Onitsha. Despite a deadly ambush at Abagana, the Federals finally seized the city (20 October 1967–21 March 1968).

Onon ❙ 1410 ❙ Ming Imperial Wars

Determined to avenge Chinese disaster on the Kerulen (September 1409), Ming Emperor Yongle led a claimed 300,000 men to attack the Eastern Mongols at the Onon River. Mongol Prince Bunyashiri suffered a bloody defeat and fled west (where he was killed by a rival two years later). His Chancellor Arughtai was pursued east to battle the following month at Jing Luzhen (15 June 1410).

Oomuli ❙ 1560 ❙ Livonian War

Ivan IV of Russia renewed his war against Livonia and sent Andrei Kurbsky, who captured Marienburg, while Alexei Adashov attacked the Livonian Order at Oomuli (north of Valga in modern Estonia). Landmarshal Philipp Schall von Bell overconfidently sortied and was defeated and captured, and later executed on orders from the Tsar. Kurbsky then besieged the knights at Fellin (2 August).

Oondwah Nullar ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

See Udaynala

Oostend ❙ 1601–1604 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

See Ostend

Opequon ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Two weeks after inconclusive action in the Shenandoah Valley near Berryville, Union commander Philip Sheridan advanced west on General Jubal A. Early's Confederate army on the Opequon Creek, in front of Winchester, Virginia. Early was decisively defeated after a costly battle of attrition and abandoned Winchester, retreating south to dig in at Fisher's Hill (19 September 1864).

Ophlimos ❙ 622 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

To combat Persian occupation of Asia Minor, Byzantine Emperor Heraclius took a large army across the Sea of Marmara to Pylae (modern Yalova) to threaten the flank of Persian Shahbaraz in Armenia. Heraclius advanced to a good victory near Ophlimos in the Lycus Valley, but had to return to meet Avars in the Balkans. He renewed his eastern offensive two years later at Dwin (August 622).

Opoczno ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

As he invaded Poland through Ujscie (15 July), Charles X of Sweden captured Warsaw after action at Sobota, then joined General Arvid Wittenberg against King John II Casimir to the southwest at Opoczno. Casimir was badly defeated and withdrew into Silesia. His forces were beaten again at Nowy Dwor and Wojnicz, before the Swedes were finally checked at Jasna Gora (6 September 1655).

Oporto (1st) ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

French Marshal Nicolas Soult invaded Portugal from the north, brushing aside Portuguese forces at Chaves and Braga in March and advancing to Oporto, where a large force of poorly armed militia and peasant levies tried to defend Portugal's second city. The Portuguese were routed in a one-sided disaster, with thousands drowned in the Duoro, and Soult seized Oporto (29 March 1809).

Oporto (2nd) ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Six weeks after seizing Oporto, French Marshal Nicolas Soult's invasion of northern Portugal stalled as he faced a large-scale counter-offensive from Lisbon by Anglo-Portuguese forces under General Sir Arthur Wellesley. In a hard-fought battle, Wellesley drove Soult out of Oporto and then out of Portugal, capturing French guns and supplies as Soult withdrew to Spain (12 May 1809).

Oporto ❙ 1832 ❙ Miguelite Wars

After Don Miguel de Braganza usurped the throne of Portugal, his brother Don Pedro, father and Regent for the legitimate heir Maria da Gloria, raised an army with English support and invaded from the Azores. The Regent captured Oporto following a sharp battle and held it against the Miguelites until the usurper's navy was defeated a year later off Cape St Vincent (8 July 1832).

Orakau ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

When Rewi Maniapoto defiantly built a fortified pa at Orakau, six miles from Te Awamutu, General George Carey inflicted a heavy artillery bombardment, though his assault was repulsed. General Sir Duncan Cameron then brought up reinforcements and the Maoris fought their way out, losing 80 killed (including Rewi) and 40 wounded, and ending the Waikato War (31 March–2 April 1864).

Oran ❙ 1509 ❙ Spanish Colonial Wars in North Africa

After Ferdinand V completed the Reconquest of Spain at Granada (1492), Cardinal Francisco Jimenes de Cisneros captured Mers el Kebir (1505), then equipped and accompanied a larger force under Pedro Navarro against Oran, west of Algiers. The port was taken with heavy losses in killed and prisoners, and was held by Spain until 1708. The next year Navarro took Bougie and Tripoli (May 1509).

Oran ❙ 1704–1708 ❙ Spanish-Algerian Wars

Algerian commander Moustafa-bou-Chlarem took the offensive in North Africa, laying siege to the key Spanish-held port of Oran. After years of ineffective blockade, fresh Algerian forces with siege guns arrived under Ozen Hassan and bloody fighting secured four outlying forts before the citadel was taken by assault. The nearby harbour of Mers-el-Kébir fell a few months later (1704–2 January 1708).

Oran ❙ 1732 ❙ Spanish-Algerian Wars

Determined to retake Oran, west of Algiers, Spain sent Admiral Francisco Cornejo with 520 ships and 20,000 men led by José Carrillo de Albornoz Comte de Montemar. When Dey Abdi Pasha of Algiers was slow sending troops, Moustafa-bou-Chlarem was driven out. While aid finally arrived, the Algerian siege was repulsed with heavy losses on both sides and Spain held Oran (June 1732).

Oran ❙ 1780–1791 ❙ Spanish-Algerian Wars

With Spain distracted by European war, Mohammad-el-Kébir of Western Algeria besieged Oran, though he could not command the sea. Spain reacted by bombarding Algiers. Huge earthquakes in October 1790 caused terrible damage and casualties at Oran, but an Algerian offensive was driven off. Spain later agreed to evacuate Oran while retaining a bastion at Mers-el-Kébir (1780–September 1791).

Oran ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Mers el Kebir

Oran ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

As part of the Torch operations in French Northwest Africa, a flotilla from Britain under Admiral Thomas Troubridge discharged 31,000 Americans led by General Lloyd Fredenhall at the well-defended Vichy port of Oran. While the landing was largely unopposed, there was stiff opposition ashore for two days before Central Task Force secured the city's surrender (8–10 November 1942).

Oranik ❙ 1456 ❙ Albanian-Turkish Wars

Attempting to undermine George Kastriote Skanderbeg, Sultan Mehmed II sent 15,000 Turkish auxiliaries to support the Albanian leader's uncle, Musa Komninos Golem. In battle at Oranik, Skanderbeg defeated Komninos and took possession of Dibra, giving him most of upper Albania. Komninos was later pardoned and joined his nephew against the Turks (March 1456).

Oravais ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Despite his successful summer offensive against the Russian invasion of Finland, Swedish commander Karl Adlercreutz was forced back to the coast and tried to halt the Russians at Oravais, northeast of Vasa. In the largest battle of the campaign, new Russian commander Nikolai Kamenski secured a decisive victory and forced the Swedes to withdraw through Juthas (14 September 1808).

Orbetello ❙ 1646 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Prince Thomas of Savoy advanced into Tuscany with French support and besieged the Spanish-held fortress of Orbetello, in a lagoon on Italy's west coast south of Piombino. French Admiral Jean-Armande de Maillé-Brézé was killed fighting a Spanish relief fleet off Isola del Giglio and, when Spanish forces captured nearby Porto-Ecole, Thomas had to withdraw to Piedmont (June 1646).

Orbigo ❙ 456 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

With approval of the Western Emperor Avitus, Theodoric II the Visigoth took a massive army into northwest Spain and at the Orbigo near Astorga, beat his brother-in-law Rechiarius II of the Suevi to regain Spain for Rome. A year later, Theodoric captured and executed Rechiarius in Oporto. However, in 458 Theodoric was himself defeated in Gaul at Toulouse by the new Emperor Majorian.

Orbigo ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish commander José Maria Santocildes, marching through Leon, killed French General Jean-Andre Valletaux at Benavides (23 June), then advanced to the Orbigo, where Generals Jean-Pierre Bonet and Jean-Mathieu Seras attempted to hold a position. They were defeated and fell back to Leon, but a French counter-attack soon regained the river and Santocildes withdrew (2 & 18 July 1811).

Orbiso ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Carlist commander Tomás Zumalacárregui recovered from a costly repulse at Ormáiztegui in Navarre and two weeks later attempted to intercept a Spanish Liberal army under General Manuel Lorenzo and Colonel Marcelino Oráa marching towards Maeztu. Zumalacárregui was driven off at Orbiso with about 400 men lost, but he soon had his revenge on Lorenzo at Arquijas (17 January 1835).

Orchanie ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

On campaign south of the Danube to support the Russian siege of Plevna, General Osip Gourko and about 36,000 men surprised a Turkish force under Mehmed Ali Pasha crossing a pass in the Balkan Mountains, northeast of Sofia. Near Orchanie (modern Botevgrad) Gourko routed the Turks and captured supplies intended for Plevna, which fell a few weeks later (15 November 1877).

Orchomenus ❙ 86 BC ❙ 1st Mithridatic War

Pontic commander Archelaus was driven out of Greece at Chaeronea, but returned from Chalcis with reinforcements and, near Orchomenus, again faced Roman General Lucius Sulla. He was decisively beaten, with perhaps 15,000 killed, and the Pontic invasion of Greece was over. Following defeats at Miletopolis and Tenedos (85 BC), Mithridates VI of Pontus sued for peace.

Ordahsu ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd British-Ashanti War

See Odasu

Ordal ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

With France facing defeat in northern Spain, Marshal Louis Suchet opened a new offensive southwest from Barcelona. Advancing through Molins de Rey, he surprised units of the Anglo-Spanish army at Ordal and Colonel Frederick Adam was routed. However, Suchet did not pursue his advantage and Allied commander Lord Frederick Bentinck was able to withdraw (13 September 1813).

Orduña ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Spanish Liberal commander Baldomero Espartero, campaigning northwest from Vitoria in Navarre, advanced on Orduña where he was met by Carlist forces under Generals Joaquín Elío and Simon de La Torre. Heavy fighting cost the Carlists a decisive defeat and they retreated northeast towards Bilbao. A snowstorm prevented Espartero marching in pursuit (5 March 1836).

Orekhovo ❙ 1769 ❙ Polish Rebellion

Facing a Polish rebellion under Stanislas Poniatowski, Russian forces recaptured Warsaw, then Colonel Alexander Suvorov marched east against rebel leaders Francis and Casimir Pulawski. Suvorov surprised a much larger Polish force in a dawn attack near Orekhovo, killing more than 200, including Francis Pulawski. The survivors fled and Russia secured the region (1 September 1769).

Orel ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

General Vladimir Mai-Maevski advanced towards Moscow through Voronezh before reaching Orel, defended by Red commander Aleksandr Yegorov. Very heavy fighting saw Orel taken (13 October) marking the northern limit of White expansion. It was soon lost in a bloody counter-offensive and White commander Anton Denikin began his withdrawal (20 October 1919).

Orel ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Bryansk

Orel ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As the German offensive at Kursk ground to a halt, Soviet forces counter-attacked to the north against the Orel Salient, held by General Walther Model. With Russian General Markian Popov circling Orel itself and General Vasili Sokolovsky driving south into the German rear, Model's outnumbered force withdrew to avoid encirclement and fell back to Bryasnk (12 July–5 August 1943).

Orenburg ❙ 1773–1774 ❙ Pugachev Rebellion

When Cossack rebel Emelyan Pugachev and only 3,000 men failed to take the Ural city of Orenburg by storm, he settled down to a siege and defeated relief columns from Simbirsk and Kazan. However, a third column with 2,400 men and 20 guns broke into Orenburg to reinforce Governor Ivan Reinsdorp. Pugachev was then defeated at nearby Tatishchevo (5 October 1773–22 March 1774).

Orenburg ❙ 1917–1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

Near the start of the war, Orenburg Cossacks under Aleksandr Dutov seized the city from the Bosheviks (26 November 1917). They were driven out by Red Guards in late January 1918, then retook Orenburg in a counter-offensive (3 July 1918). With White defeat at Omsk in 1919, Dutov led the Orenburg Cossacks east to China, where he was assassinated in 1921 by one of his own men.

Oresund ❙ 1658 ❙ 1st Northern War

See Sound

Orewin Bridge ❙ 1282 ❙ English Conquest of Wales

See Aber Edw

Orfordness ❙ 1666 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

See North Foreland

Oriamendi ❙ 1837 ❙ 1st Carlist War

On a fresh offensive against the Carlists near San Sebastian, Spanish forces and the British legion under General Sir George de Lacy Evans advanced on Hernani and captured the nearby Heights of Oriamendi. Next day they were attacked and routed by the approaching army of Carlist commander the Infante Sebastia, and withdrew with very heavy losses (15–16 March 1837).

Oriskany ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British Colonel Barry St Leger was besieging Fort Stanwix, on the Mohawk when he sent Chief Joseph Brant and about 400 Indians to intercept a relief column under General Nicholas Herkimer. About six miles downstream at Oriskany, the Indians ambushed and virtually destroyed the American militia and the survivors retreated, with Herkimer fatally wounded (6 August 1777).

Orizaba ❙ 1862 ❙ Mexican-French War

Repulsed at Puebla, Charles Latrille Comte de Lorencez withdrew to Orizaba, where he was attacked by a large Mexican force under General Ignacio Zaragoza. In a brilliant night-time sortie led by French Captain Paul-Alexandre Détrie, the Mexicans were driven off nearby Cerro del Borrego with heavy losses. Orizaba was held until Napoleon III sent reinforcements (18 May 1862).

Or-Kapi ❙ 1736 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

See Perekop

Orlau-Frankenau ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

While Russia's invasion of eastern Prussia stalled in the north after Gumbinnen, General Aleksander Samsonov to the south advanced against the German XX Corps of Friedrich von Scholtz at Orlau-Frankenau (near Olsztyn, Poland). After severe fighting, the Germans fell back southwest on Tannenberg, where von Scholtz's delaying action helped ensure a brilliant German victory (23–24 August 1914).

Orleans ❙ 451 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Chalons

Orleans ❙ 463 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

Twelve years after Theodoric the Visigoth died at Chalons supporting Rome against the Huns, his son Theodoric II renewed the Goth expansion across Gaul and was met at Orleans by the Roman-Frankish General Aegidus and the Salian Franks. Theodoric's army was heavily defeated, with his brother Frederic killed. Theodoric himself was assassinated a few years later.

Orleans ❙ 1428–1429 ❙ Hundred Years War

In the wake of English repulse at Montgisard, Thomas Montacute Earl of Salisbury arrived with fresh troops to besiege Orleans, where he was killed by a cannon shot, then succeeded by William de la Pole Earl of Suffolk. Orleans was then reinforced by Jean Count of Dunois, and Suffolk's besieging army withdrew after defeat by Jeanne d'Arc and Jean Duke of Alencon (12 October 1428–8 May 1429).

Orleans ❙ 1563 ❙ 1st French War of Religion

Catholic Francis Duke of Guise followed his great victory over the Huguenot forces of Louis I de Bourbon Prince of Condé at Dreux (December 1562), by moving south to besiege Orleans, where he was struck down by a Huguenot assassin. With his death and the capture of Catholic Commander Anne Duke of Montmorency at Dreux, the siege and the war came to an end (February 1563).

Orleans (1st) ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Artenay

Orleans (2nd) ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Coulmiers

Orleans (3rd) ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Recaptured after French victory at Coulmiers, Orleans was again threatened by the Germans under Prince Friedrich Karl of Prussia and Grand Duke Friedrich Franz II of Mecklenburg in the wake of French withdrawal after defeat around Loigny. The city capitulated following heavy fighting in the western suburbs, yielding a reported 10,000 prisoners and 60 guns (4–5 December 1870).

Ormáiztegui ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Carlist commander Tomás Zumalacárregui followed success at Arquijas by marching north to Ormáiztegui, west of Beasain, to meet Spanish Liberal Generals Baldomero Espartero and José Carratalá. Costly fighting drove the Carlists back to Segura though both sides withdrew after scattered action next day. Two weeks later, Zumalacárregui was repulsed again at Orbiso (2–3 January 1835).

Ormoc Bay ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

A Japanese destroyer squadron under Admiral Mikio Hayakawa attempting to escort munitions and reinforcements to the Philippines was attacked in Ormoc Bay, off Leyte, by aircraft from a carrier task force led by Admiral Frederick Sherman. Almost 350 sorties sank four destroyers, a minesweeper and five transports with heavy loss of life, including Hayakawa (11 November 1944).

Ormuz ❙ 1507–1508 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in Arabia

See Hormuz

Ormuz ❙ 1622 ❙ Anglo-Portuguese Colonial Wars

See Hormuz

Orontes ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Palmyrean War

See Immae

Orontes ❙ 1098 ❙ 1st Crusade

Just two days after capturing Antioch following a long siege, the Crusaders were in turn besieged by a massive relief army under Kerboga, Emir of Mosul. Inspired by discovery of the supposed Holy Lance, Bohemund of Taranto led a courageous counter-attack across the Orontes River. Kerboga's army was driven off with heavy casualties and Antioch was saved (5–28 June 1098).

Oropesa ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As French forces advanced down the Valencia coast of Spain towards the siege of Sagunto, the road for Marshal Louis Suchet's siege guns was blocked by the ancient fortress of Oropesa. The British ship Magnificent arrived too late to help and, following a heavy artillery bombardment, Suchet forced the Spanish garrison to surrender. He was then able to move his guns south (11 October 1811).

Oroquieta ❙ 1872 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

In the vacuum following abdication of King Amadeo of Spain, Young Pretender Don Carlos VII raised volunteers at Oroquieta in Navarre and the government sent a small force under General Domingo Moriones. Despite greatly superior numbers, Don Carlos was routed and fled, leaving almost 50 dead and more than 700 prisoners. Moriones was created Marques de Oroquieta (4 May 1872).

Orsha ❙ 1514 ❙ 2nd Muscovite-Lithuanian War

Duke Basil III of Moscow campaigned in Lithuania to support Prince Mikhail Glinski against Sigismund I of Poland and in June 1514 recovered Smolensk after a three-year struggle. Sigismund sent Konstantine Ostrozhsky and, to the west at Orsha, Russian Prince Mikhail Golitz suffered a terrible defeat. While war dragged on until 1520, Moscow managed to hold Smolensk (8 September 1514).

Orsova ❙ 1738 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

On a fresh offensive on the Danube, Ottoman Grand Vizier Yeghen Mehmed Pasha besieged Orsova, 100 miles east of Belgrade, at the gorge known as the Iron Gates. A relief force under Count Lothar Königsegg defeated the Turks 30 miles away at Kornia. But facing the main Turkish army, and suffering heavy losses from disease, the Austrians retreated to Belgrade and Orsova fell.

Orsova ❙ 1788 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

In order to support Russia against Turkey, Austrian Baron Gideon Ernst von Laudon invaded Bosnia, where he quickly captured Dubitza and Novi. However, at the Danube River gorge near Orsova, he and General Leopold Wartensleben were heavily repulsed by the Turks. As a result, they were forced to withdraw until the following year's offensive took them to victory at Belgrade (9 August 1788).

Orsza ❙ 1514 ❙ 2nd Muscovite-Lithuanian War

See Orsha

Orthez ❙ 1569 ❙ 3rd French War of Religion

With the main Protestant army besieging Poitiers, a subsidiary force under Count Gabriel de Montgomery was detached to face a Royalist invasion of Navarre by Catholic commander Antoine de Lomagne, Vicomte de Terride. The Huguenots defeated Terride in the southwest at Orthez, but this modest success was soon followed by Protestant losses at Poitiers and Moncontour (24 August 1569).

Orthez ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As the Allied siege closed on Bayonne, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington took his Anglo-Portuguese force further east against the French army in the field under Marshal Nicolas Soult. In the hills at Orthez, on the River Gave de Pau, Soult attempted to make a stand. He was driven off in a hard-fought action and withdrew to the Upper Adour and defeat at Aire (27 February 1814).

Ortigara ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

Italian General Ettore Mambretti led a determined offensive on the Trentino Plateau, seizing strategic Monte Ortigara. However, it was quickly retaken by Austrian General Artur von Mecenseffy in some of the bloodiest alpine fighting of the war. Austria lost 9,000 casualties and the Italians sacrificed over 23,000 men (2,800 killed) in the so-called "Calvary of the Alpini" (10–19 June 1917).

Ortona ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Driving north along Italy's Adriatic coast, General Sir Bernard Montgomery forced the Germans back from the Sangro, then crossed the Moro and sent Canadian General Christopher Vokes against the medieval seaport of Ortona. Brutal hand-to-hand street fighting saw almost 1,400 Canadians killed before Ortona fell. Montgomery then called off his offensive (20–27 December 1943).

Osage ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)
See Mine Creek

Osaka Castle ❙ 1570 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States
See Ishiyama Honganji

Osaka Castle ❙ 1614–1615 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Tokugawa Ieyasu secured Japan at Sekigahara (1600) and finally moved against Toyotomi Hideyori (son of former ruler Hideyoshi) besieging him at Osaka castle. A brief truce intervened before the siege resumed and the castle fell by storm. Hideyori committed seppuku and Ieyasu reasserted his dominance (29 November 1614–22 January 1615 & 6 May–3 June 1615).

Osan ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

As North Korean forces seized Seoul and stormed the Han, about 500 green American troops under Colonel Brad Smith were thrown forward to delay the invaders at Osan. Outnumbered and without armour, Smith was overwhelmed by North Korean tanks with almost 200 casualties. The defeat shocked American confidence and Smith retreated through Chochiwon towards the Kum (5 July 1950).

Osel Island ❙ 1719 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Five months after Charles XII of Sweden died at Fredrikshald, Russian ships assumed the offensive and Captains Naum Sinyaven and Konon Zotov attacked Commodore Anton Johan Wrangel near Osel Island (modern Saaremaa, off Estonia). The Swedish flagship Wachtmeister and a frigate were captured in heavy fighting and another Russian victory off Grengam ended the war (24 May 1719).

Osijek ❙ 351 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars
See Mursa

Oslo ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

At the start of the lightning invasion of Norway, the German naval advance on Oslo was delayed when the cruiser Blucher was sunk in Oslofjord by land batteries. Meantime, an airborne attack seized the vital airport at Fornebu after sharp fighting, opening the way to the capital. Oslo surrendered and the Germans advanced northwest to meet Allied forces from Andalsnes (9 April 1940).

Osma ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advanced across the Duoro towards Vitoria and sent General Sir Thomas Graham against Osma, where General Honoré Rielle was expecting reinforcements from General Antoine-Louis Maucune. However, Maucune was defeated the same day at San Millan and Rielle lost over 100 men before withdrawing to Espejo (18 June 1813).

Ostend ❙ 1601–1604 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Despite repulsing Archduke Albert of Spain at Nieuport, Prince Maurice of Orange could not prevent the siege of nearby Ostend, defended by Sir Horace Vere. After more than three years, General Ambrogio de Spinola forced Vere's successor Frederick van Dorp to surrender the ruined town. The siege reportedly cost the Dutch 30,000 men and the Spanish 70,000 (5 July 1601–20 September 1604).

Ostend ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)

As part of the heroic failed raid on Zeebrugge, British forces also tried to block German destroyers and U-boats exiting Ostend. However, the two intended blockships were sunk by gunfire. A second attempt by Admiral Roger Keyes saw three Victoria Crosses won, but also failed when one blockship broke down and the other was sunk in the wrong position (22–23 April & 9–10 May 1918).

Ostia ❙ 409 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

The great Goth leader Alaric's second invasion of Italy drove the Emperor Honorius to Ravenna then laid general siege to Rome. In support of his siege Alaric attacked nearby Ostia at the mouth of the Tiber and took the port, along with massive supplies of corn and other food destined for the capital. The fall of Ostia was followed the next year by the eventual capture of Rome itself.

Ostia ❙ 849 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Three years after an Arab-Muslim force attacked Rome and sacked St Peter's Basilica, they threatened Rome again and Pope Leo IV sought aid from the Byzantine cities of Naples, Amalfi and Gaeta, which sent a large fleet under Neopolitan Admiral Caesarius to support the Pope's army. The alliance secured a great victory at the mouth of the Tiber off Ostia and the invaders were driven off.

Ostrach ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

When Austrian forces advanced over the Lech, French General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan crossed the Rhine and was attacked at Ostrach, near Pfullendorf, by Archduke Charles Louis of Austria with massive strength. With his line too widely dispersed, Jourdan was heavily defeated, with General Francois Lefebvre wounded. He lost again four days later at Stockach (21 March 1799).

Ostrog ❙ 1853 ❙ Turko-Montenegran Wars

Concerned over growing Russian influence in Montenegro, a large Ottoman army invaded under Omar Pasha, and near the monastery at Ostrog he was attacked and heavily defeated by Prince Danilo II. While Austria and Russia intervened after three months to secure peace, Turkish demands for Russia to withdraw from the Balkans soon led to the Russo-Turkish War (20 January 1853).

Ostroleka ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

See Ostrolenka

Ostrolenka ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

The small Prussian Corps of General Anton Lestocq was defeated by Napoleon Bonaparte's Grand Army in eastern Prussia at Waltersdorf and Eylau in early February and withdrew southeast to Ostrolenka, north of Warsaw, where they were again defeated. They and their Russian allies were driven out and both armies retired to winter quarters (16 February 1807).

Ostrolenka ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

Three months after repulsing a Russian invasion at Praga near Warsaw, Polish rebel forces under General Jan Skrzynecki met Russian Field Marshal Hans von Diebitsch 60 miles to the northeast, on the Narew at Ostrolenka. Both sides suffered heavy casualties in a long and bloody battle, but the Polish losses could not be sustained and the rebels retreated towards Warsaw (26 May 1831).

Ostrovo ❙ 1043 ❙ Later Byzantine Military Rebellions

While defeating Normans in Byzantine southern Italy at Monopoli, George Maniakes revolted against Constantine IX and, after allowing his troops to proclaim him Emperor, crossed to Epirus and marched on Thessalonica. He appeared to secure victory in battle against Imperial forces at Ostrovo in Bulgaria, but was killed by an arrow at his moment of triumph (May 1043).

Ostrovono ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Ostrowno

Ostrowno ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As he advanced into Russia, Napoleon Bonaparte tried to prevent the junction of two Russian armies under Prince Pyotr Bagration and General Mikhail Barclay de Tolly, defeating Bagration at Mogilev. In the north at Ostrowno, part of Barclay's force under Count Alexander Ostermann-Tolstoy was routed by Marshal Joachim Murat and forced back to Smolensk (25–26 July 1812).

Oswald's Cross ❙ 634 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Heavenfield

Oswego ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

French commander Marquis Louis de Montcalm led a bold attack across Lake Ontario to besiege the British outpost at Oswego, inadequately defended by Forts Ontario, Oswego and George. Overwhelmed by artillery fire, the settlement surrendered after Commander Colonel James F. Mercer was killed. Montcalm captured massive military stores and destroyed the forts (11–14 August 1756).

Oswestry ❙ 641 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Maserfield

Otapawa ❙ 1866 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

At war with the religio-military Hauhau in South Taranaki, General Trevor Chute led Regular forces, Forest Rangers and Maori allies against the powerful Ngatiruanui fortified pa at Otapawa on the Tangahoe. In the last major Imperial campaign in New Zealand, the pa was stormed with 30 Hauhau and ten Europeans killed. Chute then fought his way north to New Plymouth (14 January 1866).

Otchakov ❙ 1737 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish Wars

See Ochakov

Otchakov ❙ 1788 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

See Ochakov

Oteiza ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

Two months after government forces were repulsed from Carlist-held Estella in Navarre, Republican General Domingo Moriones made a fresh diversionary attack a few miles to the southeast at Oteiza. Heavy fighting secured Moriones a costly tactical victory over Carlist General Torcuato Mendíri, though the war continued another 18 months before Estella finally fell (11 August 1874).

Otford ❙ 775 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

King Offa was determined to rebuild the power of Mercia, which had lost land north of the Thames after defeat at Burford (752), and moved first against Kent. Southeast of London at Otford, near Sevenoaks, the Kentish army was defeated securing Mercian overlordship of the kingdom. Four years later, Offa turned against Wessex and achieved a decisive victory at Bensington.

Othée ❙ 1408 ❙ Hundred Years War

Following the death of Duke Philip of Burgundy, his son John the Fearless arranged the murder of his rival, the Duke of Orleans (brother of King Charles VI), then turned against the people of Liège who had risen against his nominee as their bishop. The young noble crushed the Liègeois in a terrible defeat northeast of Liège at Othée, then made peace with the King (23 September 1408).

Otluk Beli ❙ 1473 ❙ Ottoman-Turkoman War

See Erzincan

Otranto ❙ 1480 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

While Ottoman forces were making their final unsuccessful assault on the Aegean island of Rhodes, Sultan Mehmed II sent Ahmad Gedik Pasha to launch a massive land and sea attack on the port of Otranto on the "heel" of Italy. The city fell by storm and 800 residents were executed. However, the Sultan died before he could expand his bridgehead on the mainland of Italy (11 August 1480).

Otranto ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)

With Austria determined to break the Otranto Barrage blocking the Adriatic, Captain Miklos Horthy took three cruisers and sank 23 drifters off Brindisi before being attacked by three Allied cruisers and destroyer escorts under Admiral Alfredo Acton. Although two of Horthy's ships were hit, the Allies withdrew with two destroyers sunk and a British cruiser badly damaged by a torpedo (15 May 1917).

Otrar ❙ 1219–1220 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

One of the triggers for Genghis Khan's offensive against the Khwarezmian Empire was the massacre of a Mongol caravan on the Syr Darya at Otrar (modern Shaulder). Otrar was later besieged by the Conqueror's sons, Chagetai and Ogadei. After the city fell, Governor Inalchuq—who had instigated the massacre—surrendered the citadel and was tortured to death (September 1219–February 1220).

Otterburn ❙ 1388 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

James Earl of Douglas had raided into County Durham and was beginning to withdraw, when he took a defensive position against the pursuing army of Sir Henry Percy (Hotspur), son of Earl of Northumberland. Douglas was killed repulsing a rash night attack on his camp at Otterburn, near the Rede north of Hexham, but Hotspur was captured in a costly English defeat (August 1388).

Otumba ❙ 1520 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Mexico

Spanish Conquistador Hernán Cortés was driven out of Tenochtitlan by the resistance known as the Noche Triste and retreated 30 miles northeast to Otumba, where he turned on the massive pursuing Aztec army. Cortés inflicted heavy losses in a hard-fought victory, then withdrew to Tlaxcala where he regrouped before returning a year later to destroy the Aztec capital (7 July 1520).

Ouaddai ❙ 1990 ❙ Chad Civil Wars

Defeated at Iriba in eastern Chad in April, Libyan-backed rebel Idriss Déby built up his forces in Darfur, Sudan, then marched into Chad's Ouaddai Prefecture. President Hissen Habré personally led his army to meet the rebels and was decisively defeated in several very bloody actions. Déby then took the capital N'Djamena unopposed, and Habré's eight-year rule was over (10–28 November 1990).

Ouadi Doum ❙ 1987 ❙ Libyan-Chad War

When Libya sent two columns 50 miles south from Ouadi Doum to retake Fada, both were routed with terrible losses and Chad's army advanced after brutal fighting to take Ouadi Doum and huge booty. The disaster cost Libya perhaps 3,000 killed and her occupation of northern Chad was effectively over. Further Libyan defeat at Maaten-as-Sarra in September ended the war (19–22 March 1987).

Oudenarde ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Louis Duke de Vendôme and Louis Duke of Burgundy launched a renewed French offensive in the Netherlands, advancing through Ghent to besiege Oudenarde, 30 miles west of Brussels. A masterful assault river crossing by John Churchill Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugène of Savoy saw the French driven off with very heavy losses and the Allies turned southwest against Lille (11 July 1708).

Oulart ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

At the start of the rising in Ireland, about 5,000 rebels under Father John Murphy at Oulart, a hill ten miles south of Gorey in County Wexford, were attacked by Colonel Foote of the North Cork Militia—with just 110 men and a handful of yeoman cavalry. Foote was predictably routed and he, a sergeant and three privates were said to be the only survivors (27 May 1798).

Oulo ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

As the war began, White forces seized the area around Vaasa with little resistance, though further north at Ouolu, about 300 poorly armed Whites were heavily attacked by twice as many Red Guards and Russians. The first real battle of the war saw the defence hold firm until Colonel Hannes Ignatius arrived next day with artillery, persuading the main Russian force to capitulate (2–3 February 1918).

Oum Chalouba ❙ 1983 ❙ Chad Civil Wars

With their offensive towards Chad's capital N'Djamena blocked by French reinforcements, Libyan-backed rebels loyal to Goukouni Oueddei advanced southeast from Faya Largeau to attack Oum Chalouba. Government veterans under Idriss Déby and Ibrahim Itno repulsed the advance then counter-attacked, inflicting heavy losses and bringing a six-month pause in fighting (August 1983).

Oum Droussa ❙ 1977 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

When Morocco sent troops to assist Mauritania after the raid on Zouerate (1 May), they faced fierce attack by Polisario guerrillas from Western Sahara. One of the sharpest actions was further north at Oum Droussa, where two companies of Moroccan paratroops were ambushed with over 100 killed. Guerrilla pressure continued and Mauritania soon withdrew from the war (14 October 1977).

Ourcq ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Prussian General Gebhard von Blucher was defeated in successive actions by Napoleon Bonaparte, then turned to attack Marshals Auguste Marmont and Édouard Mortier who had withdrawn behind the Ourcq near Meaux, northeast of Paris. Mortier repulsed Blucher at Lizy, while Marmont checked him at nearby May and Crouy, delaying his advance on Soissons (28 February–1 March 1814).

Ourcq ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As German commander Alexander von Kluck advanced through Mons, then wheeled north and east of Paris, French Generals Joseph Gallieni and Michel Manoury launched a bold flank attack along the Ourcq. Very intensive fighting saw von Kluck and Hans von Gronau finally beaten as part of the broader Battle of the Marne and they withdrew to the Aisne (5–9 September 1914).

Ourique ❙ 1139 ❙ Christian Reconquest of Portugal

At war with Muslims beyond the Tagus, the brilliant campaign of Afonso I Henriques, Count of Portugal, culminated in a massive battle near modern Ourique. Despite reinforcements from Africa, the Muslims were routed with five Walis (Kings) killed. Afonso was hailed as first King of independent Portugal and the next year he secured Galicia at Arcos de Valdevez (25 July 1139).

Ourthe ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan advanced across the Meuse at Namur and sent General Barthélemy Schérer southeast in pursuit of Austrian Count Charles von Clerfayt, who had recently replaced Prince Friedrich Josias of Saxe-Coburg. Schérer defeated the Austrians at the River Ourthe and drove them back across the Ruhr towards the Rhine (18 September 1794).

Oveida ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Having successfully dispersed the independent-minded local junta in the northern province of Asturia, Spanish General Pedro La Romana found himself facing a French offensive under Marshal Michel Ney. When La Romana and Asturian General Francisco Ballasteros attempted to hold Ney at the Nalon near Oveida, they were heavily repulsed. Ney then took Oveida and nearby Gijon (19 May 1809).

Oveida ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

At the start of the war, Liberal Colonel Antonio Aranda at Oveida in Asturias unexpectedly declared for the rebellion and his force of 3,000 quickly came under siege by about 15,000 miners. A Nationalist column finally fought its way through against heavy resistance to relieve the starving garrison, leaving Maria de la Cabeza as the last isolated rebel position (19 July–17 October 1936).

Oviumbo ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

On campaign north of Windhoek in German Southwest Africa, Colonel Theodor Leutwein fought a bloody action at Onganjira and was then ambushed at Oviumbo by Herero leader Samuel Haherero. Unable to use his firepower in dense bush, Leutwein was forced into a humiliating retreat. He was quickly replaced and his successor beat the Herero in August at Waterberg (13 April 1904).

Owerri ❙ 1968–1969 ❙ Biafran War

Nigerian Federal forces advanced north from Port Harcourt to capture Owerri (16 September 1968), then faced an unexpected Biafran counter-offensive under Colonel Ogbugo Kalu. After a long siege, Colonel E. A. Etuk led a brilliant breakout, which saved his brigade. A new Federal offensive retook Owerri (9 January 1970) and starving Biafra collapsed (December 1968–25 April 1969).

Owikokorero ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

Major Franz-Georg Glasenapp marched against Herero rebels northeast from Windhoek in German Southwest Africa, where he was ambushed at Owikokorero, losing 26 killed and five wounded out of just 230 men. However, the rebels suffered costly losses to artillery and machine-gun fire before Glasenapp fell back on Onjatu. The German was soon ambushed again at Okaharui (13 March 1904).

Oxford ❙ 1141 ❙ English Period of Anarchy

Amid anarchy following the death of Henry I in 1135, the Empress Matilda was defeated at Winchester by her cousin Stephen, who regained the throne and soon besieged her court at Oxford. Matilda fled and the city fell after three months. Her half-brother Robert of Gloucester fought on and won at Wilton (1143). But when he died Matilda retired to Normandy (October–21 December 1141).

Ox Ford ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See North Anna

Ox Hill ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Chantilly

Oxnebjerg ❙ 1535 ❙ Danish Counts' War

See Oksnebjerg

Oyster River ❙ 1694 ❙ King William's War

In France's war against Colonial America, Claude-Sebastian de Villeu invaded New Hampshire but, lacking resources to attack Pemaquid, he fell on the small settlement of Oyster River (modern Durham). Supported by Abnaki Indians under Chief Taxous, he killed over 100 settlers, mainly women and children, before burning the houses and taking his captives to Quebec (July 1694).

Ozernoe ❙ 1655 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

A Russian-Ukrainian army under Vasili Buturlin and Bogdan Chmielnicki withdrawing east from Lvov, was attacked southeast of Zborov at Ozernoe by Tatars, who had invaded the Ukraine. The Tatars and their Polish allies were badly defeated, and Crimean Khan Mehmet Girai agreed to withdraw. In 1658 Ukrainian Cossacks attacked Russia at Poltava and Kiev (10 November 1655).

P

Paardeberg ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Pursued east from Kimberley, Piet Cronjé was unwisely attacked near Paardeberg by advance British units under General Sir Horatio Kitchener. The rash frontal assault was driven off with over 1,200 men lost although the main force under General Lord Frederick Roberts then besieged the Boer laager. Cronjé and over 4,000 men were finally starved into surrender (18–27 February 1900).

Padaghe ❙ 1780 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Doogaur

Padua ❙ 1509 ❙ War of the League of Cambrai

Four months after France, Germany and the Papacy defeated Venice at Agnadello, Venetian troops recaptured Padua and held it against a massive army under Emperor Maximilian. Although the siege failed, the Imperial army's savagery against an Italian city persuaded Pope Julius II to abandon the League and ally himself with Venice to drive the powers out of Italy (September–3 October 1509).

Paducah ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Confederate General Nathan B. Forrest led a large-scale raid north across Tennessee into Kentucky where he attacked the town of Paducah, on the Ohio. While the raiders caused widespread damage, the Union garrison of Colonel Stephen D. Hicks successfully defended nearby Fort Anderson and Forrest withdrew. The next month he attacked Fort Pillow on the Mississippi (25 March 1864).

Paekchon ❙ 663 ❙ Sino-Korean Wars

Attempting to restore the southwest Korean Kingdom of Paekche after conquest at Sabi by China and neighbouring Silla, rebel Pung Chang sought aid from Japan, which sent 170 ships under Abe Hirafu. In a decisive naval action against Tang commander Liu Rengui at the mouth of the Paekchon (Japanese Hakusukinoe—modern Kum), Japan lost 40 ships and was forced to abandon Paekche.

Pagahm-mew ❙ 1826 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

Advancing against King Bagyipaw of Burma in the ancient capital at Ava, British General Sir Archibald Campbell captured Wattee-Goung and Melloone, then attacked Chief Na-wing Phuring and 16,000 men at nearby Pagahm-mew (modern Pagan). Campbell stormed the town and two weeks later the King signed a peace treaty ceding Arakan and Tenasserim to Britain (9 February 1826).

Pagan ❙ 1826 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

See Pagahm-mew

Pagasae ❙ 352 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War

After a failed intervention to help Thessaly against Phocis, Philip II of Macedon returned to seize Pagasae, the port of Pherae, then met Onomarchus of Phocia on nearby Crocus Field. Brutal action cost the Phocians over 6,000 men killed, including Onomarchus, and Philip reputedly had 3,000 captives thrown into the sea. He was later blocked by Athenians at Thermopylae and returned home.

Pago Largo ❙ 1839 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

When Governor Genaro Berón de Astrada of Corrientes led a campaign against Argentine Dictator Juan Manuel de Rosas, he was defeated and killed in battle at Pago Largo, south of Corrientes, by General Pascual Echague of Entre Rios. Other leaders were executed after the battle, temporarily suppressing the rising. Astrada was avenged two years later at Caaguazú (31 March 1839).

Pakozd ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

At the start of the rising against the Habsburgs, Hungarian General Johann Moga was met southwest of Budapest near Stuhlweissenberg, between Pakozd and Velencze, by Imperial General Joseph Jellacic, appointed Ban of Croatia to combat Hungarian nationalism. An indecisive action led to an armistice, but the Hungarians soon resumed fighting and advanced on Vienna (29 September 1848).

Palacé ❙ 1811 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

In the first substantial action of Colombia's independence struggle, Colonel Antonio Baraya, aided by Atanasio Jirardot, met the Royalist forces of Governor Miguel Tacón at the Rio Palacé, in the Cauca Valley. Following a decisive Patriot cavalry charge led by Miguel Cabal, Tacón withdrew towards Pasto with heavy losses in casualties and prisoners. Baraya occupied Popayán (28 March 1811).

Palacé ❙ 1813 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

When Spanish Royalists under Juan de Samano invaded southern Colombia and occupied Popayán, Republican General Antonio Nariño marched south from Bogotá with 1,200 infantry and 200 cavalry. His vanguard under Colonel José María Cabal routed the Royalists on the Palacé Heights. Nearby Popayán fell two weeks later following further victory at Calibio (30 December 1813).

Palanan ❙ 1901 ❙ Philippine-American War

American General Frederick Funston landed at Casiguran Bay in eastern Luzon, then aided by Macabebe soldiers under Hilario Tal Palcido and Gregorio Cadhit, marched 100 miles north to surprise Revolutionary President Emilio Aguinaldo in his headquarters at Palanan. Funston entered the town by ruse and captured Aguinaldo, though the guerrilla war continued (23 March 1901).

Palau Islands ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With the Mariana Islands secured, the Allied decision to attack the Philippines rather than Formosa sent Admiral Theodore Wilkinson and General Roy Geiger southwest against the Palau Islands, held by General Sadao Inoue. Some of the highest losses of the war saw about 1,500 Americans and perhaps 12,000 Japanese killed before Geiger took Peliliu and Angaur (September–November 1944).

Palawan Passage ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As Japanese Admiral Takeo Kurita sailed from Brunei to disrupt American landings at Leyte Gulf, his fleet was ambushed in Palawan Passage, off the western Philippines, by the American submarines Dace and Darter. Kurita had two cruisers sunk (including his flagship) and one badly damaged. He then transferred his flag and continued east into the Sibuyan Sea (23 October 1944).

Palembang ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Regrouping after losses in the Madoera Strait, a Dutch-British-American squadron under Admiral Karel Doorman tried to intercept a Japanese force heading for Palembar in southeast Sumatra. The Allies were driven off by air attack and a Japanese parachute assault opened the landing on Palembang. Another Allied interception failed days later in Lombok Strait (13–14 February 1942).

Palencia ❙ 1870 ❙ Central American National Wars

In a prelude to Guatemala's Liberal Revolution, the seasoned rebel Serapio Cruz led a force against President Vicente Cerna. Just west of Guatemala City at Palencia, Cruz was defeated and killed by government troops under General Antonio Solares. The following year renewed fighting began at Tacaña and ended with rebel victory at San Lucas Sacatepéquez (23 January 1870).

Palermo ❙ 830–831 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Arab invaders of Byzantine Sicily were driven off from a failed siege of Syracuse (827–828) and held only Mazara and Mineo when they were reinforced from Spain and North Africa and advanced against Palermo. The key northern city was taken by storm after a long siege and became the capital of Muslim Sicily, renamed by the Arabs as Balarm (August 830–12 September 831).

Palermo ❙ 1071–1072 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

Crossing into Sicily to aid his younger brother Roger d'Hauteville (who had secured a great victory at Misilmeri in 1068), Robert Guiscard Duke of Apulia besieged the nearby key city of Palermo. A five-month land and naval blockade ended when some of Robert's men scaled the walls at night and the Muslims surrendered next day. Guiscard became Count Roger I of Sicily (1071–5 January 1072).

Palermo ❙ 1647 ❙ Allesi's Insurrection

The hungry people of Palermo were inspired by a popular insurrection in Naples to rise against Pedro Fajardo Marquis de los Vélez, the Spanish Viceroy of Sicily. Rebel leader Guiseppe d'Alessi proclaimed himself Captain-General but, like Mansaniello in Naples, he was eventually killed by his own supporters and the rising was suppressed amid bloody violence (15–22 August 1647).

Palermo ❙ 1676 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Two months after the Dutch-Spanish naval loss at Augusta, in which Dutch Admiral Michiel de Ruyter was fatally wounded, French forces supporting Sicily against Spain attacked the Allies at anchor off Palermo. French Marshal Louis Victor de Vivonne and Marquis Abraham Duquesne defeated and killed Dutch Admiral Jan de Haan, securing command of the Mediterranean (12 June 1676).

Palermo ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Giuseppe Garibaldi and "The Thousand" landed in western Sicily for victory at Calatafimi, then marched on Palermo, held by 18,000 Neapolitans under General Ferdinando Lanza. Garibaldi broke into the city although the Neapolitans resisted strongly before finally surrendering with heavy losses. Garibaldi then marched east for his decisive victory at Milazzo (27 May–6 June).

Palermo ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

American General George Patton landed in southwest Sicily around Gela and advanced north through Agrigento (16 July), then swept into the northwest where General Geoffrey Keyes seized Palermo from General Giusseppe Molinaro. While the advance secured many Italian prisoners, it was of doubtful strategic value and the Americans turned east towards Messina (22 July 1943).

Palestrina ❙ 1849 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

Advancing to support the French siege of the self-declared Republic of Rome, Ferdinand II of the Two Sicilies sent General Carlo Zucchi and 7,000 men against Giuseppe Garibaldi at Palestrina, 25 miles southeast of Rome. A fierce action saw the numerically superior Neapolitans driven off and the Bourbon advance was repulsed again ten days later at nearby Velletri (9 May 1849).

Palestro ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

When King Victor Emmanuel II of Sardinia-Piedmont mobilised in support of independence, he faced an Austrian invasion under General Philipp Stadion von Thannhausen. Ten days after being repulsed at Montebello, the Austrians attacked Piedmontese General Enrico Cialdini crossing the Sesia near Palestro. The Austrians were heavily repulsed and driven out of Palestro (30 May 1859).

Pali ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

The British-supported Rajah of Jodhpur faced rebellion by his vassal Kusal Singh, Thakur of Awah, and sent his forces under Anad Singh to hold Pali, southeast of Jodhpur. Unwisely leaving his well-defended position, Anad Singh was routed and killed in a surprise dawn assault and the army of Jodhpur suffered severe losses. The Thakur lost the following January at Awah (8 September 1857).

Palikao ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd Opium War

See Baliqiao

Palkhed ❙ 1728 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

As the Marathas expanded their power into northern India, Mulhar Rao Holkar in the service of Baji Rao I trapped the army of Nizam-ul-Mulk of Hyderabad in dry hills at Palkhed, 20 miles west of Aurangabab. With his supplies cut off, the Nizam was forced to make terms. Holkar quickly rose to senior command in the Peshwar's army (28 February 1728).

Pallet ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Royalist rebel leader Charles Bonchamp defeated Republican General Jean-Baptiste Kléber at Torfou (19 September) then pursued him north as far as Pallet, just 20 miles from Nantes, where he inflicted a sharp defeat on the retreating army, killing many of their wounded. However, Kléber was saved by reinforcements from Nantes itself and Bonchamp eventually withdrew (24 September 1793).

Palmar, Mexico ❙ 1812 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

In support of the soldier-priest José María Morelos after Cuautla, insurgent leaders Pablo Galeana and Nicolás Bravo took 600 men against Colonel Juan Labaqui at Palmar, southeast of Puebla. Heavy fighting saw Labaqui and 47 others killed and the Royalists surrendered, yielding the rebels 200 prisoners and a large quantity of arms, including three guns (19 August 1812).

Palmar, Mexico ❙ 1813 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Continuing the fight for independence under soldier-priest José María Morelos, Mariano Matamaros attacked a large Royalist convoy led by Colonel Manuel Martínez near Palmar, southeast of Puebla. The Royalists were routed, losing over 200 dead and almost 400 prisoners. Morelos was soon defeated at Valladolid and Matamaros lost in January 1814 at Puruarán (14 October 1813).

Palmar, Uruguay ❙ 1838 ❙ Uruguayan Civil War

Despite defeat at Carpinteria (September 1836), former Uruguayan President Fructuoso Rivera renewed his rising against Manuel Oribe and met the President's brother Ignacio Oribe at Palmar del Arroyo Grande, in western Uruguay near Cordobesa. The government army suffered decisive defeat after which Manuel Oribe fled to Buenos Aires and Rivera regained the Presidency (15 June 1838).

Palmira ❙ 1831 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

General Rafael Urdaneta seized power after victory at Santuario, then faced rebellion in the Cauca Valley led by Liberal Generals José María Obando and José Hilario López. Government forces under General Pedro Muguerza and Colonel Manuel José Collazos were badly defeated near Palmira, northeast of Cali, and by early

May Urdaneta was forced to resign (10 February 1831).

Palmito Ranch ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

The reputed last battle of the war saw Union Colonel Theodore H. Barrett lead about 300 men from Brazos Santiago inland along the Rio Grande to attack the Confederate camp at Palmito Ranch, just outside Brownsville, Texas. Barrett was eventually driven off by Colonel John S. Ford, losing over 100 men in heavy fighting, and the war soon came to an end (12–13 May 1865).

Palmyra ❙ 272 ❙ Roman-Palmyrean War

With her army routed by Emperor Aurelian at Immae and Emessa, Queen Zenobia of Palmyra withdrew under siege to her capital in the Syrian desert. Expected Persian aid did not come and, after Aurelian stormed Palmyra, he spared the city and started for Rome with Zenobia as a captive. However, when the Palmyreans massacred Aurelian's garrison, he turned back and razed the city to the ground.

Palmyra ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Middle East)

Despite the fall of Damascus, Vichy forces continued fighting in central Syria along the strategic pipeline from Iraq. General George Clarke's Habforce, including the Arab Legion, converged on Palmyra (modern Tadmur), which was captured after hard fighting. It was one of the last major actions in Syria and Vichy commander Henri Dentz soon sued for peace (23 June–3 July 1941).

Palo ❙ 1815 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

While Spanish General Pablo Morillo besieged Cartagena, other Royalists led by Aparico Vidaurrázaga occupied Popayán then faced a large Patriot army under General José María Cabal. Marching out to the nearby Palo River, Vidaurrázaga was decisively defeated, losing 350 casualties and 500 prisoners. Popayán was lost until Spanish victory in June 1816 at El Tambo (5 July 1815).

Palo Alto ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

American General Zachary Taylor advancing from the mouth of the Rio Grande to relieve besieged Fort Texas was met to the northeast at Palo Alto by a much larger Mexican force under General Mariano Arista. After suffering heavy losses to artillery fire, the Mexicans fled with 400 casualties and were defeated again next day at Resaca de la Palma (8 May 1846).

Palo Duro ❙ 1874 ❙ Red River Indian War

With Indians in northern Texas on the warpath over destruction of buffalo, Colonel Ranald Mackenzie attacked the stronghold in Palo Duro Canyon, southeast of Amarillo, held by Kiowa under Lone Wolf and some Comanche. While few lives were lost, massive supplies and over 1,000 captured horses were destroyed, effectively ending the Indian capacity to fight the war (28 September 1874).

Palo Hincado ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

See Santo Domingo

Palonegro ❙ 1900 ❙ Colombian War of the Thousand Days

In the most decisive action of Liberal revolt against President Manuel Antonio Sanclemente, government forces recovered from defeat at Peralonso (December 1899) and General Gabriel Vargas Santos beat Liberal General Próspero Pinzon at Palonegro, just west of Bucaramanga. Sanclemente was soon replaced by José Manuel Marroquín, though war dragged on for two years (11–16 May 1900).

Palosina ❙ 1919 ❙ Waziristan Campaign

In the wake of the Third Afghan War, Wana and Mahsud tribesmen in Waziristan, southwest of Peshawar, rebelled and an Indian army column under General Andrew Sheen marched to the Palosina Plain. Sikh infantry suffered costly losses failing to drive the rebels from nearby hills, but the rebels also lost heavily to machine-gun and artillery fire and withdrew to Ahnai Tangi (19–22 December 1919).

Paltzig ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Kay

Pa Mok ❙ 1585 ❙ Burmese-Siamese Wars

The Burmese client state of Chiang Mai sent a force reputed to be over 100,000 men, with war elephants and cavalry, against King Naresuan of Siam, who marched north from Ayutthaya to meet them at Pa Mok. Using barge-mounted heavy cannon, Naresuan secured a bloody and decisive victory, forcing Chiang Mai to withdraw. In 1593 he finally overthrew Burmese overlordship at Nong Sarai.

Pampa Grande ❙ 1933 ❙ Chaco War

Attacking Bolivian forces in the Chaco Boreal, Paraguay's 7th Division under Colonel José A. Ortiz assaulted and seized Pampa Grande, taking more than 600 Bolivian prisoners. The same day Colonel Eugenio Garay's 8th Division took 250 more prisoners further east at Pozo Favorito. The main offensive soon commenced to the southwest against Alihuatá (15 September 1933).

Pamplona ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Allied forces advanced into the western Pyrenees after Vitoria, British General Sir Rowland Hill and later Spanish General Henry O'Donnell blockaded Pamplona, held by Governor Louis-Pierre Cassan. After a threat to execute the French officers, the fortress was starved into surrender and Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington was able to press his invasion of France (25 June–31 October 1813).

Pamunkey ❙ 1625 ❙ Powhatan Indian Wars

English settlers in Virginia under Governor Sir Francis Wyatt responded to the massacre at Jamestown (March 1622) with a bloody war against the Algonquin confederation, led by Opechancanough. Under the pretense of making peace, the settlers fell on the Indian village at nearby Pamunkey, reportedly killing 1,000. With both sides exhausted a peace treaty was signed in 1632.

Panama ❙ 1671 ❙ Morgan's Raids on Panama

Two years after taking Porto Bello, on the Panama Isthmus, Welsh-born Henry Morgan took about 2,000 buccaneers through the jungle to attack the city of Panama, held by Don Juan Perez de Guzman. The Spanish were driven off in very heavy fighting and the city was sacked and burned. Morgan was later knighted by Charles II and returned as Deputy Governor of Jamaica (16 January 1671).

Panama ❙ 1989 ❙ American Invasion of Panama

After President Manuel Noriega of Panama declared war on the United States, a large American invasion force was sent to seize the President and restore democracy. By the time fighting ended, 26 Americans had been killed, plus about 300 Panamanian military and over 200 civilians. Noriega was taken to the United States, where he was imprisoned for drug trafficking (20–31 December 1989).

Panay Incident ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

American and British civilians sailing up the Yangzi in a small convoy to escape the Japanese advance on Nanjing were bombed and strafed by Japanese aircraft. The American gunboat Panay was sunk (with three killed and many wounded) along with two oil barges sunk. Anxious to avoid war, America demanded and received an apology and compensation (12 December 1937).

Pancalia ❙ 978 ❙ Byzantine Military Rebellions

When Byzantine General Bardas Sclerus was proclaimed Emperor by his troops and seized much of Asia Minor, Emperor Basil II sent for the great warrior Bardas Phocas, who marched east to meet the usurper on the Plain of Pancalia, near Amorium. Phocas was defeated and fell back on the Halys. They fought again the following year at Aquae Saravenae and Bardas Sclerus was defeated (19 June 978).

Panchgaum ❙ 1775 ❙ Maratha Wars of Succession

During civil war against Raghunath Rao (who had murdered his nephew to make himself Peshwa), Sabaji Sindhia—on behalf of the legitimate government in Poona—fought his own brother Mudhoji at Panchgaum, ten miles south of Nagpur. The usurper secured a major victory when Mudhoji defeated and killed Sabaji, but Raghunath was soon beaten and deposed at Adas (26 January 1775).

Pancorbo ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Joachim Blake was defeated at Zornoza (29 October) then had to abandon Bilbao when the French attacked at Durango. The same day further south at Pancorbo near Miranda, he was attacked by French Marshals Francois Lefebvre and Claude Victor. Blake lost about 600 casualties before disengaging to withdraw through Valmaseda towards Espinosa (31 October 1808).

Pandapatan ❙ 1902 ❙ American-Moro Wars

See Bayan

Pandhana ❙ 1720 ❙ Mughal-Hyderabad War

See Ratanpur

Pandjeh ❙ 1885 ❙ Russo-Afghan War

See Penjdeh

Pandosia ❙ 331 BC ❙ Macedonian Conquests

Alexander of Epirus attempted to emulate his nephew Alexander the Great by invading southern Italy to support Greek residents of Tarentum against the Lucanians and Samnites. Despite some early success, Alexander was decisively defeated by a force of Lucanians and Bruttians at Pandosia, on the Acheron in Bruttium near the border with Lucania. He was then assassinated.

Pandu Nadi ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Advancing northeast from Allahabad to recapture Cawnpore, General Sir Henry Havelock secured victory at Aong, but the rebels attempted to hold the bridge on the flooded Pandu Nadi. After a sharp action the same day in very hot conditions, Havelock's exhausted men seized the bridge when explosive charges failed. The next day they advanced eight miles to Cawnpore (15 July 1857).

Paneas ❙ 198 BC ❙ 5th Syrian War

Antiochus III of Syria failed to conquer Palestine in 217 BC at Raphia and returned 19 years later with a huge army to defeat an Egyptian force under the Greek Commander Scopas in the Jordan Valley at Paneas (later Baniyas). Flushed with victory, Antiochus then captured Gaza and Jerusalem and Ptolemy V Epiphanes of Egypt renounced any claim to Palestine and Lower Syria.

Pangani ❙ 1889 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

Defeated in German East Africa near Bagamoyo, Arab rebel leader Abushiri ibn Salim was driven out of Sadani (7 June) then was bombarded and defeated at his main stronghold in Pangani (in modern Tanzania) by Commissioner Hermann von Wissmann. After nearby Tanga also fell, Abushiri fled into the interior where he was later captured and hanged, effectively ending the rising (July 1889).

Pange ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Colombey

Pangpang ❙ 1904 ❙ American-Moro Wars

Major Hugh Scott recovered from a wound suffered as the rebel Panglima Hassan escaped from capture at Lake Seit, then led a fresh offensive against the Muslim Moro leader on Jolo, in the southern Philippines. The rebel fortress at Pangpang was destroyed by artillery fire with about 80 Moros killed. Hassan escaped again but was cornered and shot down at nearby Bud Bagsak (5 March 1904).

Pangul ❙ 1418–1420 ❙ Vijayanagar-Bahmani Wars

On his last campaign, Bahmanid Sultan Firuz Shah attacked Pangul, north of the Krishna, held by Vira Vijaya of Vijayanagar. Firuz suffered heavy losses securing a costly victory then besieged the town. After two years, with the Bahmani army decimated by disease, Vira Vijaya attacked and the Sultan was routed and withdrew. The costly failure shattered Firuz and within two years he was dead.

Panhala ❙ 1660 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

Maratha commander Shivaji killed the Bijapur General Afzal Khan at Pratabgarh then captured Panhala near Kolhapur, where he was besieged by the Bijapur army under Fazl Khan, son of the murdered General. Shivaji fled after the fall of nearby Pavingarh (13 July) and Panhala finally had to surrender when Sultan Ali Adil Shah sent further reinforcements (2 March–22 September 1660).

Panhala ❙ 1673 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

When Ali Adil Shah of Bijapur died (1672) Maratha General Shivaji sent Annaji Pant in a fresh assault against the Sultan's four-year-old son Sikander and Regent Khawas Khan. Approaching Panhala, near Kolhapur, a Maratha advance unit of just 60 under Kondaji Farzand mounted the walls in a courageous night-time escalade. They killed the commander and secured the fortress (6 March 1673).

Panhala ❙ 1701 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

On a renewed offensive south of Bombay, Emperor Aurangzeb and Zulfiqar Khan besieged the Maratha leader Trimbak at the powerful fortress of Panhala, near Kolhapur. A relief force under Dhanaji Jadhav was heavily repulsed (23 January) and mines were prepared to destroy the walls. Instead the Mughals negotiated a massive payment to achieve a negotiated surrender (January–28 May 1701).

Paniani ❙ 1782 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

After victory at Trikalur, Colonel Thomas Humberston again advanced inland from the Malabar Coast of southern India, then had to withdraw in the face of 20,000 Marathas under Tipu Sultan (son of Haidar Ali of Mysore). Falling back on the British position on the Paniani, he repulsed a huge Maratha attack and Tipu withdrew on the death of his father (27 November 1782).

Paniar ❙ 1843 ❙ British-Gwalior War

See Panniar

Panion ❙ 198 BC ❙ 5th Syrian War

See Paneas

Panipat ❙ 1526 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Babur, Ruler of Kabul, marched from Afghanistan into northern India, where he conquered the Punjab then advanced against Ibrahim Lodi, Afghan Sultan of Delhi. Ibrahim attacked the enemy defensive position to the north at Panipat with a vastly superior army, but was decisively defeated and killed. Babur then occupied Delhi and Agra to establish the 300-year Mughal Empire (21 April 1526).

Panipat ❙ 1556 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

After victory at Sirhind (June 1555), the 14-year-old Mughal Emperor Akbar and Regent Bairam Khan marched towards Delhi against Afghan-Hindu forces under the Hindu usurper Hemu, who had recaptured the capital. Despite being heavily outnumbered, Akbar crushed Hemu 50 miles north at Panipat. Delhi was retaken and Akbar restored the 300-year Mughal Empire (5 November 1556).

Panipat ❙ 1761 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

Afghan General Ahmad Shah Durrani beat a Maratha force at Barari Ghat then a year later marched against the main Maratha army under the Peshwa's cousin Sadashiv Bhao. North of Delhi, at Panipat, Bhao and the Peshwa's teenage son Viswas Rao were killed, along with up to 200,000 troops and camp followers, and Maratha military power in the north was destroyed (14 January 1761).

Panium ❙ 198 BC ❙ 5th Syrian War
See Paneas

Panjkora ❙ 1895 ❙ Chitral Campaign
As General Sir Robert Low marched northeast from Nowshera to relieve a British force besieged by rebels in the Kashmir Kingdom of Chitral, Colonel Fred Battye over-ambitiously pursued Umra Khan's Chitralis across the Panjkora, north of Chakdara. When the river bridge was washed away Battye was killed in the withdrawal. However, Low soon resumed his advance (13 April 1895).

Panjshir Valley ❙ 1982 ❙ Afghan Civil War
On a large-scale offensive north of Kabul, 12,000 Afghan and Soviet troops in the Panjshir Valley attacked Mujahaden rebels under Ahmad Shah Massud fighting the Kabul government. Two separate operations failed after intense fighting cost up to 3,000 government and Soviet killed and wounded, plus the loss of 60 armoured vehicles and 35 aircraft and helicopters (May–September 1982).

Panjshir Valley ❙ 1984 ❙ Afghan Civil War
About 15,000 Afghan and Soviet troops led by Russian General Saradov renewed their offensive in the Panjshir Valley north of Kabul, attacking Mujahaden rebels under Ahmad Shah Massud. Supported by heavy bombing and helicopter assault, the Kabul government troops forced Massud to withdraw and they captured high-profile rebel commander Abdul Wahed (April–May 1984).

Panjwin ❙ 1983 ❙ Iraq-Iran War
Iranian forces campaigning in Iraqi Kurdistan took Haj Omran (29 July) then launched a fresh offensive east of Suleimaniya. Despite Iraqi air attack and chemical weapons, Iran and its Kurdish allies secured much of the Panjwin Valley, but were halted outside Panjwin itself. By early 1985, anti-Baghdad forces reportedly controlled over one-third of Kurdistan (20 October–30 November 1983).

Panniar ❙ 1843 ❙ British-Gwalior War
During a disputed succession of the Maharaja of Gwalior in central India, Governor General Lord Ellenborough sent a large force under General Sir Hugh Gough. On the same day that Gough routed the Marathas at Maharajpur, his left wing led by General John Grey defeated a separate Maratha force at Panniar, southwest of Gwalior, bringing the war to an end (29 December 1843).

Panormus, Greece ❙ 429 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War
See Naupactus

Panormus, Sicily ❙ 251 BC ❙ 1st Punic War
When Rome captured Panormus (modern Palermo), Carthaginian General Hasdrubal launched a massive assault to recover his former base in Sicily. However, he was heavily defeated by Lucius Caecilius Metellus, with all his war-elephants killed or captured. The victory encouraged the Roman Senate to provide fresh ships to attack remaining Carthaginian strongholds in western Sicily.

Panowce ❙ 1633 ❙ Polish-Tatar Wars
See Kamieniec

Pantano de Vargas ❙ 1819 ❙ Colombian War of Independence
Patriot leader Simón Bolívar advanced through Gámeza towards Bogotá, crossing the Sogamoso to attack Spanish Colonel José María Barreiro at Pantano de Vargas, northeast of Tunja. Both sides lost heavily in a fierce yet indecisive action, though the day was saved by Bolívar's llaneros under Juan José Rondon. Barreiro was later forced to fall back towards Boyacá (25 July 1819).

Pantin ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)
See Paris

Paoki ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Baoji

Paoli ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Pursuing General George Washington after victory at Cooch's Bridge and the Brandywine, British commander Sir William Howe sent General Charles Grey against an American rearguard under General Anthony Wayne. Grey surprised and routed Wayne in a night attack at Paoli, near the Schuylkill, and a few days later Howe marched into Philadelphia (21 September 1777).

Paoting ❙ 1928 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Baoding

Papremis ❙ 459 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

In support of revolt against Persia in Egypt by Inaros of Libya, Athens sent a large fleet to the Nile Delta, where Persian commander Achaemenes (brother of Xerxes) was defeated and killed at Papremis. The Athenians then advanced south and seized most of Memphis. The citadel held out for four years until a Persian relief force arrived overland from Syria for victory at Prosopitis.

Papua ❙ 1942–1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With an invasion of Port Moresby thwarted in the Coral Sea (May 1942), Japanese landed on the north coast of Papua and marched overland towards the capital. With a landing repulsed in the east at Milne Bay, the invaders were finally halted outside Port Moresby. Driven back across the Kokoda Trail, they were destroyed at Gona, Buna and Sanananda (23 July 1942–21 January 1943).

Parabiago ❙ 1339 ❙ Condottieri Wars

During the brutal condottieri campaigns in northern Italy, large bodies of mercenaries ravaged the countryside for booty, with one such band formed by Lodrisio Visconti to attack Milan. The so-called "company of adventurers" was repulsed with heavy losses at Parabiago, northwest of Milan. The threat of the roaming bands continued for many years (21 February 1339).

Paraetacene ❙ 317 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

Amid war between the successors of Alexander the Great, Antigonus invaded Persia and met Eumenes near Isfahan at Paraetacene. After a massive battle, with more than 40,000 men on either side, the action was broken off inconclusively and the two armies withdrew with both Generals claiming tactical victory. The following winter Antigonus won the decisive action at Gabiene.

Paraguarí ❙ 1811 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

See Cerro Porteño

Parana ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Riachuelo

Parana ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Estero Bellaco

Paredón ❙ 1914 ❙ Mexican Revolution

With Federal forces falling back in central Mexico after disaster at Torréon (3 April), rebel General Francisco (Pancho) Villa detoured to attack a strong government position at Paredón, north of Saltillo. After a total rout in which more than half the government troops became casualties or deserted, the Federal garrison abandoned Saltillo and Villa advanced on Zacatecas (17 May 1914).

Parí ❙ 1816 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

A year after Spain secured western Bolivia at Sipe-Sipe, Royalist General Francisco Javier Aguilera in the east attacked Argentine Colonel Ignacio Warnes at Parí, near Santa Cruz (seized by Warnes after battle at Florida). A decisive Argentine defeat saw Warnes captured and beheaded and Aguilera executed over 900 Patriots, including many women and children (21 November 1816).

Paris ❙ 885–886 ❙ Viking Raids on France

In one of the largest-scale Viking actions in Europe, Siegfrid and Sinric besieged Paris, heroically defended for almost a year by Odo (Eudes) Marquess of Neustria and Bishop Gozelin. After Frankish victory at Montfaucon, King Charles III—the Fat—bought the Norse army off and allowed it to plunder Burgundy. He was soon deposed and Odo became King (November 885–October 886).

Paris ❙ 1429 ❙ Hundred Years War

Following French victory at Patay (19 June), Jeanne d'Arc captured Troyes, Chalons and Rheims from the English, then rashly attempted an attack on Paris on the religious festival of Our Lady's Nativity, despite lack of support from the newly crowned King Charles VII. She was wounded by an arrow in the thigh and her impetuous attack was driven off (8 September 1429).

Paris ❙ 1436 ❙ Hundred Years War

Philip Duke of Burgundy abandoned support for the English when they were repulsed from central France and joined King Charles VII, ending the long-running Burgundian-Armagnac Civil War. The reconciled French allies then marched on Paris and Arthur Count of Richemont captured the city after the English garrison of the Bastille were starved into surrender (13 April 1436).

Paris ❙ 1590 ❙ 9th French War of Religion

Henry of Navarre, who had claimed the French throne as Henry IV, defeated the Holy League at Ivry (14 March) then besieged the Catholics in Paris where they were led by Charles Duke of Mayenne. The city was nearly starved into submission when Alessandro Farnese Duke of Parma arrived with a Spanish relief force and the siege ended (May–August 1590).

Paris ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

As the Allies closed in on Paris, Marshals Auguste Marmont and Édouard Mortier attempted to defend the capital against the massive combined army of Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg and General Gebhard von Blucher. After action at Pantin, Romainville and Montmartre, Marmont surrendered Paris. Two weeks later Bonaparte abdicated and went into exile (30 March 1814).

Paris ❙ 1870–1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

With much of the French army besieged at Metz or captured at Sedan, Marshal Helmuth von Moltke and Prince Friedrich Wilhelm laid siege to Paris itself, defended by troops and militia under General Louis Jules Trochu. After failed French sorties, including Villiers and Le Bourget, a massive siege bombardment forced the starving city to surrender (20 September 1870–28 January 1871).

Paris ❙ 1871 ❙ Paris Commune

In the wake of humiliating defeat by Germany, Republicans tried to establish an independent government in Paris and faced a massive assault by Royalist troops. The damaging conflict that followed saw about 750 troops killed. Over 20,000 Communards died in the fighting or were executed and thousands more were deported as Royalist Government was restored (18 March–21 May 1871).

Paris ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

As Allied armies broke out from Normandy and advanced across France, Resistance units in Paris rose against the remaining German garrison. After heavy street fighting, Free French forces under General Philippe Leclerc arrived to liberate Paris and General Dietrich von Cholitz surrendered the city. General Charles de Gaulle arrived next day to claim victory (19–24 August 1944).

Parkany ❙ 1683 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

John III Sobieski of Poland destroyed the Turkish siege of Vienna and pursued his enemy to Parkany, near Esztergom, where he was initially repulsed. Two days later Charles V arrived with his cavalry and the Turks suffered a terrible defeat, with over 20,000 reported killed. Esztergom itself soon fell and Grand Vizier Kara

Mustafa Pasha was later executed for failure (7–9 October 1683).

Parker's Cross Roads ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Returning from raiding western Tennessee, Confederate General Nathan Bedford Forrest was intercepted by Union forces under General Jeremiah C. Sullivan north of Lexington at Parker's Cross Roads. Forrest repulsed a brigade under Colonel Cyrus L. Dunham, but was surprised by Colonel John W. Fuller and lost about 500 men before withdrawing across the Tennessee River (31 December 1862).

Parma ❙ 1247–1248 ❙ Imperial-Papal Wars

When the north Italian city of Parma revolted against Emperor Frederick II, its struggle became a trial of strength between the pro-Imperial Ghibellines and the pro-Papal Guelfs of cities such as Milan. The reinforced garrison of Parma sortied after a bloody six-month siege and destroyed the Emperor's camp, forcing him into a humiliating withdrawal (July 1247–February 1248).

Parma ❙ 1734 ❙ War of the Polish Succession

In support of the former King Stanislas Leszcynski of Poland, his son-in-law Louis XV sent French troops into Austrian-held Lombardy, where Marshal François de Coigny narrowly defeated and killed Austrian Field Marshal Claudius von Mercy in a brutal battle at Parma. Coigny went on to capture Milan, though it was returned to Austria after the war (29 June 1734).

Parrot's Beak ❙ 1985 ❙ Afghan Civil War

Having repulsed a guerrilla offensive at Khost, up to 20,000 Russian and Afghan government troops converged on the area near the Pakistan border southeast of Kabul known as the Parrot's Beak, held by Mujahaden commander Jalaluddin Haqqani. Massive guerrilla supply dumps were captured, though the rebel base at Zhawar did not fall until the following year (August–September 1985).

Parsa ❙ 1815 ❙ British-Gurkha War

As General Bennet Marley advanced slowly north into central Nepal, huge Gurkha forces surprised and overwhelmed his advanced post southwest of Kathmandu at Parsa, killing 120 (including Captain Henry Sibley) and wounding another 130. A second attack the same day also destroyed the smaller post at nearby Samanpur. Marley was dismissed and fled in disgrace (1 January 1815).

Parwan Durrah ❙ 1221 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

Leading a counter-offensive against the Mongol Genghis Khan, Prince Jalal-ud-din of Khwarezm (who succeeded on his father's death after defeat at Hamadan in 1220) marched north from Ghazni in southern Afghanistan. Jalal-ud-din defeated Mongols under the Khan's Tatar adopted son Sigi Khutukhu near Kabul at Parwan Durrah, but was soon destroyed by Genghis Khan at the Indus.

Parwan Durrah ❙ 1840 ❙ 1st British-Afghan War

Former Amir Dost Muhammad was defeated in northern Afghanistan at Bamian and soon after was driven off by part of General Sir Robert Sale's brigade in a close-fought battle at Parwan Durrah, near Charikar north of Kabul (despite the shameful withdrawal of the 2nd Bengal Cavalry). Dost Muhammad soon surrendered and was exiled in India until he was restored in 1843 (2 November 1840).

Pasajes ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

See San Sebastian

Pasang Santol ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

See Dasmariñas

Pasaquina ❙ 1871 ❙ Central American National Wars

When Honduras and El Salvador accused each other of supporting domestic rebellion, war broke out and Honduran troops marched into El Salvador. Near the border at Pasaquina, Honduran exile

Florencio Xatruch defeated the invaders and led Salvadoran forces into Honduras. He had little further success and fled when rebels ousted the Salvadoran government at Santa Ana (16 March 1871).

Pasaquina ❙ 1876 ❙ Central American National Wars

Two years after securing a friendly government in Honduras with victory at Comayagua, President Justo Ruffino Barrios of Guatemala invaded El Salvador to win at Apaneca, while a smaller column under General Gregorio Solares attacked in the east. Near Pasaquina, north of La Union, Solares won a second victory and Barrios installed his friend Rafael Zaldivar as President (19 April 1876).

Paso de Cuevas ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Recovering from losses at Riachuelo, near Corrientes (11 June), Brazilian Admiral Francisco Manuel Barroso tried to advance down the Parana through the pass at Cuevas, just south of Bellavista, defended by Paraguayan Colonel José Maria Bruquez with 3,000 men and 34 guns. Barroso suffered severe damage, with 24 dead and 42 wounded, and retired on Rincon de Soto (12 August 1865).

Paso de Patria ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Tuyutí

Paso Real ❙ 1896 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

Insurgent leader Antonio Maceo marched east from Mantua in western Cuba where he was attacked by Spanish General Agustin Luque on the railway northeast of Pinar del Río at Paso Real. The Cubans sustained the heavier losses in severe fighting along very extended lines, but managed to drive off the Spanish, with Luque severely wounded. Maceo soon struck back at Candelaria (January 1896).

Pasques ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Dijon (2nd)

Passaro ❙ 1718 ❙ War of the Quadruple Alliance

See Cape Passaro

Passchendaele (1st) ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Despite shocking losses during Third Ypres, most recently around Poelcappelle, British commander Sir Douglas Haig was determined to reach his original objective, the village of Passchendaele, northeast of Ypres. Fighting in terrible mud, Generals Sir Herbert Plumer and Hubert Gough were driven off with heavy losses. They attacked again two weeks later (12 October 1917).

Passchendaele (2nd) ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

In the final effort of his offensive northeast of Ypres, British commander Sir Douglas Haig again sent Generals Sir Herbert Plumer and Hubert Gough against Passchendaele, which was finally taken by the newly arrived Canadian Corps. The Third Battle of Ypres ended and Passchendaele came to symbolise the pointless loss of life in the mud of Flanders (26 October–6 November 1917).

Passo do Rosario ❙ 1827 ❙ Argentine-Brazilian War

See Ituzaingó

Pastrengo ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Verona

Patan ❙ 1790 ❙ Mughal-Maratha War of Ismail Beg

When renegade Mughal General Ismail Beg and his Rajput allies were besieged near Ajmer at Patan Tanwar (Turavati) by Mahadji Sindhia and General Benoit de Boigne, Ismail attacked the Marathas but his cavalry failed to break de Boigne's squares. De Boigne then routed Ismail, capturing massive plunder in guns, elephants and horses, and the renegade fled to the Punjab (20 June 1790).

Patay ❙ 1429 ❙ Hundred Years War

Six weeks after defeating the English at the siege of Orleans, French forces led by Jean Duke of Alencon and Jeanne d'Arc surprised the retreating English under John Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir John Fastolfe at Patay, northwest of Orleans. An unexpected attack led by Etienne de Vignolles, La Hire, routed the English and Shrewsbury was captured and held for four years (19 June 1429).

Paterangi ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Mangapiko

Patiala ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Colonel Thomas Seaton campaigning east of Aligarh won near Kasganj then marched to Patiala, northeast of Etah, against a large rebel force under Ahmed Yir Khan and Mohson Ali. An artillery duel and a bayonet charge forced the rebels to flee, leaving perhaps 600 dead. Seaton then returned for Aligarh for his convoy before advancing southeast on Mainpuri (17 December 1857).

Patila, Plain of ❙ 1393 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

See Shiraz

Patna ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

Encouraged by Nawab Shuja-ud-Daula of Oudh, the Shahzada Ali Gauhar (son of Emperor Alamgir II) invaded Bengal against English-supported Nawab Mir Jafar and besieged Patna, defended by Raja Ramnarain. With a British force approaching under Robert Clive, a final assault by the Shahzada and Muhammad Kuli of Allahabad was heavily repulsed and they withdrew (4–5 April 1759).

Patna (1st) ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

Mir Kasim, the warlike new Nawab of Bengal, threatened William Ellis, the local East India Company agent, who led a small column of troops which surprised and captured Patna. However, a counter-attack by Bengali troops under Armenian mercenary Maskarian drove them out with most taken captive. The prisoners, including Ellis, were later murdered (25 June 1763).

Patna (2nd) ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

Following his defeat at Udaynala (5 September) Mir Kasim, deposed Nawab of Bengal, murdered prisoners earlier captured at Patna, then faced a substantial British-Sepoy force under Major Thomas Adams, who advanced to besiege Patna. Adams captured the town after heavy fighting which caused severe Bengali losses. Mir Kasim fought on until late 1764 at Buxar (6 November 1763).

Patna ❙ 1764 ❙ Bengal War

Advancing to attack Nawab Shuja-ud-Daula of Oudh, British Colonel John Carnac withdrew to prepared positions outside Patna when Shuja counter-attacked. A daylong action saw Shuja repulsed with heavy losses. However, Carnac did not pursue and the Nawab remained a month before the rains forced him to withdraw. The decisive action was fought in October at Buxar (3 May 1764).

Patras ❙ 429 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

When Sparta sent Admiral Cnemus against Acarnania, at the mouth of the Corinthian Gulf, the Athenian Phormio allowed the large main fleet to pass then attacked a reinforcement of 47 Peloponnesian ships crossing the Gulf of Patras. Commanding just 20 vessels, Phormio secured a great victory and returned with 12 prizes to Naupactus, where he soon attacked the main fleet.

Patriot Hill ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Shoal Creek

Patton Nagar ❙ 1965 ❙ 2nd Indo-Pakistan War

See Khem Karan

Paulus Hook ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Encouraged by success at Stony Point (16 July), American General George Washington

sent Major Henry Lee against the Hudson River fort at Paulus Hook, New Jersey City, held by Major William Sutherland. A pre-dawn raid by Lee inflicted 50 casualties and he withdrew with 150 prisoners. Lee received a gold medal from Congress and Sutherland was court-martialled (19 August 1779).

Pavia ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

Emperor Aurelian quickly recovered from defeat at Placentia to rout an invading army of Alemanni tribesmen on the east coast of Italy at Fano. The invaders started to return north with Aurelian in pursuit and, at the city of Pavia (Ticinum) south of Milan, he crushed the remaining Alemanni forces, effectively ending the threat to Rome. The Emperor then turned his attention to Palmyra.

Pavia ❙ 351 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars

The Western usurper Flavius Magnus Magnentius fled his disastrous defeat at Mursa (28 September) and reached northern Italy before turning on his pursuers near Pavia. While he dealt a sharp defeat to the Imperial army, Emperor Constantius refused to make peace with the man who had murdered his brother. Magnentius was chased back into Gaul where he was beaten in 353 at Mons Seleucus.

Pavia ❙ 476 ❙ Fall of the Western Roman Empire

Leading a mutiny by barbarian mercenaries in the Roman army of General Orestes, the German Odoacer defeated and executed Orestes at Pavia, south of Milan. Odoacer then marched on Ravenna, where he defeated and slew Orestes' son Paulus and overthrew his other son, the Emperor Romulus Augustulus (4 September 476), marking the effective fall of the Western Roman Empire.

Pavia ❙ 569–572 ❙ Lombard Invasion of Italy

The Lombard invasion of Gothic Italy quickly secured major cities, including Verona, Milan, Ravenna and Rome, but Pavia strongly resisted Lombard King Alboin. When the city fell after a three-year siege, a purported sign from God prevented the intended massacre. Pavia became the capital of the region, which became known as Lombardy.

Pavia ❙ 1524–1525 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

Francis I of France was driven out of Lombardy at Bicocca (1522) and Sesia (April 1524), then led another invasion to invest Pavia, held by Antonio de Levya. Following a long siege, Imperial forces under Fernando d'Avalos Marquis of Pescara routed the French and their Swiss mercenaries. Francis gave up all claims in Italy but revoked his promise when released (28 October 1524–24 February 1525).

Pavón ❙ 1861 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

A final attempt to break away from the Argentine confederation of President Justo José de Urquiza saw General Bartolomé Mitre lead the army of Buenos Aires against Federalist Santiago Derqui just to the northwest at Pavón. Reversing his defeat two years earlier at Cepeda, Mitre secured a decisive victory and became the first constitutional President of a united Argentina (17 September 1861).

Paxos ❙ 229 BC ❙ Illyrian War

When Illyria laid siege to Corcyra (modern Corfu), a fleet from Achaea and Aetolia sailed to its aid. But the Illyrians won a decisive victory near Paxos after which they seized Corcyra and sailed north to besiege Dyrrhachium. Concerned by piracy in the Adriatic, Rome then intervened to end the siege and landed troops on the mainland. Queen Teuta of Illyria (roughly Albania) soon sued for peace.

Payne's Farm ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Mine Run

Paysandú ❙ 1864–1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

In Brazil's undeclared war against the Blancos of Uruguay, Brigadier João Propício Mena

Barreto attacked Paysandú on the Uruguay, already besieged by Uruguayan Colorados under Venancio Flores. Garrison commander Colonel Leondro Gómez surrendered after a 35-day siege and was executed. The fall of Montevideo saw Flores become President (December 1864–2 January 1865).

Peach Orchard ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Savage's Station

Peachtree Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
Three days after succeeding to command the Confederate army defending Atlanta, Georgia, General John B. Hood sent General William J. Hardee against the Union bridgehead a few miles to the north across the Peachtree Creek. However, Union General George H. Thomas fought a brilliant, stubborn defence and "Hood's First Sortie" was driven back on Atlanta (20 July 1864).

Peacock* vs Epervier ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812
See Florida, USA

Pea Ridge ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)
As he attempted to intercept Confederate forces withdrawing from southwest Missouri, Union General Samuel R. Curtis took a position at Pea Ridge, just inside Arkansas, where he was attacked by Confederates under General Earl Van Dorn. Van Dorn lost over 4,000 men in a bloody action and withdrew to Memphis, yielding southern Missouri and northern Arkansas (6–8 March 1862).

Pearl Harbour ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
With Japan determined to pre-empt American naval power, Admiral Chuichi Nagumo launched a massive air strike at Pearl Harbour, on Oahu in Hawaii. Within minutes, 350 carrier-borne aircraft sank or damaged eight battleships and three cruisers. Over 2,400 Americans died and unprepared Admiral Husband Kimmel and General Walter Short were dismissed (7 December 1941).

Pecan Bayou ❙ 1839 ❙ Cherokee Indian Wars
See San Saba

Pecatonica ❙ 1832 ❙ Black Hawk Indian War
On campaign east of the Mississippi, the Sauk Chief Black Hawk defeated some militia at Rock River, Illinois (14 May), then marched north into Wisconsin, where he was attacked on the Pecatonica near Woodford by experienced Michigan mounted volunteers under Colonel Henry Dodge. Black Hawk suffered a sharp defeat and lost again a month later at Wisconsin Heights (16 June 1832).

Pech David ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Toulouse

Peckuwe ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Piqua

Pedestal ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)
See Convoy Pedestal

Peebles' Farm ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Poplar Springs Church

Peekskill Raid ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution
Colonel John Bird assumed the offensive in New York State, taking 500 men by boat against the American depot on the east bank of the Hudson at Peekskill. Garrison commander General Alexander McDougall was forced to retire and the British burned substantial stores before withdrawing. British commander General William Howe sent another raid in April against Danbury (23 March 1777).

Pegu ❙ 1539 ❙ Burmese Dynastic Wars

King Tabinshwehti of Toungoo was determined to unite the kingdoms of Burma and took his army against Pegu. He eventually took the city by storm after a lengthy siege and failed assaults, then captured other key cities, including Prome (1542). Tabinshwehti made himself King of Burma, with his capital at Pegu. He was assassinated in 1550 after failure in Arakan and against Siam at Ayutthaya.

Pegu ❙ 1551 ❙ Burmese Dynastic Wars

When King Tabinshwehti of Burma was assassinated by Mon rebels in the southern capital of Pegu, his brother-in-law and successor Bayinnaung led a large force, with Portuguese mercenaries, to crush the rebels. A decisive action near Pegu saw rebel leader Smim Htaw defeated and executed and other Mon leaders soon submitted at Prome. Bayinnaung then turned to defeat Shan rebels at Ava.

Pegu ❙ 1599 ❙ Burmese Dynastic Wars

Weakened by civil war and war against Siam, King Nanda Bayin of Burma was attacked by his brothers, aided by Arakanese troops and Portuguese adventurer Felipe de Brito. In a brutal assault, Nanda Bayin was captured and executed and Pegu was burned to the ground. (King Naresuan of Siam took part but was driven off by his erstwhile allies.) De Brito was granted the nearby port of Syriam.

Pegu ❙ 1757 ❙ Burmese Civil Wars

The Chieftain Alaungpaya resolved to unify Burma and launched a campaign against the Mon King Binnya Dala, who had secured victory in 1752 at Ava. After capturing Ava, Prome and Rangoon, Alaungpaya led a final assault against Pegu, where the King was captured. Alaungpaya founded a 120-year dynasty and Binnya Dala was executed in 1774 by Alaungpaya's son Hsinbyushin (May 1757).

Pegu ❙ 1852 ❙ 2nd British-Burmese War

Britain resumed war with Burma and General Henry Thomas Godwin captured Rangoon and Bassein, then advanced north to capture Pegu, but lacked the forces to hold it. Five months later, with 4,000 men and naval support from Commodore George Robert Lambert, Godwin recaptured the city. The war ended and Britain annexed Pegu Province (4 June & 20 November 1852).

Pegu ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

Two weeks after British disaster at the Sittang, east of Rangoon, Brigadier Noel Hugh-Jones tried to hold the city of Pegu against General Hiroshi Takeuchi. Despite courageous defence, especially by Gurkha units, the small force was overwhelmed and had to withdraw. Rangoon was abandoned the same day and the main British army retreated north towards Prome (6–7 March 1942).

Pei-ts'ang ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

See Beicang

Peiwar Kotal ❙ 1878 ❙ 2nd British-Afghan War

Concerned at Russian influence over Amir Sher Ali Khan, Britain sent General Sir Frederick Roberts into Afghanistan through the Karram Valley. At the Peiwar Kotal Pass, southeast of Kabul, Roberts routed an Afghan force under Karim Khan, capturing their guns. Sher Ali fled when Roberts marched into Kabul (September 1879) and his son Yakub Khan sued for peace (2 December 1878).

Peking ❙ 1214–1215 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1644 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1917 ❙ Manchu Restoration

See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1928 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War
See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War
See Beijing

Peking ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War
See Beijing

Pelacanon ❙ 1328 ❙ Byzantine-Ottoman Wars

Two years after losing Brusa to Ottoman expansion in northern Turkey, Byzantine Emperor Andronicus III led an expedition south from the Bosphorus along the eastern end of the Sea of Marmara to aid Nicaea. Near Chalcedon at Pelacanon (modern Maltepe) he was routed by Sultan Orkhan Gazi and fled back to Constantinople. Nicaea soon surrendered and Orkhan besieged Nicomedia.

Pelagonia ❙ 1259 ❙ 3rd Latin-Byzantine Imperial War

Byzantine Emperor Michael VIII of Nicaea at war with the Latin rulers in Constantinople, won western Macedonia when his brother John Paleologus routed the Despot Michael of Epirus and the Frankish and German knights of Manfred of Sicily and William of Villehardouin (who was captured). Victory at Pelagonia, near modern Bitola, led directly to Greek recapture of Constantinople in 1261.

Pelham Manor ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Throg's Neck

Peliklahaka ❙ 1842 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

During a final offensive against the Seminole in Florida, Colonel William Worth pursued the elusive warrior Halleck Tustenuggee to the well-defended village of Peliklahaka, southwest of Lake Apopka. Although casualties were light, Tustenuggee was decisively defeated. He was captured ten days later, ending the war that virtually exterminated the Seminole (19 April 1842).

Peliliu ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

To secure airbases to attack the Philippines, General William Rupertus landed on Peliliu in the Palau Islands and faced unexpectedly stiff resistance, particularly at Bloody Nose Ridge. The brutal campaign cost over 1,300 Americans and about 10,000 Japanese killed. Only 300 Japanese survived to be captured, including General Sadae Inoue (15 September–25 November 1944).

Pelischat ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

In an attempt to break out from the Russian siege of Plevna, on the Vid south of the Danube, Turkish commander Osman Nuri Pasha led a large sortie with perhaps 25,000 men southeast towards nearby Pelischat. However, he was driven back by General Pavel Zotov with an estimated 3,000 casualties and the siege continued with a massive Russian assault a month later (30 August 1877).

Pella ❙ 635 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria
See Fihl

Pellene ❙ 241 BC ❙ Wars of the Achaean League

Aratus of Sicyon secured the Achaean League with victory at Corinth then two years later took a force to defend the neighbouring city-state of Pellene, south of the Gulf of Corinth, against a raiding party from the rival Aetolian league. Surprised in the sack of Pellene, the raiders were badly defeated, with a reported 700 put to the sword, and Aratus seized the city for the Achaean League.

Pellinge ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence
See Porvoo

Pellschat ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars
See Pelischat

Pell's Point ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British General William Howe, attempting to outflank General George Washington's defence of New York City, landed at Throg's Neck, then moved by land and sea three miles north to Pell's Point, defended by Colonel John Glover. While the Americans fell back after a costly skirmish, Washington had already left Harlem Heights to meet Howe at White Plains (18 October 1776).

Pelusium ❙ 525 BC ❙ Persian Invasion of Egypt

Marching west to continue the empire building of his father Cyrus II, King Cambyses II of Persia invaded Egypt. Outside the city of Pelusium, east of modern Port Said, Cambyses destroyed the army of Pharoah Psamthek III, who fled to Memphis, which surrendered after a brief siege. Lower Egypt passed under Persian control, though Cambyses failed in attempts to conquer the Upper Nile.

Pelusium ❙ 640 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Egypt

Muslim General Amr ibn al-As was buoyed by the Arab conquest of Syria and took a very small force into Egypt and besieged the key city of Pelusium, guarding the eastern approach to the Nile Delta. Pelusium fell after 30 days and Amr advanced up the eastern branch of the Nile to a decisive victory at Heliopolis, near modern Cairo (January 640).

Pemaquid ❙ 1696 ❙ King William's War

See Fort William Henry, Maine

Pembroke ❙ 1648 ❙ British Civil Wars

When Parliamentary forces in southern Wales declared for the King and were defeated at St Fagan's, General Oliver Cromwell determined to crush the rebels. He quickly took Tenby and Chepstow then attacked massive Pembroke Castle, held by General Rowland Laugharne and Colonel John Poyer. After a brutal siege, Pembroke was starved into surrender (May–11 July 1648).

Pen ❙ 1016 ❙ Danish Conquest of England

See Penselwood

Peñacerrada ❙ 1833 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Early in the war against Carlists in Navarre, forces loyal to Spanish Regent Maria Cristina under Generals Pedro Sarsfield and Manuel Lorenzo took Logroño at Los Arcos, then crossed the Ebro and routed 1,500 Carlists blocking their way at Peñacerrada. Within a week the Liberals had entered Vitoria and Bilbao unopposed. They were later checked at Guernica and Asarta (19 November 1833).

Peñacerrada ❙ 1838 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Liberal Commander-in-Chief Baldomero Espartero continued his offensive in northern Spain, where he advanced through Burgos and attacked Carlist commander Juan Antonio Guergué south of Vitoria at Peñacerrada. The bloody action was decided by a cavalry charge by Colonel Juan Zabala and the Carlists were crushed. A year later Don Carlos V left the country forever (22 June 1838).

Penang ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Sent to evacuate the Andamans, the Japanese cruiser Haguro (Admiral Shintaro Hashimoto) was damaged by British carrier-borne aircraft north of Sumatra and turned back for Singapore. Hunted down by a British destroyer squadron led by Captain Manley Power, Haguro was sunk after midnight off Penang, with 900 killed. It was the last major surface action of the war (15–16 May 1945).

Peñas de San Fausto ❙ 1834 ❙ 1st Carlist War

On campaign against the Carlists northwest of Estella in Navarre, a Spanish Liberal division under Baron Luis Angel de Carondolet was surprised by General Tomás Zumalacárregui at Peñas de San Fausto on the Urederra River. The Liberals were routed and fled, losing 250 men, including some drowned in the river. Carondolet was soon defeated again at Viana (19 August 1834).

Pendleton ❙ 1878 ❙ Bannock Indian War

Pursued after defeat at Birch Creek, Bannock and Paiute under Chief Egan were cornered near Pendleton, northern Oregon, and heavily defeated by the 21st infantry under Captain Evan Miles. Umatilla Indians murdered Egan next day. When Paiute medicine man Oytes surrendered (12 August) the war was effectively over and both tribes returned to their reservations (12 July 1878).

Penebscot ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Massachusetts militia General Solomon Lovell and American Commodore Dudley Saltonstall attacked the British timber port at Penebscot Bay, Maine, where they failed in a siege of the fort held by General Francis MacLean. British Commodore Sir George Collier then arrived and destroyed the rebel squadron. The complete fiasco cost almost 500 American lives (25 July–14 August 1779).

Pengcheng ❙ 205 BC ❙ Chu-Han War

Collapse of the Qin (Ch'in) Dynasty at Xianyang (207 BC) triggered a bloody war for succession and warlord Lui Bang of Han seized Pengcheng, capital of Chu. His rival Xiang Yu returned and Liu Bang suffered a terrible defeat, with a claimed 100,000 men killed and his wife and father captured. A subsequent truce after defeat at Chenggao (204 BC) finally saw the hostages returned.

Penghu ❙ 1683 ❙ Chinese Conquest of Taiwan

When Ming General Zheng Chenggong (known as Koxinga) seized Taiwan at Fort Zeelandia (1662), his son and grandson held the island against repeated Manchu attack until Emperor Kangxi sent Admiral Shilong (Shih Lang) with 300 warships and 20,000 men. The Ming were decisively defeated on nearby Penghu and the Manchu secured Taiwan until it was ceded to Japan in 1895 (8 July 1683).

Peñíscola ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Soon after capturing the strategic city of Valencia, French Marshal Louis Suchet sent General Philippe Severoli north against the stubborn coastal fortress of Peñíscola. While the inaccessible site was securely defended against siege, Spanish garrison commander General Garcia Navarro prematurely surrendered after just two weeks, apparently to secure his own safety (20 January–2 February 1812).

Penjdeh ❙ 1885 ❙ Russo-Afghan War

Russian General Alexander Vissarionovich Komarov occupied Merv in Afghanistan then led just 1,200 men towards Herat. They were blocked by 40,000 Afghans under Ghausuddin Khan at Penjdeh and a one-sided disaster saw the Afghans dispersed with very heavy losses. When Britain then began to prepare for war, Amir Abdur Rahman made peace, ceding land to Russia (30 March 1885).

Pennagadam ❙ 775 ❙ Indian Dynastic Wars

Amid continuing war between the Kingdoms of southern India, Varaguna of Pandya (also known as Nedunjadayan), son of the great Rajasimha, attacked the army of Pallava at Pennegadam, on the Kaveri near modern Thanjavur (Tanjore). The Pallava forces under Nandivarman I were decisively defeated, giving Varaguna one of his greatest victories (disputed date c 775).

Peno Creek ❙ 1866 ❙ Red Cloud's War

See Fetterman Massacre

Penrith ❙ 1745 ❙ Jacobite Rebellion (The Forty-Five)

See Clifton Moor

Pensacola ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

A year after he secured Mobile in British West Florida, Don Bernardo de Galvez, Spanish Governor of Lousiana, took 7,000 men and a strong naval squadron against Pensacola, where General John Campbell tried to defend Fort George. However, heavy bombardment forced Campbell to surrender and after the war Spain retained both East and West Florida (10 March–9 May 1781).

Pensacola ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

A British expedition into the Gulf of Mexico under Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane landed at Pensacola in Spanish West Florida, but his advance towards Mobile was repulsed at Fort Bowyer. A major counter-attack by American General Andrew Jackson then forced Spanish Governor Gonzalez Manriquez of Pensacola to surrender and the British abandoned their bridgehead (7 November 1814).

Pensacola ❙ 1818 ❙ 1st Seminole Indian War

American General Andrew Jackson marched into Spanish West Florida with 800 regulars, supported by Georgia militia and William MacIntosh's Creeks and captured St Marks (1 April), burned the village of Seminole Chief Boleck on the Suwanee (12 April), then laid siege to Pensacola. The city fell after three days to end the war. Spain later ceded Florida to the United States (24 May 1818).

Penselwood ❙ 658 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

As he attempted to expand the power of Wessex, King Cenwalh (Coenwalch) defeated the Welsh on the Avon at Bradford and six years later achieved another substantial victory at Penselwood, near Wincanton in Somerset. The defeated Welsh were driven back across the River Parrett which then became established as the West Saxon boundary.

Penselwood ❙ 1016 ❙ Danish Conquest of England

Knut, son of the great Sweyn Forkbeard of Denmark, attempting to complete his conquest of England, faced a spirited resistance by Edmund Ironside, son of King Aethelred of Wessex. A hard-fought battle at Penselwood, near Wincanton in Somerset, saw Edmund's Barons achieve a sharp victory and shortly afterwards he became King. Edmund was soon defeated by Knut at Ashingdon.

Pentland Hills ❙ 1666 ❙ Scottish Covenanter Rebellion

Rising against Episcopalianism, Covenanters led by Colonel James Wallace were repulsed marching on Edinburgh against the Secretary of State for Scotland, John Maitland Duke of Lauderdale. Pursued to the Pentland Hills, they were defeated at Rullion Green by General Thomas Dalzell, who brutally crushed the rising with execution and transportation (28 November 1666).

Peparethus ❙ 361 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

Encouraged by the death of Epaminondas of Thebes at Mantinea (362 BC), Alexander of Pherae recovered from defeat at Cynoscephalae and renewed the offensive by besieging Peparethus, off the coast of Thessaly. A relief force under Athenian Admiral Leosthenes was beaten and Alexander plundered Piraeus before withdrawing. A few years later he was murdered at his wife's instigation.

Peralejo ❙ 1895 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

In the first major check to Spanish forces in eastern Cuba, insurgent leader Antonio Maceo, supported by Jesús Rabi and Quintín Banderas, attacked a column under General Arsenio Martínez Campos at Peralejo, east of Manzanillo. General Fidel Alonso de Santocildes arrived in support, but he was defeated and killed. Martínez Campos led the survivors to Bayamo (13 July 1895).

Peralonso ❙ 1899 ❙ Colombian War of the Thousand Days

Amid Liberal revolt against President Manuel Antonio Sanclemente and Vice President José Manuel Marroquín, rebel forces led by General Benjamín Herrera met government troops under General Vicente Villamizar at Peralonso in Norte de Santander. The Liberals won their first substantial victory in the Three-Year War, though five months later they lost at Palonegro (15–16 December 1899).

Perambakam ❙ 1780 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

Haidar Ali of Mysore, resuming war against Britain, threatened Madras and faced separate forces under Colonel William Baillie and General Sir Hector Munro. Without support Baillie was routed and captured at Perambakam, near Conjeveram. Munro withdrew and lost command before the decisive battle at Porto Novo (July 1781), while Haidar Ali approached Arcot (10 September 1780).

Pered ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

With Austrian forces driven out of Hungary by defeat at Hatvan, Isaszeg and Waitzen, Russia intervened to help and Russian General Ivan Paskievich joined Austrian Field Marshal Alfred Windischgratz to attack General Artur Gorgey at Pered, northwest of Neuhausel. The Hungarians were driven back with heavy losses through Acs to defeat in August at Temesvár (21 June 1849).

Peregonovka ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

As White commander Anton Denikin advanced north towards Moscow, his General Iakov Slashchev suffered a surprise pre-dawn attack at Peregonovka by Ukrainian anarchists under Nestor Makhno. The guerrillas were eventually driven off, but the costly attack threatened Denikin's over-extended supply lines and encouraged October's Red counter-offensive at Orel (26 September 1919).

Pereiaslav ❙ 1630 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

On a fresh offensive in the Ukraine after previous action at Borovitsa, Polish commander Stanislas Koniecpolski was checked southeast of Kiev near Korsun (4 April) by Cossack leader Taras Fedorovych, then a few weeks later was badly defeated in heavy fighting at nearby Pereiaslav. The Poles were forced to sue for peace, though Fedorovych was soon replaced as Hetman (25 May 1630).

Perekop ❙ 1736 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

Russian Marshal Count Burkhard Christoph von Münnich took a large force against the Crimean Tatars and attacked the defensive lines at Perekop, guarding the isthmus to the Crimea. The key fortress of Or-Kapi soon fell by assault, but after the sack of nearby Perekop an army mutiny forced Münnich back to the Ukraine. Azov, further to the east, fell a few weeks later (15–19 May 1736).

Perekop ❙ 1771 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

After successes against Turkish Moldavia, the Russian spring campaign of 1771 saw Prince Vasili Dolgoruki besiege a reputed 50,000 Tatars at Perekop, guarding northern Crimea. After the city fell, Dolgoruki conquered the entire Crimea in just three weeks—earning himself the honorific Krimski—and Khan Selim III of Crimea was replaced by a Russian puppet (14–15 June 1771).

Perekop ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

Having made peace with Poland after battle on the Vistula, the Red Army turned south on White commander Pyotr Wrangel, who had attempted a last offensive through Melitopol. Brutal action at the Perekop Isthmus saw Red General Mikhail Frunze storm into the Crimea. Wrangel had to evacuate his army by sea to Constantinople, ending the war on Russian soil (7–12 November 1920).

Perekop ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

General Erich von Manstein helped destroy the Soviet pocket further east at Chernigovka, then launched a massive assault on the Crimean Peninsula. In very heavy fighting at the five-mile wide Perekop Isthmus, Manstein's Eleventh Army broke through the Russian defences and quickly over-ran the whole of the Crimea except for Sevastopol and Kerch (19–28 October 1941).

Perekop ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Weeks after supporting Russia's offensive in the Ukraine at Krivoy Rog, General Fedor Tolbukhin led a huge assault across the Perekop Isthmus into the Crimean Peninsula. Aided by a flank attack at the Sivas, Tolbukhin broke through in three days against General Erwin Jaenecke's Seventeenth Army and raced south for Sevastopol. Other Russians entered the Crimea at Kerch (8–11 April 1944).

Perembacum ❙ 1780 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

See Perambakam

Perez Dasmariñas ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

See Dasmariñas

Pergamum ❙ 230 BC ❙ Pergamum-Seleucid Wars

When Attalus of Pergamum refused to pay tribute to Gallic tribes ravaging Asia Minor, he faced an invasion by the Galatians, supported by their Seleucid ally, Antiochus Hierax. Close to Pergamum (Bergama in western Turkey) Attalus won a brilliant victory. He then took the title King and turned against his rival Hierax the following year at Lake Koloe and the Harpasus.

Perinthus ❙ 339 BC ❙ 4th Sacred War

An heroic defence against King Philip II of Macedon saw the small fortified port of Perinthus, on the Sea of Marmara, resist a lengthy siege by land and sea. With Byzantine and Persian support, the Perinthians fought off the attack until Athenian ships attacked Philip at sea. In a rare reversal, the Macedonian King was forced to withdraw and also lifted his siege of nearby Byzantium.

Perinthus ❙ 191 ❙ Civil Wars of Emperor Severus

While the Emperor Septimius Severus marched east from Rome against Pescennius Niger, his rival's proconsul Asselius Aemilius occupied Byzantium and met advanced units of the Emperor's army further west at Perinthus. Aemilius inflicted a costly defeat, though the advancing Severans forced the victor back to Byzantium. Three years later he was defeated across the Sea of Marmara at Cyzicus.

Perm ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

Admiral Aleksandr Kolchak seized control of White forces in the east at Omsk and launched a large-scale mid-winter offensive west across the Urals, where General Rudolf Gajda attacked Perm, defended by Generals Rheinhold Berzin and Mikhail Lashevich. The Reds suffered terrible losses in the fall of the city, though further south they captured and held Ufa (24 December 1918).

Perm ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

With Red forces defeated in the Urals at Perm and Ufa, commander Mikhail Tukhachevski launched a bold counter-offensive and General Sergei Mezheninov advanced east across the Viatka to occupy Sarapul (20 May). Following the fall of Ufa, further to the south (9 June), Mezheninov marched northeast to seize Perm. The White Army then began its long retreat towards Omsk (1 July 1919).

Pernambuca ❙ 1630 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

See Recife

Péronne ❙ 1870–1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Bapaume

Perryville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

General Braxton Bragg led the Confederate invasion of Kentucky which secured Munfordville and Richmond. However, southeast of Louisville at Perryville he met a stubborn Union force under General Don Carlos Buell. While a brief yet very bloody action caused Buell greater losses, Bragg suffered a costly strategic defeat and his offensive was driven back south to Tennessee (8 October 1862).

Perth ❙ 1312–1313 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

A determined attack against the second most heavily fortified place in Scotland after Berwick saw Robert the Bruce besiege the strategic town of Perth, defended by the veteran knight Sir William Oliphant. Bruce's force feigned a withdrawal after seven weeks, then returned in the night and scaled the walls after wading through the deep moat (November 1312–8 January 1313).

Perth ❙ 1339 ❙ Anglo-Scottish War of Succession

In the Scottish Royalist war against the English-backed claimant Edward Baliol, Robert the Steward (later Robert II) was appointed Regent for David II and besieged Perth. Aided by French ships and the ecclesiastic William Bullock, Robert forced the surrender of Perth. The subsequent capture of Stirling prepared the way for the return from exile of the lawful King (August 1339).

Perth ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

See Tippermuir

Perusia ❙ 41–40 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Amid renewed civil war, Mark Antony's wife Fulvia united with his brother Lucius Antonius against Octavian, who joined with Marcus Agrippa to besiege Lucius at Perusia (modern Perugia), 90 miles north of Rome. A relief attempt by Ventidius Bassus was driven off and Lucius capitulated after a costly failed sortie. Perusia was then plundered and burned (December 41–March 40 BC).

Peshawar ❙ 1001 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

On campaign from Afghanistan into India, Mahmud of Ghazni attacked the powerful Raja Jaipal of Punjab, previously defeated at Lamghan (989). Outside Peshawar, the Raja and a coalition of Hindu Princes were heavily defeated and Jaipal commited suicide in captivity. Jaipal's son Anandpal was similarly defeated near Peshawar at Waihand in 1006 and 1008 (27 November 1001).

Peshawar ❙ 1006 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

See Waihand

Peshawar ❙ 1008 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

See Waihand

Peshawar ❙ 1834 ❙ Afghan-Sikh Wars

The great Sikh leader Ranjit Singh twice gained then lost Peshawar before he sent General Hari Singh, who surrounded the city and forced Sultan Muhammad Khan to evacuate after brief fighting. A large Afghan force under his brother Dost Mohammad Khan appeared in support, but they shamefully withdrew and Sultan Mohammad Khan was reinstated as Governor of the Sikh city (6 May 1834).

Peta ❙ 1822 ❙ Greek War of Independence

As Reshid Pasha advanced into western Greece, a largely foreign Greek army marched north to Peta, near Arta, where Alexandros Mavrocordatos left command to General Karl Normann, aided by Pietro Tarella and André Dania. The Greek force was overwhelmed and crushed (with 400 killed including Tarella and Dania executed) and the Turks marched south on Missolonghi (16 July 1822).

Peterborough ❙ 1071 ❙ Norman Conquest of Britain

See Ely

Petersburg (1st) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While the main armies fought at Cold Harbour, east of Petersburg, Virginia, General Benjamin F. Butler of the Union Army of the James sent General Quincy A. Gillmore against the city from the south. His mismanaged assault was driven off by a much smaller Confederate force led by General Pierre G. T. Beauregard.

The main Union army tried again a week later (9 June 1864).

Petersburg (2nd) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union commander Ulysses S. Grant advanced west days after victory at Cold Harbour, leading more than 60,000 men against the key city of Petersburg, Virginia, defended by heavily outnumbered Confederate General Pierre G. T. Beauregard. Despite heavy fighting and about 10,000 casualties, Grant failed to take the city by assault and began a bloody 12-month siege (15–18 June 1864).

Petersburg ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

The day after decisive Union victory, southwest of Petersburg at Five Forks, General Ulysses S. Grant made his final assault on the besieged Confederate city. Following bloody fighting (including Confederate General Ambrose P. Hill killed) and defeat further west at Sutherland Station, General Robert E. Lee evacuated the city and his forces withdrew towards Amelia Springs (2 April 1865).

Petersham ❙ 1787 ❙ Shays' Rebellion

Sent to suppress a Massachusetts rebellion against high taxes, General Benjamin Lincoln dispersed the rebels at Springfield (27 January), then led a night-time march through a snowstorm to surprise leader Daniel Shays at Petersham, north of Worcester. Shays was routed, with 150 captured, ending the rebellion. He fled and was sentenced to death but was later pardoned (3 February 1787).

Peterwardein ❙ 1526 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

Sultan Suleiman I advancing along the Danube north of Belgrade sent Grand Vizier Ibrahim Pasha ahead to besiege Peterwardein (modern Petrovaradin). While the town fell after just three days, the citadel held out bravely until mining destroyed part of the defences and it fell by storm. The garrison were massacred or sold into slavery and the Turks marched on to Mohacs (12–27 July 1526).

Peterwardein ❙ 1716 ❙ Austro-Turkish War

With the end of the War of the Spanish Succession, Austria joined Venice against Turkey and sent a large army to the Danube under Field Marshal Prince Eugène of Savoy. Grand Vizier Damad Ali Pasha was fatally wounded in a disastrous defeat at Peterwardein (Petrovaradin) and lost 6,000 men killed and over 100 guns. Eugène pressed his advantage and besieged Temesvár (5 August 1716).

Petorca ❙ 1851 ❙ 1st Chilean Liberal Revolt

Liberal officers José Miguel Carrera Fontecilla and Justo Arteaga Cuevas opposing President Manuel Montt Torres were intercepted and crushed northeast of Valparaiso at Petorca by Conservative government forces under Juan Viduarra Leal. Carrera Fontecilla fled to exile (returning for Cerro Grande in 1859) and a rising in the south was defeated in December at Loncomilla (14 October 1851).

Petra ❙ 548–549 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

Chosroes I of Persia invaded Lazica on the east coast of the Black Sea and in 541 seized the Roman fortress city of Petra. Emperor Justinian later sent 7,000 men under Dagisthaeus, who joined King Gobazes of Lazica to besiege Petra. The Allies defeated two Persian field armies, but could not retake the city. Dagisthaeus withdrew when Mermeroes arrived with a claimed 30,000 Persians.

Petra ❙ 551 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

When Dagisthaeus failed to recapture Petra, on the Black Sea coast of modern Georgia (548–549), Emperor Justinian replaced him with the veteran Bessas, who began a second siege. After bitter fighting, the city fell by storm with many defenders burned to death when they tried to hold out in the citadel. The city walls were destroyed to prevent Petra again becoming a Persian base.

Petrograd ❙ 1917 ❙ Russian Civil War

When Bolsheviks seized power at Petrograd (St Petersburg), Prime Minister Aleksandr Kerenski marched on the capital with a Cossack force under General Pyotr Krasnov. After bloody fighting in the surburb of Pulkovo, Kerenski fled into exile, effectively ending the Provisional government, and the Bolsheviks soon began peace talks with Germany (7–12 November 1917).

Petrograd ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

With Soviet forces expelled from Estonia after Cesis, Estonian troops reluctantly joined White Russian commander Nikolai Yudenich in an advance on Petrograd (St Petersburg). Heavy fighting saw them driven out by a desperate defence of the city under the personal command of Leon Trostky. A month later the Estonians faced a Russian counter-offensive on the Narva (10–21 October 1919).

Petropavlosk ❙ 1854 ❙ Crimean War

As a diversion against Russia in the Pacific, an Anglo-French force bombarded Petropalvosk on the Kamchatka Peninsular. Led by Admiral Auguste Febvrier-Despointes (after British Admiral David Price unaccountably shot himself), the Allies landed 700 men to capture the Russian guns. However, they were heavily repulsed with about 300 casualties and the expedition withdrew (4 September 1854).

Petropavlosk ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Tobol

Petrovaradin ❙ 1526 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

See Peterwardein

Petrovaradin ❙ 1716 ❙ Austro-Turkish War

See Peterwardein

Petsamo ❙ 1939 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

When the Winter War began, Russians invaded northern Finland and seized the strategic ice-free port of Petsamo and its nickel mines. When Hitler attacked Russia, German forces from Norway captured Petsamo (21 June 1941), while the Lapland War saw Russian Marshal Kirill Meretskov regain the area in September 1944, then "invade" Norway and take Kirkenes (2–3 December 1939).

Pevensey ❙ 1088 ❙ Norman Dynastic Wars

Immediately following the death of William the Conqueror, his half-brother Odo raised rebellion for his nephew Robert of Normandy against the new King William II Rufus. Odo captured Pevensey Castle in Sussex to await Robert, though an attempted landing from Normandy was driven off. After a six-week siege by William, Odo was starved out and withdrew to Rochester.

Pharsalus ❙ 48 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Julius Caesar retired to Thessaly after defeat at Dyrrhachium and fought his decisive battle against Pompey at Pharsalus, near the Enipeus. Reinforced by Mark Antony and Domitius Calvinus, Caesar secured a brilliant victory over Pompey and Titus Labienus. The defeated Generals fled north towards Larissa then later to Alexandria, where Pompey was murdered (9 August 48 BC).

Pharsalus ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

Two weeks after the Greek army lost in northern Thessaly at Mati, Crown Prince Constantine abandoned the important city of Larissa and fell back on Pharsalus, where he attempted to turn against Edhem Pasha's Ottoman army. Facing a fierce attack and a simultaneous assault on their right wing at Velestino, the demoralised Greeks were defeated and withdrew south to Domokos (5 May 1897).

Phasis ❙ 692 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Sebastopolis

Pherushahr ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st British-Sikh War

See Ferozeshah

Philiphaugh ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

While victory at Kilsyth gave the Royalists effective command of Scotland, defeat of Charles I at Naseby released Parliamentary lowlanders under General David Leslie to attack James Graham Marquis of Montrose. Outnumbered four to one at Philiphaugh, near Selkirk, the Royalists were destroyed, with many prisoners murdered and Montrose fled (13 September 1645).

Philippi, Macedonia (1st) ❙ 42 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Mark Antony and Octavian joined after battle at Mutina (43 BC) and marched to Philippi (near modern Kavalla) in eastern Macedonia against Marcus Brutus and Gaius Cassius Longinus. A fierce action Brutus saw repulse Octavian, but on the other wing Antony defeated Cassius (who killed himself), then joined Octavian to secure victory. Brutus lost at the same site three weeks later (3 October 42 BC).

Philippi, Macedonia (2nd) ❙ 42 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Three weeks after the death of Gaius Cassius Longinus at the first Philippi, in eastern Macedonia, Octavian and Mark Antony fought a further battle against the surviving enemy commander Marcus Brutus. The second action at Philippi saw Brutus decisively defeated. He subsequently committed suicide and the Republic effectively perished with him (23 October 42 BC).

Philippi, West Virginia ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Thomas A. Morris commenced operations in West Virginia by surprising about 1,500 Confederates under Colonel George A. Porterfield at Philippi. Defeated by Colonels Ebenezer Dumont and Benjamin F. Kelley, Porterfield withdrew south to Huttonsville. This skirmish—with only a handful of casualties—challenges Big Bethel as the war's first land battle (3 June 1861).

Philippines ❙ 1941–1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Within hours of Pearl Harbour, Japanese General Masaharu Homma sent large forces against the Philippines and General Douglas MacArthur's aircraft were destroyed on the ground. Manila quickly fell (2 January) and American and Filipino forces withdrew to Corregidor and Bataan. When the Allies finally surrendered, the Philippines were lost (8 December 1941–18 May 1942).

Philippines ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

When American forces launched a massive offensive against the Philippines, an all-out Japanese effort was defeated on Leyte and in the Leyte Gulf. The Americans then moved north against Luzon and south towards Mindanao. The campaign cost 13,000 Americans killed, over 300,000 Japanese and perhaps 100,000 Filipinos, mainly civilians (22 October 1944–August 1945).

Philippine Sea ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While American forces invaded the Mariana Islands, Admiral Jizaburo Ozawa led massive forces against Admiral Ray Spruance's support fleet in the Philippine Sea. The largest carrier action of the war saw three Japanese aircraft carriers sunk and 330 planes lost in "The Great Marianas Turkey Shoot." Ozawa's defeat was decisive and he withdrew north towards Okinawa (19–20 June 1944).

Philippopolis ❙ 250 ❙ 1st Gothic War

Driven off from a siege at Nicopolis in Moesia, the Goth Kniva joined the rest of his army besieging Philippopolis (modern Plovdiv, Bulgaria), where he was pursued by Emperor Decius. At nearby Beroea, Decius suffered a severe loss and Philippopolis was taken with terrible slaughter. Kniva then ravaged Thrace. The following year he was driven back to the Danube and battle at Abrittus.

Philippopolis ❙ 1208 ❙ Bulgarian Imperial Wars

Three years after his brother Baldwin was defeated and captured by the Bulgars at Adrianople, the new Latin Emperor Henry at Constantinople faced a fresh advance by the new Bulgar Tsar Boril. At Philippopolis (Plovdiv), Boril was routed by Crusader Knights and withdrew behind the Balkan Mountains. He soon made peace with Henry and in 1218 he was overthrown at Trnovo.

Philippopolis ❙ 1878 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

See Plovdiv

Philippsburg ❙ 1688 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

Louis XIV of France sent his son, the Dauphin Louis, to invade Germany and most of the Palatinate quickly surrendered. However Philippsburg, south of Heidelberg, held out under the Count Ernst von Starhemberg. Utilising the siegecraft of Marshal Sebastien Vauban, the Dauphin forced the surrender of Philippsburg after a month of terrible assault (27 September–29 October 1688).

Philippsburg ❙ 1734 ❙ War of the Polish Succession

In support of the former King Stanislas Leszcynski of Poland, his son-in-law Louis XV sent French troops into Austrian-held Lorraine, where Marshal James Duke of Berwick besieged Philippsburg, south of Heidelburg. When Berwick was decapitated by a cannonball, Count Maurice of Saxe drove off Prince Eugène of Savoy and the city fell by storm (13 May–20 June 1734).

Phillora ❙ 1965 ❙ 2nd Indo-Pakistan War

Indian forces under Colonel Ardeshir Burzorji Tarapore attempting to secure a foothold for a fresh attack on Chawinda, southeast of Sialkot, boldly advanced to the north at Phillora. The Indian tanks secured a hard-fought victory to threaten Chawinda, but Indian command fatally delayed four days before resuming the offensive further west at Buttar Dograndi (11 September 1965).

Philomelion ❙ 1116 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars

In his attempt to recover territory in Anatolia (lost by his father Kilij Arslan at the time of the First Crusade), Sultan Malik Shah of Rum was defeated by Byzantine Emperor Alexius I at Cotyaeum, then renewed his campaign three years later. Near Philomelion (modern Aksehir in central Turkey) he was again defeated by Alexius and was forced to recognise to the borders of Byzantium.

Phnom Penh ❙ 1599 ❙ Cambodian-Spanish War

Spanish commander Blaz Ruiz, supported by Portuguese adventurer Diego Veloso, intervened in Cambodia's succession and installed Crown Prince Barom Reachea II as puppet (1597). However, the Cambodians soon rose in revolt and a brutal massacre in Phnom Penh saw almost every Spaniard killed. Spain's ambition on Asia's mainland was halted and Cambodia became a Siamese vassal.

Phnom Penh ❙ 1975 ❙ Cambodian Civil War

With North Vietnam using Cambodia to attack South Vietnam, pro-western General Lon Nol overthrew Prince Norodom Sihanouk (18 March 1970). However, North Vietnamese and Cambodian Communists (Khmer Rouge) gradually seized the country then shelled and seized Phnom Penh. When the capital fell, Lon Nol fled and the Khmer Rouge began their genocidal rule (16 April 1975).

Phnom Penh ❙ 1979 ❙ Vietnamese-Cambodian War

After years of border clashes, Vietnam launched a major invasion of Cambodia under General Van Tien Dung, who had taken Saigon in 1975. Up to 100,000 Vietnamese and 18,000 Cambodian rebels routed the Khmer Rouge army and seized Phnom Penh to replace the Pol Pot Government with a puppet regime. Civil war continued until the Vietnamese left in 1989 (7 January 1979).

Phraaspa ❙ 36 BC ❙ Roman-Parthian Wars

Two years after a Parthian invasion of Roman Syria was repulsed at Gindarus, Mark Antony led a large army into Parthia and besieged the capital, Phraaspa. With his baggage and siege-train under Oppius Stationus destroyed by Phraates IV of Parthia and King Artavasdes of Media, Antony lifted the siege and withdrew in severe winter weather. The expedition cost him half his army (June–October 36 BC).

Phu Doan ❙ 1952 ❙ French Indo-China War

See Nghia Lo

Phung-tao ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

An act which helped precipitate war between Japan and China over Korea saw Admiral Kozo Tsuboi attack a Chinese convoy off the west coast of Korea, taking reinforcements to Asan. Near Phung Island in Asan Bay, two Chinese vessels were sunk, including the chartered British troopship Kowshing lost with over 1,000 lives. Asan soon fell to land assault at Songhwan (25 July 1894).

Phuoc Binh ❙ 1974–1975 ❙ Vietnam War

Violating the Paris Peace Treaty to begin North Vietnam's campaign to conquer the south, General Tran Van Tra led about 8,000 men into Phuoc Long Province, north of Saigon, where they attacked with artillery and rockets, and stormed the capital Phuoc Binh. Two months later the main offensive began in the central highlands at Ban Me Thuot (13 December 1974–6 January 1975).

Phuoc Ha ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War

South Vietnamese General Hoang Xuan Lam tried to clear the Phuoc Ha Valley, southwest of Danang, and suffered heavy losses before US Marines arrived under General Melvin Henderson (later General Jonas Platt). Operation Harvest Moon saw costly action, including Marines ambushed at Ky Phu, before the Communists withdrew with over 400 killed. The Allies lost 130 (8–18 December 1965).

Piacenza ❙ 200 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

See Placentia

Piacenza ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

See Placentia

Piacenza ❙ 456 ❙ Later Roman Wars of Succession

See Placentia

Piacenza ❙ 1746 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Austria recovered from defeat at Bassignano and sent reinforcements to northern Italy, where Prince Joseph Wenzel von Lichtenstein took command of the Austro-Sardinian army. Near Piacenza at San Lazaro he beat French Marshal Jean-Baptiste Desmarets Marquis de Maillebois and Infante Philip of Spain. A further French loss at Rottofredo in August virtually drove them out of Italy (16 June 1746).

Piacenza ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte captured Piedmont in Northern Italy then sent General Pierre Augereau to cross the Po at Piacenza, where Austrians under General Jean-Pierre de Beaulieu attacked his bridgehead in a night action near the village of Fombio. Although French General Amédée Emmanuel La Harpe was killed, the Austrians were driven back towards the Adda and lost two days later at Lodi (7–8 May 1796).

Piatka ❙ 1593 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

In revolt against Polish Governor Konstantin Ostrozhsky in the Ukraine, Cossack leader Kristof Kosinsky seized Ostopol and was attacked by Ukrainian nobles and mercenaries under the Governor's son Janush. Rashly marching out against Ostrozhsky, he was routed at nearby Piatka and was subsequently killed. Another Cossack rising in 1596 was crushed at Lubny (February 1593).

Piave ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Prince Eugène de Beauharnais regrouped after defeat in northern Italy at Sacile (16 April), gathering his French and Italian army at the Piave north of Venice to advance across the river against Archduke John of Austria near Conegliano. The Austrians were heavily defeated in a daylong action and Eugène drove the Archduke out of Italy and to eventual defeat in June at Raab (8 May 1809).

Piave (1st) ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

With the Italians routed at Caporetto (November 1917), Austrian forces began a renewed offensive along the Piave. General Conrad von Hotzendorf in the north was checked around Monte Grappa, but further south General Svetozar Boroevic forced a crossing. New Italian commander Armando Diaz counter-attacked and Boroevic was forced back with heavy losses (10–22 June 1918).

Piave (2nd) ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

See Vittorio Veneto

Pichi-Carhuré ❙ 1872 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

See San Carlos, Argentina

Pichincha ❙ 1822 ❙ Ecuadorian War of Independence

Campaigning in southwestern Colombia after Bomboná, Patriot leader Simón Bolívar sent General Antonio José de Sucre against Quito in northern Ecuador. Advancing through Ríobambo, de Sucre routed Spanish commander Melchior Aymerich just southwest of Quito at Pichincha. Quito surrendered next day and Bolívar became President of independent Ecuador (24 May 1822).

Pickett's Mill ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As Union commander William T. Sherman pursued Confederate General Joseph E. Johnston through Georgia towards Atlanta, he attempted to turn him at Allatoona and was repulsed to the southwest at New Hope Church. Next day at nearby Pickett's Mill, General Oliver O. Howard was also repulsed and the Confederates attempted a counter-attack southwest at Dallas (27 May 1864).

Picuiba ❙ 1934 ❙ Chaco War

See Yrendagüe

Piedmont ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Resuming the offensive in the Shenandoah Valley after repulse at New Market, Union commander David Hunter advanced south from Winchester and at Piedmont, southwest of Port Republic, Virginia, met Confederate General William E. Jones, who was defeated and killed in severe fighting. Hunter then occupied Staunton and continued south towards Lynchburg (5–6 June 1864).

Piedra-Gorda ❙ 1863 ❙ Mexican-French War

Amid fighting in Guanajuato, Liberal General José López Uraga met an Imperial force led by General Leonardo Márquez at Piedra-Gorda, east of San Luis de la Paz. One of the first actions between Mexicans without French involvement saw Márquez wounded and lose many casualties. However, Uraga withdrew and defected to the French after the fall of Guadalajara (17 December 1863).

Piedras ❙ 1812 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

See Río Piedras

Piercebridge ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

William Cavendish Earl of Newcastle marched south from Newcastle with a large Royalist army and found his way across the Tees blocked at Piercebridge by Captain John Hotham, son of Sir John Hotham, Governor of Hull. The young Parliamentary commander, with just three troops of horse and four companies of foot, was swept aside and Earl Newcastle captured York (1 December 1643).

Pierre's Hole ❙ 1832 ❙ Blackfoot Indian War

While operating west of the Teton Range, in eastern Idaho, beaver hunters from the Rocky Mountain Fur Company under Milton G. Sublette were met at Pierre's Hole by Blackfoot Indians. When a chief attempting a parley was shot down, the battle which followed saw seven trappers and seven friendly Indians killed. Within a few more years the rich fur trade was exhausted (17 June 1832).

Pieter's Hill ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Tugela Heights

Pigüé ❙ 1858 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

When Indians of the pampas under Juan Calfucurá continued raiding eastern Argentina after victory at Sierra Chica (1855), the government sent a large force under Colonel Wenceslao Paunero, supported by Colonels Nicolás Granada and Emilio Conesa. Calfucurá was badly beaten near Pigüé, north of Bahia Blanca, yet fought on until 1872 at San Carlos (16 February 1858).

Pilawce ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

Cossack rebel Bogdan Chmielnicki won at Zolte Wody and Korsun in May, then marched west across the Polish Ukraine and at Pilawce, southwest of Kiev, met a new force under Aleksander Koniecpolski, Mikolaj Ostrorog and Ladislav-Dominic Zaslawski. The brash Poles and their German mercenaries were routed. In 1649, Chmielnicki took Kiev and won at Zborov (23 September 1648).

Pilkem Ridge ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

The British offensive at Ypres began with bombardment by over four million shells before General Hubert Gough attacked north and east against General Friedrich von Arnim. Despite terrible mud and 30,000 casualties, strategic Pilkem Ridge was taken before heavy rain ended the advance. Gough wanted to halt but was soon ordered to attack again at Langemark (31 July–2 August 1917).

Pillau ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With the fall of Königsberg (9 April), survivors fled west to join German forces attempting to hold the Samland Peninsula, where thousands of civilians and wounded were evacuated. After a massive assault by Marshal Aleksandr Vasilevksy and Admiral Vladimir Tributs' Baltic fleet, General Dietrich von Saucken surrendered the key city of Pillau, effectively ceding East Prussia (13–15 April 1945).

Pilleth ❙ 1402 ❙ Glendower's Rebellion

In a largely guerrilla-style rebellion, Welsh nationalist Owen Glendower (Owain Glynn Dwr) lost at Welshpool (1400), then achieved a rare victory in open battle when he surprised an English force of Hereford levies under Sir Edmund Mortimer at Pilleth near Ludlow, Shropshire. Mortimer was captured but later married Glendower's daughter and embraced the Welsh cause (22 June 1402).

Pilot Knob ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Fort Davidson

Pilsen ❙ 1618 ❙ Thirty Years War (Bohemian War)

Supporting the Protestants of Bohemia against the appointment of the Catholic Ferdinand of Styria as King, the Elector Palatinate Frederick V and Duke Charles Emmanuel of Savoy sent a mercenary army of 20,000 under Count Ernst von Mansfeld against Pilsen, southwest of Prague. The Catholic city fell after fierce fighting but Mansfeld was defeated in 1619 at Sablat (21 November 1618).

Pinaglabanan ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

See San Juan del Monte

Pine Bluff ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate General John S. Marmaduke withdrew down the Arkansas River from Little Rock after defeat at nearby Bayou Fourche (10 September) and attempted to recapture Pine Bluff, to the southeast, from a small Union garrison under Colonel Powell Clayton. Marmaduke was unable to take the town despite heavy shelling and was driven off with about 150 casualties (25 October 1863).

Pine Creek ❙ 1858 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars

As Kamiakin of the Yakima continued to resist removal, he was joined by other tribes in southeastern Washington and met Major Edward Steptoe leading a small Federal force north towards Spokane. At Pine Creek, near modern Rosalia, Steptoe was routed by 1,000 Coer d'Alanes, Spokanes and Palouses. However, they were later defeated at Four Lakes and on Spokane Plain (18 May 1858).

Pine Mountain ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Marietta

Pingcheng ❙ 200 BC ❙ Wars of the Former Han

Emperor Gao Zu consolidated his new Han Dynasty after Gaixia, then led a claimed 300,000 troops against the Xiongnu leader Maodun, who had united tribes on China's northwestern frontier. Pursuing the Xiongnu as far as Pingcheng, in northern Shanxi, Gao Zu was ambushed by a massive force and only just escaped capture. He agreed to make peace and sent Maodun a Chinese princess as a bride.

Pingjiang ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Nationalist General Chiang Kai-shek opened his offensive against the warlords of northern China by advancing northeast from Changsha and ordered Li Zongren against Pingjiang, defended by Li Zhuozang for Wu Beifu. When Wu himself counter-attacked, Chiang arrived to secure a bloody victory and then drove north against Tingsiqiao (18–19 August 1926).

Pingjin ❙ 1948–1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Beijing-Tianjin

Pingkiang ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Pingjiang

Pingsingguan ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

With Beijing taken, Japanese General Seishiro Itagaki's advance southwest into Shanxi was attacked on the flank in the Wutai Mountains at Pingsingguan by a Communist force under Lin Biao and Nie Rongzhen. The Japanese were badly defeated with perhaps 5,000 casualties, but the Red Army failed to follow up and the invaders continued towards Taiyuan (25 September 1937).

Pingyang ❙ 234 BC ❙ China's Era of the Warring States

Zhao Zheng, King of Qin (Ch'in), attempting to unify China, renewed war against his Zhao rivals who had been beaten in 260 BC at Changping. In a subsequent decisive battle at Pingyang, Zheng routed his enemy, with a claimed 100,000 beheaded. By 221 BC, Zheng had overcome all rival states and proclaimed himself Emperor of China as Qin Shi Huang. His Qin Dynasty fell in 207 BC at Xianyang.

Pingyang ❙ 576–577 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

In the prolonged struggle for northern China, Emperor Wu of Northern Zhou (Western Wei) took a large army into Northern Qi (Eastern Wei), where he besieged and seized the border town of Pingyang on the Fen River. Qi Emperor Gao Wei arrived to besiege the captured town, but in battle nearby, he was defeated and driven off by Wu, who then proceeded upriver towards Taiyuan.

Pinkie ❙ 1547 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Royal Wars

In a failed attempt to marry his nephew Edward VI to the infant Mary Queen of Scots,

Edward Seymour Duke of Somerset invaded Scotland and on Falside Hill at Pinkie Cleugh, near Musselburgh, destroyed a much larger Scots army under the Regent James Hamilton Earl of Arran. The English captured nearby Edinburgh but were driven out three years later (10 September 1547).

Pinnacle Mountain ❙ 1860 ❙ Pyramid Lake Indian War

When Paiute in western Nevada avenged the rape of two Indian girls, then defeated a pursuing force of miners at the Truckee, 800 California militia—the Carson Valley expedition—set out under former Texas Ranger Colonel Jack Hays. Near Pinnacle Mountain, south of Pyramid Lake, the Indians were scattered with 25 killed, effectively ending the brief war (14 May–15 July 1860).

Piombino ❙ 1646 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

See Porto Longone

Piperdean ❙ 1436 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

In response to Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland preparing for war against Scotland in violation of an existing truce, William Douglas Earl of Angus and Adam Hepburn were sent to Piperdean, near Cockburnspath, where they heavily defeated an English force under Sir Robert Ogle. In a further response to England's invasion, James I then laid siege to Roxburgh (10 September 1436).

Piqua ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Colonel George Rogers Clark and 1,000 Kentucky militia retaliating for a Loyalist attack at Ruddle's Station, destroyed Indian Chillicothe in Ohio. Clark then attacked 300 Shawnee and Delaware under Chief Black Hoof at nearby Piqua and, after costly losses on both sides, burned the town and crops. Following Blue Licks in 1782, Clark returned and destroyed what remained (8 August 1780).

Piraeus ❙ 87–86 BC ❙ 1st Mithridatic War

King Mithridates VI of Pontus sent his General Archelaus to invade Greece and Rome sent a counter-invasion. General Lucius Sulla blockaded Archelaus in Piraeus and Aristion in nearby Athens. Following a long siege and heavy fighting, Athens fell (1 March 86 BC). While a further assault soon drove Archelaus to abandon Piraeus, he soon continued the war at Chaeronea.

Piraja ❙ 1822 ❙ Brazilian War of Independence

Under attack at Salvador, in northern Brazil's Bahia Province, Portuguese commander Colonel Ignacio Luis Madeira de Melo led a counter-offensive against the blockading Brazilians about 15 miles north of the city at Piraja. Madeira was badly defeated by French-born insurgent leader Brigadier Pedro Labatut and withdrew under siege to Salvador (8 November 1822).

Piribebuy ❙ 1869 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

One of the bloodiest actions of the war provoked by Paraguayan Dictator Francisco Solano López saw Brazilians under Gaston d'Orleans Comte d'Eu storm Piribebuy, southeast of Ausunción, held by Colonel Pedro Pablo Caballero. Caballero was taken and executed, along with many soldiers and civilians, and the survivors withdrew through Acosta-Ñu to Cerro Corá (12 August 1869).

Pirisabora ❙ 363 ❙ Later Roman-Persian Wars

In response to attacks on Roman Mesopotamia by Shapur II of Persia, Emperor Julian led a large army from Syria down the Euphrates, where he attacked Pirisabora (Anbar) guarding the vital canal linking to the Tigris. The Sassanian garrison fought fiercely, but Roman siege machines smashed the walls and the city was razed to the ground. Julian continued east to Maiozamalcha (27–29 April 363).

Pirmasens ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Advancing across the Rhine, Austrian General Dagobert Wurmser besieged Landau before French under General Charles Landrémont counter-attacked along the Lauter between Pirmasens and Wissembourg, heavily repulsing the Austrians. Wurmser attacked again a month later and new French commander General Jean Carlenc was driven back and fled (14 September & 13 October 1793).

Pirna ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia invaded Saxony in force to open his war and occupied undefended Dresden (9 September) as the Saxon army under Marshal Friedrich von Rutowski withdrew southeast to siege at Pirna. When an Austrian relief army was defeated at Lobositz, the starving Saxons surrendered and about 18,000 were pressed into Prussian service (September–14 October 1756).

Pirna ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

As a prelude to Napoleon Bonaparte's decisive victory at Dresden, French General Dominique Vandamme crossed the Elbe and attacked the Allied flank held by Prince Eugene of Württemberg ten miles southeast at Pirna. The Allies were forced to divert reinforcements in support, which helped secure Bonaparte's success on the main battlefield on the first day (26 August 1813).

Pirot ❙ 1885 ❙ Serbo-Bulgarian War

In a dispute over eastern Rumelia, King Milan IV of Serbia marched into newly independent Bulgaria, where he was repulsed at Slivnitza by Prince Alexander (Battenberg) of Bulgaria, who drove him out and invaded Serbia. While the Bulgarians stormed Pirot on the Nisava, Austria intervened to save Serbia and an armistice next day brought the brief war to an end (26–27 November 1885).

Pirvan ❙ 1221 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

See Parwan Durrah

Pisa ❙ 1406 ❙ Florentine-Pisan Wars

After Gerhardo Appiani of Pombio murdered Piero Gambacorti to seize Pisa (1392), he sold it to the Dukes of Milan (1400), who traded it to Florence (1405). The humiliated people of the city rose in revolt, but they were starved into surrender after a terrible six-month siege. The once-powerful Maritime Republic lost its independence apart from a brief period under Charles VIII (April–9 October 1406).

Pisco ❙ 1819 ❙ Peruvian War of Independence

Chilean commander Lord Thomas Cochrane regrouped after a repulse at Callao (29 September), sending Captain Martin Guise south against Royalist Pisco. A landing party under Major William Miller and Colonel Jagrae Charles met heavy fire—with Charles killed and Miller wounded—but the Chileans captured the garrison, along with large supplies of arms, ammunition and rum (7 November 1819).

Pistoria ❙ 62 BC ❙ Catiline Revolt

An attempted coup in Rome by Lucius Sergius Catiline failed when the conspiracy was exposed by the orator Cicero. Trying to flee across the Apennines, Catiline's army was trapped in the Arno Valley at Pistoria (modern Pistoia) by General Gaius Antonius and the veteran Marcus Petreius. The rebels were routed in a brutal battle and Catiline died in a suicidal last charge.

Pitgaveney ❙ 1040 ❙ Scottish War of Succession

See Elgin

Pitiantuta ❙ 1932 ❙ Chaco War

See Carlos Antonio López

Pittsburgh ❙ 1763 ❙ Pontiac's War

See Fort Pitt

Pittsburgh Landing ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Shiloh

Piva ❙ 1861 ❙ Turko-Montenegran Wars

Following the assassination of Danilo II of Montenegro, his nephew and successor Prince Nicholas Petrovich supported Slavs in Herzogovina to rebel against the Turks. At Piva, in the southwest, Turkish forces under Omar Pasha routed the Herzogovina rebels. The following year Omar invaded Montenegro itself for victory at Rijeka (21 November 1861).

Piva Forks ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While American forces established a beachhead on Bougainville, severe fighting developed in heavy jungle inland from Empress Augusta Bay between the Piva River and the Numa Numa Trail. The Japanese were eventually repulsed with 1,200 killed and successful defence of the American perimeter at "Cibik Ridge" helped turn the tide in Bougainville (18–26 November 1943).

Pi-yang ❙ 563 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

See Biyang

Pla ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As French Marshal Jacques Macdonald marched through Valls towards Lérida, his vanguard under Italian General Francisco Orastelle Eugenio determined to march north against the Spanish. Five miles from Valls at Pla, they found themselves facing a force three times as large under General Pedro Sarsfield and were routed, with Eugenio killed and about 600 men lost (11 January 1811).

Placentia ❙ 200 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

In the aftermath of the Punic Wars, Carthaginian General Hamilcar roused the Boii, Insubres and Cenomani of Cisapline Gaul (Po Valley in northern Italy) to attack Placentia (modern Piacenza). The Roman city was taken by storm and then sacked, with terrible losses and damage. However, the Gauls were routed when they laid siege to nearby Cremona.

Placentia ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

Three years after defeat in Italy at Lake Benacus, Alemanni tribesmen joined with Juthungi allies to again cross the Alps onto the northern plains. New Emperor Aurelian rushed back from fighting Vandals on the Danube and met the invaders near Placentia (modern Piacenza). Rome's army suffered a severe defeat and the Alemanni marched south towards Rome, turning to meet Aurelian at Fano.

Placentia ❙ 456 ❙ Later Roman Wars of Succession

During the decline of Rome following its sack in 455, the Roman general, the Sueve Ricimer, drove the Vandals out of Sicily, defeated a raiding party on Corsica, then attacked the Emperor Avitus who had returned from Gaul. At Placentia (modern Piacenza), Avitus was defeated and overthrown. Six months later, Ricimer established his ally Majorian as the new Emperor (16 October 456).

Placilla ❙ 1891 ❙ Chilean Civil War

In civil war against Chilean President José Manuel Balmaceda, Congressist Colonel Estanislao del Canto Arteaga won at Concón near Valparaiso then a week later met 14,000 Loyalist troops under Colonel Orozimbo Barbosa Puga further north at Placilla. Barbosa Puga was routed with over 3,500 casualties and was later murdered. Valparaiso fell and Balmaceda committed suicide (28 August 1891).

Plain of Reeds ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

American and Australian troops on their first ground offensive in the Mekong Delta, advanced into the marshy Plain of Reeds against a large, well-entrenched Viet Cong formation. Exercising strategic air mobility east of the Oriental River, the Allied forces of Operation Marauder effectively destroyed one Viet Cong battalion and the headquarters of another (1–8 January 1966).

Plains of Abraham ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

See Quebec

Plains Store ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

As Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks moved into position around Confederate Port Hudson, Louisiana, a division under General Christopher C. Augur was met by Colonels Frank P. Powers and William R. Miles to the north, near Springfield Road at Plains Store. The Confederates were defeated in heavy fighting and fell back under siege at Port Hudson (21 May 1863).

Plamam Mapu ❙ 1965 ❙ Indonesian-Malaysian Confrontation

Indonesia refused to recognise Malaysia and began a border war, which saw a decisive action when Indonesian troops entered Borneo to attack the village of Plamam Mapu. In very heavy fighting against British paratroops under Captain John Fleming, the Indonesians were driven off with costly losses. It is claimed they never again tried to cross the border in such force (25 April 1965).

Plaridel ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

See Quinqua

Plassey ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

British commander Robert Clive resumed war in Bengal and marched north from Calcutta to aid Mir Jafar against the French-supported Nawab Siraj-ud-Daula. At Plassey, in the most decisive battle in Bengal, Clive's hugely outnumbered army routed the Nawab, who was soon assassinated. Mir Jafar became Nawab and the British commander was created Baron Clive of Plassey (23 June 1757).

Plataea ❙ 479 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

A year after defeat at Salamis and the return of King Xerxes to Persia, a Persian army left in Greece under Mardonius reoccupied Athens until confronted by Greeks under the Spartan Pausanias south of Thebes near Plataea. A terrible rout saw Mardonius and about 50,000 killed. A naval defeat at the same time in Asia Minor at Mycale ended the Persian campaign in Greece (August 479 BC).

Plataea ❙ 429–427 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Spartan King Archidamus II was determined to punish Plataea for bloodily suppressing a Theban coup and led a large Spartan-Theban force against the city south of Thebes, held by just 400 Plataeans and 80 Athenian allies. After a long siege, in which about half the garrison escaped to Athens, the starving survivors surrendered and over 200 were executed (May 429–August 427 BC).

Platrand ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Wagon Hill

Platte Bridge ❙ 1865 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

Lieutenant Caspar Collins, attempting to protect a wagon supply train, rashly rode out from Platte Bridge stockade (modern Casper, Wyoming) and immediately came under a massive attack, with Collins and half his men killed. Meantime, in a four-hour battle east of Red Buttes against Roman Nose, Sergeant Amos Custard and the incoming 20-man wagon escort were annihilated (26 July 1865).

Plattsburg ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

A large-scale British offensive south from the St Lawrence saw General Sir George Prevost and 10,000 men attack Plattsburg, on the western shore of Lake Champlain. American General Alexander Macomb then withdrew across the Saranac. After days of delay and a naval defeat on Lake Champlain, Prevost broke off his attack and withdrew to Canada in disgrace (6–11 September 1814).

Platzberg ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

After the French were repulsed west of the Rhine at Kaiserslautern, General Laurent

Gouvion Saint-Cyr attacked to the southeast against well-fortified positions on Platzberg. The Prussians were heavily defeated and driven off, with 3,000 killed including their commander General Theodore Von Pfau. A second French attack began further west next day at Trippstadt (13 July 1794).

Playa Girón ❙ 1961 ❙ Bay of Pigs Incident
See Bay of Pigs

Pleasant Hill ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks advanced 150 miles up the Red River through Louisiana before being checked at Mansfield. He then fell back southeast to Pleasant Hill, where he was attacked next day by Confederate General Richard Taylor. Although Banks inflicted greater casualties in a hard-fought victory, he abandoned his objective and began the retreat through Monett's Ferry (9 April 1864).

Plechenitzi ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)
See Bolshoi-Stakhov

Pleiku ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War

Emboldened by their attack on the airbase at Bien Hoa and at Binh Gia, Viet Cong forces attacked the major US airbase near Pleiku, in the central highlands, where eight Americans were killed, 126 wounded and ten aircraft were destroyed. Next day the US launched its first reprisal air attacks on North Vietnam and a month later the first American ground combat troops arrived (7 February 1965).

Plei Me ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War

At the start of a major offensive in Pleiku, Viet Cong and North Vietnamese regulars under Gen Chu Huy Man attacked the Montagnard camp at Plei Me near the Cambodian border. Very heavy fighting saw South Vietnamese troops and US airborne forces relieve the siege, inflicting costly losses. This was followed by the American counter-offensive at nearby Ia Drang (19–27 October 1965).

Plevna (1st) ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Russian Grand Duke Nicholas captured the Danube fortresses of Svistov and Nicopolis then marched south against Plevna, held by Osman Nuri Pasha. General Nikolai Krudener launched a powerful assault, followed by a second attack ten days later. However, both assaults were driven back with heavy losses and the Russians settled down to a long and bloody siege (20 & 30 July 1877).

Plevna (2nd) ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

With the Danube fortresses of Svistov and Nicopolis secured, Grand Duke Nicholas marched south against Plevna, defended by 30,000 Turks under Osman Pasha. Following costly Russian assaults in July General Mikhail Skobelev led a fresh attack, which captured two redoubts. However, he was driven out with a claimed 20,000 casualties and the siege continued (10–12 September 1877).

Plevna (3rd) ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Russian forces captured the Danube fortresses of Svistov and Nicopolis then marched south against Osman Pasha and 30,000 Turks at Plevna. Following costly Russian assaults in July and September, Osman led a final sortie, which broke the Russian siege lines. But after terrible losses to both sides Osman was driven back and surrendered to King Carol of Romania (9–10 December 1877).

Pliska ❙ 811 ❙ Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars
See Verbitza

Ploermel ❙ 1351 ❙ Hundred Years War
See Thirty

Ploesti ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Determined to destroy the petroleum plants at Ploesti, Romania, 177 Liberator bombers under General Uzal Ent set off North Africa. Facing heavy attack, especially at low altitude over Ploesti, 54 of the American aircraft failed to return, with over 300 aircrew killed and almost 200 men captured in Romania or interned in Turkey. Damage to the refineries was quickly repaired (1 August 1943).

Plotchnik ❙ 1387 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

With the Ottoman army absent in Asia, Lazar I of Serbia rebelled against Sultan Murad I and attacked a depleted Turkish force at Plotchnik (Plocnic), on the Toplitsa, southwest of Nish in central Serbia. Aided by Turtko of Bosnia, Lazar secured a decisive victory. However, two years later he was defeated and killed by Murad at Kossovo.

Plovdiv ❙ 1878 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

General Ossip Gourko advanced through Bulgaria after Russian victory near the Shipka Pass at Senova then days later stormed the fortified city of Plovdiv, held by the great Turkish commander Suleiman Pasha. Plovdiv fell at the cost of 5,000 Turkish casualties and 2,000 prisoners. Suleiman soon abandoned Adrianople and Turkey sued for peace (17 January 1878).

Plowce ❙ 1331 ❙ Wars of the Teutonic Knights

Despite Papal intervention, the Teutonic Order refused to relinquish Pomerania and Gdansk. After seizing Estonia, they raided south into the territory of their former ally Ladislav of Poland. Ladislav badly defeated the knights at Plowce, west of Wroclawek, though they retained their conquests. The Order later turned east against Lithuania and in 1410, was routed at Tannenberg (27 September 1331).

Plum Creek, Nebraska ❙ 1867 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

When Cheyenne derailed a Union Pacific train west of Plum Creek (near modern Lexington, Nebraska) General Christopher Augur sent Captain James Murie and 50 Pawnee scouts who attacked Indians looting the wreck. In a fierce delaying action to protect their fleeing women and children, the Cheyenne had seven killed and lost a further 17 in the pursuit until nightfall (17 August 1867).

Plum Creek, Texas ❙ 1840 ❙ Comanche Indian Wars

Pursuing Comanche under Buffalo Hump after the raid on Victoria and Linnville in southern Texas, militia under Generals Felix Huston and Edward Burleson and Texas Ranger Ben McCulloch attacked the invaders at Plum Creek, near modern Lockhart, northeast of San Antonio. Buffalo Hump lost all his loot and about 80 killed. He was beaten again in October on the Colorado (12 August 1840).

Plymouth, England ❙ 1588 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

See Spanish Armada

Plymouth, England ❙ 1652 ❙ 1st Dutch War

Admiral Michiel de Ruyter attempted to escort a Dutch convoy through the English Channel and was confronted off Plymouth by a large English fleet under Sir George Ayscue. While both fleets suffered severe damage, neither managed to gain the advantage and action broke off at nightfall. Both sides claimed victory, though the Dutch convoy was able to continue on its journey (26 August 1652).

Plymouth, North Carolina ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

In a combined assault on Union forces in North Carolina, Confederate General Robert F. Hoke, supported by the ram vessel Albermarle, attacked the city of Plymouth and drove off nearby Union ships. Colonel Henry W. Wessells surrendered over 2,000 men after Hoke captured key positions. An assault on Albermarle Sound two weeks later was far less successful (17–20 April 1864).

Po ❙ 1431 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

See Cremona

Po ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Po Valley

Po-chü ❙ 506 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

See Boju

Podgoritza ❙ 1712 ❙ Ottoman Invasions of Montenegro

When Ottoman Sultan Ahmed III led a large invasion of Montenegro, his army was met on the plain of Podgoritza, east of the old capital of Cetinje, by Prince Danilo Petrovich. In the greatest battle between Montenegro and Turkey—on a field later known as Tzarevlatz—the Sultan was utterly defeated. Two years later, Grand Vizier Damad Ai invaded again and captured Cetinje (29 July 1712).

Podhajce ❙ 1667 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

With Poland weakened after war with Moscow, Russian-aligned Tatar and Cossack forces reunited and up to 30,000 men under Piotr Deroshenko and Devlet Girei ravaged parts of Ukraine then besieged Polish Hetman John Sobieski at Podhacje (modern Pidhaytsi). After heavy fighting the greatly superior Tatar-Cossack force was defeated and withdrew from Polish Western Ukraine (October 1667).

Podol ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Prince Friedrich Karl invaded Austrian Bohemia with the Prussian 1st Army and sent General Heinrich von Horn against Liebenau, just west of Turnau, then continued down the Iser to capture the bridges at Podol. A fierce night-time infantry action forced the Austrians to retreat and Count Edouard von Clam-Gallas fell back southwest towards Münchengratz (26–27 June 1866).

Podubnie ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Gorodeczno

Podul Inalt ❙ 1475 ❙ Moldavian-Turkish War

See Rakhova

Poelcappelle ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Following success east of Ypres at Broodseinde, General Sir Herbert Plumer, supported by General Hubert Gough, attacked in the northeast around Poelcappelle, where much of the fighting fell on the Australians. Despite very heavy losses for no substantial gain, British Commander-in-Chief Sir Douglas Haig then launched his exhausted forces against Paschendaele (9 October 1917).

Poggibonzi ❙ 1479 ❙ Florentine-Neapolitan War

When a dispute developed between Pope Sixtus IV and Lorenzo de Medici of Florence, a large army from Naples, supported by Siena, advanced into Tuscany. After months of inconclusive combat the Florentines were routed north of Siena at Poggibonzi by the Allies under Alfonzo, Duke of Calabaria. A courageous embassy by Lorenzo to King Ferdinand of Naples then ended the war.

Point Pelee ❙ 1763 ❙ Pontiac's War

With Detroit under siege by the Ottawa Chief Pontiac, Lieutenant Abraham Cuyler was despatched from Fort Niagara with 96 men and ten boats of supplies. At Point Pelee, near the mouth of the Detroit River, the column was ambushed. About 60 men were killed or captured, with many later tortured to death. Cuyler and the survivors escaped by boat back to Niagara (28 May 1763).

Point Pleasant ❙ 1774 ❙ Dunmore's War

After mutual atrocities between Indian and settlers, Virginian Governor John Murray Earl of Dunmore sent Colonel Andrew Lewis against Shawnees in Kentucky. Near the mouth of the Kanawha on the Ohio at Point Pleasant, Shawnee Chief Cornstalk was decisively defeated and made peace. In the subsequent Revolutionary War, Lewis defeated Dunmore at Gwynn Island (10 October 1774).

Poison Spring ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union General Frederick Steele marched across Arkansas through Elkin's Ferry and Prairie d'Ane to capture Camden, then sent a foraging party west under Colonel James M. Williams. About 15 miles away at Poison Spring, Williams was surprised and routed by Generals John S. Marmaduke and Samuel B. Maxey, returning to Camden after losing all his wagons (18 April 1864).

Poitiers ❙ 732 ❙ Muslim Invasion of France

See Tours

Poitiers ❙ 1356 ❙ Hundred Years War

In the disputed Breton succession, Edward III of England supported Charles of Navarre against John II of France and sent Edward Prince of Wales raiding into central France. The Black Prince met John's force at Maupertuis, near Poitiers, and inflicted a terrible defeat. John was taken prisoner to England and the ensuing truce gave Edward new French territory (19 September 1356).

Poitiers ❙ 1569 ❙ 3rd French War of Religion

Four months after the Protestant rout at Jarnac, Huguenot leader Admiral Gaspard de Coligny received German reinforcements and joined 15-year-old Henry of Bearnais (later Henry IV) besieging Poitiers. Catholic commander Marshal Gaspard de Tavennes eventually drove off the prolonged siege and quickly followed up with a decisive victory at Moncontour (July–September 1569).

Pola ❙ 1379 ❙ War of Chioggia

See Pula

Poland ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

A lightning campaign to start the war saw German Panzer forces sweep into Poland while battleships shelled the naval bases at Westerplatte and Hel. Despite heavy fighting and a bold Polish counter-attack at the Bzura, Warsaw surrendered and resistance ended at Kock. The campaign cost up to 200,000 Poles killed and wounded and perhaps 40,000 Germans (1 September–5 October 1939).

Pollentia ❙ 402 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

Soon after an inconclusive action at Asta, the Roman-Vandal General Flavius Stilicho attacked the Goth leader Alaric on the Tanarus River near Pollentia (modern Pollenza), southwest of Ancona. While both sides suffered very heavy losses, after initial success Alaric was forced to withdraw north into the Alps. The following year he advanced against Stilicho near Verona (6 April 402).

Pollilore ❙ 1780 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

See Perambakam

Pollilore ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

Haidar Ali of Mysore was decisively defeated at Porto Novo, in southeast India (4 July), and pulled back towards Perambakam, where he had gained a clear victory a year before. He attempted to make a stand at the nearby village of Pollilore, where he suffered another loss at the hands of General Sir Eyre Coote. Haidar Ali lost again a month later at Sholinghur (27 August 1781).

Polo ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

American commander Arthur MacArthur marched north from Manila through Caloocan (10 February) advancing on Philippine General Antonio Luna's headquarters at the railway town of Polo. American Colonel Harry C. Egbert was killed leading a charge in heavy fighting at nearby Malinta, but Polo fell later the same day. Luna led a scorched-earth retreat towards Malolos (26 March 1899).

Polonka ❙ 1660 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Prince Yuri Dolgorukov defeated the Poles near Vilna (1658) then supported a fresh Russian invasion of Lithuania led by Ivan Khovanski. At Polonka, south of Novogrudok in Belorus, the Allies lost over 5,000 men to Polish Hetman Stefan Czarniecki. The following year Khovansky was beaten again at Kushliki and the Poles gradually recovered most of Lithuania (27 June 1660).

Polonyye ❙ 1660 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

See Polonka

Polotsk ❙ 1563 ❙ Livonian War

When Sigismund II Augustus of Poland and Lithuania declared war on Russia to defend Livonia, Tsar Ivan IV himself took a strong army to the Lithuanian border and besieged Polotsk. Two weeks of brutal siege in severe winter conditions forced the city to surrender, but Ivan agreed to an armistice and returned to Moscow. Fighting later resumed at Chashniki and Nevel (15 February 1563).

Polotsk ❙ 1579 ❙ Livonian War

Formally declaring war on Russia over Livonia, King Stephen Bathory of Poland determined to cut Moscow's communications with the disputed territory and marched into Russia with a large army to besiege Polotsk. The city fell to Bathory after heavy fighting and the following year he campaigned deeper into enemy territory to the northeast against Velikie Luki (11–30 August 1579).

Polotsk (1st) ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As Napoleon Bonaparte advanced into Russia, he sent Marshal Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr to reinforce Marshal Nicolas Oudinot near Polotsk against Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein. With Oudinot and Bavarian commander Prince Karl von Wrede both wounded, St-Cyr took over and drove the Russians out, securing the French left flank and gaining his Marshal's baton (17–18 August 1812).

Polotsk (2nd) ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

At the start of his retreat from Moscow, Napoleon Bonaparte ordered Marshal Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr to secure Polotsk and prevent Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein and Admiral Paul Tchitchakov joining to block his route. After St-Cyr was badly wounded, his French and Bavarian force was heavily defeated and was forced to abandon Polotsk (18 October 1812).

Poltava ❙ 1658 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Cossack leader Ivan Vyhovsky opposed the Russian-aligned Cossack faction in the Ukraine and attacked Poltava, held by Colonel Martyn Pushkar and Zaporozhian Cossacks under Yakov Barabash. After initial failure (25 January) a second assault stormed and burned Poltava, with Pushkar killed. Barabash was later caught and executed and Vyhovsky soon turned against Kiev (1 June 1658).

Poltava ❙ 1709 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Advancing into Russia after victory at Holowczyn (July 1708), Charles XII of Sweden besieged Poltava and faced a Russian relief army under Tsar Peter I. With Charles wounded, his army under Count Carl Gustav Rehnskjold was trapped and destroyed between the Dneiper and Vorska. Only about 2,000 out of 20,000 Swedes escaped, with Charles fleeing to Turkish Moldavia (1 May–1 July 1709).

Polygon Wood ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

In renewed fighting east of Ypres in the Third Battle of Ypres, General Sir Herbert Plumer followed success along the Menin Road with a large-scale assault north on Polygon Wood. German forces of General Friedrich von Arnim's Sixth Army were driven out in heavy fighting and Plumer immediately launched a third attack further north at Broodseinde (26 September–3 October 1917).

Pombal ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

French Marshal Michel Ney, on retreat from the failed invasion of Portugal, fought some remarkable rearguard actions against the cautious pursuit led by Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington. At the town of Pombal, east of the Tua, Ney attempted to defend the nearby castle, but was driven out by Colonel Friedrich Arentschildt and withdrew towards the Soure at Redhina (10 March 1811).

Pompeii ❙ 89 BC ❙ Roman Social War

When the Marsi and Samnite tribes of central Italy revolted against Roman rule over citizenship, victory at Asculum virtually secured the north. Meanwhile Lucius Cornelius Sulla in the south besieged the rebel stronghold at Pompeii, where a Samnite relief army under Cluentius was decisively defeated. After the fall of Pompeii the revolt in the south was soon crushed.

Poncha Pass ❙ 1855 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

On campaign against the Utes in central Colorado, Colonel Thomas T. Fauntleroy led 250 men north from Fort Union and found the camp of Chief Blasco and 150 warriors at Poncha Pass, southwest of Salida. Attacking at night, Fauntleroy's force killed 40 men and scattered the rest, then destroyed the camp and all the Indian possessions, effectively ending Ute resistance (28 April 1855).

Ponda ❙ 1675 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

During an offensive on India's west coast, Maratha King Shivaji besieged the Bijapuri fortress of Ponda, near Goa. After Mughal Bahlol Khan of Bijapur failed to send aid, the fortress fell by storm and garrison commander Muhammad Khan was one of the few who escaped the ensuing massacre. The victory largely secured the Western Carnatic for Shivaji (8 April–6 May 1675).

Pondicherry ❙ 1748 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

British Admiral Edward Boscawen relieved besieged Fort St David on India's southeast coast, then determined to take almost 6,000 European and Indian troops against French Governor General Joseph Dupleix in his nearby capital at Pondicherry. However, after monsoon rains flooded the British trenches Boscawen withdrew with loss of 1,000 men (6 September–17 October 1748).

Pondicherry ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

Having relieved the French siege of Madras (17 February), British Admiral Sir George Pocock patrolled the southeast coast of India and met French Admiral Comte Ann-Antoine d'Aché off Pondicherry. As in their previous encounters off Cuddalore and Negapatam, the result was indecisive, though d'Aché suffered heavy damage and casualties and withdrew to Mauritius (10 September 1759).

Pondicherry ❙ 1760–1761 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

The last major clash between France and Britain in India saw Colonel Eyre Coote follow Wandewash (January 1760) with a large-scale siege of the main French base at Pondicherry, supported at sea by Admiral Charles Steevens. Despite storm damage to the fleet, Coote maintained the siege and forced surrender, virtually ending France's presence in India (8 December 1760–15 January 1761).

Pondicherry ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

On the resumption of war in Europe, British General Hector Munro was sent against French Pondicherry in southeast India, defended by Governor Guillaume de Bellecombe. While Pondicherry was under siege, French Admiral Tronjolly was repulsed by Admiral Edward Vernon (10 August) and the city finally surrendered. Munro was knighted for his success (16 October 1778).

Pont-à-Chin ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

The Austrian-British-Hanoverian allies retreating from defeat at Tourcoing in Belgium turned against General Charles Pichegru at Tournai, east of Lille. An otherwise indecisive battle saw the British right wing under General Henry Fox repulse the French from the village of Pont-à-Chin, before both sides disengaged after heavy losses. The Allied withdrawal continued (22 May 1794).

Ponta Delgada ❙ 1582 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese War
See Terceira

Ponta della Priula ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)
See Piave

Pont à Noyelles ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
See Hallue

Pontarlier ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
After a French attempt to relieve Belfort was repulsed at Héricourt, General Charles-Denis Bourbaki was replaced by General Justin Clinchant, who was driven south by General Edwin von Manteuffel. Defeated near Pontarlier and nearby La Cluse, Clinchant led his 90,000 men across the border to internment in Switzerland just as the war came to an end (29 January–1 February 1871).

Pont-Charrault ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)
See Pont de Gravereau

Pont-de-Ce ❙ 1620 ❙ French Civil War
See Ponts-de-Ce

Pont de Gravereau ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)
General Louis Marcé, advancing towards the Lay near the start of the Royalist counter-revolution in western France, routed Republicans at the Pont de Gravereau, then occupied nearby Chantonnay, while the defeated army fled south towards Fontenay. Regarded as the first Royalist victory over Republican regulars, it is mistakenly also known as Pont-Charrault (19 March 1793).

Pontesbury ❙ 661 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars
Wulfhere of Mercia, son of the great King Penda, became increasingly concerned by the expanding power of Wessex and took a large force against King Cenwalh (Coenwalch) of Wessex. The army of the West Saxons was heavily defeated at Pontesbury, southwest of Shrewsbury in central Shropshire and Wulfhere went on to seize the Isle of Wight.

Pontoise ❙ 1441 ❙ Hundred Years War
Five years after French forces recaptured Paris from the English, Thomas Lord Clifford seized Pontoise on the northwestern outskirts (June 1441). Despite reinforcements under Richard Duke of York and John Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, the English were eventually driven out by Jean Bureau Master of Artillery. The battle was the last major action before a five-year truce in 1444 (14 September 1441).

Ponts-de-Ce ❙ 1620 ❙ French Civil War
In a struggle for power in France, Queen Mother Marie de Medici became the focus for nobles opposing the young Louis XIII and his unpopular Minister Alfred de Luynes. Louis II de Bourbon Prince of Condé defeated the Queen's adherents under Jean-Louis Duke d'Epernon south of Angers at Ponts-de-Ce and a Royal reconciliation was negotiated (7 August 1620).

Pontvallain ❙ 1370 ❙ Hundred Years War
During a period of intermittent fighting in France, the rearguard of an English force led by Sir Robert Knolles was surprised in camp near Pontvallain, south of Le Mans, by the great warrior Bertrand du Guesclin. The English were heavily defeated and the main English army was driven back to Brittany (4 December 1370).

Poona ❙ 1663 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars
A brilliant exploit in western India saw Maratha warlord Shivaji and his lieutenant Chimnaji Bapuji lead about 400 men on a night-time raid on the camp of Mughal Viceroy Shaista Khan just outside Poona. Surprised in his harem, Shaista Khan was slightly wounded, while his son Abdul Fath and about 40 men were killed. The Viceroy withdrew in shame to Aurangabad (5 April 1663).

Poona ❙ 1781 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War
See Bhorghat

Poona ❙ 1802 ❙ Maratha Territorial Wars

In bloody war between rival Maratha Princes, Maharaja Jaswant Rao Holkar of Indore came back from defeat at Indore (October 1801) and, outside Poona, he defeated Daulat Rao Sindhia of Gwalior and overthrew his ally Peshwa Baji Rao II. British demands to restore the deposed Peshwa led to the 2nd British-Maratha War, when Sindhia changed sides to support Holkar (25 October 1802).

Poonch ❙ 1947–1948 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

Soon after the fall of Uri, Pakistan-backed tribal rebellion broke out in southwest Kashmir and over 45,000 refugees crammed into Poonch, where Indian regulars arrived with orders to hold the city at all cost. Aided by a bold airlift, and despite facing trumped-up charges, Brigadier Pritam Singh held out against a yearlong siege and Poonch was finally relieved (November 1947–23 November 1948).

Poplar Grove ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

General Lord Frederick Roberts advancing east from Kimberley through Paardeberg met a Boer defensive line on the Modder at Poplar Grove. A badly managed action saw a failed British flanking attack and a bold rearguard action by Christiaan de Wet. The Boers, including President Paul Kruger himself, then withdrew through Driefontein to Bloemfontein (7 March 1900).

Poplar Springs Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While Union forces attacked northeast of Petersburg, Virginia, at New Market Heights, Generals Gouvernor K. Warren and John G. Parker advanced southwest near Poplar Springs Church. In heavy fighting at Peebles' Farm, a Confederate counter-attack by Generals Ambrose P. Hill and Wade Hampton failed and the Union line was extended to the west (30 September–2 October 1864).

Porici ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

When Sigismund of Hungary invaded to seize Bohemia and threatened Prague, the city sent for help from the Hussite Jan Zizka at Tabor. A Royalist force under Pipo Spano (Count Filippe de Scolari) and Wenceslas of Duba intercepted the approaching Hussites near Porici, on the Sásava, south of Prague. However, they were heavily defeated and Zizka entered the capital next day (19 May 1420).

Pork Chop Hill ❙ 1953 ❙ Korean War

Chinese forces attacking southwest of Chorwon seized Old Baldy but failed to take nearby Pork Chop Hill (23–26 March). A second attempt also failed (16–18 April) before the Chinese launched a third, overwhelming assault. After heavy losses for no strategic purpose, General Maxwell Taylor abandoned the hard-fought position. Two weeks later the armistice was signed (6–11 July 1953).

Pornic ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

General André Jean Saint-André opened the Royalist rebellion in western France by taking Pornic, near the mouth of the Loire. But after his men got drunk on looted liquor, it was retaken by National Guardsmen with over 200 killed. Saint-André retired in disgrace and Pornic was easily captured again five days later by Royalist General Francois-Athanese Charette (22 March 1793).

Port Arthur ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

While Japanese forces crossed the Yalu from Korea into China, Marshal Iwao Oyama landed 40,000 men on the Liaodong Peninsula, where he captured Jinzhou (5 November), then marched on Port Arthur (modern Lüshun). After a massive bombardment by land and sea, General Maresuke Nogi took the vital port by storm and soon marched north into Manchuria towards Kaiping (21 November 1894).

Port Arthur ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Just before midnight on the first day of the war, Japanese Admiral Heihachiro Togo engaged a Russian squadron outside Port Arthur (modern Lüshun) badly damaging three capital ships. In the "First Pearl Harbour," he then heavily shelled the city and harbour. A simultaneous attack was made on Chemulpo and Japan declared war the following day (8–9 February 1904).

Port Arthur ❙ 1904–1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Following victory at Nanshan (May 1904), Japanese General Maresuke Nogi advanced down the Liaodong Peninsula to besiege Port Arthur (modern Lüshun). Months of suicidal assaults on outlying positions cost about 60,000 Japanese casualties before Russian General Anatole Stoessel finally surrendered, yielding 30,000 prisoners and massive supplies (June 1904–2 January 1905).

Port-au-Prince ❙ 1803 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Santo Domingo Rising)

With French forces in Santo Domingo suffering a British naval blockade and terrible losses to fever, rebel leaders Jean Jacques Dessalines and Alexander Pétion launched an offensive on the western plain and besieged Port-au-Prince. The capital fell after three weeks of heavy fighting. Remaining French forces withdrew on Cap Francais and tried to defend nearby Vertieres (17 October 1803).

Portela ❙ 982 ❙ War of Leonese Succession

When King Ramiro III of Leon lost Zamora and was routed by Muslims at Rueda (981), a group of rebellious nobles supported his cousin Bermudo as pretender and the rivals met at Portela de Arenas, near Monterroso southwest of Lugo. Although the battle produced no decisive outcome, the unpopular Ramiro died soon afterwards and his cousin succeeded as Bermudo II (15 May 982).

Porte St Antoine ❙ 1652 ❙ War of the 2nd Fronde

See St Antoine

Port Gibson ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

General John S. Bowen defended the southern approaches to Confederate Vicksburg on the Mississippi, repulsing a naval assault at Grand Gulf. Days later he marched to meet General Ulysses S. Grant who had crossed further south. Bowen was defeated in heavy fighting at Port Gibson, near Pierre Bayou, Mississippi. He abandoned Grand Gulf, opening the route to Vicksburg (1 May 1863).

Port Harcourt ❙ 1968 ❙ Biafran War

After the fall of Onitsha, Federal Colonel Benjamin Adekunle advanced west from Calabar against the Nigerian city of Port Harcourt with its airport, oil refineries and the last sea access for rebel Biafra. Attacking behind a decisive artillery bombardment, Adekunle overwhelmed Colonel Joe "Hannibal" Achuzie in two days, then moved north towards Aba and Owerri (16–18 May 1968).

Port Hudson ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Union General Nathaniel P. Banks followed victory at Plains Store by besieging the nearby Confederate stronghold at Port Hudson, Louisiana, on the Mississippi north of Baton Rouge, held by General Franklin Gardner. The garrison surrendered after six weeks' siege and the fall of Vicksburg. Union forces soon attacked again further south at Cox's Plantation (21 May–9 July 1863).

Portland, Dorset ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

Admiral Robert Blake built up the English fleet after defeat at Dungeness (December 1652) and attacked Dutch Admiral Maarten Tromp escorting a large merchant convoy off Portland, Dorset. In running action as far as Beachy Head Tromp lost nine warships and 24 merchantmen. While Blake also lost several ships, the Channel was effectively closed to Dutch trade (28 February–2 March 1653).

Portland, Maine ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

In a morale-boosting American victory, the sloop Enterprise (Captain William Burrows) attacked the British brig Boxer (Captain Samuel Blyth) off Portland, Maine. Both captains were killed in an hourlong exchange of broadsides, though the mortally wounded Burrows lived long enough to accept the British surrender. He and Blyth were later buried side by side (5 September 1813).

Port Mahon ❙ 1756 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Without a declaration of war, France sent Admiral Marquis Augustine de la Galissonière and Louis Duke de Richelieu against the English-held Mediterranean island of Minorca, where they captured Ciudadela then besieged the capital, Port Mahon. General William Blakeney surrendered the port after 70 days and the repulse of a British fleet off Minorca (18 April–28 June 1756).

Porto Bello ❙ 1668 ❙ Morgan's Raids on Panama

With England at war against Spain, Welsh-born buccaneer Henry Morgan attacked Porto Principe in Cuba, then took 12 ships and about 500 men against well-fortified Porto Bello on the Panama Isthmus. The city fell after heavy fighting and was then looted and burned. Morgan later attacked Spanish possessions in Venezuela and in 1671 destroyed the city of Panama (28 August 1668).

Porto Bello ❙ 1739 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

A preliminary campaign known as the War of Jenkin's Ear saw English Admiral Edward Vernon attack Porto Bello, in Spanish Panama, and capture the key fortress of San Felipe after heavy gunfire. The city surrendered next day, then Vernon seized all the ships in the harbour and destroyed the fortifications. In 1741 he was heavily repulsed at Cartagena in Colombia (20–21 November 1739).

Porto Calvo ❙ 1635 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

While campaigning against Portuguese Brazil, Dutch under the mulatto Domingo Fernandez Calabar captured Porto Calvo (March 1635), where they were besieged by a Portuguese force from the fall of Fort Nazaré. Calabar capitulated and was executed as a traitor, but the Portuguese soon withdrew. The town was regained in 1636 from Dutch commander Sigismund von Schoppe (July 1635).

Porto Calvo ❙ 1637 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

Dutch Governor John Maurice of Nassau had scarcely arrived in Brazil when he sailed south from Recife to recapture Portuguese Porto Calvo. With a reported 3,000 soldiers, 1,000 sailors and 1,000 Indian allies he took the town after two weeks' siege from the Italian adventurer Joao Vicente Sao Felix Conde de Bagnuoli. A year later Maurice was heavily repulsed at Salvador (18 February 1637).

Porto Conte ❙ 1353–1354 ❙ Aragon's Conquest of Sardinia

See Alghero

Porto Farina ❙ 1665 ❙ Corsair Wars

With the end of the First Dutch War, English Admiral Robert Blake was sent to the Mediterranean against Barbary pirates. Leading a large squadron, he attacked the corsair fleet at Porto Farina, near Bizerta in the Gulf of Tunis. Shielded by the smoke of their own cannonade the English set fire to all nine pirate ships and withdrew, losing just 25 killed and 40 wounded (4 April 1665).

Portolongo ❙ 1354 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

See Sapienza

Porto Longone ❙ 1646 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

When Allied forces were driven back at Orbetello in June, a fresh advance into Italy was led by French Marshals Charles de la Porte Duke de la Meilleraie and Cesar de Choiseul du Plessis-Praslin who seized Piombino, opposite Elbe. They then besieged and captured Porto Longone (modern Porto Azzurro) on Elbe itself and Pope Innocent X soon agreed to a treaty with France (September 1646).

Porto Novo ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

General Sir Eyre Coote resolved to lure Haidar Ali of Mysore into open battle in southeast India and led 8,000 men against a massively superior Mysorean army at Porto Novo, just north of the British base at Cuddalore. With his cavalry commander Mir Sahib killed amid very heavy casualties, the Maharaja was forced to retreat. He lost again two months later at Pollilore (1 July 1781).

Porto Praya ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As British and French fleets sailed to secure the Dutch Cape of Good Hope, French Admiral Pierre André Suffren surprised Commodore George Johnstone at anchor in Porto Praya in the Cape Verde Islands. Ignoring Portuguese neutrality, Suffren attacked and badly damaged the British ships. He sailed on to reinforce the Cape Colony then to India and battle at Sadras in 1782 (16 April 1781).

Port Republic ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Manoeuvering in the Shenandoah Valley against Union Commander John C. Frémont, Confederate forces won at Cross Keys then next day General Thomas "Stonewall' Jackson attacked and heavily defeated the isolated brigades of Union Generals Erastus Tyler and Samuel S. Carroll across the river at Port Republic. Frémont had to retreat and was relieved of command (9 June 1862).

Port Royal, Nova Scotia ❙ 1614 ❙ Anglo-French Wars in North America

British colonists in Virginia were reluctant to accept French presence in Acadia (modern Nova Scotia) and sent Sir Samuel Argall against Port Royal (later Annapolis Royal), held by Charles de Biencourt Baron de Saint-Just. Argall (famous for abducting Pocahontas) captured and burned the port then took his prisoners to England, eventually returning as Deputy Governor of Virginia.

Port Royal, Nova Scotia ❙ 1690 ❙ King William's War

In the largest action during King William's War—the American phase of the War of the Grand Alliance—colonial militia under Sir William Phips surprised the French at Port Royal in Acadia (modern Nova Scotia). The port fell after a short siege though Phips failed against Quebec. Port Royal was retaken the following year and was retained by France at the war's end (11 May 1690).

Port Royal, Nova Scotia ❙ 1704 ❙ Queen Anne's War

Early in Queen Anne's War—the American phase of the War of the Spanish Succession—militia Colonel Benjamin Church of Massachusetts led an expedition against the French base at Port Royal in Acadia (modern Nova Scotia). However, the French avoided decisive action and he eventually withdrew. Another attempt was repulsed in 1707, though the port later fell to a larger force (July 1704).

Port Royal, Nova Scotia ❙ 1710 ❙ Queen Anne's War

Colonel Francis Nicholson attacked France in North America, taking 1,500 colonial militia against Port Royal in Acadia (modern Nova Scotia) held by Daniel de Subercase. Supported by ships under Captain George Martin, the expedition captured the fortress after a short siege. Acadia became British and the port was renamed Annapolis Royal for Queen Anne (24 September–5 October 1710).

Port Royal, South Carolina ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Beaufort

Port Said ❙ 1956 ❙ Suez Crisis

When Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal, Anglo-French forces under General Sir Charles Keightley and Admiral Pierre Barjot landed at Port Said and nearby Port Fuad against General Salah ed-Din Moguy. Sharp fighting cost about 30 allies and up to 1,000 Egyptians killed before American pressure forced a ceasefire and the invasion ended in disastrous failure (5–6 November 1956).

Port Say ❙ 1907 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

See Wadi Kiss

Port Stanley ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

See Stanley

Portugalete ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

British Admiral Sir Home Popham led an offensive on the northern coast of Spain to relieve pressure on the Allied campaign around Salamanca, attacking Lequeitio, Guetaria and Castro Urdiales, before he and Spanish Colonel Francsico Longa bombarded Portugalete in Bilbao Bay. However, they were driven off and Popham returned to attack Guetaria (11 July 1812).

Port Walthall Junction ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Supporting the Union offensive in the Wilderness, General Benjamin F. Butler advanced against railways northeast of Petersburg, Virginia, where General William T. H. Brookes attacked Port Walthall Junction, defended by Confederate General Johnson Hagood. After heavy fighting and some track destroyed, the superior Union force withdrew with almost 300 men lost (6–7 May 1864).

Porvoo ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

Red commander Ali Aaltonen seized Helsinki, then despatched a force east against White troops near Porvoo. After costly fighting, the Whites fell back to the nearby island of Pellinge. Attacking across the ice, the Reds were driven off, but the Whites were out of ammunition and withdrew, eventually to Estonia. Red forces soon attacked west of Helsinki at Sigurds (6–12 February 1918).

Posadas ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

General Antonio de Santa Anna led the rebellion against President Anastasio Bustamente and captured Puebla, then held it against an advancing government force under Bustamente himself. Following heavy fighting in the northwestern suburb of Posadas, Bustamente was decisively defeated. He soon resigned and Santa Anna became President in early 1833 (5 December 1832).

Poserna ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

See Rippach

Poson ❙ 863 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

At the start of a counter-offensive against Islam in Asia Minor, Byzantine Emperor Michael III sent his uncle Petronas (brother of the former Regent Theodora) and a large force against Omar of Melitene (modern Malatya), who had sacked Amisus (Samsun). Omar was driven back then defeated and killed in battle at Poson, stalling Muslim expansion. Petronas returned to Constantinople in triumph.

Potidaea ❙ 432–429 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

When the former Corinthian colony of Potidaea, on the Pallene Isthmus, revolted against Athens, it was quickly supported by the Corinthian Aristeus and 2,000 Peloponnesian volunteers. An Athenian expedition initially under Archestratus won a battle outside the city, then settled into a long siege, precipitating renewed war. When the garrison finally surrendered they were allowed to go free.

Potidaea ❙ 356 BC ❙ 1st Greek Social War

While Athens was enmeshed in the Social War, Philip II of Macedon seized Amphipolis and Pydna, then besieged Athenian-controlled

Potidaea, on the Pallene Isthmus. Supported by Olynthian troops, Philip forced the town to capitulate and sold the citizens into slavery. He gave Potidaea to his allies to keep them detached from Athens, but in 348 BC he turned on them and attacked Olynthus.

Potrerillos ❙ 1817 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

As Patriots led by Juan Gregorio Las Heras marched on Uspallata, northwest of Mendoza, an advance column under Colonel Enrique Martínez was surprised by the government forces of Miguel Marqueli to the south at Potrerillos, near Cacheuta. The Royalists were defeated and withdrew to the west, while Las Heras crossed the Andes into Chile in May and captured Gavilán (25 January 1817).

Potrero de Chacón ❙ 1831 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

See Rodeo de Chacón

Potrero del Sauce ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Boquerón, Nhembucu

Potrero Obella ❙ 1867 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Brazilian Marshal Luíz Aldes, Marquis of Caxias, was determined to isolate besieged Humaitá in southwest Paraguay. He won at Tatayiba then sent General Joao Manoel Mena Barreta and 4,000 men against nearby Potrero Obella. A three-hour action saw Paraguayan Captain Gonsalez forced to withdraw with 136 casualties. The Allies won again five days later at Tuyutí (29 October 1867).

Potsdam ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

The Prussian army was retreating north past Berlin after the twin defeats at Jena and Auerstadt when Napoleon Bonaparte's pursuing forces crashed into their rear west of the city at Potsdam. Marshals Joachim Murat and Jean Lannes heavily repulsed Prussian units under Prince Friedrich-Ludwig of Hohenloe, who soon lost again at Zehdenick and Prenzlau (24 October 1806).

Poupry ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Loigny

Poutoko ❙ 1863 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Maoris in southern Taranaki recovered from defeat on the Katikara in June and threatened the redoubt at Poutoko, five miles south of New Plymouth, held by British Regulars under Major Henry Butler. A relief force under Colonel Henry J. Warre was heavily outnumbered by hostile Maoris. After heavy fighting (with two Victoria Crosses won) the redoubt was saved (2 October 1863).

Po Valley ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Stalled in northern Italy around Bologna, new Allied commanders Sir Richard McCreery and the American General Lucian Truscott launched a spring offensive against the Gothic Line, now commanded by General Heinrich von Vietinghoff. The Allies drove into the Po Valley, taking Ferrara Mantua and Venice, and German forces in Italy soon formally surrendered (5 April–2 May 1945).

Powder ❙ 1865 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

On campaign north of the Black Hills, 2,000 men led by the inexperienced Colonels Nelson Cole and Samuel Walker became disoriented in extremely hot conditions, losing hundreds of horses to thirst. Attacked on the Powder River in Montana by Cheyenne under Roman Nose, they held off the Indians and were eventually rescued by Major Frank North's Pawnee scouts (September 1865).

Powder ❙ 1876 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

General George Crook marching through the Big Horn Mountains against the Sioux, sent Colonel Joseph Reynolds against Old Bear's Northern Cheyenne and Ogala Sioux under He Dog in camp near the junction of the Powder and Little Powder in southeast Montana. Most of the Indians escaped the dawn attack and a few months later joined Crazy Horse at Little Big Horn (17 March 1876).

Powick Bridge ❙ 1642 ❙ British Civil Wars

Marching south towards London, King Charles I met units of the Parliamentary army of Robert Devereux Earl of Essex south of Worcester at Powick Bridge. One of the first actions of the war saw Colonel Nathaniel Fiennes' Ironsides cavalry ambushed and dispersed by Prince Rupert's dragoons. Essex withdrew and met the King again a month later at Edgehill (23 September 1642).

Poyang Lake ❙ 1363 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

Han leader Chen Yuliang took a large armada down the Yangzi to besiege Nanchang then turned to meet Zhu Yuanzhang's Ming fleet on Poyang Lake. A four-day battle cost the Han terrible losses before the Ming withdrew. A month later, Chen tried to break out to the Yangzi, but was defeated and killed. In 1364 his capital Wuchang fell to the Ming (30 August–2 September & 3 October 1363).

Poza ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When French forces under General Giuseppe Palombini made an aggressive sweep south of the Ebro, Spanish General Francisco Longa attempted to cut them off and sent forces to attack the invaders at Poza de le Sal, northeast of Burgos. A poorly managed action allowed Palombini to drive off the Spanish assault and return across the Ebro to Vitoria (10–11 February 1813).

Poza de las Carmelos ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

General Esteban Moctezuma supported a rising against President Anastasio Bustamente by attacking a government force under General Pedro Luciano Otero at Poza de las Carmelos, near San Luis Potosi. Otero was defeated and killed and Moctezuma seized San Luis Potosi. However, he was subsequently defeated by Bustamente in September at Gallinero (3 June 1832).

Pozières ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

During the Battle of the Somme, newly arrived Australian Divisions under Sir William Birdwood attacked towards Pozières Ridge on the Albert-Bapaume Road. Supported by English units, the Australians eventually took the Ridge and Pozières Village after very heavy fighting. However, they lost about 6,000 men, 4,000 of them killed and 400 taken prisoner (23 July–3 September 1916).

Poznan ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As Soviet Marshal Georgi Zhukov swept across Poland in the massive Vistula-Oder offensive, he bypassed a large German force in the fortress city of Poznan, which was then surrounded by part of his army under General Vasilii Chuikov. Intense street fighting saw costly losses in a long siege before Poznan finally fell with perhaps 25,000 prisoners (26 January–23 February 1945).

Pozo Almonte ❙ 1891 ❙ Chilean Civil War

In civil war between Chile's Congress and President José Manuel Balmaceda, Congressist Colonel Estanislao del Canto Arteaga seized Iquique after victory at San Francisco. After a check at Huara he defeated and killed Loyalist Colonel Eulogio Robles Pinochet to the east at Pozo Almonte, securing northern Chile for the rebels, who then sailed south against Concón (7 March 1891).

Pozo Favorito ❙ 1933 ❙ Chaco War

See Pampa Grande

Pozzolo ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Mincio

Praga ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

Russian Field Marshal Alexander Suvorov secured victory at Maciejowice (10 October)

then attacked Generals Tomasz Wawrzecki and Jakob Jasinski at Warsaw. The suburb of Praga was stormed, with up to 30,000 Poles butchered, including Jasinski. After Wawrzecki was surrounded and captured, the rest of Warsaw fell and a new Great Power treaty wiped Poland off the map (4–8 November 1794).

Praga ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

When Poland deposed Duke Constantine, brother of Tsar Nicholas I, a massive Russian retaliatory invasion was halted just east of Warsaw at Grochow. A few days later, in the northeastern Warsaw suburb of Praga, Poles under General Jan Skrznyecki dealt another bloody check to Field Marshal Hans von Diebitsch and the invaders were forced to withdraw (25 February 1831).

Prague ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Vitkov Hill

Prague ❙ 1620 ❙ Thirty Years War (Bohemian War)

See White Mountain

Prague ❙ 1648 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Count Hans Christoph Königsmarck led a fresh Swedish invasion of Bohemia, advancing to besiege Prague, which was stubbornly defended by a largely citizen militia. A relief attempt by Imperial General Ottavio Piccomolini was driven off and Königsmarck was preparing to take the city by assault when the Treaty of Westphalia ended the war (June–24 October 1648).

Prague ❙ 1744 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Re-entering the war, Frederick II of Prussia launched a large-scale invasion of Bohemia and besieged Prague, held for Prince Charles of Lorraine. Despite suffering heavier casualties, Frederick seized the city, along with a large number of prisoners, then advanced to threaten Vienna. However, he was denied aid by his French and Bavarian allies and had to withdraw (2–16 September 1744).

Prague ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia advanced into Bohemia and met Prince Charles of Lorraine at the Moldau outside Prague. Bloody action caused heavy losses on both sides (including the deaths of Prussian Marshal Kurt von Schwerin and Austrian Marshal Maximilian von Browne) before the Austrians were finally driven off. Frederick besieged Prague but withdrew after defeat in June at Kolin (6 May 1757).

Prague ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With Vienna secured, Marshal Rodion Malinovsky drove deep into Czechoslovakia, while Marshal Ivan Konev advanced from the north towards Prague. The people rose in revolt and the city fell after a four-day Soviet attack. However, Marshal Ferdinand Schörner's Army Group Centre held out nearby and did not surrender until 11 May, said to be the last act of the war in Europe (6–9 May 1945).

Praia Bay ❙ 1828 ❙ Miguelite Wars

After Don Miguel de Braganza usurped the throne of Portugal as Miguel I, supporters of his niece, the legitimate Queen Maria da Gloria, established a constitutional government on Terceira in the Azores. An attempt by Miguel to seize the island was defeated at sea off Praia Bay and the Azores became the base for eventual restoration of lawful government (12 August 1828).

Prairie d'Ane ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union General Frederick Steele led an expedition southwest from Little Rock, Arkansas, and fought across the Little Missouri at Elkin's Ferry before facing a Confederate blocking force under General Sterling Price further south at Prairie d'Ane. Despite an initial repulse, Steele and General John M. Thayer drove off the Confederates and marched east to capture Camden (9–13 April 1864).

Prairie Dog Creek ❙ 1860 ❙ Comanche Indian Wars

When Colonel John Sedgewick led an expedition to punish Comanche and Kiowa attacks on the Santa Fé trail, one of his columns under Captain Samuel Sturgis from Fort Cobb met the Indians near Prairie Dog Creek in northern Kansas. With Cheyenne and Arapaho aid, Sturgis inflicted a decisive defeat after an eight-day chase before the expedition returned to camp (9 August 1860).

Prairie du Chien ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

Governor William Clark of Missouri seized the British outpost at Prairie du Chien—on the Wisconsin and Missisippi Rivers—and built Fort Shelby, which was later attacked by Michigan militia and Indians under Major William McKay. The small American garrison surrendered after two days and the gunboat Governor Clark escaped downstream towards Rock Island Rapids (18–19 July 1814).

Prairie Grove ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Campaigning in northwest Arkansas, Confederate commander Thomas C. Hindman found himself southwest of Fayetteville between General James G. Blunt advancing from Arkansas through Cane Hill and General Francis J. Herron marching south from Missouri. Both sides lost about 1,200 men in bloody action at Prairie Grove and Hindman retreated south to Van Buren (7 December 1862).

Pratabgarh ❙ 1659 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

With the Muslim state of Bijapur determined to deal finally with the growing power of Maratha commander Shivaji, General Afzal Khan led the army of Bijapur west from Wai towards well-prepared Maratha positions near Pratabgarh, northwest of Satara. Shivaji lured Afzal Khan to his death, then ambushed and utterly destroyed the leaderless Bijapuri army (10 November 1659).

Prenzlau ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

As the Prussian army retreated north across Germany after the twin defeats at Jena and Auerstadt, Prince Friedrich-Ludwig of Hohenloe's retreating force lost at Potsdam and Zehdenick. Two days later French Marshal Joachim Murat caught up with Hohenloe at Prenzlau. The exhausted Prussians were routed and the Prince surrendered with over 10,000 men (28 October 1806).

President* vs Endymion ❙ 1815 ❙ War of 1812

See Connecticut

Pressburg ❙ 907 ❙ Magyar Invasion of Germany

On a renewed invasion of Bavaria, Magyar horsemen from Hungary were challenged near Pressburg (modern Bratislava) by a force under the Margave Luitpold, who was defeated and killed and the raids continued. Fourteen-year-old Ludwig III, the nominal King of Germany, was ill-advisedly present on the battlefield and only just escaped being taken prisoner (4 July 907).

Pressburg ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

See Blumenau

Preston ❙ 1648 ❙ British Civil Wars

Scottish Royalist James Duke of Hamilton, aided by English under Sir Marmaduke Langdale, invaded England in support of Charles I and was massively defeated in a two-day action at Preston, Lancashire, by the Parliamentary army of Sir Thomas Fairfax. Hamilton was captured and executed and the fall of Colchester at the end of August virtually ended the King's second war (17–18 August 1648).

Preston ❙ 1715 ❙ Jacobite Rebellion (The Fifteen)

In support of James Stuart—the Old Pretender—English forces under James Radcliffe of Derwentwater and Thomas Forster captured Preston, Lancashire, supported by Scots under William Mackintosh of Borlum. After repulsing

Hanoverian General Sir Charles Wills, the rebels were forced to surrender and Derwentwater and Lord Kenmure were executed (12–14 November 1715).

Prestonpans ❙ 1745 ❙ Jacobite Rebellion (The Forty-Five)

Leading renewed rebellion in the Highlands Charles Stuart—Bonnie Prince Charlie—raised an army and found his way south blocked at Prestonpans east of Edinburgh by General Sir John Cope. A decisive ten-minute action was sufficient for the Prince and Lord George Murray to rout the hastily raised militia, who fled with heavy losses. The Highlanders then invaded England (21 September 1745).

Preussich-Eylau ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See Eylau

Preveza ❙ 1538 ❙ Later Venetian-Turkish War

A year after repulsing an Ottoman siege of Corfu, Venice sent Admiral Andrea Doria against the Turkish naval base on the Albanian mainland at Preveza. A mismanaged campaign against Admiral Khair-ed-Din Barbarossa saw Doria attempting to avoid a decisive battle. In action off Preveza the Venetian was driven off and in 1539 he turned his attention to Castelnuovo (26–28 September 1538).

Primolano ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte faced a renewed Austrian attempt to relieve the French siege of Mantua and, after defeating an Austrian force at Calliano, he turned against General Dagobert Wurmser in the Brenta Valley. At Primolano, northeast of Vicenza, General Pierre Augereau captured Wurmer's Croat rearguard, followed by the decisive battle next day at Bassano (7 September 1796).

Primosole Bridge ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Catania

Prince of Wales* and Repulse ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Belatedly trying to protect Malaya, the British battleship Prince of Wales and battle cruiser Repulse arrived in Singapore under Admiral Tom Phillips. Sent to meet a reported Japanese landing, but without air support, the ships were sunk by land-based aircraft off the east coast with 840 killed, including Phillips. They were the first capital ships sunk at sea by air attack alone (10 December 1941).

Princes ❙ 1856 ❙ Zulu Wars of Succession

See Ndondakusuka

Princeton ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Confronted by British General William Howe at Trenton, New Jersey, General George Washington slipped away at night and to the east met Colonel Charles Mawhood with reinforcements outside Princeton. American General Hugh Mercer was initially repulsed and killed, but Washington arrived to defeat the British, then withdrew to winter quarters in Morristown (3 January 1777).

Prinitza ❙ 1263 ❙ 3rd Latin-Byzantine Imperial War

After Byzantine restoration in Constantinople in 1261, Emperor Michael VIII sent a large army under his brother Constantine to invade Greece against William of Villehardouin, Prince of Achaea. In a semi-mythic action at Prinitza, near Olympia, a force claimed to be just 312 Frankish knights under Jean de Catavas scattered the Byzantine army. A year later Constantine was routed at Makry Plagi.

Proctor's Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Drewry's Bluff

Prokhorovka ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

The decisive action of the massive offensive towards Kursk saw Panzer General Herman Hoth attack east of Oboyan around Prokhorovka with 700 tanks (including 100 of the new Tigers) to outflank Kursk from the southeast. Facing 850 Russian tanks under General Pavel Rotmistrov, the Germans lost 350 tanks and 10,000 men and fell back onto the defensive (12–13 July 1943).

Prome ❙ 1552 ❙ Burmese Dynastic Wars

King Bayinnaung of Burma was determined to crush Mon opposition in the south and, with the aid of Portuguese mercenaries, seized the southern capital Pegu. The following year he marched north to attack Prome, where other Mon leaders had taken refuge. This key city on the Irriwaddy was eventually starved into surrender. Bayinnaung then crowned his success by turning against the Shan at Ava.

Prome ❙ 1825 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

While resuming his offensive on the Irriwaddy, British General Sir Archibald Campbell came under attack at Prome by a large Burmese army under the veteran Maha Nemyo. A very hard-fought battle saw Maha Nemyo defeated and killed and the Burmese General Kee Wyunji was repulsed at nearby Napadi, opening the way for the British advance through Melloone (1–5 December 1825).

Prome ❙ 1852 ❙ 2nd British-Burmese War

British General Henry Thomas Godwin returned to the offensive in Burma, advancing north along the Irriwaddy from Rangoon to the river city of Prome, supported by naval forces under Commodore George Robert Lambert. After a heavy bombardment of shell and cannister from the river, British forces landed and stormed the city, then continued on to Pegu (9 October 1852).

Prome ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

As the British retreated north from Rangoon, General David "Punch" Cowan was ordered to hold Prome, on the west bank of the Irriwaddy, while Chinese to the east tried to hold Toungoo. Severe fighting south and southeast of Prome at Schwedaung and Paungde saw heavy British losses in men and tanks and they were forced to withdraw upriver to Yenangyaung (20 March–1 April 1942).

Prosopitis ❙ 456–454 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

In support of revolt in Egypt by Inaros of Libya, Athens defeated Persia at Papremis (459 BC) then advanced up the Nile and besieged the Citadel at Memphis. Four years later the Persian Megabyzus relieved Memphis and surrounded the Athenians on Prosopitis, an island in the Nile. After 18 months they surrendered—at the cost of perhaps 200 ships and 50,000 men—and Inaros was put to death.

Provence ❙ 109 BC ❙ Rome's Gallic Wars

After defeating Rome in central Europe at Noreia, the Cimbri and Teutone tribes migrated west across the Rhine and eventually arrived in Roman-occupied Provence, where the Senate sent an army under Marcus Junius Silanus. In battle at an unidentified site on the lower Rhone, the Consul was badly beaten. Two years later another Consular army was defeated further west across Gaul at Aginnum.

Providien ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In the second of five indecisive naval actions off the east coast of India, British Admiral Edward Hughes was carrying reinforcements to Trincomalee in Ceylon and met French Admiral Pierre André Suffren in a violent rain squall off Providien. While Hughes suffered heavy damage, Suffren declined to resume battle next day. They met three months later off Negapatam (12 April 1782).

Pruth ❙ 1711 ❙ Russian Invasion of Moldavia

See Stanilesti

Pruth ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

Russian General Pyotr Rumyantsev defeated Turks and Tatars at Kagul, on the Pruth north of its junction with the Danube (21 July), then gathered further forces and attacked Grand Vizier

Khalil Pasha in powerful entrenchments along the east bank of the River. A series of attacks by Rumyantsev expelled the Turks with heavy losses and he advanced on Bucharest (September 1770).

Przasnysz ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Despite a check at the Masurian Lakes, Germans north of Warsaw seized the key fortress at Przasnysz, then faced counter-attack by Russian Northern commander Mikhail Alexeyev. His troops suffered terrible losses to enemy machine-gun fire before the Germans were driven out, losing over 5,000 prisoners. Przasnysz was retaken (14 July) in the advance on Warsaw (25–28 February 1915).

Przemysl (1st) ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Austria was driven from Poland at Rawa Russka and Gorodok, leaving only General Hermann Kusmanek at the fortress at Przemysl, west of Lemberg. Aided by a German advance on Warsaw, Austrian General Svetozar Boroevic counter-attacked against General Radko Dmitriev and relieved Przemysl. However, he was checked at the San and the siege resumed (24 September–9 October 1914).

Przemysl (2nd) ❙ 1914–1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

With Austria again driven out of Galicia, General Andrei Selivanov resumed the Russian siege of Przemysl, held by General Hermann Kusmanek. Following the failure of a winter relief offensive by Austrian General Eduard Böhm-Ermolli, Kusmanek destroyed his fortifications and ammunition and surrendered about 100,000 men and 1,000 guns (6 November 1914–22 March 1915).

Psara ❙ 1824 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Soon after Muslim forces desolated Kasos (19 June), Turkish Admiral Khosrew Pasha led a large fleet and 8,000 troops from the Dardanelles into the Aegean against Psara, just northwest of Chios. A brutal assault left Psara utterly ravaged. About 4,000 residents escaped by sea, though 8,000 others were killed or enslaved before Khosrew withdrew to Mytilene with 100 captured ships (3–4 July 1824).

Psie Pole ❙ 1109 ❙ Polish-German Wars

When Emperor Henry V invaded Poland in support of former King Zbiginiew and laid siege to Glogow, Boleslaw III returned south from defeating the Pomeranians at Naklo to drive off the siege. He then attacked and routed the Emperor at Psie Pole, just outside Wroclaw (Breslau). The Imperial army fled, abandoning their dead to the dogs, and the battleground was named Dog's Field.

Pskov ❙ 1502 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War

See Lake Smolino

Pskov ❙ 1581–1582 ❙ Livonian War

At war with Moscow over Livonia, Stephen Bathory of Poland captured Polotsk and Velikie Luki, then attacked the powerful fortress of Pskov, defended by Prince Ivan Shuiski. After repeated assaults, Bathory left the siege to Jan Zamoysky and the city held out until the fall of Narva made Tsar Ivan IV sue for peace. Russia kept Pskov but abandoned Livonia (26 August 1581–4 February 1582).

Pskov ❙ 1615 ❙ Russo-Swedish Wars

With Gdov retaken, Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden renewed his offensive in Russia and attacked Pskov, defended by Dimitri Trubetskoi and Vasili Buturlin. Despite massive assaults (with Swedish Marshal Evert Horn killed) the city held out. Threatened by Poland's alliance with Sweden, Russia sued for peace, gaining Novgorod but losing her Baltic access (June–October 1615).

Pteria ❙ 547 BC ❙ Persian-Lydian War

In order to support his allies in Babylon and forestall a Persian invasion of Asia Minor, King Croesus of Lydia crossed the Halys River and captured Pteria in Cappadocia (modern central Turkey). However, a huge Persian army under Cyrus II the Great routed the Lydians and drove them on a retreat westwards, falling back through further defeat at Thymbria on their capital at Sardis.

Ptolemais ❙ 150 BC ❙ Seleucid Dynastic War

Alexander Balas, pretended son of Antiochus IV, claimed the Seleucid throne and gained aid from Ptolemy VI of Egypt to enter Syria. He was initially repulsed by Demetrius I, who later advanced from Antioch and was defeated and killed near Ptolemais. Alexander took the throne, marrying Ptolemy's daughter Cleopatra Thea. After five years he was overthrown by Ptolemy at Oenoparas.

Pucará ❙ 1882 ❙ War of the Pacific

A year after defeat at Chorrillos and Miraflores, Peruvian General Andrés Avelino Cáceres regrouped in Huancayo, then advanced southeast on Pucara, where Colonel Francisco Seceda secured a strong position. A surprise attack by Chilean José Francisco Gana Castro was driven off after costly fighting and Cáceres secured the town. Chileans soon lost again at nearby Tongos (5 February 1882).

Puck ❙ 1462 ❙ Thirteen Years War

In a war to regain Baltic land lost to the Teutonic Knights, Casimir IV of Poland was initially defeated at Chojnice but gradually regained the initiative and took Marienburg (1457). The decisive action was near Puck, south of Tczew, where a largely mercenary Polish army secured bloody victory. The Order eventually yielded considerable territory yet retained East Prussia (17 September 1462).

Puebla ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

General Antonio de Santa Anna defended Veracruz then advanced on Puebla, held for President Anastasio Bustamente by Generals Antonio Azcárate and José Antonio Facio. Azcárate was defeated and killed when Facio withdrew precipitately and Santa Anna captured Puebla and a large number of prisoners and arms. In December Bustamente lost at nearby Posadas (29 September 1832).

Puebla ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

With Mexico City lost after Chapultepec (12 September), Mexican General Antonio de Santa Anna sent General Joaquin Rea to retake Puebla to the southeast, held by Colonel Thomas Childs. After a bloody siege, later reinforced by Santa Anna himself, Puebla was finally relieved by General Joseph Lane from Veracruz, ending the last major action of the war (14 September–12 October 1847).

Puebla ❙ 1862 ❙ Mexican-French War

French General Charles Latrille Comte de Lorencez advanced into central Mexico and days after driving General Ignacio Zaragoza out of Acultzingo, met him again near Fort Guadalupe outside Puebla. In a brilliant victory—still celebrated as Cinco de Mayo—Zaragoza heavily repulsed the French. However, Lorencez soon won again at Orizaba and France sent massive reinforcements (5 May 1862).

Puebla ❙ 1863 ❙ Mexican-French War

Arriving in Mexico with large-scale reinforcements, new French commander General Elie Fréderic Forey advanced through Orizaba against Puebla, held by General Jesus González Ortega. After the very costly loss of nearby San Xavier fortress (29 March) and the repulse of a relief army at San Lorenzo, Puebla surrendered and the French soon entered Mexico City (16 March–18 May 1863).

Puebla ❙ 1867 ❙ Mexican-French War

With the French puppet-Emperor Maximilian besieged at Querétaro, Liberal Mexican General Porfirio Diaz laid siege to Puebla, held by about 2,500 Conservatives under General Manuel Noriega. Following a bloody assault (2 April) Noriega surrendered. While his men were freed, Noriega and all 74 officers were executed. Diaz then advanced west on Mexico City (9 March–4 April 1867).

Pueblo de Taos ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

Colonel Sterling Price advanced up the Rio Grande against insurgents in New Mexico who had murdered Governor Charles Bent. He won at La Cañada and Embudo before cornering the rebels at Pueblo de Taos. The rising was crushed after two days of artillery bombardment with 150 Mexicans killed. Price was promoted to General and became Governor of Chihuahua (3–4 February 1847).

Puente de la Bateria ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Corrientes (2nd)

Puente de la Reina ❙ 1873 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

See Mañeru

Puente de Márquez ❙ 1829 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

When General Juan Galo Lavalle seized power in late 1828 with victory at Navarro, he faced Federalist forces under Estanislao López of Santa Fe and General Juan Manuel Rosas, losing part of his army at Vizcacheras. Outside Buenos Aires at Puente de Márquez, Lavalle was decisively beaten. Despite Unitarist victory at La Tablada in June, he made peace and went into exile (26 April 1829).

Puente Larga ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As he withdrew from the failed siege of Burgos, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington ordered evacuation of Madrid and General Sir Rowland Hill ordered Colonel John Skerrett east to delay French Marshals Nicolas Soult and Jean-Baptiste Jourdan. Skerrett checked the French at Puente Larga on the Jarama before being driven back and Madrid was abandoned next day (30 October 1812).

Puerto Cabello ❙ 1812 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

A year after Francisco Miranda declared Venezuelan independence, a disastrous earthquake created devastation and Spanish commander Juan Domingo Monteverde counter-attacked. When Miranda capitulated, Simón Bolívar was forced to surrender the powerful fortress at Puerto Cabello. Spanish authority was re-established until defeat a year later at Taguanes (6 July 1812).

Puerto Cabello ❙ 1962 ❙ Venezuelan Porteñazo Uprising

After a failed uprising at Carúpano (4 May) democratically elected President Rómulo Betancourt of Venezuela faced a larger scale revolt by leftist officers at the naval base of Puerto Cabello, led by Captain Pedro Medina Silva. Before the rising was crushed, severe fighting cost the rebels 300 killed and 700 wounded. Loyalist forces lost 136 killed and 300 wounded (2–5 June 1962).

Puerto del Gallinero ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

See Gallinero

Puerto Rico ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

See Guánica

Puesto del Márquez ❙ 1815 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Colonel Francisco Fernandéz de la Cruz and the Patriot Army of the North on a fresh offensive in northern Argentina, surprised and defeated Royalist troops under Joaquín de la Pezuela at Puesto del Márquez, east of Lago de Pozuelos in Jujuy. Victory opened the way for commander José Rondeau's advance north into modern Bolivia and his defeat in October at Venta y Media (17 April 1815).

Pukekohe East ❙ 1863 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

On campaign against settlements south of Auckland after action at Camerontown, about 200 Ngati Maniapoto attacked the church stockade at Pukekohe East, held by just 17 troops and nine volunteers. After a courageous daylong defence without loss, the Maoris were driven off by troops from Drury with about 60 killed. Another action followed in October at nearby Mauku (14 September 1863).

Pukenui ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War
See Te Ahuahu, Bay of Islands

Puketakauere ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Despite defeat at Waitara, north of New Plymouth (17 March) Ngatiawa Chief Wiremu Kingi built a powerful fortified pa at nearby Puketakauere, where he was rashly attacked by Major Thomas Nelson and Captain Frederick Seymour-Beauchamp of Pelorus. Slaughtered in ambush, the British retreated with 30 killed and 34 wounded. They were soon avenged at Mahoetai (27 June 1860).

Puketutu ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

Colonel William Hulme resolved to avenge the attack on Kororareka in New Zealand's far north, leading 400 troops to Hone Heke's pa (fortified village) at Puketutu, near Lake Omapere. While the Maoris lost about 50 men in a fierce attack, mainly in an unwise sortie led by Kawiti, the Europeans suffered 52 casualties and withdrew to Kerikeri. They soon counter-attacked at Ohaewai (8 May 1845).

Pula ❙ 1379 ❙ War of Chioggia

In the resumed war between Genoa and Venice, Genoese Admiral Luciano Doria approached the city of Chioggia, near Venice, and Venetian Admiral Vittore Pisani reluctantly led his outnumbered fleet from Pula, across the Adriatic. Doria was killed before victory near Pula was complete, though Pisani was routed with heavy losses and Venice was ousted from Pula (7 May 1379).

Pulau Aur ❙ 1804 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

French Admiral Charles Durand de Linois took his squadron to Malacca to attack British merchantmen and intercepted a 30-strong unescorted China convoy off Pulau Aur. But Commodore Nathaniel Dance had three vessels disguised as warships and opened fire. After a half-hearted attack, Linois withdrew with Dance in pursuit. Dance received a knighthood and a fortune (14 February 1804).

Pul-i-Sanghin ❙ 1511 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

Following Persian defeat of the Uzbeks at Merv, the Mughal Babur of Kabul crossed from India and, joined by Persians, marched on Gissar in Uzbekistan. After a fierce yet indecisive battle at Pul-i-Sanghin, Timur Sultan, son of Shaybani, withdrew and Babur went on to capture Bokhara and Samarkand itself. Within a year, he was beaten by the Uzbeks at Kul-i-Malik and Ghujduwan.

Pulkkila ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

After halting the Russian invasion of Finland in the west at the Siikajoki (18 April) some Swedish forces pursued the invaders down the coast towards Revolax while Swedish General Johan August Sandels marched southeast towards Kuopio. South of Oulu at Pulkkila he surrounded and defeated Russian General Sergei Timofevich Obuhoff, who was forced to surrender (2 May 1808).

Pullalur ❙ 610 ❙ Indian Dynastic Wars

Pulakesin II of Chalukya secured his northern border, then moved south against his great rival Mahendravarman of Pallava. In battle at Pullalur, just southwest of his capital Kanchi, Mahendra and General Paranjothi were decisively defeated and Pulakesin besieged Kanchi itself. Mahendra's son Narashimavarman was avenged in 642, when he killed Pulakesin at Vatapi (disputed date c 610).

Pultawa ❙ 1658 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars
See Poltava

Pultawa ❙ 1709 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War
See Poltava

Pultusk ❙ 1703 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Charles XII of Sweden defeated a Saxon-Polish army in southern Poland at Kliszow (19 July 1702), then wintered over before marching north to seek out Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. At Pultusk, north of Warsaw, a large Saxon army under Field Marshal Adam von Steinau fled, suffering about 600 casualties and 1,000 prisoners. Charles then besieged Thorn (21 April 1703).

Pultusk ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

Having destroyed the Prussians at Jena and Auerstadt in October, Napoleon Bonaparte invaded Poland and captured Warsaw. Marching north to Pultusk Marshal Jean Lannes attacked a Russian Corps under General Levin Bennigsen, who drove off the outnumbered French in a desperate, indecisive action. He withdrew during the night to avoid a battle of attrition (26 December 1806).

Pungu-a-Ndongo ❙ 1671 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in West Africa

Six years after crushing the Kingdom of Kongo at Ambuila, Portuguese forces attacked the rebellious Kingdom of Ndongo along the River Kwanza. Marching inland southeast from Luanda, the Portuguese attacked the fortified capital at Pungu-a-Ndongo (modern Pungo Andongo), where Ngola Ari II of Ndongo was defeated and killed. The once-powerful Kingdom was annexed to Portuguese Angola.

Punitz ❙ 1704 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

While Charles XII of Sweden was occupied in southern Poland, the deposed king—Augustus II—gathered a Russian-Saxon-Polish force and recaptured Warsaw. Two months later he faced Charles at Punitz (modern Poniec), southeast of Leszno. Augustus was forced to retreat and Charles restored his candidate—Stanislaus Leszczynski—to the Polish throne (October 1704).

Punniar ❙ 1843 ❙ British-Gwalior War

See Panniar

Punta Brava ❙ 1896 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

Boldly advancing towards Havana, the insurgent leader Antonio Maceo was met to the southwest by a Spanish column under Major Francisco Cirujeda marching out of Punta Brava. In a terrible blow for the cause, Maceo was defeated and killed, along with Francisco Gómez, son of rebel commander Máximo Gómez, who continued the war until American intervention (7 December 1896).

Punta Stilo ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

See Calabria

Purandar ❙ 1665 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Emperor Aurangzeb responded to a Maratha raid on Surat in early 1664, sending Jai Singh and Dilir Khan, who besieged the rebel Shivaji in the hill fortress of Purandar, south of Poona. After General Murar Baji Prabhu was killed in a brave but costly sortie (2 June), Shivaji surrendered and signed a treaty yielding up 23 fortresses. Most of them were later recaptured (31 March–12 June 1665).

Puray ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

After defeat south of Manila at Naic, Revolutionary leaders Emilio Aguinaldo and Licerio Geronimo fled northeast to Puray, in the mountains near Montalban, where they brilliantly defeated a Spanish attack under Colonel Dujiols. Governor Fernando Primo de Rivera negotiated a peace and Aguinaldo went into exile in Hong Kong until America won in May 1898 at Manila Bay (14 June 1897).

Puruarán ❙ 1814 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Soon after the terrible insurgent loss at Valladolid, rebel leader Mariano Matamaros, who won so decisively at Palmar (October 1813) was besieged at Puruarán, south of Tacambaro, Michoacán, by a large Royalist force led by Brigadier Ciriaco de Llano and Agustin de Iturbide. Matamaros was defeated and captured, and his execution a month later effectively ended the rising (5 January 1814).

Pusan (1st) ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

At the start of Toyotomi Hideyoshi's invasion of Korea, an advance Japanese force landed at Pusan, where Konishi Yukinaga attacked the naval fortress in the harbour, while So Yoshitomo attacked the town garrison, led by Chong Bal. Pusan was taken by storm with terrible Korean losses, including Chong Bal killed, and the Japanese advanced inland against Tongnae (23 May 1592).

Pusan (2nd) ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Korean naval hero Yi Sun-shin won at Hansan and Angolpo, then boldly determined to attack more than 500 Japanese ships at Pusan Harbour under Wakizaka Yasuharu, Kuki Yoshitaka, Kato Yoshiaki and Todo Takatora. With support from Yi Ok-ki and Won Kyun, Yi's massively outnumbered force sank about 100 Japanese ships before withdrawing, reportedly without loss (6 October 1592).

Pusan Perimeter (1st) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

As North Korean forces invaded, Americans and South Koreans withdrew southeast to the Pusan Perimeter, where General Walton Walker's "stand or die" order saw the heaviest American losses of the war. After desperate defensive actions—including Taejon, Yongchon and the Naktong Bulge—the Allies held the line, then regrouped to break out for Seoul (5 August–16 September 1950).

Pusan Perimeter (2nd) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

Despite heavy casualties defending the Pusan Perimeter in southeast Korea, Americans and South Koreans under General Walton Walker launched a large counter-offensive to coincide with the landing in the north at Inchon. Very heavy fighting saw the North Koreans driven back, with massive losses in killed and captured, and the Allies broke out north towards Seoul (16–22 September 1950).

Putaendo ❙ 1817 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

As General José de San Martin crossed the Andes into Chile, his vanguard under Major Mariano Pascual Necochea met a strong Spanish force led by Colonel Miguel Atero on the Rio Aconcagua near Putaendo, northeast of Valparaiso. A bold action saw Necochea rout the Royalists, securing nearby San Felipe and helping ensure victory further south at Chacabuco (7 February 1817).

Put-in Bay ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

See Lake Erie

Pydna ❙ 168 BC ❙ 3rd Macedonian War

Determined to avenge defeat at Callicinus (171 BC), Roman General Lucius Aemilius Paullus led a fresh invasion of Greece, where he was attacked on the Gulf of Salonika at Pydna by ambitious young King Perseus of Macedon. The Macedonian army was utterly destroyed, reputedly losing 20,000 killed and 8,000 captured. Perseus was dethroned, ending the Macedonian Empire (23 June 168 BC).

Pydna ❙ 149 BC ❙ 4th Macedonian War

Attempting to revive the throne of Macedon, Andriscus, claiming to be Philip son of Perseus, defeated and killed the Roman Praetor Juventius Thalna. The pretender then faced a large force under Quintus Caecilus Metellus and was crushed near Pydna, on the Gulf of Salonika. Andriscus was later executed, while Metellus was styled Macedonicus and Macedonia became a Roman Province.

Pyle's Defeat ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Haw River

Pyliavsti ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars
See Pilawce

Pylos-Sphacteria ❙ 425 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

A year after victory at Olpae, the Athenian Demosthenes was sent to fortify the headland of Pylos, in Navarino Bay, as a base to raid Spartan territory. When Spartans occupied nearby Sphacteria, the Athenian Cleon arrived with reinforcements and a fierce action saw the island captured. Athens held this outpost until wider pressure in the Aegean led to its evacuation in 409 BC (May–August 425 BC).

Pyokjekwan ❙ 1593 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Ming Chinese General Li Rusong crossed the Yalu into Korea and drove the Japanese out of Pyongyang, then advanced towards Seoul, gathering heavy Korean reinforcements. In a massive action north of the city at Pyokjekwan, Kobayakawa Takakage and Kato Kiyomasa halted the Chinese-Korean army. However, a Japanese counter-offensive was soon defeated at Haengju (25 February 1593).

Pyokjeyek ❙ 1593 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea
See Pyokjekwan

Pyongyang ❙ 668 ❙ Sino-Korean Wars

The eastern Kingdom of Silla conquered Paekche in southwest Korea at Sabi (660), then sent General Kim Yinmun against the northern Kingdom of Koguryo, aided by a large Tang Chinese army under 74-year-old General Li Ji. The invaders stormed and captured Pyongyang, ending the 700-year-old Kingdom of Koguryo. It was placed under Tang Governors, causing hostility between China and Silla.

Pyongyang (1st) ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Japanese General Kato Kiyomasa marched north along the Korean Peninsula through Seoul after victory at Chongju (7 June) and fought his way across the Imjin to advance on Pyongyang, where he was halted outside the city at the Tadong. When a Korean assault across the river was repulsed by Kuroda Nagamasa, the Japanese counter-attacked and Pyongyang soon fell by storm (20 July 1592).

Pyongyang (2nd) ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

With the fall of Pyongyang (20 July), Korean King Songju appealed for help to Ming China, which sent just 5,000 men under General Zu Zhengxun. The inadequate Chinese force was ambushed and routed in a brutal night action by Japanese commander Konishi Yukinaga. Low supplies and naval defeat in the south at Hansan and Angolpo then forced Konishi to accept a truce (3 October 1592).

Pyongyang ❙ 1593 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Reinforced after a truce, Chinese General Li Rusong led 40,000 veteran Ming troops on a mid-winter offensive against the Japanese at Pyongyang. Facing a massive assault on the city, the courageous Japanese commander Konishi Yukinaga was forced to withdraw across the frozen Tadong. He then retreated towards Seoul, where the Chinese were finally halted at Pyokjekwan (10 February 1593).

Pyongyang ❙ 1627 ❙ Manchu Conquest of Korea

When the great Manchu leader Nurhachi died after his repulse in Ming China at Ningyuan (February 1626), his son and successor Abahai (Hong Taiji) sent his brother Amin east against Korea and a lightning invasion seized Pyongyang to secure northern Korea. A second Manchu invasion ten years later completed the conquest of Korea, which became a long-time vassal of Manchu China.

Pyongyang ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

With war declared against China after victory in Korea at Songhwan (29 July), Japanese commander Michitsura Nozu advanced north on Pyongyang (then Heijo), held by 12,000 Chinese under Generals Wei Rugui and Ma Yugun.

Heavy fighting across the Tadong cost 650 Japanese casualties before the Chinese fell back to the Yalu with about 2,000 killed and 600 captured (15 September 1894).

Pyongyang ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

With the fall of Seoul, Allied forces entered North Korea and, overcoming resistance at Kumchon and Sariwon, raced for Pyongyang. Americans entered the capital almost simultaneously with South Koreans, who took the city centre by storm next day. A Chinese offensive later saw Pyongyang evacuated (3 December) and much of it was destroyed by fire (19–20 October 1950).

Pyramids ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

Three weeks after invading Egypt and seizing Alexandria, Napoleon Bonaparte advanced to near the Pyramids, where he faced a massive Mamluk army under General Murad Bey. Using defensive squares against the swarming Mamluk cavalry, Bonaparte achieved a decisive victory and many fleeing Mamluk infantry drowned in the Nile. Nearby Cairo fell the next day (21 July 1798).

Pyrenees ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Roncesvalles

Q

Qadesh ❙ 1275 BC ❙ Egyptian-Hittite Wars
See Kadesh

Qadirganj ❙ 1751 ❙ Pathan War

Wazir Safdar Jang of Delhi lost to invading Pathans in northern India at Farrukhabad and Kasganj before Jayappa Sindhia and Mulhar Rao Holkar took 20,000 Maratha troops to his aid. At Qadirganj, south of Budaun, they routed the Bangash army of Shadil Khan. Ahmad Khan Bangesh then had to lift his siege of Allahabad and the Pathans soon lost again at Farrukhabad (20 March 1751).

Qadisiyya ❙ 636 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

With Syria conquered at Damascus, Caliph Omar renewed his invasion of the Sassanian Persian Empire, stalled after victory at Buwayb (April 635). On the Euphrates canal at Qadisiyya, near Hira, Sa'ad ibn Abi Waqqas decisively beat a large Persian force under Chancellor Rustam, who was killed. Madain quickly fell and the Persians tried to make a stand at Jalula (disputed date 636 or 637).

Qala-i-Jangi ❙ 2001 ❙ Afghanistan War

When mainly foreign Taliban prisoners from Kunduz were taken to Qala-i-Jangi fortress, near Mazar-i-Sharif, they overpowered their Northern Alliance guards and stormed the armoury. Tanks, air-strikes and Allied special forces were used to retake the prison, where perhaps 400 Taliban fought to the death. About 40 Northern Alliance troops and an American observer also died (24–27 November 2001).

Qara Chaman ❙ 1762 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

Determined to finally secure control in Azerbaijan, Persian Regent Karim Khan Zand marched towards Tabriz and was met to the southeast at Qara Chaman (modern Siah Chaman) by Fath Ali Afshar, whose cavalry initially repulsed the Zand army. Karim Khan's General Shayk Ali Khan then rallied for a great victory and the Regent moved to besiege Fath Ali at Urmiya (June 1762).

Qarah Bagh ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st British-Afghan War
See Ghoaine

Qarqar ❙ 854 BC ❙ Early Assyrian Wars

King Shalmaneser III of Assyria invaded southern Syria, where he faced his largest enemy army—an alliance under King Benhadad of Damascus, King Ahab of Israel and Irkhuleni, King of Hamath. At Qarqar, in the Orontes Valley, Shalmaneser defeated this confederacy, though was unable to extend his power. Twelve years later King Ahab's son Joram accepted Assyria as overlord.

Qarqar ❙ 720 BC ❙ Assyrian Wars

Shortly after the accession of King Sargon of Assyria, a coalition of vassal provinces in Palestine rose against him, led by Iaubi'di, King of Hamath. Marching south into the Orontes Valley, Sargon inflicted a massive defeat on the rebels at Qarqar, site of a similar battle 130 years earlier. As a result the vassal Princedom of Hamath became a fully dependent Assyrian province.

Qatia ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)
See Katia

Qianshuiyuan ❙ 618 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty

Soon after proclaiming the Tang Dynasty at Chang'an, Gaozu sent his son Li Shimin and General Liu Wenjing against the rival Xue family at Qianshuiyuan, where the Tang army was routed in a confused fiasco by Xue Jue. Li Shimin later advanced again and lured Xue Ren-'gao to a decisive defeat. Qianshuiyuan fell next day, securing Tang control of northwest China (6 August & 29 November 618).

Qingdao ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Far East)

Attacking Germany in China, Admiral Hikanojo Kamimura took about 23,000 men against Qingdao (Tsingtao) on the Shandong Peninsula. Aided by a small British force, the Japanese bombarded and besieged the port, held by about 4,500 Germans under Governor Alfred Meyer-Waldeck. The city fell after heavy fighting and Japanese forces held Qingdao until 1922 (27 August–7 November 1914).

Qingpu ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Campaigning west of Shanghai to block the Taiping army of Li Xiucheng, foreign troops under American Colonel Fredrick T. Ward captured Songjiang but were driven off further north at Qingpu (Tsingpu) by General Zhou Wenjia. In a second attack, supported by Imperial General Li Hengsong, Ward was defeated by Li Xiucheng himself and fell back on Shanghai (2 & 8 August 1860).

Qinis ❙ 1885 ❙ British-Sudan Wars
See Ginniss

Qiqihar ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

Russian General Deian Subotich crossed the Amur into Manchuria, where he seized Aigun (5 August) then marched south through Mergen (Nenjiang) towards Qiqihar (Tsitsihar) on the Chinese Eastern railway. Chinese commander Shou Shan refused a truce and Qiqihar fell by storm after heavy fighting. With other Russians advancing east from Xing-an, General Shou killed himself (28 August 1900).

Qomsheh ❙ 1753 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

In the struggle for control of Persia, Azad Khan Afghan of Azerbaijan captured Isfahan then sent his ally Fath Ali Afshar south to Qomsheh, where he was repulsed by the Regent Karim Khan Zand. However, after Azad arrived with reinforcements (and Karim's brother Eskander Khan was killed attempting to assassinate him), Karim fought a courageous rearguard action and withdrew.

Quaker Hill ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Rhode Island

Quaker Road ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Lewis's Farm

Quang Ngai ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War
See Ba Gia

Quang Ngai ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War
See Chau Nhai

Quang Tri (1st) ❙ 1972 ❙ Vietnam War

At the start of the Eastertide Offensive, North Vietnamese regulars attacked across the demilitarised zone and advanced towards Hue, attacking the key city of Quang Tri, held by South Vietnamese troops and marines. With heavy artillery support, the invaders besieged and took Quang Tri by storm. Further south their offensive struck against Kontum (26 April–1 May 1972).

Quang Tri (2nd) ❙ 1972 ❙ Vietnam War

After halting the North Vietnamese Eastertide Offensive in the central highlands at Kontum and at An Loc, South Vietnamese forces began a bloody counter-offensive in the north, aided by American bomber strikes and naval guns. Prolonged fighting saw Quang Tri City retaken to effectively end the offensive and four months later a ceasefire ended the war (28 June–15 September 1972).

Quanzhou ❙ 1852 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

As Taiping forces withdrew northeast from Guilin past Quanzhou (Ch'uan-chou), a sniper on the city wall fatally wounded the great leader Feng Yunshan and the rebels turned on the city, held by magistrate Cao Xiepei. After breaching the walls with explosives, the vengeful Taiping massacred the residents before continuing north across Suo'yi Ford (24 May–3 June 1852).

Quatre Bras ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

In a prelude to Waterloo, south of Brussels, Napoleon Bonaparte took his centre and right wing against General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians at Ligny while Marshal Michel Ney led the left against the British-Dutch Allies at Quatre Bras. After initial success, Ney was driven back by Arthur Wellesley Duke of Wellington, though both sides had approximately equal losses (16 June 1815).

Quebec ❙ 1629 ❙ Anglo-French Wars in North America

Scottish adventurer David Kirke campaigned against France on the St Lawrence, where he captured Tadoussac, southeast of Quebec, then sent his brothers Thomas and Louis against the starving settlement at Quebec. Governor Samuel de Champlain evacuated Quebec after a brief show of force. When war in Europe ended, King Charles I of England returned the city to France (19 July 1629).

Quebec ❙ 1690 ❙ King William's War

Having taken Port Royal, New England commander Sir William Phips led 35 ships against French Quebec where Governor Louis de Buade Comte de Frontenac declined to surrender. A landing under Major John Walley was repulsed, though French leader Jacques le Moyne de Saint-Hélène was fatally wounded. Phips was driven off with 90 casualties and several ships lost (16–20 October 1690).

Quebec ❙ 1711 ❙ Queen Anne's War

Admiral Sir Hovenden Walker took a large fleet and almost 6,000 troops into the St Lawrence in his campaign against French Quebec. After a storm sank eight of his transports, Walker turned back and ordered Colonial militia under Colonel Francis Nicholson to withdraw from their advance on Montreal. Walker was later court-martialled and dismissed (18 August–16 September 1711).

Quebec ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

In the decisive action of the conquest of Canada, British General James Wolfe scaled the Heights of Abraham above the St Lawrence River and defeated a French force under Marquis Louis de Montcalm on the Plains above. Although both commanders were mortally wounded in the fighting, the victory opened the way to nearby Quebec, which surrendered five days later (13 September 1759).

Quebec ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

French General Francois de Lévis resolved to recover Quebec, lost six months earlier, and advanced from Montreal with over 8,000 men. He defeated British commander General James Murray outside Quebec at Saint-Foy and the heavily outnumbered British withdrew into the city under siege. They were eventually relieved by a naval squadron and Lévis retreated to Montreal (27 April 1760).

Quebec ❙ 1775–1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Six weeks after capturing Montreal, American forces invading Canada under General Richard Montgomery and Colonel Benedict Arnold attacked Quebec, held by General Guy Carleton. With Montgomery killed and Arnold wounded, Captain Daniel Morgan was defeated and captured in a costly assault next day and the Americans were driven off (31 December 1775–1 January 1776).

Quebracho Herrado ❙ 1840 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Defeated at Sauce Grande in Entre Rios, Unitarist General Juan Galo Lavalle was pursued west by General Manuel Oribe, the new commander for Dictator Manuel de Rosas. At Quebracho Herrado, between Santa Fe and Córdoba, Lavalle suffered a crushing defeat, followed by a massacre, which virtually destroyed his army. He met final defeat a year later at Famaillá (28 November 1840).

Queenston ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

American General Stephen van Rensselaer led a rash offensive across the Niagara River between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, attacking from Lewiston against General Isaac Brock at Queenston. Although Brock was killed during initial American success, a counter-attack by General Roger Sheaffe forced the Americans to surrender. Rensselaer resigned his command (13 October 1812).

Queetz ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

During a fresh spring offensive in eastern Prussia following the winter carnage at Eylau (8 February), Russian Generals Levin Bennigsen and Anton Lestocq campaigned east of the Passarge River, repulsing Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte with heavy losses at Mehlsack and Lomitten. Bernadotte then halted the Russians at Queetz and Russia lost again a week later at Friedland (5 June 1807).

Querétaro ❙ 1867 ❙ Mexican-French War

Re-conquering Mexico after Napoleon III withdrew his forces, Mexican General Mariano Escobeda advanced south through San Jacinto to besiege Querétaro, held by Emperor Maximilian and 20,000 men under Miguel Miramón and Tomás Mejía. After the city fell by storm, the Emperor, Miramón and Mejía were executed. Mexico City surrendered a day later (6 March–14 May 1867).

Queseras del Medio ❙ 1819 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Patriot leader Simón Bolívar recovered after La Puerta and met General Pablo Morillo on the Apure in southwest Venezuela, where a small force under General José Antonio Páez lured the Spanish cavalry into pursuit. At Queseras del Medio, northeast of San Fernando, the Royalist horse were defeated with 400 casualties. But within days Bolívar was routed at Rincón de los Toros (2 April 1819).

Questa de los Angeles ❙ 1880 ❙ War of the Pacific

See Los Angeles, Peru

Quetzaltenango ❙ 1524 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Guatemala

Conquistador Pedro de Alvarado set out from Mexico City (Tenochtitlan) and marched into Guatemala, where he recruited Cakchiquel Mayas against their traditional rivals, the Quiché. On the plain near Totonicapan, at a site later named Quetzaltenango, King Tecún Umán of Quiché was defeated and killed, reputedly by Alvarado himself. The Spaniards then marched on Ututlán (28 February 1524).

Quiberon ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

In support of a local insurrection in Brittany, over 3,000 French émigrés were landed from British warships on the Quiberon Peninsula. Republican General Louis Lazare Hoche repulsed the invasion, capturing massive armaments and a large number of Royalists who failed to reach the departing British ships. About 700 of the prisoners were executed (27 June–20 July 1795).

Quiberon Bay ❙ 56 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars

See Morbihan Gulf

Quiberon Bay ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

With the French Toulon squadron dispersed at Lagos Bay (19 August), Admiral Sir Edward Hawke blockaded the Brest fleet in order to frustrate the planned invasion of Britain. French commander Hubert Comte de Conflans eluded the blockade, but Hawke destroyed the French fleet off Quiberon, with seven ships lost and over 2,000 men killed. This ended the planned invasion (20 November 1759).

Quilmes ❙ 1826 ❙ Argentine-Brazilian War

While Brazilian Admiral Rodrigo Pinto Guedes attempted to blockade Buenos Aires, Argentine commander William Brown made repeated attacks, culminating in a violent action just to the east off Quilmes. Brown was heavily outgunned and had to abandon his damaged flagship. However, the Brazilians failed to destroy the Argentine fleet and in early 1827 were routed at Juncal (29 July 1826).

Quilmes ❙ 1827 ❙ Argentine-Brazilian War

Despite defeat at Quilmes and Juncal, Brazil sent another squadron comprising ten vessels into the Rio de la Plata. Off Quilmes, just east of Buenos Aires, Admiral William Brown, now commanding 24 ships, routed the Brazilians, who fled after one vessel blew up with all hands. Brown lost just 17 killed and wounded, but a month later he was defeated Monte Santiago (24 February 1827).

Quilmo ❙ 1819 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

On campaign northeast of Concepción, Royalist irregulars led by Vicente Elizondo (second in command to Vicente Benavides) met Patriot forces under Pedro Nolasco Victoriano, Governor of Chillan, just southeast of Chillan at the nearby Rio Quilmo. Elizondo was defeated in a sharp and bloody encounter and Victoriano returned safely to Chillan (19 September 1819).

Quilo ❙ 1814 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

See Alto de Quilo

Quimperlé ❙ 1342 ❙ Hundred Years War

English commander Sir Walter Manny intervened in Brittany in support of Jean de Montfort, relieving Hennebont then marching west against Louis of Spain, who had landed to aid rival claimant Charles of Blois. Manny captured the poorly guarded enemy fleet, then routed the much larger Spanish army near Quimperlé, northwest of Lorient. Louis escaped with just a small retinue (June 1342).

Quinby Bridge ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Threatened northeast of Charleston, South Carolina, British Colonel John Coates withdrew behind the partially demolished Quinby Bridge on the Cooper. Boldly facing a poorly managed attack by Generals Thomas Sumter and Francis Marion and Colonel Henry Lee, Coates inflicted costly American casualties. When reinforcements approached, Sumter withdrew (17 July 1781).

Quinqua ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

As the Americans prepared to advance from Malolos, a column under Major James F. Bell was met near Quinqua (modern Plaridel) by a Philippine force under Pablo Tecson and Gregoria del Pilar. The Americans suffered costly losses (including Colonel John Stotesenburg killed) before the insurgents finally withdrew. Commander Arthur MacArthur then advanced to Bagbag (23 April 1899).

Quintanilla de Valle ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Benavides

Qurna ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Anglo-Indian troops under General Sir Arthur Barrett captured Basra, near the mouth of the Euphrates, then advanced upstream to Qurna, where Turkish forces attempted to defend the strategic confluence with the Tigris. Attacking by land and from both rivers, the British were initially repulsed, but reinforcements arrived and the Turkish garrison of over 1,000 surrendered (4–9 December 1914).

Qurna ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

See Amara

Quy Nhon ❙ 1773 ❙ Vietnamese Civil War

Leading a rebellion against the dominant Nguyen in the south of Vietnam, the brothers Nguyen Hue, Nguyen Nhac and Nguyen Lu from Tay Son met the Nguyen army at Quy Nhon. A decisive victory for the Tay Son forces secured much of the country. Nguyen Hue declared himself Emperor Quang Trung in 1788 and defeated a Chinese army the following year at Thang Long.

R

Raab ❙ 1044 ❙ German-Magyar War

After King Peter of Hungary was overthrown by Magyar nobles, the usurper "King" Samuel Aba continually raided into Bavaria until German Emperor Henry III took a small army to the River Raab in Hungary, where he defeated and scattered the Magyar host. Peter was restored as a German vassal and executed Aba, though he lost the throne again within two years.

Raab ❙ 1664 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See St Gotthard

Raab ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Concentrating his forces on the Danube after defeat at Aspern-Essling (22 May), Napoleon Bonaparte recalled Prince Eugène de Beauharnais from Italy, who pursued Archduke John of Austria across the Alps to Raab, near Graz. John was beaten and driven off towards Pressburg. When besieged Raab fell ten days later, Eugène joined Bonaparte for the decisive battle at Wagram (14 June 1809).

Raate Road ❙ 1940 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

As invading Russians converged on Suomussalmi in central Finland, General Hjalmar Siilasvuo destroyed the invaders' northern division then turned against the southern force blocked from advancing along the Raate Road. Hard fighting along a 20-mile stretch saw Russia's 44th Division destroyed with terrible losses. General Anton Vinogradov fled and was executed (1–8 January 1940).

Rabat-i-Pariyan ❙ 1598 ❙ Persian Reconquest of Khorasan

Shah Abbas of Persia took advantage of Uzbek confusion following the death of their great leader Abdullah II, leading a major expedition to recover his northern territories in the Khorasan. At Rabat-i-Pariyan, Shah Abbas decisively defeated Uzbeks under Din Muhammad Khan to recover Herat. He also seized Nishapur and Meshed but was checked at Balkh and made peace (9 August 1598).

Rabaul ❙ 1943–1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See New Britain

Rachaya ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

See Rashaya

Raclawice ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

In a renewed Polish rising against Russia, Tadeusz Kosciuszko returned to take command of the Polish army at Cracow, then marched against a Russian force under General Alexander Tormazov. The Russians were defeated northeast of Cracow at Raclawice by 4,000 Polish regulars and 2,000 peasants armed with scythes. However, Cracow was recaptured a few months later (4 April 1794).

Radcot Bridge ❙ 1387 ❙ English Barons' Revolt

Richard II of England faced rebellion by Barons under his uncle Thomas Woodstock Duke of Gloucester and the King sent Robert de Vere Earl of Oxford to meet the rebels at Radcot Bridge, near Oxford. Supported by Richard Fitzalan Earl of Arundel, Thomas Mowbray Earl of Nottingham and Henry Bolingbroke (later Henry IV), Gloucester routed de Vere, who fled into exile (20 December 1387).

Radenivela ❙ 1630 ❙ Later Portuguese Colonial Wars in Asia

Facing expansion by the Kingdom of Kandy, in central Ceylon (modern Sri Lanka), under King Senarat and his son Rajasinha, Portuguese Captain-General Constantino de Sa de Noronha led an invasion towards the capital, Kandy. To the southeast at Radenivela, he was attacked by Rajasinha. When his Sinhalese militia deserted, de Sa was defeated and killed and his force was destroyed.

Radnor ❙ 1282 ❙ English Conquest of Wales

See Aber Edw

Radom ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

The Austro-German army of Count Franz Conrad von Hotzendorf and Victor Dankl was repulsed from the Vistula at Ivangorod and fell back on Radom, where they were attacked by General Nikolai Ivanov's Russians. The Germans withdrew north after very heavy losses and later counter-attacked at Lodz, while the Austrians retreated southwest towards Cracow (24–28 October 1914).

Rafa ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Just weeks after victory at Magdhaba in eastern Sinai, British forces under General Philip Chetwode attacked fortified Turkish positions at Rafa. After artillery bombardment, the Turkish trenches and nearby Magruntein Hill were taken by storm with many prisoners captured. Victory cleared the last Turks from Sinai and opened the route to Palestine and Gaza (9 January 1917).

Rafa ❙ 1956 ❙ Arab-Israeli Sinai War

As Israel launched its war against Egypt in Sinai, General Haim Laskar marched north against a strong Arab concentration behind minefields around Rafa, which was taken by storm. Further west, Israeli forces drove the Egyptians out of El Arish, capturing hundreds of vehicles (including Russian-made tanks). They then turned north against Gaza (31 October–1 November 1956).

Rafa ❙ 1967 ❙ Arab-Israeli Six Day War

Opening the Sinai campaign, General Israel Tal, with Colonel Shmuel Gonen's armour, advanced on Rafa, held by Egyptian General Abd el Azizi Soliman with 100 tanks supporting well-fortified lines. Rafa fell by storm and the Israelis fought their way west through the fiercely contested El Jiradi defile to take El Arish, then broke out into the Sinai towards Jebel Libni (5–6 June 1967).

Rahatgarh ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Hugh Rose and about 3,000 men advancing northeast from Mhow to relieve the small British garrison at Sagar, were blocked by the army of the Rajah of Banpur 30 miles to the west at the strong hilltop fort at Rahatgarh. Using artillery to smash the walls of the fort, Rose forced the rebels to flee. Most escaped east to a new defensive position at Barodia (24–28 January 1858).

Rahmaniyya ❙ 1786 ❙ Mamluk-Ottoman Wars

Amid inter-factional anarchy in Mamluk Egypt, Turkish Admiral Djeza'irli Ghazi Hasan Pasha led a large expeditionary force and on the Rosetta branch of the Nile at al-Rahmaniyya, he routed Murad Bey and recovered Egypt for the Ottomans. However, Hasan Pasha soon had to withdraw and Murad Bey later recovered power. He held Cairo until defeat by Bonaparte at the Pyramids in 1798 (July 1786).

Rahon ❙ 1710 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

When Sikh leader Banda Singh Bahadur marched towards Jullundur, in the Punjab, he was attacked by local Mughal ruler Shams Khan 35 miles southeast near the fort of Rahon. Banda withdrew after a fierce battle, but when Shams Khan left the fort next day to return to Sultanpur, his rearguard was routed. The Sikhs took the fort then advanced to capture Jullundur (11 October 1710).

Raichur ❙ 1520 ❙ Wars of the Deccan Sultanates

Amid rivalry between states following the break-up of the Bahmani Sultanate, Ismail Adil Shah of Muslim Bijapur seized the fortress of Raichur, southwest of Hyderabad, then faced a siege by Krishnadeva Raya of Hindu Vijayanagar. The Bijapuri army was routed and Raichur fell to Krishnadeva Raya in battle nearby. Bijapur and her allies were avenged in 1565 at Talikota (19 May 1520).

Raigarh ❙ 1689 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Emperor Aurangzeb executed Maratha King Sambhaji then dispatched General Zulfiqar Khan against the new teenage King Rajaram at Raigarh (Rayagad), southwest of Poona. Rajaram escaped and fled to Gingee (5 April). When Raigarh fortress eventually fell by treachery, Sambhaji's widow Yesu Bai and son Shahu were captured and held for 17 years (25 March–19 October 1689).

Raigarh ❙ 1703–1704 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

On campaign against the Marathas southwest of Poona, Emperor Aurangzeb sent Hamid-uddin Khan and Tarbiyat Khan against the huge hill fortress of Raigarh, held by Santaji Silimkar. A fierce attack eventually captured most of the fort, though the citadel held out for ten days before the Marathas surrendered. The Mughals then turned against Torna (30 November 1703–16 February 1704).

Rain ❙ 1632 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden secured victory at Breitenfeld (September 1631) then occupied the Rhineland, marching into Bavaria against Duke Maximilian and Imperial commander Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly. On the Lech near Donauwörth at Rain, Gustavus inflicted another decisive loss, with Tilly fatally wounded. The Protestants seized nearby Augsburg and later Munich (15 April 1632).

Raisin River ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

See Frenchtown

Rajahmundry ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

To take pressure off the British in Madras, Governor Robert Clive of Bengal sent Colonel Francis Forde south from Calcutta to support Raja Ananda Raj against the French under Herbert de Brienne Comte de Conflans. Forde and the Raja's infantry routed and scattered the French on the Godaveri near Rajahmundry, then continued south against the city of Masulipatam (7 December 1758).

Rajgarh ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Marching in pursuit of Tantia Topi, General John Michel advanced through intense heat and heavy rain and met the rebel at the walled town of Rajgarh, 60 miles northwest of Bhopal. Supported by cavalry under Major William Gordon, Michel attacked and routed the rebels, capturing 26 guns. Tantia Topi then retreated east to Sironj (15 September 1858).

Rajmahal, Bengal ❙ 1576 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Daud Khan, the young Afghan ruler of Bengal, was beaten by the Mughal army at Tukaroi in March 1575, but soon rebelled against his new masters and faced a second expedition under Mughal Emperor Akbar. Near Rajmahal, on the Ganges southeast of Bhagalpur, Daud was defeated and executed, giving Akbar the province of Bengal and effective control of northern India (July 1576).

Rajmahal, Rajasthan ❙ 1747 ❙ Mughal Wars of Succession

Following the death of Sawai Jaysingh of Rajput Jaipur, his elder son, Ishwarisingh, faced armed resistance from the younger son, Madhorsingh. A two-day battle at Rajmahal, on the Banas southeast of Ajmer, saw Ishwarisingh decisively defeat his brother and Rana Jagatsingh of Udaipur. Maratha Peshwa Mulhar Rao Holkar eventually brokered a settlement (1–2 March 1747).

Rakhova ❙ 1475 ❙ Moldavian-Turkish War

Despite disaster at Scutari in 1474, Ottoman commander Hadim Suleiman Pasha was given a fresh army to invade Wallachia against a Christian coalition led by Stephen the Great of Moldavia, who was aided by Hungary and Poland. Suleiman suffered a further defeat at Rakhova (modern Oryakhovo) near Vaslui in northeast Romania, but the Turks were soon avenged at Valea Alba (10 January 1475).

Rakshasbhuvan ❙ 1763 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

Nizam Ali of Hyderabad took advantage of civil war in Maharashtra to launch an invasion. But on the Godaveri at Rakshasbhuvan, Maratha Peshwa Madhav Rao and his uncle Ragunath Rao destroyed the Nizam's army, killing a claimed 10,000, including commander Vithal Sundar. Nizam Ali sued for peace and yielded all the land he had recovered in late 1762 after Alegaon (10 August 1763).

Rakshasi-Tangadi ❙ 1565 ❙ Wars of the Deccan Sultanates

See Talikota

Rakvere ❙ 1268 ❙ Early Wars of the Teutonic Knights

Twenty-five years after Novgorod's great victory at Lake Peipus, Mikhail Fedorovich of Novgorod, supported by Pskov, Pereiaslav and Suszdal, attacked Danes and Teutonic Knights of the Livonian Order near Rakvere, east of Tallinn in Estonia. The Danes and Germans were badly beaten and a failed attack on Pskov in May 1269 further weakened the Livonian Order (18 February 1268).

Ramadi ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

With Baghdad secured, Anglo-Indian commander Sir Frederick Maude attacked west along the Euphrates to Ramadi, where he was driven back in extreme heat (11 July). A second expedition in cooler conditions, with General Sir Harry Brooking, forced Turkish commander Ahmad Bey to surrender 3,500 men and all his guns. Maude soon contracted cholera and died (28–29 September 1917).

Ramgarh ❙ 1814 ❙ British-Gurkha War

See Mangu

Ramillies ❙ 1706 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Allied commander John Churchill Duke of Marlborough was returning to the Spanish Netherlands after his great victory at Blenheim when he met a Franco-Belgian army under Maximilian Emanuel of Bavaria and Francois de Neufville Marshal Villeroi. Another decisive French defeat north of Namur near Ramillies made Villeroi abandon Flanders and he later lost his command (23 May 1706).

Ramleh ❙ 1101 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Two years after being repulsed at Ascalon, Fatimid Egyptian Vizier al-Afdal sent another substantial army into Palestine under Saad ed-Daulah. The hugely outnumbered Crusaders were driven back in a bitterly fought action at Ramleh, southeast of Jaffa, before a heroic intervention by King Baldwin I of Jerusalem saved the day and the Fatimids withdrew with heavy losses (6 September 1101).

Ramleh ❙ 1102 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Fatimid Egyptian Vizier al-Afdal lost at Ramleh, between Joppa and Jerusalem, but a year later sent his son Sharaf al-Maali with another large army. At Ramleh, Baldwin I of Jerusalem and a small force of knights without infantry were routed and took refuge in the local fortress. Most were killed or captured next day though the King escaped and soon repulsed the invaders at Joppa (17–18 May 1102).

Ramleh ❙ 1105 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Despite defeat at Ramleh in 1101 and Joppa in 1102, Egyptian Vizier al-Afdal sent a third large army into Palestine under his son Sena al-Mulk Husein. Aided by Turks from Damascus, the Fatimid Egyptians once again advanced as far as Ramleh, southeast of Joppa (modern Jaffa) where King Baldwin I of Jerusalem defeated and drove back this last full-scale Egyptian invasion (27 August 1105).

Ramnagar ❙ 1848 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

With Sikh forces defeated and besieged at Multan, northwest of Lahore, General Sir Hugh Gough attempted to cross the Chenab at Ramnagar and came under heavy artillery fire from Sikhs under Sher Singh. Gough was repulsed with heavy losses and withdrew to await reinforcements from the fall of Multan, but impatiently tried again two weeks later at Sadulapur (22 November 1848).

Ramón de las Yaguas ❙ 1895 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

See Sao del Indio

Ramosch ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

During a fresh Austrian offensive in eastern Switzerland, Count Heinrich von Bellegarde repulsed General Jean-Joseph Dessoles at St Maria, then turned against General Claude Lecourbe on the River Inn. Lecourbe managed to drive off the Austrians with heavy losses at Ramosch but had to withdraw along the Inn to Suss, then west through the mountains to Bellinzona (30 April 1799).

Rampura ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

Defeated by General Sir Thomas Hislop at Mehidpur in December, Marathas of Mulhar Rao Holkar marched north across the Chambal to Rampura, where they were threatened by cavalry and infantry under Major-General Sir Thomas Brown advancing from Sind. Brown inflicted heavy losses in a dawn attack and captured 10 guns. Holkar's commanders escaped into Mewar (10 January 1818).

Rancagua ❙ 1814 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

Juan José Carrera overthrew Spanish government in Chile then fell out with fellow rebel Bernardo O'Higgins. When Loyalist General Mariano Osorio attacked at Rancagua, south of Santiago, the "Disaster of Rancagua" saw O'Higgins defeated when Carrera and his brother José Miguel failed to provide support. Santiago City fell and Spanish authority was re-established (1 October 1814).

Rancho Dominguez ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

In a rash attempt to capture Los Angeles, about 300 Americans advancing from San Pedro under naval Captain William Mervine were blocked at Rancho Dominguez (in modern North Long Beach) by Californian troops led by José Antonio Carillo. Driven off by a single four-pounder, Mervine was forced to withdraw but Los Angeles fell after battle in January at San Gabriel (8–9 October 1846).

Rangiaowhia ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

With the Maoris defeated at Rangiriri and Paterangi, General Sir Duncan Cameron continued south into New Zealand's Waikato, seizing the strategic pa (fortified village) at Rangiaowhia. When Maori forces began to dig in at nearby Hairini, Cameron led a bloody counter-attack and drove them off with the bayonet. Another action at Orakau in April ended the Waikato War (21–22 February 1864).

Rangiriri ❙ 1863 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

A major British force under General Duncan Cameron advanced south from Auckland down the Waikato to secure Meremere, then attacked a powerful Maori position at nearby Rangiriri. A rash frontal assault saw two Victoria Crosses won, but Cameron lost 39 killed and over 100 wounded. However, the Maoris surrendered next day and he continued south to Paterangi (20 November 1863).

Rangoon ❙ 1824 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

When Burma conquered Arakan and threatened British India, Britain declared war and General Sir Archibald Campbell secured Rangoon (May 1824) where he was later besieged by Maha Bundoola and a reported 60,000 men. Bundoola was heavily defeated in a fierce battle (1–7 December) then was repulsed at nearby Kokein and pursued towards Danubyu (30 November–16 December 1824).

Rangoon ❙ 1852 ❙ 2nd British-Burmese War

Britain resumed war against Burma for commercial gain and General Henry Thomas Godwin and Admiral Charles John Austen captured the strategic fortress of Martaban, controlling the Salween, then moved west against Rangoon. The key city fell at the cost of under 150 British casualties and Godwin then took his force northwest against Bassein (14 April 1852).

Ranod ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

The rebel Firuz Shah crossed the Ganges into Gwalior intending to sack Ranod, 40 miles southwest of Jhansi, where he was intercepted by General Sir Robert Napier. Arriving at Ranod to find that Napier had reached the town the same day, Firuz Shah was defeated and repulsed. A month later he joined up with Tantia Topi but was defeated again at Dausa (17 December 1858).

Raor ❙ 712 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Sind

In response to attacks on Arab shipping, Caliph Al-Hajjaj in Baghdad sent his nephew Muhammad ibn Qasim with a large force against Sind, where he besieged Debal (near modern Karachi, Pakistan). Hindu King Dahir of Sind then rashly tried to make a stand at Raor, where he was defeated and killed. The capital Alor quickly fell and Sind became the first Muslim foothold in India (June 712).

Raphia ❙ 720 BC ❙ Assyrian Wars

Although Prince Hanun of Gaza supported a rebellion by Palestinian provinces against King Sargon of Assyria, he was not present when his allies were routed at Qarqar. Later that year Sargon continued his march through Palestine and at Raphia, south of Gaza, Hanun was also defeated and captured, ending the rebellion and securing the Assyrian Empire's southern boundary with Egypt.

Raphia ❙ 217 BC ❙ 4th Syrian War

Tempted by apparent military decline in Egypt, the Seleucid Antiochus III took an army into Palestine. After initial success, Ptolemaic General Sosibius destroyed the invaders in a massive battle at Raphia, south of Gaza. Antiochus had to acknowledge Ptolemaic authority over Palestine, but he returned 19 years later and the Battle of Paneas finally ended 100 years of Ptolemaic rule in Palestine.

Rapidan River ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Morton's Ford

Rapido ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Following a British advance across the Garigliano in support of the Allied landing south of Rome at Anzio, American General Frederick Walker attempted to cross the Rapido to the east near Sant'Angelo. Facing heavy German reinforcements, the Americans were repulsed with 1,600 casualties and the Allied offensive stalled in the shadow of Monte Cassino (20–22 January 1944).

Rappahannock ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General John Pope was advancing through northern Virginia towards Gordonsville when part of his army was repulsed by General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson at Cedar Mountain and fell back on the Rappahannock. Pope attempted to secure the river with a series of actions, but when Jackson turned the Union flank at Kettle Run, Pope withdrew towards Bull Run (22–25 August 1862).

Rappahannock Station ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Repulsed at Bristoe Station, Virginia, from a failed advance on Manassas, Confederate commander Robert E. Lee was pursued southwest to the Rappahannock by Union General George G. Meade, who attacked at Rappahannock Station and nearby Kelly's Ford. Lee's troops were defeated with about 1,600 captured and he retired south of the Rapidan to Mine Run (7 November 1863).

Rapperswil ❙ 1656 ❙ 1st Villmergen War

During resumed religious warfare in Switzerland, the Protestant forces of Zurich under General Rudolf Werdmüller attempted to seize the castle at Rapperswil in the Catholic Canton of Schwyz. The men from Zurich were driven off, while the army of Berne was repulsed even more heavily at Villmergen. A troubled peace was then established (January 1656).

Rapti ❙ 1859 ❙ Indian Mutiny

After rebel leader Nana Sahib fled into Nepal after defeat at Banki in December, General Alfred Horsford was invited across the border against the fugitives and advanced up the Rapti. Meeting over 1,000 rebels on the river at Sitka Ghat, he drove them off and captured 15 guns. Colonel Thomas Kelly pursued the survivors into the hills where Nana Sahib later died in obscurity (9 February 1859).

Ras al-Khaimah ❙ 1809 ❙ Anglo-Arab Wars

In the prolonged struggle against Arab pirates in the Persian Gulf, British Colonel Lionel Smith took a small force against the Bani Bu Ali stronghold of Ras al-Khaimah, on the southern side of the Strait of Hormuz. Smith stormed the fortress and largely dismantled its defences. However, it was partially rebuilt and a second British expedition was required ten years later (13 November 1809).

Ras al-Khaimah ❙ 1819 ❙ Anglo-Arab Wars

General Sir William Grant Keir renewed Britain's attack on piracy in the Persian Gulf and landed with 3,000 men at the Strait of Hormuz near Ras al-Khaimah, held by the Qawasim Chief Hasan Ibn Rahmah. The pirate fortress surrendered after heavy bombardment and the death of the chief's brother Ibrahim in a costly sortie. The Qawasim then agreed to end piracy (3–9 December 1819).

Rasboeni ❙ 1476 ❙ Moldavian-Turkish War

See Valea Alba

Rashaya ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

Soon after Druze forces captured Suwayda in southeast Syria, fighting spread to Lebanon, where 3,000 rebels under Zayd Beg attacked Rashaya fortress, held by Captain Granger. Rebels who broke in were repulsed in bloody fighting. With ammunition spent, the Legionnaires were preparing a final suicidal charge (as at Camerone in 1863) when relief arrived just in time (20–24 November 1925).

Rastatt ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

After crossing the Rhine at Strasbourg, French General Jean Victor Moreau advanced against Archduke Charles Louis of Austria, who immediately began to withdraw north and east. Moreau defeated Austrian General Maximilian Latour on the River Murg, southwest of Karlsruhe at Rastatt, and Charles was forced to continue his withdrawal over the river towards Swabia (4 July 1796).

Raszyn ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Facing an advance on Warsaw by Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, Polish-French forces under Prince Josef Poniatowski marched southwest to the small town of Raszyn (a modern suburb of Warsaw) where they were defeated and driven back with heavy losses. Three days later (22 April) the capital surrendered to the Austrians (19 April 1809).

Ratanpur ❙ 1706 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Mughal Prince Bidar Bakht countered a Maratha offensive into Gujarat under Dhanaji Jadhav by advancing towards Ratanpur, on the Narmada. On the east bank near Rajpipla he was routed by the Marathas, with his Generals Safdar Khan Babi and Nazar Alim Khan captured. Although they were later ransomed, Mughal power in the Deccan had suffered a grave blow (15 March 1706).

Ratanpur ❙ 1720 ❙ Mughal-Hyderabad War

On campaign in central India against the ambitious Nizam-ul-Mulk and General Iwaz Khan, Dilawar Ali Khan led a large Imperial army towards Ratanpur, north of Burhanpur. However, further north at Husainpur, Mughal Generals Sher Khan and Babar Khan were killed, as was Dilawar himself when he took command. The Nizam soon defeated another Imperial army at Balapur (19 June 1720).

Rathenow ❙ 1675 ❙ Scania War

When Sweden joined France against Brandenburg and the Netherlands, Swedish Count Karl Gustav Wrangel invaded Brandenburg. After a forced march across Germany, Field Marshal Georg von Derfflinger attacked the invaders at the fortress of Rathenow, west of Berlin. The Swedes were driven out in heavy fighting and withdrew north to a decisive defeat at Fehrbellin (25 June 1675).

Rathgarh ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Rahatgarh

Rathmines ❙ 1649 ❙ British Civil Wars

When Irish Royalists commanded by James Butler Earl of Ormonde advanced on Dublin, the city's Parliamentary garrison under Colonel Michael Jones launched a powerful counter-attack at nearby Rathmines. The Royalists were heavily repulsed, losing over 4,000 casualties and all their guns. Oliver Cromwell soon arrived to brutally crush remaining resistance (2 August 1649).

Ratisbon ❙ 1634 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

See Regensberg

Ratisbon ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

See Regensberg

Ratnagiri ❙ 1783 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

Unaware that peace had been signed with the British, Maratha naval commander Anand Rao Dhulap took his fleet and attacked a squadron under the sloop Ranger off the coast south of Bombay. A hard-fought action near Ratnagiri cost about 100 Maratha and 30 British lives and Dhulap captured five British ships. However, they were quickly returned and peace was secured (8 April 1783).

Rat's Gap ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Wuxue

Rattlesnake Springs ❙ 1880 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

Crossing the Rio Grande into Texas, the Apache Chief Victorio was repulsed at Tinaja de las Palmas, then tried to march north through the Sierra Diablo. At Rattlesnake Springs, on Salt Flat, he was driven off by Buffalo Soldiers under Colonel Benjamin Grierson and Captain Louis Carpenter. Victorio then withdrew into Mexico, where he was killed in October at Tres Castillos (6 August 1880).

Raucoux ❙ 1747 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

See Rocoux

Rautu ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

Local White commander Captain Yrjo Elfvengren launched a bold offensive in eastern Karelia, leading an outnumbered force against Rautu (modern Sosnovo, Russia). While heavy fighting cost the Whites 220 killed and over 400 wounded, the Russians lost 400 killed and 700 captured and the railway from Petrograd (St Petersburg). Karelia was secured just weeks later at Vyborg (1–5 April 1918).

Ravenna ❙ 307 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

When Maxentius usurped the Western throne, his rival Severus II attempted to besiege Rome, but was driven off when part of his army changed sides. Severus fled to Ravenna, where he was then besieged by Maximianus Herculius, former Emperor and father of Maxentius. Facing defeat, Severus and his force surrendered and soon after he was mysteriously put to death.

Ravenna ❙ 425 ❙ Later Roman Wars of Succession

When Honorius died, the throne at Ravenna was usurped by his minister John, opposed by Eastern Emperor Theodosius II, who sent an army under Aspar. Besieged at Ravenna, John was deposed and killed before Hun mercenaries could arrive or his ally Aetius could return from Africa. Six-year-old Valentinian III, son of Constantius, was enthroned and his mother Placidia effectively ruled in the west.

Ravenna ❙ 432 ❙ Later Roman Wars of Succession

When Placidia, mother of the boy-Emperor Valentinian III, dismissed her over-ambitious General Flavius Aetius, she recalled Bonifacius, who abandoned his besieged city of Hippo Regius in North Africa. Bonifacius defeated Aetius in battle outside Ravenna, though he was mortally wounded. When Aetius returned a year later with Hun troops he became virtual ruler in the west.

Ravenna ❙ 475 ❙ Fall of the Western Roman Empire

Roman General Orestes was ordered to raise a large army against the tribal rulers of Gaul but instead led his force against Emperor Julius Nepos in his capital at Ravenna, where Nepos was defeated and deposed. Nepos fled to Dalmatia and Orestes enthroned his own son Romulus Augustulus, who was in turn overthrown in September 476 after the Roman defeat at Pavia (28 August 475).

Ravenna ❙ 490–493 ❙ Goth Invasion of Italy

After invading Italy and defeating the German ruler Odoacer on the Sontius and at Verona, Theodoric the Ostrogoth besieged Odoacer at his capital in Ravenna. The siege continued for more than three years until a naval blockade forced Odoacer to make peace. Theodoric invited Odoacer to a banquet, where he was murdered and Theodoric became undisputed ruler of Italy (27 February 493).

Ravenna ❙ 539–540 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

Driven back from failed sieges at Rome and Rimini, the Ostrogoths of King Witiges were in turn besieged in their capital at Ravenna. For six months they held out against General Belisarius, who eventually pretended to accept an offer to become the Ostrogoth King. Belisarius then captured the city and sent Witiges to Constantinople as a prisoner (December 539–May 540).

Ravenna ❙ 1512 ❙ War of the Holy League

With successive victories in northern Italy, 22-year-old French commander Gaston de Foix Duke of Nemours marched towards Ravenna to face the Papal-Spanish forces of the Holy League. One of Italy's bloodiest battles saw de Foix killed, but Raymond of Cardona was routed by French artillery. The Holy League defeat brought the Swiss and Germans into the war against France (11 April 1512).

Ravenspur ❙ 1471 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Edward IV returned to England after briefly escaping his ambitious younger brother George Duke of Clarence and Kingmaker Richard Neville Earl of Warwick, landing with about 2,000 men on the Humber at Ravenspur. After little more than token resistance, a defending force under Martin de la See withdrew and Edward marched south to meet Warwick a month later at Barnet (16 March 1471).

Ravi ❙ 1306 ❙ Mongol Invasions of India

Sent to avenge defeat at Amroha (December 1305), a fresh Mongol invasion of northern India under Kabak was met at the River Ravi by Sultan Ala-ud-din's army under Malik Naib Kufur and Ghazi Malik. The Mongols were routed, with Kabak and thousands of prisoners executed and their women and children enslaved. It was the last great Mongol invasion until Tamerlane 90 years later.

Ravine-à-Coulevres ❙ 1802 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Santo Domingo Rising)

See Gonaives

Rawal ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

When mutineers attacked the small British garrison at Mehidpur, northwest of Ujain, 400 Hyderabad cavalry under Major Sutherland Orr set off in pursuit. Orr relieved Mehidpur and 12 miles north met the rebels in a very strong defensive position at the village of Rawal. After losing about 100 dead, the rebels abandoned their captured guns and stores and fled to Mandasur (12 November 1857).

Rawa Russka ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As Russian forces crossed the Gnila Lipa towards Lemberg (Lvov) in southeast Poland, General Aleksei Brusilov circled north and smashed into Austrian General Moritz von Auffenberg around Rawa Russka. While action was indecisive, following defeat further south at Gorodok and the fall of Lemberg, Austria abandoned Galicia except for Przemysl (3–11 September 1914).

Rawdhat al Muhanna ❙ 1906 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

While Turkish garrisons tried to separate rival Rashidi and Saudi forces, Abd al-Aziz ibn Rashidi was ambushed at the oasis of Rawdhat al Muhanna, north of Buraydah, by Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Riyadh. The Rashidi ruler was routed and his head was cut off as a trophy. Ottoman forces withdrew from central Arabia and were eventually ejected in the east in 1913 at Hofuf (13 April 1906).

Rawiya ❙ 1903 ❙ British Conquest of Northern Nigeria

As General George Kemball marched northwest from Kano to Sokoto, a 45-strong patrol under Captain Wallace Wright defeated about 200 Nigerians near Rawiya, then next day formed square and repulsed 2,000 infantry and 1,000 cavalry returning to threaten Kano. The Emir's army lost 300 casualties, including the Wazir killed, and Wright won a Victoria Cross (25–26 February 1903).

Rawka ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Szczekociny

Raymond ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

In support of the besieged Confederate stronghold of Vicksburg, on the Mississippi, General John Gregg advanced from the east to intercept approaching Union forces under General James B. McPherson. Severe fighting at Raymond, Mississippi, saw Gregg delay the much-larger Union force before falling back northeast to Jackson, which was lost two days later (12 May 1863).

Rayy ❙ 1059 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

The Great Seljuk Sultan Toghril Beg was repulsed in Byzantine Armenia at Manzikert (1054) and withdrew to Rayy, southeast of modern Tehran, where he later faced revolt by Muhammad and Ahmad, sons of his kinsman Er-tash, and their uncle Ibrahim Inal. With the aid of his nephew Alp Arslan, Toghril won a decisive victory and the three rebels were executed (22 July 1059).

Reading ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

Having secured East Anglia following victory in late 870 at Hoxne, Viking leaders Halfdan and Bagsecq invaded Wessex and were repulsed at Englefield by Aethelwulf, Ealdorman of Berkshire. Joined by King Aethelred's main Saxon army, Aethelwulf attacked the Danish camp at Reading, but was driven off and killed. Aethelred soon faced the decisive battle at nearby Ashdown (January 871).

Reading ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

At the end of failed negotiations, Parliamentary commander Robert Devereux Earl of Essex resumed the offensive and, supported by General John Hampden, besieged Reading. King Charles I personally led a relief force from Oxford and the Royalists were repulsed just to the north at Caversham Bridge. Charles withdrew to Wallingford, leaving Reading to surrender next day (15–25 April 1643).

Reams Station (1st) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Returning from a cavalry raid south of besieged Petersburg, Virginia, Union Generals James Wilson and Augustus V. Kautz were defeated at Sappony Church then met Confederate forces under Generals Fitzhugh Lee and William Mahone at Reams Station on the Weldon Railroad. Under heavy attack, Wilson abandoned his wagons and guns and withdrew north to the Union lines (29 June 1864).

Reams Station (2nd) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Gouvernor K. Warren attacked the Weldon Railroad south of besieged Petersburg, Virginia, by securing Globe Tavern, then sent General Winfield Hancock and cavalry under General David M. Gregg five miles south against Reams Station. They were routed by Confederate General Henry Heth and withdrew with 2,700 men lost, mainly captured (25 August 1864).

Rebecco ❙ 1524 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

Driven from Lombardy after Bicocca in 1522, Francis I of France sent a fresh army under Admiral William de Bonnivet, who advanced to Milan, where he unwisely ordered Chevalier Pierre Terrail de Bayard to hold nearby Rebecco. The French were overwhelmed by Spanish commander Fernando Francesco d'Avalos Marquis of Pescara and retreated to further defeat at the Sesia.

Recife ❙ 1630 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

After losing Salvador in Portuguese Brazil, the Dutch sent Admiral Hendrik Lonck and Colonel Diedrik van Waerdenburgh further north against Olinda, capital of Pernambuca, and its port of Recife. After fierce fighting, the Dutch troops routed Governor Matthias de Albuquerque to storm Olinda, then captured the forts of Recife, securing Pernambuca (15–16 February 1630).

Recife ❙ 1632 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

When Dutch forces seized Pernambuco in Portuguese Brazil, a large relief force despatched from Lisbon under Admiral Antonio de Oquendo was met off Recife by Dutch Admirals Adriaen Pater and Martin Thijssen. A hard-fought action saw Pater killed, but Oquendo withdrew north. A fresh relief fleet, which arrived in 1640, was defeated Itamaraca (12 September 1632).

Recife ❙ 1640 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

See Itamaraca

Recife ❙ 1650–1654 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

Through costly defeats at nearby Guararapes, the Dutch settlement at Recife, Pernambuco, remained under long-term siege and the 3,000-strong garrison and over 8,000 civilians eventually faced starvation. When a large Portuguese fleet arrived (20 December 1653) the Dutch soon surrendered Recife and all remaining possessions in Brazil (February 1650–26 January 1654).

Redan (1st) ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

In a poorly co-ordinated assault on the defences of the besieged Black Sea fortress of Sevastopol, British forces under General Fitzroy Somerset Lord Raglan attacked the key position known as The Redan, while French troops attacked the Malakov. A costly failure—commonly blamed on the French—saw the British repulsed. Raglan died soon afterwards (17–18 June 1855).

Redan (2nd) ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

Three months after costly Anglo-French failure at the Malakov and The Redan, which guarded besieged Sevastopol, General Sir William Codrington seized The Redan, then lost it to a Russian counter-attack. However, French gunfire from the captured Malakov expelled the Russians and General Mikhail Gorchakov evacuated Sevastopol next day, effectively ending the war (8 September 1855).

Redaniyya ❙ 1517 ❙ Ottoman-Mamluk War

See Ridanieh

Red Buttes ❙ 1865 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

See Platte Bridge

Red Canyon ❙ 1879 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

Major Thomas Thornburgh and 200 men marching to support the White River Agency in northwest Colorado were besieged near the Milk River in Red Canyon by 300 Utes under Jack (Nicaagat) and Colorow. The Americans had lost 60 casualties (including Thornburgh killed) before they were relieved. Chief Ouray then intervened to restore peace (29 September–3 October 1879).

Red Cliffs ❙ 208 ❙ Wars of the Three Kingdoms

With northern China secured, the great warlord Cao Cao (Ts'ao Ts'ao) turned south, where he defeated Liu Bei at Changban and soon after was blocked at Red Cliffs, on the Yangzi near Jiangling, by Liu Bei and Sun Quan of Wu. In a decisive battle on the river, Cao Cao's fleet was destroyed and he withdrew. He later consolidated his power in the northwest at Huayin, then turned south into Hanzhong.

Reddersburg ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Days after victory at Sannah's Post, Boer commander Christiaan de Wet led his raiders against the 600-strong garrison at Reddersburg, south of Bloemfontein. Following a 24-hour attack, the entire garrison under Captain William McWhinnie of the Irish Rifles surrendered for lack of water, with 45 killed and wounded and 546 captured. De Wet then marched east against Wepener (3 April 1900).

Redencão ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Ilha de Redencão

Redhina ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Michel Ney retreated from the failed French invasion of Portugal and fought a series of remarkable rearguard actions against the cautious Allied pursuit. At the bridge of Redhina on the River Soure, Ney held off the Anglo-Portuguese Allies under Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington, then continued his withdrawal through Cazal Novo and Foz d'Aronce (12 March 1811).

Red Idol Gorge ❙ 1904 ❙ British Invasion of Tibet

Britain suspected Russian intervention in Tibet and sent 1,000 men under General James Macdonald, who advanced through Guru to a narrow defile on the Nyang Chu, known as Red Idol Gorge for its pigmented Buddhas. Gurkhas climbed the steep sides and fired down into the defenders, who lost 200 killed and 70 captured. The invaders then marched on to Gyantse (9 April 1904).

Red Mound ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Parker's Cross Roads

Red River Delta ❙ 1950 ❙ French Indo-China War

After routing the French in northern Vietnam at Cao-Bang, Viet Minh commander Vo Nguyen Giap launched a sustained offensive into the Red River Delta around Hanoi. Prolonged fighting saw Giap lose to the northwest at Vinh Yen, to the northeast at Mao Khé and in the south on the Day River before he withdrew. In September 1951 he attacked again at Nghia Lo (January–June 1950).

Refugio ❙ 1836 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Sent to delay General José Urrea's Mexicans advancing from San Patricio, Texan forces under Amon King and William Ward attempted to hold the Nuestra Senora del Rosario mission at Refugio. In confused actions nearby, King was defeated and then executed with 15 others. Ward was also defeated, though he escaped capture until later and died in the Goliad Massacre (12–15 March 1836).

Regensberg ❙ 1634 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

Bernard of Saxe-Weimar led his Protestant forces into Bavaria, where he captured the Danube city of Regensberg (14 November 1633). Threatened by Ferdinand of Hungary approaching from Bohemia, Bernard counter-attacked at Landshut. In his absence however, Regensberg capitulated to the Imperial army and the garrison were permitted to march out with the honours of war (26 July 1634).

Regensberg ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

The Austrian army of Archduke Charles which invaded Bavaria was defeated over three days at Abensberg, Landshut and Eckmühl, before retiring on the fourth day to Regensberg on the Danube. A well-judged defensive action enabled Charles to hold the city against the exhausted French until most of the Austrian army had successfully escaped towards Vienna (23 April 1809).

Rei ❙ 1194 ❙ Wars of the Great Seljuk Sultanate

See Shahr Rey

Reichenbach, Germany ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

In the aftermath of victory on the Spree at Bautzen, Napoleon Bonaparte encountered Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein's Russians again next day west of Gorlitz at Reichenbach, near Markersdorf in Saxony. In the course of a brief action, Bonaparte's favorite aide, General Geraud Duroc, was killed by a cannonball, reputedly while standing close to the Emperor (22 May 1813).

Reichenbach, Poland ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

With Russia out of the war, Frederick II of Prussia defeated Austrian Marshal Leopold von Daun at Burkersdorf in Silesia in July, then besieged the key fortress of Schweidnitz. Von Daun's last attempt to relieve the siege was heavily repulsed at Reichenbach (modern Dzierzoniow), southwest of Breslau, and Schweidnitz capitulated (9 October) securing Silesia for Frederick (16 August 1762).

Reichswald ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Months after Allied failure at Arnhem, a fresh attack was made to outflank the Siegfried Line in Holland. Anglo-Canadian forces under General Henry Crerar advanced east from Nijmegen but were stalled by heavy losses and bad weather in the Reichswald Forest. With American aid, Crerar finally cleared the forest and General Alfred Schlemm fell back across the Rhine (8 February–9 March 1945).

Reimerswaal ❙ 1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

See Walcheren

Reims ❙ 356 ❙ Alemannic Invasion of Roman Gaul

See Rheims

Reims ❙ 1359–1360 ❙ Hundred Years War
See Rheims

Reims ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)
See Rheims

Rellano (1st) ❙ 1912 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Mexican rebel Pascual Orozco turned against former ally President Francisco Madero and Federal General José González-Salas took 6,000 men north to Rellano, where his train was blown up by 800 Orozquistas under Emilio Campa. During a decisive rout with up to 300 killed, the Federal troops mutinied, fleeing southeast to Torreon, and the wounded Salas killed himself in shame (23 March 1912).

Rellano (2nd) ❙ 1912 ❙ Mexican Revolution

With Federal forces routed at Rellano in Chihuahua, hard-drinking veteran General Victoriano Huerta took a fresh government force against the rebel Pascual Orozco. Huerta repulsed a rebel force at Conejos (12 May), then northwest at Rellano, his artillery delivered a second, decisive victory. Over 200 insurgents were killed and Orozco's movement was effectively ended (22 May 1912).

Remagen ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

In fighting for the Rhineland, all bridges over the Rhine were destroyed except at Remagen, south of Cologne, where the Ludendorff Bridge was seized by an American armoured patrol just as German forces failed to fully demolish it. Five divisions crossed the vital bridge before it collapsed ten days later, opening the way for the American advance on the Ruhr Pocket (7 March 1945).

Remolina ❙ 1873 ❙ Kickapoo Indian Wars
See Nacimiento

Renchen ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As French forces under General Jean Victor Moreau advanced across the Rhine at Strasbourg, General Louis Desaix marched against Austrian General Count Anton Sztaray and 10,000 men at Renchen, north of Offenberg. The Austrians suffered a costly defeat, losing 1,200 men and ten guns, before withdrawing north to join Archduke Charles Louis' main force at Rastatt (26 June 1796).

Rennell Island ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As the Guadalcanal campaign ended, an American task force with reinforcements under Admiral Robert Giffen was intercepted to the southeast near Rennell Island by land-based torpedo bombers. A hard-fought night attack saw the American cruiser Chicago badly damaged for seven Japanese aircraft lost. Chicago was attacked again and sunk next day (29–30 January 1943).

Rennes ❙ 1356–1357 ❙ Hundred Years War

In the disputed Breton succession, English forces won a great victory at Poitiers, then Henry of Lancaster laid siege to Rennes. A relief army sent by the Dauphin Charles VII was driven off but young Betrand de Guesclin broke in with reinforcements. The siege then continued despite an official truce until Lancaster accepted a large cash tribute and withdrew (3 October 1356–5 July 1357).

Resaca ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Near the start of his march through Georgia from Chattanooga, Union commander William T. Sherman drove General Joseph E. Johnston's Confederate army off Rocky Face Ridge (11 May) then advanced south through Dalton on Resaca. While both sides lost almost 3,000 casualties in a sharp action, Johnston was unable to check the Union advance and fell back to Adairsville (13–15 May 1864).

Resaca de la Palma ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

American General Zachary Taylor advanced from the mouth of the Rio Grande to relieve besieged Fort Texas, then won at Palo Alto before meeting the main army of Mexican General Mariano Arista next day at Resaca de la Palma. Arista's force was decisively defeated and fled. When the United States officially declared war a few days later, Taylor crossed into Mexico (9 May 1846).

Resaena ❙ 243 ❙ Roman-Persian Wars

When Shapur I of Sassanid Persia continued the invasion of Roman Syria commenced by his father Ardashir, teenage Emperor Gordian III sent his father-in-law Timesitheus, who routed the Persians west of Nisibis at Resaena (modern Ras al-Ayn, Syria), effectively recovering Syria and Mesopotamia. Timesitheus then died and Gordian was defeated at Misiche (244) and murdered.

Reshire ❙ 1856 ❙ Anglo-Persian War

Britain responded to Persia's capture of Herat in Afghanistan (25 October) by sending forces to the Persian Gulf under Colonel Foster Stalker, who landed near Reshire (modern Rishahr), held by about 1,500 tribesmen. Stalker inflicted a heavy bombardment then took the fortress by a costly frontal assault, driving the Persians a few miles north towards Bushire (7–9 December 1856).

Rethel ❙ 1650 ❙ War of the 2nd Fronde

See Champ Blanc

Retief Massacre ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War

Boer leader Piet Retief resolved to negotiate with the Zulus and marched northeast from Durban in Natal with 70 men to parley with Zulu King Dingane. After several days' discussion in the Zulu capital at Gingindlovu, Retief and his entire party were suddenly seized and executed. All-out war started a few days later with an attack on the Trekker camp at Bloukranz (6 February 1838).

Réunion ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

After a previous raid at St Paul on the Indian Ocean island of Réunion (French Bourbon), British Commodore Josias Rowley returned with almost 4,000 troops under Colonel Henry Keating. They landed at key points and a rapid advance forced French Colonel Jean Ste. Susanne to surrender the island. A later British attack further east on Mauritius was defeated Grand Port (8–9 July 1810).

Reutlingen ❙ 1377 ❙ War of the Swabian League

South German cities of the Swabian League opposed Charles IV trying to secure succession for his son Wenceslas and repulsed him at Ulm (1376), then marched against his Governor, Count Eberhard of Württemberg. The Count's son Ulrich was badly beaten at Reutlingen, south of Stuttgart, and Charles had to acknowledge the liberty of the cities until his victory ten years later at Doffingen (May 1377).

Reval ❙ 1219 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion

While campaigning against the pagan Ests of the eastern Baltic, Waldemar II of Denmark—the Conqueror—was losing a battle at Reval (modern Tallinn) when the purportedly miraculous appearance of a Danish flag turned likely defeat to victory. Waldemar conquered Estonia and Denmark became the dominant power in northern Europe until defeat in 1227 at Bornhoved.

Reval ❙ 1343 ❙ Wars of the Teutonic Knights

The St George's Night Rebellion saw northern Estonians rise against their Danish and German rulers and try to besiege Reval. Master Burckhardt von Dreileben of the Livonian Order seized and hanged the insurgent leaders at truce talks then routed their army outside Reval before Swiss aid could arrive. After the rising was suppressed on Oesel, Denmark sold northern Estonia to the knights.

Reval ❙ 1570–1571 ❙ Livonian War

Tsar Ivan IV appointed Danish Prince Magnus, Duke of Holstein, as vassal King of Livonia, then sent 25,000 Russians to help Magnus and his Germans capture Reval (Tallinn in modern Estonia) from the Swedes, who had entered the war to support Poland. Despite massive assault, the city remained supplied by sea and Magnus finally had to withdraw (21 August 1570–16 March 1571).

Reval ❙ 1577 ❙ Livonian War

On a fresh campaign in Livonia, Tsar Ivan IV led 50,000 Russians in a renewed attempt to seize Reval (Tallinn in modern Estonia), defended by its courageous citizens and a Swedish garrison. After repeated costly assaults, with commander Ivan Vasilevich Sheremetev killed, the Tsar finally withdrew and turned south to vent his anger on the city of Wenden (23 January–13 March 1577).

Reval ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

Gustav III of Sweden renewed his offensive against Russia and sent a flotilla under his brother Duke Charles of Sodermanland against the Russian fleet at Reval (modern Tallinn) in Estonia. Russian Admiral Paul Vasili Tchitchakov repulsed the attack, with one Swedish ship captured and another run aground, and Duke Charles withdrew to support Gustav at Fredriksham (11 May 1790).

Revolax ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Halted by a Swedish counter-offensive at the Siikajoki (18 April), Russia's invasion of western Finland was driven further south to Revolax, where General Mikhail Bulatoff attempted to make a stand. In a major Swedish victory, General Johann Cronstedt utterly routed the Russians, who were forced to withdraw further down Finland's west coast towards Nykarleby (27 April 1808).

Rewi's Last Stand ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Orakau

Reynosa ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Withdrawing before Napoleon Bonaparte's invasion of northern Spain, General Joachim Blake fell back from his defeat at Espinosa and, two days later, found his retreat in Castile cut off at Reynosa by Marshal Nicolas Soult, marching north from his victory at Gamonal. Blake's survivors were beaten again and General Pedro La Romana was appointed in his place (13 November 1808).

Rezonville ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Mars-la-Tour

R'Fakha ❙ 1908 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

Five weeks after failure east of Casablanca at Wadi M'Koun, General Albert d'Amade was patrolling along the wadi and unwisely sent Colonel Luigné's cavalry across the river, where they were heavily ambushed on R'Fakha Ridge, losing 12 killed and 25 wounded. The main force drove the Moroccans off and the following month d'Amade attacked a camp at Bou Nouala (29 February 1908).

Rhandeia ❙ 62 ❙ Later Roman-Parthian Wars

See Arsanias

Rheims ❙ 356 ❙ Alemannic Invasion of Roman Gaul

Flavius Claudius Julianus, cousin of the Emperor Constantius, attempted to recover western territory from the Franks and Alemanni, crossing into Gaul while the Emperor was advancing up the Rhine. Marching out of camp at Rheims, the small Roman army was attacked by Alemanni tribesmen, who inflicted heavy casualties on the rearguard before Julianus was able to recover. He soon won at Sens.

Rheims ❙ 1359–1360 ❙ Hundred Years War

On his last campaign into France, Edward III of England marched from Calais to besiege Rheims, defended by Gaucher de Châtillon Comte de Porcien. Supported by Henry of Lancaster and Edward Prince of Wales, the King captured nearby towns, although Rheims held out. Edward eventually withdrew but imposed a hard peace on France (4 December 1359–15 March 1360).

Rheims ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Napoleon Bonaparte withdrew northeast through Soissons following defeat at Laon, then marched to recapture Rheims, which had fallen after the battle to an independent Russian-Prussian force under General George St Priest. Bonaparte inflicted heavy casualties retaking Rheims, but it is regarded as his last real victory. He abandoned the city days later after French defeat at Fismes (13 March 1814).

Rheims ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Marne

Rheinberg ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Wesel

Rheinfelden ❙ 1638 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Crossing the Rhine into Alsace, advance units under Bernard of Saxe-Weimar were heavily repulsed east of Basel at Rheinfelden by Imperial General Johann von Werth and Count Friedrich von Savelli, with Duke Henry of Rohan killed. A second advance saw Bernard himself win a decisive victory—capturing Werth and Savelli—and he marched on towards Breisach (28 February & 2 March 1638).

Rhineland ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

After breaching the Siegfried Line and repulsing German counter-attacks in the Ardennes and Alsace, the Allied offensive resumed in the Rhineland to clear the Colmar Pocket and advance through the Reichswald. The Germans were driven back behind the Rhine with 50,000 killed and 250,000 captured and the Allies crossed at Remagen and Wesel (8 February–21 March 1945).

Rhode Island ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

American General John Sullivan landed on Rhode Island to besiege Newport then secured Butts Hill, at the northern end of the island, where he was later counter-attacked by General Sir Robert Pigot. Sullivan repulsed the assault at nearby Quaker Hill, but with major British reinforcements arriving he abandoned his campaign and returned to Providence (29 August 1778).

Rhodes ❙ 305–304 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

In war among the successors of Alexander the Great, Demetrius Poliorcetes, son of Antigonus, seized Cyprus from Ptolemy of Egypt with victory at Salamis (306 BC) then tried to capture Rhodes, which was supported by Ptolemy. Demetrius landed with a massive force and advanced siege equipment, but after two years and costly losses, he could make no impression against heroic defence and withdrew.

Rhodes ❙ 88 BC ❙ 1st Mithridatic War

King Mithridates VI of Pontus renewed his expansion in Asia Minor, where he reportedly massacred 80,000 Roman and Italian residents, then led a force against Rhodes. Despite initial repulse at sea by the Rhodian navy, Mithridates landed but failed to take the city by storm and withdrew. His forces later lost in Greece at Piraeus, Chaeronea and Orchomenus, and he soon sued for peace.

Rhodes ❙ 654 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Mount Phoenix

Rhodes ❙ 1310 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

Following Crusader withdrawal from the Holy Land, the Knights Hospitallier of St John of Jerusalem under Grandmaster Fulke de Villaret assaulted the Byzantine island of Rhodes, off Asia Minor, disputed between Byzantines and Turks. The knights gradually secured the island and held it as a Christian outpost until they were defeated and expelled by the Turks in 1522 (15 August 1310).

Rhodes ❙ 1480 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

Ottoman Sultan Mehmed II made peace with Venice then ordered Masih Pasha against the Aegean island of Rhodes, held by the Knights of St John under Grand Master Pierre d'Aubusson. Using massive siege guns, the Turks forced their way into the town, but an unwise order against looting led the troops to withdraw and the Grand Vizier had to give up the siege (23 May–20 August 1480).

Rhodes ❙ 1522 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

After 200 years on the Aegean island of Rhodes, with a heavy siege repulsed in 1480, the Knights of St John faced a massive expedition by Ottoman Sultan Suleiman I. Five months of siege saw terrible losses on both sides before Grand Master Philip de l'Isle Adam was starved into surrender. The knights were permitted to evacuate and eventually moved to Malta (28 July–21 December 1522).

Rhodes ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

See Dardanelles

Rhyndacus ❙ 1211 ❙ 1st Latin-Byzantine Imperial War

Byzantine Emperor Theodore Lascaris in Nicaea defeated the Seljuk Turks of Rum and their Latin allies in southwest Anatolia at Antioch, then later that year met Latin Emperor Henry in the north at the Rhyndacus (modern Kemalpasa) near Bursa, where Henry won a great victory. When the rivals finally made peace and divided Asia Minor, the Latins secured northwest Anatolia (15 October 1211).

Riachuelo ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

In a bold assault across the Parana River, President Francisco Solano Lopéz of Paraguay sent his fleet under Captain Pedro Ignacio Meza against Brazilian Admiral Francisco Manuel Barroso at Riachuelo, near Corrientes, Argentina. While the Brazilians suffered heavy losses, Meza was mortally wounded and defeated. The Paraguayan invaders soon lost again at Yatay (11 June 1865).

Riade ❙ 933 ❙ Magyar Invasion of Germany

German Emperor Henry I broke a truce with the Magyar horsemen of Hungary and launched a large-scale counter-offensive, attacking the invaders on the Unstrut at Riade (modern Rothenburg). For the first time, the seemingly invincible Hungarians were routed, suffering massive casualties. They did not re-enter Germany until 20 years later, when they were routed at Lechfeld (15 March 933).

Rice's Station ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While Confederates retreating from Petersburg, Virginia, surrendered at Sayler's Creek, others under General James Longstreet reached Rice's Station, a few miles south, where they were blocked by Union forces led by General John Gibbon. Scattered fighting forced Longstreet to withdraw northwest towards High Bridge on the Appomattox River (6 April 1865).

Richmond, Kentucky ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

At the start of the Confederate offensive into Kentucky, General Edmund Kirby Smith marched north from Tennessee and met a Union force under General William Nelson, southeast of Louisville at Richmond. Nelson was routed in a bloody action, losing over 4,000 men captured. Meanwhile the main Confederate army advanced further west through Munfordville (29–30 August 1862).

Richmond, Virginia ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Determined to destroy American supplies in Virginia, British troops led by the Loyalist General Benedict Arnold secured the battery at Hood's Point near Jamestown (3 January) and marched towards Richmond on the James River, which was under the nominal command of Governor Thomas Jefferson. Arnold burned warehouses and buildings then withdrew to Portsmouth (5–7 January 1781).

Rich Mountain ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

In the first full-scale action in West Virginia after the skirmish at Philippi, Union Generals George B. McClellan and William S. Rosecrans attacked and heavily defeated Colonel John Pegram's Confederates at Rich Mountain, just northwest of Beverly. Pegram and over 500 men surrendered and General Robert S. Garnett was pursued and killed two days later at Corrick's Ford (11 July 1861).

Ridanieh ❙ 1517 ❙ Ottoman-Mamluk War

Ottoman Sultan Selim I advanced into Egypt after victory at Yaunis Khan (October 1516) and was blocked outside Cairo by Mamluk Sultan Touman Beg. The Mamluks were defeated in a desperately hard-fought battle at Ridanieh, though Selim's Vizier, Hadim Sinan, was killed. Selim then ravaged nearby Cairo and later executed Touman, ending Egypt's Mamluk Dynasty (22 January 1517).

Ridgefield ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Danbury Raid

Ridisiya ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

See Er Ridisiya

Rietfontein ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As General James Yule withdrew from Talana Hill, General Sir George White came out from Ladysmith to cover the British retreat and attacked a Boer interception force about eight miles north at Rietfontein. White lost about 100 men in an indecisive action and withdrew to Ladysmith. However, Yule's force was saved and days later White led an offensive at Nicholson's Nek (24 October 1899).

Rieti ❙ 1821 ❙ Italian Revolt against Austria

After an army revolt to depose Ferdinand IV of Naples, General Guglielmo Pepe's 10,000 Neapolitans faced a massive Austrian army of about 80,000 under Count Johann Maria Frimont. At Rieti, northwest of Rome, Pepe was crushed and banished. A further Austrian victory at Novara in April saw the King restored as Ferdinand I of the Two Sicilies (7 March 1821).

Riga ❙ 1617 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

On a fresh offensive in Livonia, a small Swedish force under Nils Stiernskold secured Dunamunde then captured the strategic Duna Redoubt outside Riga. However, the hesitant Stiernskold failed to press his attack against Riga and the Redoubt was retaken by the city's militia army. Stiernskold later changed sides to join Polish commander Krystof Radziwill (23 July–September 1617).

Riga ❙ 1621 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

Renewing war against Poland in Livonia, Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden invaded with 14,000 men and besieged Riga (in modern Latvia). A weak relief attempt by Polish General Krystof Radziwill was driven off (30 August) and after the garrison had repulsed three heavy Swedish assaults, the great fortress capitulated. It remained Swedish for nearly 90 years (4 August–15 September 1621).

Riga ❙ 1656 ❙ Russo-Swedish Wars

While Sweden was attacking Poland at Warsaw, Tsar Alexius entered Swedish-occupied Livonia, where he and Prince Yakov Kudenetovich seized several cities before being blocked at Riga (in modern Latvia). When Swedish reinforcements arrived, Magnus de la Gardie led a bloody sortie which caused very heavy Russian losses, forcing the Tsar to withdraw (July–August 1656).

Riga ❙ 1700 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Jungfernhof

Riga ❙ 1701 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Charles XII of Sweden followed his great victory over Russia at Narva (November 1700) by marching into Livonia to relieve Riga, under siege by a Russian-Polish-Saxon force under Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. The besieging force was defeated after sharp fighting and Riga did not fall to Russia until 1710, when starvation forced the city into submission (17 June 1701).

Riga ❙ 1709–1710 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

With the Swedish army destroyed at Poltava (July 1709), Tsar Peter I sent General Boris Sheremetev into Livonia to besiege Riga. After eight months, with massive losses to disease on both sides and the city pounded by a reported 8,000 Russian shells, the garrison of almost 5,000 surrendered and Sweden was finally expelled from Estonia and Livonia (December 1709–10 July 1710).

Riga ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As part of the Russian offensive around Lake Naroch, at the northern end of the Eastern Front, General Aleksei Kuropatkin attempted a subsidiary advance against Riga (in modern Latvia). The Russians lost over 10,000 men in the first few days for very little gain and, by the end of April, Colonel Georg Bruchmüller's counter-attack had retaken all lost ground (21 March–30 April 1916).

Riga ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

In the final Russo-German battle of the war, General Oskar von Hutier followed up the destruction of the Kerensky Offensive with a large-scale attack in the north around Riga. A few days of fighting saw General Valdislav Klembovsky driven out and the front smashed open. Russia's government quickly collapsed and the new Communist leaders sued for peace (1–3 September 1917).

Riga (1st) ❙ 1919 ❙ Latvian War of Independence

Shortly after revolution in Russia, Karlis Ulmanis formed an independent Latvian government but was forced out of Riga by Red Army units (3 January 1919). German General Rudiger von der Goltz then took command and his German and Latvian troops defeated and repulsed the Russians. However, after defeat further north at Cesis in June, Goltz had to withdraw from Riga (22 May 1919).

Riga (2nd) ❙ 1919 ❙ Latvian War of Independence

Despite Germany abandoning Riga after defeat at Cesis, German volunteers under Colonel Pavel Bermondt-Avalov renewed the attack on the city. Aided by Estonian troops and Anglo-French naval forces, Latvian General Janis Balodis eventually repulsed the Bermondtists. A subsequent treaty with the Soviet Russia secured recognition of Latvian independence (8 October–10 November 1919).

Riga ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With German Army Group Centre destroyed at Minsk and Vilna, Soviet Generals Ivan Bagramyan and Andrei Yeremenko converged on Army Group North in Latvia, where General Ferdinand Schörner counter-attacked strongly. However, he was forced back and the Russians seized Riga, while the Germans evacuated to the Courland Peninsula (14 September–13 October 1944).

Rijeka ❙ 1862 ❙ Turko-Montenegran Wars

Omar Pasha led a fresh Turkish invasion of Montenegro and was briefly held off at the Monastery of Ostrog by the Regent Mirko Petrovich and just a handful of men. Withdrawing towards Cetinje, Mirko attempted to make a stand to the east at Rijeka Crnojevica and was heavily defeated. The Powers once again intervened and the subsequent peace saw the Regent banished (23 August 1862).

Rimini ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

In the largest battle of the Italian campaign, the British Eighth Army under General Sir Oliver Leese attacked the Adriatic end of the Gothic Line towards the key city of Rimini, defended by General Heinrich von Vietinghoff.

Severe fighting saw Leese eventually break through the line to seize Rimini, while further west the Americans stalled at Bologna (25 August–20 September 1944).

Rimnic Sarat ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Driven out of Bucharest, Romanian commander Alexandru Averescu, with Russian support, attempted to hold Rimnic Sarat to the northeast. A massive assault by Erich von Falkenhayn smashed through the front and the Allies withdrew into Moldavia. The line stabilised along the Sareth until a Russo-Romanian counter-offensive in August 1917 towards Maracesti (22–27 December 1916).

Rimnik ❙ 1789 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

Following Turkish defeat at Focsani in July, Vizier Yusuf Pasha gathered a massive force against Russian General Alexander Suvorov and Austrian Prince Friedrich Josias of Saxe-Coburg. On the Rimnik near Martinesti (modern Maicanesti, Romania), the Turkish army was virtually destroyed. The Turks retreated to the Danube and Suvorov was created Count Rimnikski (11 September 1789).

Rincón de los Toros ❙ 1819 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Patriot leader Simón Bolívar recovered after La Puerta to secure tactical victory at Queseras del Medio, but was attacked in camp at Rincón de los Toros, northwest of Calabozo near San José, where an assassination attempt was foiled. Although Spanish commander Colonel Rafael Lopez was killed in the attack, Bolívar's infantry was virtually destroyed and he fled to Calabozo (16 April 1819).

Rincón de Vences ❙ 1847 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

When the northeastern province of Corrientes formed an alliance with Paraguay, Argentine Dictator Manuel de Rosas sent Justo José de Urquiza against his former ally Joaquín Madariaga. Southeast of Corrientes at Rincón de Vences, Urquiza secured a decisive victory. His troops looted then destroyed the town of General Paz and Madariaga fled to Brazil (27 November 1847).

Rineen ❙ 1920 ❙ Anglo-Irish War

In a well-known typical guerrilla action against Britain in Ireland, Republicans avenging the murder of Martin Devitt ambushed a Royal Irish Constabulary (Black and Tan) lorry at Dromin Hill, Rineen, in County Clare to capture rifles and ammunition. After initial success, the heavily outnumbered IRA met and defeated reinforcements and got away with their booty (22 September 1920).

Ringgold Gap ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union commander Joseph Hooker broke out of besieged Chattanooga, Tennessee, with victory at Missionary Ridge and set off southeast after the Confederates. At Ringgold Gap, on Taylor's Ridge, he ran into a brilliant rearguard action by General Patrick Cleburne, aided by Generals Lucius E. Polk and Mark P. Lowery. Their courage helped the Confederate army to get away (27 November 1863).

Ríobambo ❙ 1822 ❙ Ecuadorian War of Independence

As fighting continued in southwestern Colombia after Bomboná (7 April), Patriot leader Simón Bolívar ordered General Antonio José de Sucre to Quito in northern Ecuador. North from Guayaquil, de Sucre advanced across the Cordillera of El Azuay and led a brilliant assault on the city of Ríobambo. He then continued north towards Quito and the key action on 24 May at Pichincha (21 April 1822).

Rio Barbate ❙ 711 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain

See Guadalete

Rio Caliente ❙ 1854 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

Days after ambushing government troops at Cieneguilla in northern New Mexico, 150 Jicarilla Apache under Chacon ambushed another pursuing force under Captain James Quinn at Rio Caliente, a tributary of the Chamba. However, troops under Colonel Philip Cooke counter-attacked and Chacon fled, having lost five killed, six wounded and all his equipment and ponies (8 April 1854).

Rio Cuarto ❙ 1831 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Despite defeat at La Tablada (1829) and Oncativo (1830), Federalist leader Juan Facundo Quiroga again invaded Córdoba, where he decisively defeated the local Unitarists Juan Pascual Pringles and Juan Gualbert Echevarria at Rio Cuarto. Pringles was captured and shot ten days later at Rio Quinto by a band under Ruiz Huidobro. Quiroga then marched to Rodeo de Chacón (9 March 1831).

Rio de Janeiro ❙ 1710 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Attacking Portuguese territory in Brazil, French Captain Jean-Francois du Clerc landed near Rio de Janeiro, held by Governor Francisco de Castro de Moràes. Heavily outnumbered by a large Portuguese and local force, du Clerc was defeated and captured along with about 700 of his men. He was subsequently murdered and most of his troops died in captivity (6 August–18 September 1710).

Rio de Janeiro ❙ 1711 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Admiral René Duguay-Trouin was determined to avenge a French disaster at Rio de Janeiro, arriving the following year with eight ships and 2,800 men. After a brilliant attack, Portuguese Admiral Gaspar da Costa Ataide scuttled his fleet and Governor Francisco de Castro de Moràes surrendered the city. The French then sacked Rio and withdrew with a vast treasure (12–20 September 1711).

Riofrio ❙ 1841 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders

Amid continued fighting in southern Colombia, government troops under General Joaquín Posada Gutiérrez, supported by Manuel María Franco, met rebel forces led by Colonel Pedro Antonio Sánchez in Huila at Riofrio, east of Popayán. Sánchez suffered a heavy defeat and he was killed two months later in the bloody rebel rout at La Chanca (4–5 May 1841).

Rionegro ❙ 1851 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Facing Conservative rebellion, government forces loyal to President José Hilario López won in the south at Buesaco, then General Tomás Herrera secured the Cauca Valley and advanced north into Antioquia against rebel General Eusebio Borrero. Just southwest of Medellín at Rionegro, Borrero suffered a crushing defeat and the rising was effectively over (10 September 1851).

Río Piedras ❙ 1812 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Patriot General Manuel Belgrano was ordered to withdraw from Upper Peru towards Córdoba, but his rearguard surprised advance units of General Pío Tristán's pursuing Spanish army at Río Piedras, southeast of Salta near Metan. Colonel Eustoquio Díaz Vélez routed the Royalists in a brilliant cavalry action, encouraging Belgrano to make a stand at Tucumán (3 September 1812).

Rio Salado ❙ 1340 ❙ Later Christian Reconquest of Spain

A large-scale Muslim offensive in southern Spain saw the Nasrid Emir Yusuf I of Granada reinforced by fresh troops from Morocco to besiege Tarifa, on the Strait of Gibraltar. Supported by Alfonso IV of Portugal, Alfonso XI of Castile led a large Christian army to the relief of the city. To the west at the Rio Salado they gained a brilliant victory, repulsing the Muslim advance (30 October 1340).

Río Seco, Argentina ❙ 1821 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

During confused fighting in northwest Argentina, Francisco Ramirez of Entre Rios marched into Córdoba against Juan Bautista Bustos and was attacked on the Río Seco near San Francisco by soldiers of the Bustos ally Esta-nislao López of Santa Fe. Escaping after defeat, Ramirez returned for his lover Delfina and was captured and shot, ending years of inter-provincial war (10 July 1821).

Rio Seco, Spain ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Medina del Rio Seco

Rippach ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

In a prelude to Napoleon Bonaparte's great battle at Lützen, units of the advancing French army were blocked by the Allies between the villages of Rippach and Poserna, east of Weissenfels. Marshal Jean-Baptiste Bessières was killed outright by a cannonball in the course of a sharp action, though the French continued east for the battle next day at Lützen (1 May 1813).

Ripple Field ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

Advancing across the Severn into Gloucestershire, Royalist commander Prince Maurice encountered Parliamentarians Sir William Waller and Sir Edward Massey returning from capturing Tewkesbury. Waller had been repulsed the previous day at Little Dean and, just north of Tewkesbury at Ripple Field, Maurice inflicted a sharp defeat on the Puritans (13 April 1643).

Rivas ❙ 1855 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

Amid ongoing war between the Liberal and Legitimist parties in Nicaragua, the Liberals sought aid from the American Filibuster William Walker, who attempted to invade from Costa Rica with 55 Americans and about 100 Indian allies. His heavily outnumbered force was badly beaten near Rivas and in September Legitimist troops attacked him in camp at La Virgen (29 June 1855).

Rivas ❙ 1856 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

American adventurer William Walker was driven out of Costa Rica after defeat at Santa Rosa (20 March) and President Juan Rafael Mora and General Jose Maria Cañas pursued the Filibusters back to Rivas in Nicaragua. Walker was beaten in an action, which created the boy-martyr Juan Santamaria. The Central American Republics soon formed an alliance and drove him out of Masaya (11 April 1856).

Rivas ❙ 1857 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

Pursuing American Filibuster William Walker through western Nicaragua, Central American alliance commander José Maria Cañas defended San Jorge then attacked Walker at nearby Rivas. After costly Allied losses in a failed assault (11 April), Walker destroyed his stores and surrendered to the US Navy. In 1860 he returned from America to seize Trujillo in Honduras (23 March–1 May 1857).

River of Blood ❙ 633 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

See Ullais

River Plate ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

After sinking nine merchant ships, the German pocket battleship Graf Spee was pursued and attacked off the River Plate by Commodore Henry Harwood's cruiser squadron. The outgunned British ships suffered heavy damage before driving Graf Spee into neutral Uruguay. Three days later, Captain Hans Langsdorf scuttled his ship off Montevideo and committed suicide (13 December 1939).

Rivers' Bridge ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As Union commander William T. Sherman began his march across the Carolinas, his right wing under General Francis P. Blair was blocked at Rivers' Bridge, on the Salkehatchie just east of Savannah, South Carolina. Facing a dangerous flank attack, Confederate General Lafayette McLaws retreated north towards Branchville and Sherman continued on through Columbia (3 February 1865).

Riviera ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Six weeks after the Allied invasion of Normandy, American General Lucian Truscott invaded southern France along the Riviera between Cannes and St Tropez, where almost 100,000 men were landed for fewer than 100 killed. Truscott then raced up the Rhone Valley through Montélimar and Montrevel, while French forces swung west towards Marseilles and Toulon (15 August 1944).

Rivoli ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

A fourth attempt to relieve the French siege of Mantua saw a fresh Austrian army under Baron Josef Alvinzi advance down the Adige Valley. A complex battle east of Lake Garda at Rivoli saw Napoleon Bonaparte and General André Masséna smash the Austrians, inflicting heavy losses in casualties and prisoners. Mantua surrendered two weeks later (14 January 1797).

Rivolta ❙ 1509 ❙ War of the League of Cambrai

See Agnadello

Riyadh ❙ 1887 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

During the destructive struggle between the sons of Faisal ibn Saud of Riyadh, the sons of Saud ibn Faisal seized Riyadh and imprisoned their Uncle Emir Abd Allah, who appealed for aid to Muhammad ibn Rashid of Hail. Riyadh fell after a siege and the rebels withdrew. Abd Allah was taken prisoner to Hail and Al Rashid was appointed governor, effectively conquering the Wahhabi state.

Riyadh ❙ 1891 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

See Mulaydah

Riyadh ❙ 1902 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

Ten years after Abd al-Rahman was driven out of Riyadh by Rashidi victory at Mulaydah, his young son Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) and 40 companions returned to the city. In one of Saudi Arabia's most celebrated military exploits, they seized the fortress of Musmak, killing Governor Ajlam. In November, Abd al-Aziz defeated a Rashid counter-attack south of Riyadh at Dilam (16 January 1902).

Roanoke Island ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Ambrose E. Burnside opened his coastal expedition against North Carolina by landing over 7,000 men on Confederate Roanoke Island, defended by General Henry Wise and Senator Colonel Henry M. Shaw. During a bold action of manoeuvre, Burnside forced the surrender of more than 2,500 men and over 30 guns, then sailed south to attack New Bern (7–8 February 1862).

Roanoke River ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Albermarle Sound

Roan's Tan Yard ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Determined to secure northeastern Missouri, Union Major William M. G. Torrence marched against the Confederate camp at Roan's Tan Yard, on Silver Creek northwest of Fayette, where Colonel John A. Poindexter was reinforced by survivors from Mount Zion Church. Poindexter was routed, losing over 100 men and valuable supplies, then fled under the cover of fog (8 January 1862).

Roble ❙ 1813 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

When Chileans under Bernardo O'Higgins and José Miguel Carrera attacked the Royalist stronghold at Chillan, Spanish commander Francisco Sanchez sent Juan Antonio Olate to take the Patriots in the rear. Badly surprised at Roble on the Itata, Carrera was rescued from defeat by O'Higgins and his brother Juan José Carrera, who rallied the troops for victory (17 October 1813).

Roche-Derrien ❙ 1347 ❙ Hundred Years War

In the continuing struggle for the Dukedom of Brittany, Charles of Blois besieged Roche-Derrien, on the Jaudy, captured a year earlier by Sir Thomas Dagworth before he defeated Blois at St Pol de Léon. English Governor Richard Totsham held out until Dagworth arrived with a relief force and routed the French. Blois was captured wounded and taken to the Tower of London (20 June 1347).

Rochensalm ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Svenskund

Rochester ❙ 1088 ❙ Norman Dynastic Wars

Following the death of William the Conqueror, his half-brother Odo raised rebellion for his nephew Robert of Normandy against new King William II Rufus. Having surrendered Pevensey, Odo undertook to yield his main fortress at Rochester, then refused to do so. Rufus took the castle by storm to end the rebellion. Odo returned to Normandy and died in 1097 on Crusade (May 1088).

Rochester ❙ 1215 ❙ 1st English Barons' War

Soon after forcing King John of England to sign the Magna Carta, his Barons rebelled and William d'Aubigny of Belvoir seized Rochester Castle on the Medway in Kent, where he was forced to surrender after seven weeks' siege by John's army. The King's forces defeated his opponents again at Dover, but John died before the Royalist victory in 1217 at Lincoln (11 October–30 November 1215).

Rochester ❙ 1264 ❙ 2nd English Barons' War

Henry III and his son Prince Edward faced rebellion by Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester and defeated the Earl's son Simon the Younger at Northampton. They then marched to Rochester, where de Montfort and Gilbert Earl of Gloucester had taken the town and besieged the castle. The rebels were defeated but later renewed the siege, leading to the decisive battle at Lewes in May (April 1264).

Rockcastle Hills ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Camp Wild Cat

Rock Island Rapids ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

Soon after British forces recovered Fort Shelby at Prairie du Chien, 400 Sauk, Fox and Kickapoo Indians pursued the American gunboat Governor Clark down the Mississippi. At Rock Island Rapids they attacked a relief force approaching too late under Captain John Campbell, who suffered 35 casualties and heavy damage to his boats and was forced to return to St Louis (July 1814).

Rock River ❙ 1832 ❙ Black Hawk Indian War

With Sauk Chief Black Hawk raiding east of the Mississippi, Generals Henry Atkinson and Samuel Whiteside sent advance units under Major Isaiah Stillman, who opened fire on a truce party on the Rock River, south of Rockford, Illinois. Attacking Black Hawk and just 40 warriors, the 275 militiamen lost 12 killed and fled. Black Hawk was later repulsed at the Pecatonica (14 May 1832).

Rocky Face Ridge ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

At the start of his offensive through Georgia towards Atlanta, Union commander William T. Sherman marched southeast from Chattanooga against General Joseph E. Johnston's Confederate army along the well-defended Rocky Face Ridge. While Sherman suffered heavy losses in repeated attacks, Johnston eventually abandoned nearby Dalton and withdrew south to Resaca (8–11 May 1864).

Rocky Mount ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Rebel Colonel Thomas Sumter was encouraged by success at Williamson's Plantation (12 July) and advanced on the British outpost at Rocky Mount, South Carolina, northwest of their main base at Camden. Attempting to storm a well-defended position held by Tory militia under Colonel George Turnbull, Sumter was repulsed and instead turned east against Hanging Rock (1 August 1780).

Rocoux ❙ 1747 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

With Prussia out of the war, Prince Charles of Lorraine took his Austrian army against France in the Netherlands, where he and his Dutch allies came under attack by Marshal Maurice de Saxe at Rocoux, just north of Liège. The Austrian Prince was defeated with over 5,000 casualties. Despite the return of his English allies, he lost again the following year at Lauffeld (11 October 1746).

Rocroi ❙ 1643 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

General Francisco de Mello invaded France from the Spanish Netherlands and besieged Rocroi, west of the Meuse near Mézières. Attacked by a French relief force under 22-year-old Louis II Duke d'Enghien, the Spanish infantry suffered one of its most decisive defeats, with a reported 8,000 killed and 7,000 captured. Louis then marched southeast against Thionville (19 May 1643).

Roda ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As French General Honoré Rielle campaigned to secure Catalonia, he sent General Jean Raymond Bourke against Baron Jaime Eroles, who had taken a strong defensive position at Roda, near the Noguera Ribagorzana, north of Lérida. Despite much greater numbers, Bourke was heavily repulsed in an unwise frontal assault and Eroles continued to divert Rielle's offensive (5 March 1812).

Rodeo de Chacón ❙ 1831 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Federalist leader Juan Facundo Quiroga recovered from defeat at La Tablada and Oncativo to win in Córdoba at Rio Cuarto (9 March), then marched west into Mendoza against Unitarist Governor José Videla Castilla. Near Las Catitas at Rodeo de Chacón, Videla Castilla suffered a decisive defeat and fled to Bolivia, while Quiroga won again in November at La Ciudadela (28 March 1831).

Rodeo del Medio ❙ 1841 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Shortly after Unitarist defeat at Famaillá, another force opposed to Dictator Manuel de Rosas under General Gregorio Araoz Lamadrid attempted to march into Mendoza and was caught at Rodeo del Medio, southeast of Mendoza, by converging Rosas armies under Generals Angel Pacheco, José Felix Aldao, and Juan Antonio Benavídez. Lamadrid was routed and fled to Chile (24 September 1841).

Rogensalm ❙ 1789 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Svenskund

Rohilla ❙ 1621 ❙ Early Mughal-Sikh Wars

An early campaign against the growing influence of the Sikhs saw 4,000 Mughal troops sent to northern Punjab to support local Governor Abdul Khan against Guru Hargobind. Although Sikh General Jattu died in heavy fighting northeast of Amritsar at Rohilla, Abdul Khan was defeated and killed, along with his sons Nabi Bakhsh and Karim Bakhsh, greatly enhancing the Sikh cause.

Rohtas ❙ 1795 ❙ Punjab Campaigns of Shah Zaman

Shah Zaman of Kabul advanced into the Punjab and seized Hassan Abdal, then attacked the fortress of Rohtas, near the Jhelum, held by the young Sikh leader Ranjit Singh. After failing to gain Maratha support, the Sikhs fled to the hills and Shah Zaman seized Rohtas. However, he was later forced to return home to deal with threatened insurrection (November–December 1795).

Roi-Namur ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Opening the offensive in the Marshall Islands, General Harry Schmidt attacked Roi and Namur, on the northern edge of the massive Kwajalein Atoll. The twin islets, joined by a causeway, were taken after heavy fighting, which cost over 750 Marine casualties. The Japanese lost about 3,500, many of them in the massive preliminary bombardment (1–3 February 1944).

Rokuhara ❙ 1160 ❙ Heiji War

Minamoto Yoshitomo helped suppress a coup at Shirakawa (1156) then joined Fujiwara No-buyori to seize Japan's Imperial Palace at Kyoto, capturing Emperor Nijo and murdering Counsellor Fujiwara Michinori. Just southeast of Kyoto at Rokuhara, Taira Kiyomori crushed the rising and killed both rebels, reasserting Taira power until the disaster in 1185 at Dannoura (4 February 1160).

Rolica ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When a British force under General Sir Arthur Wellesley landed at Mondego Bay in central Portugal, French General Androche Junot sent General Henri Delaborde to delay the invasion while he concentrated his forces north of Lisbon. The heavily outnumbered French were beaten in a courageous action at Rolica before withdrawing south in good order to join Junot at Vimeiro (17 August 1808).

Romagnano ❙ 1524 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

See Sesia

Romainville ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Paris

Romani ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

A large German-Turk army under Colonel Friedrich von Kressenstein, advancing west towards the Suez Canal, retook Katia and threatened Romani. After a confused assault, Australian and New Zealand forces under General Harry Chauvel counter-attacked and the Turks were driven off with about 8,000 casualties. They then fell back through Magdhaba and Rafa to Palestine (4–5 August 1916).

Romanov ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

At the beginning of Napoleon Bonaparte's advance into Russia, Polish cavalry leading General Marie Latour-Mauberge's Corps were ambushed southwest of Minsk at Romanov (modern Dzerzhinsk) by Cossack General Matvei Platov, who had been driven off further west at Mir. The Poles lost over 200 men before the main force arrived and the Russians withdrew (15 July 1812).

Rome ❙ 505 BC ❙ Early Roman-Etruscan Wars

This semi-legendary battle saw Lars Porsena, King of Clusium, besiege Rome in support of the deposed last Roman King, Tarquinius. At the nearby hill of Janiculum, the outnumbered Romans were driven back across the Tiber, their escape made possible by the mythic defence of the bridge by Horatius Cocles. Some historians now believe Lars Porsena went on to capture the city (trad date 505 BC).

Rome ❙ 408–410 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

Following the murder of the great Roman-Vandal General Stilicho, Alaric the Visigoth led a new invasion of Italy and besieged Rome. With nearby Ostia captured (409) and the breakdown of negotiations with Emperor Honorius, Alaric seized Rome and put it to the sack. However, he died soon afterwards and his brother-in-law Ataulf took the Goths against Roman Gaul (408–24 August 410).

Rome ❙ 455 ❙ Roman-Vandal Wars

With the Western Empire unstable following the murder of Valentinian, his widow Eudoxia sought aid from the Vandal King Gaiseric against the murderer and usurper Petronius Maximus. Arriving from Carthage, Gaiseric attacked Rome itself. Petronius Maximus was killed and the Vandals sacked and plundered the city before returning with Eudoxia to North Africa (2–16 June 455).

Rome ❙ 472 ❙ Fall of the Western Roman Empire

The Suevic king-maker Ricimer established Anthemius as Emperor, then fell out with his nominee and attacked Rome, supported by Burgundian allies and the German Odoacer. Rome fell after five months of siege and defeat of a relief army from Gaul under Bilimer. Anthemius was killed, but Ricimer also died soon afterwards.

After years of chaos Odoacer won at Pavia in 476 to secure Italy.

Rome ❙ 537–538 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

A yearlong defence of Rome saw General Belisarius hold out against a massive army under the Goth King Witiges. The Goths suffered costly losses in attacks and counter-attacks during the siege and, when heavy Roman reinforcements arrived from the east, Witiges withdrew under siege to his capital at Ravenna (1 March 537–12 March 538).

Rome ❙ 545–546 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

During the fresh Goth offensive in Italy, which began under their new King Totila, Rome changed hands several times. However, the key campaign began in May 545 when Totila imposed a renewed siege of the city. After driving off a relief force under the famous General Belisarius, Totila launched his final assault and took the city by storm (May 545–17 December 546).

Rome ❙ 849 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Ostia

Rome ❙ 1167 ❙ Wars of the Lombard League

In support of Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, Archbishops Rainald of Cologne and Christian of Mainz invaded central Italy and defeated a Papal army outside Rome (29 March). The Emperor himself joined the siege in July and, after another defeat, the city finally submitted. However, the German army was struck by a terrible pestilence and withdrew in disarray (March–August 1167).

Rome ❙ 1527 ❙ 2nd Habsburg-Valois War

Francis I of France repudiated a treaty made following battle at Pavia (1525) and once again invaded Italy against the Imperial army of Charles, Duke of Bourbon. To punish Pope Clement VII for supporting France, Duke Charles led Spanish and German troops in a terrible sack of Rome. Although the Duke died in the assault, the Pope recognised Charles V of Spain as Emperor (6 May 1527).

Rome ❙ 1849 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

When a Republic was declared in Rome, France sent 8,000 troops under General Nicolas Oudinot to besiege the city, which was held by 20,000 men, including 5,000 followers of Giuseppe Garibaldi. After an initial repulse, and a second reinforced attack driven off a month later, Oudinot eventually forced the city to capitulate. Garibaldi fled to America (30 April–2 July 1849).

Rome ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Liri Valley

Rometta ❙ 1038 ❙ Later Byzantine-Muslim Wars

The great Byzantine commander George Maniakes led a determined attack on Muslim Sicily with a force including Normans from Italy and Varangians under King Harald Hardrada of Norway. A long campaign saw Maniakes capture Messina then secure a bloody victory at nearby Rometta. He was recalled to Constantinople in 1040 to meet the Bulgarians and the Muslims recovered Sicily.

Roncesvalles ❙ 778 ❙ Wars of Charlemagne

After a campaign against Muslim northern Spain, Charlemagne, King of the Franks, was returning through the Pyrenees to put down a Saxon revolt when the rearguard of his army was attacked by Christian Basques. While the ambush at Roncesvalles was no major battle, the death of the King's nephew Roland was glorified in the epic poem "The Song of Roland" (15 August 778).

Roncesvalles ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," French General Honoré Reille met British General Sir Lowry Cole west of Roncesvalles on the Linduz Plateau, while General Bertrand

Clausel met General Sir John Byng to the east near Altobiscar. As at Maya the same day, the outnumbered Allies fell back, though only after delaying the French advance on Pamplona (25 July 1813).

Roodewal, Cape Province ❙ 1802 ❙ 3rd Cape Frontier War

Amid renewed fighting in eastern Cape Province, Boer commander Tjaart van der Walt led the Swellendam commando against the fortified village at Roodewal (Rooiwal) on the Sundays River, held by a large Xhosa force under Klaas Stuurman. After ten days of fruitless attack, with his son killed, van der Walt agreed to an armistice, but fighting soon resumed along the Sundays (13 February 1802).

Roodewal, Orange Free State ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

On campaign southwest of Johannesburg, Christiaan de Wet captured a convoy at Heilbron, attacked Vredefort Station, then attacked the supply dump and railway station at Roodewal, forcing the garrison to surrender. After inflicting over 150 casualties and capturing almost 500 prisoners, de Wet seized what he could carry, then burned a massive quantity of supplies and mail (7 June 1900).

Roodewal, Transvaal ❙ 1902 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

The last major action of the war saw Boers under Jan Kemp and Commandant Ferdinand J. Potgieter attack 3,000 men armed with field guns under Colonel Robert Kekewich at Roodewal, in the western Transvaal south of Tweebosch. Recklessly charging over open ground, the Boers suffered terrible losses, including Potgieter killed. Peace talks resumed and the war soon ended (11 April 1902).

Rooilaagte ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Graspan

Rooiwal ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Roodewal, Orange Free State

Roosebeke ❙ 1382 ❙ Hundred Years War

In a Flemish popular uprising, Philip van Artevelde captured Bruges (3 May) before joining workers from Ghent at Roosebeke, east of Brussels. The untrained artisan army was crushed by Louis II, the French Count of Flanders, with massive losses, including van Arteveldt—whose father led a similar rising 80 years before. Bruges was retaken and Ghent fell a few weeks later (27 November 1382).

Rorke's Drift ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

On the same day as the British rout at Isandhlwana, about 4,000 Zulus besieged just 139 soldiers and 50 Natal native auxiliaries under Lieutenants John Chard and Gonville Bromhead further west at Rorke's Drift. In one of the British army's most celebrated defences—with 11 Victoria Crosses won—the Zulus were held off and withdrew at dawn with about 400 dead (22–23 January 1879).

Rosaires ❙ 1898 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

See Dakhila

Rosas ❙ 1645 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Henri Comte d'Harcourt replaced Philippe de la Motte-Houdancourt as French commander in Spain after failure at Lérida (1644) and besieged the coastal fortress town of Rosas, northeast of Barcelona, supported by Cesar de Choiseul du Plessis-Praslin. Rosas was forced to capitulate after stubborn resistance, but Harcourt failed a year later at Lérida and was recalled (2 April–28 May 1645).

Rosas ❙ 1794–1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

With Spanish invasion of France repulsed, French forces invaded Catalonia to capture Figueras (18 November) and General Claude Victor moved against the seemingly weaker city of Rosas, a few miles east. However, the 4,000-strong Spanish garrison fought on for two months. By the time the port fell, most of the garrison had escaped by sea (December 1794–3 February 1795).

Rosas ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Advancing into Spain to relieve the siege of Barcelona, French General Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr was blocked at the coastal port of Rosas, defended by Governor Pedro O'Daly. The town stubbornly resisted for a month, supported by British naval Captain Lord Thomas Cochrane, before it finally fell. St-Cyr then moved on towards Barcelona (7 November–4 December 1808).

Rosbach ❙ 1382 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Roosebeke

Rosbecque ❙ 1382 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Roosebeke

Rosburgh ❙ 1460 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

See Roxburgh

Rosebud ❙ 1876 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

At war with the Sioux in southeast Montana, General George Crook and about 1,000 men were attacked on the Rosebud River, outside modern Kirkby. Although Crook claimed victory, he had lost 28 dead and 56 wounded in very heavy fighting and was forced to withdraw. Encouraged by his success, Crazy Horse launched his famous attack a week later at Little Big Horn (17 June 1876).

Rosetta ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

To undermine the Ottoman Empire, now supporting France, Britain unwisely sent General Alexander Mckenzie Fraser to seize Egypt. After capturing Alexandria (21 March), Fraser took a force against Rosetta (modern Rashid), where he was routed by Mehemet Ali Pasha. A treaty was arranged—with British prisoners returned—and the disastrous expedition withdrew three days later (20 April 1807).

Roshangaon ❙ 1616 ❙ Mughal-Ahmadnagar Wars

While campaigning in central India, Mughal Emperor Jahangir sent his son Prince Parwiz and General Shah-Nawaz Khan against a large army raised by Malik Ambar, Minister of Ahmadnagar. Ambar suffered a crushing defeat on the Dudhna, west of Jalna at Roshangaon, though he kept fighting the Mughals for many years and was eventually avenged in 1624 at Bhatavadi (4 February 1616).

Rosillo ❙ 1813 ❙ Gutiérrez-Magee Expedition

The army of Spanish Texas withdrawing from La Bahía tried to block Republican Bernardo Gutiérrez and American Filibusters under Samuel Kemper (following the death of Augustus Magee). Near the Rosillo, southeast of San Antonio, Royalist commander Simón de Herrera and Governor Manuel Maria de Salcedo were decisively defeated, then executed after surrendering (29 March 1813).

Roslin ❙ 1303 ❙ William Wallace Revolt

At the expiry of a truce with Scotland, Edward I sent a large army under Sir John de Segrave advancing towards Edinburgh. Just to the south at Roslin, the English were attacked and destroyed by Sir Simon Fraser and John Comyn the Younger, nephew of King John Baliol. King Edward himself then captured Edinburgh and in mid-1304 defeated the rebellious Scots at Stirling (24 February 1303).

Rossbach ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Fredrick II of Prussia marched west to counter the Allied invasion of Saxony and secured a decisive victory at Rossbach, southwest of Leipzig. Supported by cavalry General Friedrich von Seydlitz, Frederick routed Austrian Prince Joseph of Saxe-Hildburghausen and the French of Duke Charles of Soubise, then hastened east to meet another Austrian army at Leuthen (5 November 1757).

Rostov ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

When the Ukraine seceded from Russia, Red General Vladimir Antonov-Ovseyenko stormed into the Don Basin (10 January) and Don Cossack Ataman Aleksei Kaledin killed himself in despair. The key city of Rostov fell after heavy fighting, followed by nearby Novocherkassk. White General Anton Denikin withdrew to the Kuban and in July attacked Ekaterinodar (22–24 February 1918).

Rostov ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

The decisive battle for the Don Basin saw Anton Denikin's White Army try to defend the last key cities against Red General Aleksandr Yegorov. Over two days of terrible fighting, Novocherkassk fell with huge losses in men and equipment and Rostov fell with further losses, including over 10,000 prisoners. The Reds then invaded the Kuban through Torgovaya (7–9 January 1920).

Rostov ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Following the fall of Kiev, Marshal Gerd von Rundstedt drove southeast on Rostov, taken after heavy fighting by General Ewald von Kleist (21 November) before Russian Marshal Symeon Timoshenko launched a massive counter-attack. Refusing Hitler's order to stand firm, Rundstedt withdrew (and resigned days later) giving Russia her first major victory (9–29 November 1941).

Rostov ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

German Army Group A under Marshal Wilhelm List opened an offensive south from Kharkov and crossed the Don towards Rostov. Attacked from the vulnerable northeast, Rostov fell amid widespread panic, opening the way into the Caucasus. Six months later Rostov was used for withdrawal following Germany's failed Caucasus campaign and surrender at Stalingrad (15–23 July 1942).

Rotebro ❙ 1497 ❙ Wars of the Kalmar Union

King John I of Denmark resolved to secure his birthright in Sweden and made peace with Grand Prince Ivan III of Moscow, then led German mercenaries and rebel Swedish nobles against Chancellor Sten Sture, who had ruled since Brunkeberg (1471). Sture was defeated north of Stockholm at Rotebro and John secured Sweden's throne, but lost it at Hemmingstedt in 1500 (28 September 1497).

Rotorua ❙ 1870 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Waikorowhiti

Rotterdam ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

As Germany invaded the Lowlands, airborne forces led a lightning assault on the Netherlands and the Dutch Queen and government fled to Britain. German bombers then launched an unprecedented terror raid on Rotterdam. The air attack cost very heavy civilian casualties in killed or wounded and General Henri Winkelman surrendered next day to avoid further casualties (10–14 May 1940).

Rottofredo ❙ 1746 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

After victory near Piacenza (16 June), Austrian commander Prince Joseph Wenzel von Lichtenstein pursued the French and attacked their rearguard at nearby Rottofredo. While both sides suffered costly casualties, French Marshal Jean-Baptiste Desmarets Marquis de Maillebois was beaten. The garrison of Piacenza surrendered and France effectively abandoned Italy (12 August 1746).

Rottweil ❙ 1643 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Reinforced by infantry and cavalry under General Josias von Rantzau, French Marshal Jean-Baptiste Guébriant led the army of Weimar east across the Rhine into Württemberg and besieged Rottweil, 40 miles northeast of Freiburg. The city was forced to capitulate, but Guébriant died of a wounds. France lost Rottweil after defeat at Tuttlingen just a few days later (19 November 1643).

Roubaix ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Tourcoing

Rouen ❙ 1418–1419 ❙ Hundred Years War

Seizing much of Normandy after victory at Agincourt (1415), Henry V of England captured Caen then advanced up the Seine against Rouen. The city, which had a powerful garrison but little food, surrendered after a seven-month siege and widespread starvation. Shortly afterwards, Henry married the daughter of the King of France and was recognised as his heir (29 July 1418–19 January 1419).

Rouen ❙ 1449 ❙ Hundred Years War

Charles VII of France ended a five-year truce and invaded English Normandy, where he attacked Rouen. Despite support by John Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, the incompetent Edmund Beaufort Duke of Somerset was defeated and surrendered the city, handing Shrewsbury over as a hostage. Further English defeat at Formigny six months later led directly to the loss of Normandy (29 October 1449).

Rouen ❙ 1562 ❙ 1st French War of Religion

Following the massacre of Protestants at Vassy (1 March), Huguenots led by Louis I de Bourbon Prince of Condé seized cities, including Rouen, which was then besieged by Catholic commander Francis de Guise. Despite aid from England, Rouen fell, leading to battle at Dreux in December. Condé's brother, Anthony of Navarre, died fighting on the Catholic side (26 October 1562).

Rouen ❙ 1591–1592 ❙ 9th French War of Religion

After a failed siege of Catholic Paris, Protestant forces under Henry of Navarre invested Rouen, held for the Holy League by Governor Pierre de Villars. While Henry left to meet the Spanish relief force at Aumâle, Villars led a brilliant sortie against Marshal Charles Biron (24 February). The reimposed siege was relieved after two months by the Duke of Parma (November 1591–21 April 1592).

Roulers ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Austrian Count Charles von Clerfayt advanced to relieve the French siege of the Netherlands city of Ypres and sent his left wing through the village of Roulers, where the French were defeated and lost many guns and prisoners. Further south at Hooglede, Clerfayt's right wing was defeated and repulsed by General Charles Pichegru. Ypres capitulated the following day (16 June 1794).

Roumeli ❙ 1948 ❙ Greek Civil War

On the offensive in south central Greece, 20,000 government troops under General Thrasyvoulos Tsakalotos began a sweep through the Roumeli Mountains. Heavy fighting at Artotina and in the Mornos Valley near Lidoriki cost 640 insurgents killed and 1,300 captured, as well as 145 government casualties. Tsakalotos then moved north against Grammos (15 April–7 May 1948).

Round Island ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Yellow Sea

Round Mountain ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate Colonel Douglas H. Cooper followed failed peace talks by attacking Chief Opothleyahola and a large band of pro-Union Creeks and Seminoles in camp at Round Mountain, near the Red Fork of the Arkanas in Oklahoma. The so-called first Indian battle of the Civil War was indecisive and Opothleyahola withdrew northeast towards Bird Creek (19 November 1861).

Roundway Down ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

Retiring on Devizes after the costly battle at Lansdown (5 July), the wounded Royalist Sir

Ralph Hopton was besieged by Sir William Waller from nearby Roundway Down. Caught between Hopton's Cornish garrison and a large cavalry relief force led by Henry Wilmot, the Parliamentarians surrendered, losing 600 killed, 800 prisoners and all their guns and ammunition (13 July 1643).

Rouvray ❙ 1429 ❙ Hundred Years War

During the English siege of Orleans, a wagon convoy of supplies commanded by Sir John Fastolfe (including barrels of fish for Lent) was attacked at Rouvray, east of Avallon, by a French-Scottish force under Etienne de Vignolles "La Hire" and Count Charles of Clermont. The attackers were driven off with heavy losses in an action known as the "Battle of the Herrings" (12 February 1429).

Roveredo ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Within weeks of being repulsed at Lonato and Castiglione, Austrian General Dagobert Wurmser made a fresh attempt to relieve the French siege of Mantua, but once again ill-advisedly split his force. Marching east of Lake Garda, Napoleon Bonaparte drove General Paul Davidovich out of Roveredo before his decisive victory over Davidovich next day at Calliano (4 September 1796).

Rovine ❙ 1395 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Facing rebellion in Romania, Ottoman Sultan Bayazid sent Yildirim Khan across the Arges and west of Arad at Rovine Prince Mircea of Wallachia was defeated (though the reluctant Ottoman ally Marko Kraljevic of Serbia was killed). Bayazid then executed John Sisman of Trnovo to put Vlad on the Wallachian throne. In 1396 the Sultan defeated a Christian Crusade at Nicopolis (17 May 1395).

Rowde Ford ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

As wounded Royalist General Sir Ralph Hopton withdrew following Lansdown, Prince Maurice ordered Major Walter Slingsby with Mohun's Cornish Regiment of Foot to hold a ford on the Rowde, commanding the road from Chippenham. The rearguard held the line at heavy cost as Hopton fell back on Devizes. Days later the Parliamentarians were routed at Roundway Down (9 July 1643).

Rowlett's Station ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Determined to destroy the newly repaired bridge on the Green River near Woodsonville, in eastern Kentucky, Confederate General Thomas C. Hindman attacked Indiana German volunteers under Colonel August Willich, north of the river at Rowlett's Station. While both sides withdrew after inconclusive fighting, the important railway line was secured for the Union (17 December 1861).

Rowley Burn ❙ 634 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Heavenfield

Rowton Heath ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

King Charles I was marching from Oxford to relieve the Parliamentary siege of Chester, when he was taken in the rear at nearby Rowton Heath by the Yorkshire Horse of Parliamentary General Sydenham Poyntz. The advancing Royalist force was driven off with 600 killed and 800 prisoners lost and the King then withdrew to Oxford for the winter (24 September 1645).

Roxburgh ❙ 1314 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

As Scotland secured her border areas following victory at Loudon Hill in 1307, Robert the Bruce sent Sir James "Black" Douglas against the large and powerful border town of Roxburgh. Lacking men to capture the castle by storm, Douglas took advantage of drunken Shrove Tuesday celebrations and scaled the walls at night to surprise and overwhelm the garrison (6 March 1314).

Roxburgh ❙ 1436 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

In response to an English invasion, driven back at Piperdean (10 September), James I of Scotland took his army to besiege Roxburgh. After 15 days he was ignominiously driven off by Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland and was soon murdered by his own Barons. Coincidentally, the King's son died 24 years later in another siege of the same border fortress (October 1436).

Roxburgh ❙ 1460 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

James II of Scotland crushed the Douglas Rebellion at Arkinholm (May 1455) then moved against the last English outposts and besieged the border town of Roxburgh. During an otherwise insignificant action, a misloaded cannon accidentally exploded and the King standing nearby was killed instantly. Roxburgh fell a few days later and was completely destroyed (August 1460).

Royushan ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Hill 203

Ruapekapeka ❙ 1845–1846 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

Following costly repulse at Ohaewai, near Waimate, Colonel Henry Despard took 1,100 men against Hone Heke and Kawiti further east at Ruapekapeka. After heavy bombardment, the fortified pa was taken with about 42 European casualties and unknown Maori losses. Heke and Kawiti sued for peace and were later pardoned, ending war in the far north (27 December 1845–11 January 1846).

Rubio-Ñu ❙ 1869 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Acosta-Ñu

Ruddle's Station ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Colonel William Byrd led a Loyalist offensive into Kentucky, taking about 1,000 men—mainly Wyandot Indians—against Ruddle's Station in Harrison County, then against Martin's Station in Bourbon County, killing about 200 men, women and children. Unable to control his Indians, Byrd withdrew. The Wyandot attacked again two years later at Little Mountain (20 & 28 June 1780).

Rudnik Ridges ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

See Kolubara

Rudsar ❙ 1757 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

See Lahijan

Rueda ❙ 981 ❙ Later Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

Renewing the Muslim offensive in central Spain, Vizier Ibn Abi-Amir invaded Leon and sacked Zamora before marching east to Rueda, where Ramiro III of Leon was decisively defeated and later deposed. Leon became a Muslim tributary and the Vizier took the name Al-Mansor—the Victorious—by which title he became known as one of Islam's greatest warriors in Spain.

Rufiji Delta ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

Having sunk the British cruiser Pegasus at Zanzibar (29 September 1914), the German cruiser Königsberg (Captain Max Loof) was driven deep into the swampy Rufiji Delta, south of Dar Es Salaam. After a prolonged blockade and fruitless pursuit, British Admiral Herbert King-Hall sent the monitors Severn and Mersey, which shelled Königsberg and sank her in the mud (11 July 1915).

Rügen ❙ 1168 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion

See Arkona

Rugley's Mill ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As rebel General Daniel Morgan began an offensive in South Carolina, he sent Colonel William Washington against Tory Colonel Henry Rugley at his home near modern Clermont. After failing to take the Tory defensive position by force, Washington used a fake gun to deceive the garrison into surrender and over 100 Tory militia were captured (4 December 1780).

Ruhr ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Aldenhoven

Ruhr ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

American Generals William Simpson and Courtney Hodges advanced from the Rhine, closing from Wesel and Remagen to surround Germany's Army Group B on the Ruhr, where the encirclement closed at Lippstadt (1 April). After heavy fighting, Marshal Walther Model shot himself and 320,000 men were captured, contributing directly to the fall of Berlin (28 March–21 April 1945).

Ruiya ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Marching north from Lucknow against the fort at Ruiya, ten miles east of the Ganges, General Robert Walpole ignored intelligence that rebel commander Nirpat Singh was considering surrender and ordered a disastrous frontal assault. This blunder cost 57 British dead, including Brigadier Adrian Hope, before the rebels evacuated next day and were pursued to Sirsa (15 April 1858).

Rullion Green ❙ 1666 ❙ Scottish Covenanter Rebellion

See Pentland Hills

Rumaithah ❙ 1920 ❙ Iraqi Revolt

When Arab insurgents besieged Rumaithah, on the Shatt al Hillah south of Baghdad, a relief force under Colonel Donald McVean was driven off with heavy losses (7 July). A larger column under General Frank Coningham later fought their way in to save Captain Harry Bragg's starving garrison. The town was evacuated next day and the revolt rapidly spread south to Samawah (1–20 July 1920).

Rumani ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

See Romani

Ruovesi ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

Russian Colonel Mikhail Svetchnikov led a renewed offensive on the Vilppula front, advancing west from Ruovesi towards Kankanpää against Whites under Colonel Ernst Linder. Later reinforced by troops from Aland, Linder led a brilliant weeklong defense and by month's end the poorly co-ordinated Red offensive had ground to a halt (21–28 February 1918).

Ruschuk (1st) ❙ 1811 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Defeated at Loftche in February, Grand Vizier Ahmed Pasha led fresh forces to the Danube and was overcome in battle at Ruschuk (modern Ruse) by General Mikhail Kutuzov. However, the Russian commander was forced to abandon the city. After destroying its defences he withdrew across the river to nearby Slobodzeya, where he routed the Turks in October to retake Ruschuk (4 July 1811).

Ruschuk (2nd) ❙ 1811 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

In a fresh offensive on the Danube, Ottoman Grand Vizier Ahmed Pasha was defeated at Ruschuk (modern Ruse) by General Mikhail Kutuzov, who withdrew across the river. Three months later Kutuzov destroyed the Turkish army in a powerful counter-offensive at nearby Slobodzeya and retook Ruschuk. More than 12,000 Turks surrendered and Turkey sued for peace (15 October 1811).

Rushen ❙ 1314 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

Seven years after victory at Loudon Hill, Robert the Bruce crossed to the Isle of Man against Duncan McDougal of Galloway, who had captured the Scottish leader's brothers Thomas and Alexander at Lochryan (February 1307) and delivered them for execution to Edward II of England. At Rushen Castle McDougal was routed and Bruce imposed his rule on the island (June 1314).

Rush Springs ❙ 1858 ❙ Comanche Indian Wars

Following Texas Ranger success in Indian Territory at Antelope Hills (12 May), Major Earl van Dorn crossed the Red River and attacked Buffalo Hump at Rush Springs, southwest of modern Oklahoma City. A dawn attack saw van Dorn severely wounded, but 56 Comanche men, women and children were killed, with massive supplies and the Indian pony herd captured (1 October 1858).

Ruspina ❙ 46 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Julius Caesar defeated Pompey at Pharsalus (48 BC), then landed in Tunisia against Pompey's sons and their ally King Juba of Numidia. After months preparing, Caesar marched towards Utica and was surprised at Ruspina (modern Monastir) by Titus Labienus and Marcus Petreius. Caesar was saved by a brilliant battle of manoeuvre and marched to victory in February at Thapsus (3 January 46 BC).

Russian ❙ 1850 ❙ Pit River Indian War

Sent to northern California to punish the Pit River Indians for killing Captain William Warner and two white settlers, Captain Nathaniel Lyon dealt out terrible retribution at Clear Lake and a few days later marched west to the Russian River against another band of about 100. Trapped in a swampy area, few of the Indians escaped alive, but Captain Warner's murderers were never found (19 May 1850).

Rustaq ❙ 1955 ❙ Imam Revolt

Sultan Said ibn Taymur of Muscat faced rebellion by Imam Ghalib ibn Ali of Oman and took the rebel capital Nizwa. He then sent his Bartinah force under Colonel Colin Maxwell against Ghalib's brother Talib at Rustaq, on the northern slopes of the Jebel Akhdar. After Maxwell besieged and stormed the fortress, Ghalib abdicated and Talib fled into exile (12–15 December 1955).

Rustumiyah ❙ 1920 ❙ Iraqi Revolt

Indian troops and a company of the Manchester Regiment attempting to relieve Kifl, south of Baghdad, set out from Hillah under Colonel Richard Hardcastle. Attacked by Arab insurgents at the Rustumiyah Canal, the "Manchester Column" lost 20 killed, 60 wounded and 160 captured and fled back to Hillah. Captain George Henderson won a posthumous Victoria Cross (24 July 1920).

Rutherford's Farm ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Stephenson's Depot

Ruthven ❙ 1306 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

See Methven

Rutland ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Irish Rising)

In support of Irish rebellion, rebel James Napper Tandy and 270 French troops in the corvette Anacreon broke through the British naval blockade and landed on Rutland Island, off Donegal, with guns and artillery. The town was captured without bloodshed, but hearing of the French defeat at Ballinamuck, they sailed away—ending the last French landing on British soil (16 September 1798).

Rutland Stockade ❙ 1847 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

Withdrawing from Boulcott's Farm, near Wellington, Topine Te Mamaku returned north to threaten Wanganui, protected by the Rutland Stockade, built by Captain Joseph Laye. To avenge the execution of four Maoris for killing a settler family, Te Mamaku and 30 men attacked Rutland and other stockades. He was bravely repulsed but attacked again in July at St John's Wood (19 May 1847).

Ryabaya Mogila ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

A new Russian offensive in the Balkans saw General Pyotr Rumyantsev cross the Pruth with 37,000 men, and at Ryabaya Mogila he attacked the Turks under Abaza Pasha and Crimean Khan Kaplan Girai. With Rumyantsev advancing in a dispersed square formation, General Grigori Potemkin's reserves took the Turks in the rear and they fled downstream towards Larga (17 June 1770).

Ryazan ❙ 1237 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia

On campaign against the Princedoms of Russia, the Mongol Batu and his General Subetai captured Bulgar City, capital of the Volga Bulgars, then besieged Ryazan, on the Oka southeast of Moscow. The city (now called Staraya Ryazan) fell after a desperate defense and Prince Yuri Igorevich and his wife were executed. The Mongols then marched north against Kolomna (15–21 December 1237).

Rymenant ❙ 1578 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Spanish Viceroy Don John of Austria followed his decisive victory at Gembloux (31 January) by attacking a Dutch army under French veteran Francois de la Noue at Rymenant (modern Rymenam), just northeast of Brussels. The Dutch were initially driven back, but a large English contingent under Sir John Norris held their ground and the Spanish were repulsed with over 1,000 killed (1 August 1578).

Rzhev ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

While the world focussed on Stalingrad, four Soviet armies under Marshal Georgy Zhukov launched a mid-winter offensive against the Rzhev Salient, north of Moscow. Successive battles of annihilation cost the Russians perhaps 100,000 killed and about 1,600 tanks before they fell back exhausted. General Walter Model withdrew from Rzhev in March 1943 (November–December 1942).

S

Saalfield ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

With Napoleon Bonaparte's army converging on Prussia, an isolated force of Prussians and Saxons under Prince Ludwig Ferdinand attempted to block the advance of Marshal Jean Lannes at Saalfield, where the outnumbered Allies were overwhelmed. After the Prince was killed in a cavalry charge, Lannes advanced north to the French victory four days later at Jena (10 October 1806).

Saarbrucken ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

As Napoleon III's army advanced towards Germany, forward units under Charles Auguste Frossard encountered about 1,000 Prussians at Saarbrucken, led by Colonel Eduard von Pestel, who withdrew across the Saar after heavy bombardment. France claimed a great victory and baptism of fire for the young Prince Imperial, though the city was lost four days later after Spicheren (2 August 1870).

Saaz ❙ 1421 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Zatec

Sabac ❙ 1476 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

With Turkish forces occupied in Croatia, King Mathias of Hungary took a large force into Serbia against Shabatz (modern Sabac), west of Belgrade, garrisoned by just 1,200 men. After a heavy bombardment and the repulse of a Turkish relief force, the city surrendered yielding massive supplies of ammunition. Mathias then advanced further down the Danube (16 January–15 February 1476).

Sabac ❙ 1521 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

Determined to invade Hungary against Louis II, Sultan Suleiman I and Grand Vizier Mehmed Piri Pasha had first to seize the Balkan fortresses and besieged Shabatz (modern Sabac), on the Drava west of Belgrade. A brief yet hard-fought siege saw Shabatz fall by assault before Hungary could mobilise, enabling the Ottoman army to concentrate against Belgrade (8 July 1521).

Sabac ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

When Austrian Generals Liborius von Frank and Oskar Potiorek invaded Serbia they were defeated in the Cer Mountains west of Belgrade by the Serbians Stepa Stepanovic and Zivojin Misic, and fell back across the Drina to defend Sabac (previously Shabatz). Further heavy fighting saw Sabac retaken and the Austrians were driven out, but they later invaded again across the Drina (21–24 August 1914).

Sabalah ❙ 1929 ❙ Ikhwan Rebellion

The Ikhwan brotherhood of central Arabia was reluctant to accept Wahhabi authority and turned on former ally Abd al-Aziz (ibn Saud) of Nejd, whose army met rebel leaders Faisal al-Dawish and Ibn Humayd at as-Sabalah, near al-Artawiya. The hugely outnumbered rebels were destroyed by Saudi machine-guns and cavalry. They were crushed again in August at Umm Urdhumah (March 1929).

Sabi ❙ 660 ❙ Sino-Korean Wars

Supported by Tang China, the Korean Kingdom of Silla sent Kim Yusin against western neighbour Paekche. Aided by a massive Chinese army under Su Ding Fang, the capital Sabi (modern Puyo) was taken by storm and the Kingdom of Paekche came to an end. A counter-offensive failed at Paekchon and a Tang army with Sillan support seized Koguryo in the north with victory at Pyongyang.

Sabila ❙ 1929 ❙ Ikhwan Rebellion

See Sabalah

Sabine Cross Roads ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Mansfield

Sabine Pass ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Campaigning against the coast of Texas, Captain Frederick Crocker in the Union steamer Kensington, supported by two schooners, attacked Sabine Pass, outside Port Arthur, defended by a Confederate garrison under Major Josephus Irvine. Crocker captured it without loss after brief bombardment and two weeks later Union forces to the west captured Galveston (24 September 1862).

Sabine Pass ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

An attempted landing on the Texas coast saw Captain Frederick Crocker and four Union gunboats escort seven troop transports past Sabine Pass outside Port Arthur, where Crocker had previously won an easy victory. Accurate gunfire from Lieutenant Richard W. Dowling at Fort Griffin forced the expedition to retire, with one gunboat and 200 crew captured (8 September 1863).

Sabis ❙ 57 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars

See Sambre

Sablat ❙ 1619 ❙ Thirty Years War (Bohemian War)

Count Ernst von Mansfeld saved Protestant Bohemia by capturing Pilsen (November 1618), then took his mercenaries southeast towards Budweis to continue rebellion against Catholic Ferdinand of Styria. Intercepted near Sablat, Mansfeld was routed by the Imperial army of Charles-Bonaventure de Longueval Comte de Bucqoi, who won again 18 months later at White Mountain (10 June 1619).

Sabraon ❙ 1846 ❙ 1st British-Sikh War

See Sobraon

Sabugal ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

While retreating from the failed French invasion of Portugal, Marshal Michel Ney fought a series of successful rearguard actions against pursuit by Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington. But on the Coa River at Sabugal, an isolated French Corps under General Jean Reynier came under attack and lost over 1,000 men before withdrawing across the border towards Ciudad Rodrigo (3 April 1811).

Sabzavar ❙ 1755 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

On a fresh advance into northeast Persia after capturing Meshed (November 1754), Afghan ruler Ahmad Shah Durrani marched west through Sabzavar against Muhammad Hasan Khan of Qajar. However, at nearby Mazinan, Ahmad's advance units led by Shahpas and Khan were heavily defeated by part of Muhammad's army under Hosayn Khan Develu. The Afghans then withdrew from Persia.

Sachon ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Following the initial invasion of Korea and capture of Pusan (23 May), the main Japanese fleet arrived and sailed to Sachon, west of Pusan, where they were lured out to battle by Korean Admiral Yi Sun-shin, supported by Won Kyun. Despite being heavily outnumbered, Yi secured a brilliant victory. He attacked the Japanese again three days later to the southeast off Tangpo (8 July 1592).

Sachon ❙ 1598 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

General Dong Yiyuan recovered from a failed Chinese assault on Ulsan in February to attack the Japanese fort at Sachon in southern Korea, south of Chinju. Lured into a trap by Shimazu Yoshihiro, the Chinese division was destroyed, with tens of thousands of severed ears sent to Kyoto as proof of victory. Shimazu soon sailed west to support the besieged garrison at Sunchon (30–31 October 1598).

Sacile ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

To prevent Austrian troops in Italy joining the campaign on the Danube, French and Italian forces under Prince Eugène de Beauharnais attacked Archduke John of Austria north of Venice on the Livenza at Sacile. Eugène was forced to withdraw in defeat after a confused engagement, but the Austrians had also suffered heavy losses and weeks later were beaten at the Piave (16 April 1809).

Sackets Harbour ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

Responding to the American assault on the British naval base on Lake Ontario at York, Commodore Sir James Yeo attacked the American base at Sackets Harbour, supported by 750 troops under Colonel Edward Baynes. General Jacob Brown and about 1,000 New York militia fiercely defended the habour and the British were driven off with almost 300 casualties (29 May 1813).

Sacramento ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

American Colonel Alexander Doniphan marching south from Santa Fe repulsed a Mexican force at Brazito, then met a much larger force on the Sacramento River near Chihuahua. A one-sided action forced General José Heredia and Governor Angel Trias to withdraw with heavy losses. Doniphan completed his 3,000-mile trek just too late to join the fight at Buenavista (28 February 1847).

Sacriportus ❙ 82 BC ❙ Sullan Civil War

After returning from Greece to take control of Rome, veteran General Lucius Cornelius Sulla won at Mount Tifata then marched against Gaius Marius the younger. At Sacriportus, in the Trerus Valley southeast of Rome, Marius was heavily defeated and his supporters suffered further losses when pursued towards nearby Praeneste. His allies were also defeated in the north at Faventia.

Sacsahuana ❙ 1548 ❙ Spanish Civil War in Peru

See Xaquixaguana

Sadowa ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

See Königgratz

Sadras ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

See Cuddalore

Sadras ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In the first of five indecisive naval actions off the east coast of India, French Admiral Pierre André Suffren attempted to recover prizes captured by British Admiral Edward Hughes. Fighting in flukey winds off Sadras, near Madras, Suffren was driven off and withdrew that night to Pondicherry. The two Admirals met again two months later off Providien (17 February 1782).

Sadulapur ❙ 1848 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

With Sikh forces defeated and besieged at Multan, northwest of Lahore, General Sir Hugh Gough was repulsed attempting to cross the Chenab at Ramnagar. Two weeks later he sent General Sir Joseph Thackwell across the river to turn the flank of Sher Singh's army. After a largely artillery action at Sadulapur, the Sikhs fell back to even stronger positions at Chilianwallah (3 December 1848).

Sadusam ❙ 1848 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

At the start of renewed war against the Sikhs of Punjab, Lieutenant Herbert Edwardes and a mixed Pathan and Baluchi force joined with Nawab Futteh Mohammed Khan of Bhawalpur to defeat the rebels at Kineyre. They then attacked Sikh Governor Dewan Mulraj outside the walls of Multan at Sudusam, where the Sikhs were badly beaten and withdrew under siege into Multan (1 July 1848).

Sa-erh-hu Mountain ❙ 1619 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China
See Sarhu

Safad ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence
Palmach commander Ygal Allon seized Tiberias in northern Galilee (18 April), then moved north to besiege the important town of Safad (modern Zefat), fiercely defended by Iraqi irregulars and local Palestinian militia. The Jews were initially repulsed with costly losses but resumed the attack to seize key outposts. The Arab population of Safad and surrounding villages fled (30 April–11 May 1948).

Saga ❙ 1874 ❙ Saga Rebellion
Rising against Japan's newly restored Imperial Government, about 3,000 Saga Samurai under Eto Shimpei attacked offices in Saga, Kyushu, and were bloodily suppressed by Home Minister Okubo Toshimichi. Fleeing to Kagoshima, Eto and co-rebel Shima Yoshitaka failed to enlist Saigo Takamori and were eventually executed. A few years later, Saigo himself rebelled at Kagoshima (January 1874).

Sagar ❙ 1680 ❙ Mughal-Berad Wars
Withdrawing from failure at Bijapur, Mughal Viceroy Dilir Khan besieged the fortress of Sagar, held by Pam Nayak, Chief of the Berad tribesmen, whose territory lay between the Krishna and Bhima Rivers. After heavy losses in a humiliating defeat, Dilir Khan abandoned the siege and returned home in disgrace. In 1705 Emperor Aurangzeb himself attacked the Berad at their capital, Wagingera.

Sagar ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny
When rebels besieged Sagar, northeast of Bhopal, General Sir Hugh Rose set out from Mhow to relieve the tiny British garrison and about 170 European women and children. Having defeated rebel forces at Rahatgarh and Barodia, Rose reached the town on 26 January. Sagar was relieved when artillery fire breached the walls and Rose then advanced against Jhansi (3 February 1858).

Sagiuyne ❙ 713 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain
See Segoyuela

Sagrajas ❙ 1086 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain
See Zallaka

Sagunto ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
French Marshal Louis Suchet captured Tarragona before advancing south to capture Murviedro, east of Valencia, then besieged the nearby fortress of San Fernando de Sagunto, defended by Colonel Luis Andriano. The siege ended when Suchet's outnumbered force destroyed a Spanish relief army under General Joachim Blake and Sagunto surrendered (23 September–25 October 1811).

Saguntum ❙ 219 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War
In renewed war against Rome (which had defeated his father Hamilcar), the Carthaginian Hannibal Barca attacked the Roman-protected city of Saguntum, north of modern Valencia. The assault provoked Rome to declare war. After Saguntum fell by storm following an eight-month siege, Hannibal began his famous advance through Gaul and across the Alps to Italy.

Saguntum ❙ 212 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War
After beating Hasdrubal at Ibera, Roman forces under Publius Scipio the Elder and his brother Gnaeus recovered much of Spain south of the Ebro before they finally besieged and captured Saguntum, which had been lost to Hannibal seven years earlier and partly destroyed. However, the Scipio brothers were soon defeated and killed in a Carthaginian counter-offensive at the Baetis and Ilurci.

Saguntum ❙ 75 BC ❙ Sertorian War
See Murviedro

Sahagun ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
Embarking on an ill-advised invasion from Spain into Portugal, across the Duoro at Zamora and Toro, newly appointed British commander Sir John Moore surprised French mounted units at Sahagun, east of the Esla in Leon. General Henry Paget's cavalry destroyed the French squadrons, though the British were soon in retreat towards Corunna (21 December 1808).

Sahay ❙ 1742 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

French Marshal Francois de Broglie took advantage of Prussian victory at Chotusitz (17 May) to attack Austrian General George Christian Lobkowitz advancing towards Frauenberg. Defeated at Sahay, near Budweis, Lobkowitz fell back north towards Prague. A few weeks later Empress Maria Theresa made peace with Prussia in order to turn against France and Bavaria (27 May 1742).

Sahil ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

When Turkey attacked Russia at Sevastopol, an Anglo-Indian force under General Sir Arthur Barrett landed in Turkish Mesopotamia to seize Basra. Beating off initial resistance, the British advanced to Sahil, where an entrenched superior Turkish force was badly defeated. Basra fell a few days later and the British continued up the Euphrates towards Qurna (17 November 1914).

Saigon ❙ 1859 ❙ French Conquest of Indo-China

In supposed response to execution of Spanish Bishop José María Díaz, Franco-Spanish troops under Admiral Charles Rigault de Genouilly captured Danang, then sailed south against Saigon. The citadel of Saigon fell after heavy fighting and was later held against siege by veteran Marshal Nguyen Tri Phoung until victory at Chi Hoa in 1861 secured southern Vietnam for France (17 February 1859).

Saigon ❙ 1968 ❙ Vietnam War

As part of the Tet Offensive, thousands of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese launched a surprise attack on Saigon, where General Fred Weyand led a bloody Allied defence. The offensive was eventually defeated with terrible losses, though TV images of enemy troops inside the US Embassy shocked the American public and undermined the political will to continue the war (31 January–7 March 1968).

Saigon ❙ 1975 ❙ Vietnam War

Climaxing the 55-day offensive to conquer South Vietnam, up to 100,000 North Vietnamese troops converged on Saigon through Xuan Loc and Bien Hoa. With rockets falling on the airport and downtown Saigon, the capital was doomed. As the last Americans were airlifted from their embassy, President Doung van Minh surrendered to end the long war (23–30 April 1975).

Sailor's Creek ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Sayler's Creek

St Albans ❙ 1455 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Richard Duke of York and Richard Neville Earl of Warwick were marching on London, when they were met 20 miles to the northeast at St Albans by Henry VI and Edmund Beaufort Duke of Somerset. The Lancastrians were heavily defeated, with Somerset killed, after which York seized the King and had himself appointed Constable of England (22 May 1455).

St Albans ❙ 1461 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Two weeks after Yorkist victory at Mortimer's Cross, Richard Neville Earl of Warwick marched north from London to intercept the Lancastrian army and took a strong position at St Albans, where he was defeated by Henry Beaufort Duke of Somerset and Sir Andrew Trollope. Henry VI was then released from captivity but turned away north and lost next month at Towton (16 February 1461).

St Amand ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Condé-sur-l'Escaut

St Antoine ❙ 1652 ❙ War of the 2nd Fronde

Rebelling against the power of Cardinal Jules Mazarin during the minority of Louis XIV,

Louis II de Bourbon Prince of Condé withdrew to Paris after defeat at Etampes (4 May). However, Marshal Henri de Turenne brought up fresh Royalist troops and defeated the rebels outside Paris at the Gate of St Antoine. The battle virtually ended the war and Condé fled to the Spanish army (2 July 1652).

St Aubin du Cormier ❙ 1488 ❙ Mad War

In response to revolt by Duke Louis of Orleans and Duke Francis of Brittany, Charles VIII of France sent a large army led by Louis de la Trémouille, who defeated the rebels at St Aubin du Cormier, northeast of Rennes. With Duke Louis and the Prince of Orange captured, the revolt was virtually over. When Francis died, Charles obtained Brittany by marrying his daughter Anne.

St Augustine ❙ 1586 ❙ Drake's Caribbean Raid

At the end of a large-scale raid against Spain in the Caribbean, where he had attacked Santo Domingo and Cartagena, English Admiral Sir Francis Drake took his fleet, now said to be almost 50 ships, against St Augustine in Spanish Florida, held by General Pedro Menéndez Marqués. Drake sacked and burned the town after a brief action, before returning home with his booty (6 June 1586).

St Augustine ❙ 1702 ❙ Queen Anne's War

Governor James Moore of South Carolina opened Queen Anne's War—the American phase of the War of the Spanish Succession—when he took 600 English troops and 600 Indians against St Augustine in Spanish Florida. After a month's siege, with little damage done to either side, two Spanish frigates appeared. Moore burned his ships and returned overland to Charleston (August 1702).

St Augustine ❙ 1740 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Leading an attack on Spanish Florida, James Oglethorpe, founder of Georgia, besieged St Augustine, on the Matanzas River southeast of Jacksonville, supported by Commodore Vincent Pearce. However, Oglethorpe eventually had to withdraw. Despite repulsing a Spanish counter-offensive two years later at Bloody Swamp, he failed again at St Augustine in 1743 (10 May–5 July 1740).

St Augustine ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In an attempt to engage Britain in the south, General Robert Howe took a militia force against East Florida, held by General Augustine Prevost, where he attacked St Augustine, southeast of Jacksonville. Faced by sickness in his troops and insubordination in his ally, Governor William Houston of Georgia, the expedition became a disaster and Howe returned to Savannah (May 1778).

St Bartholomew's Eve ❙ 1572 ❙ 4th French War of Religion

The so-called Fourth War of Religion centered largely on the notorious Massacre of St Bartholomew's Eve, when thousands of Huguenots were murdered in Paris, including the great commander Gaspard de Coligny. Following the massacre, Huguenot forces regrouped and gained considerable power in western France, holding off a siege of La Rochelle (23–24 August 1572).

St Cast ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Returning to Brittany after attacking Cherbourg, Commodore Sir Richard Howe and General Thomas Bligh landed near St Malo, where the port was too well defended. Attempting to re-embark further west at St Cast Bay, the British were heavily attacked by Emmanuel Duke d'Aiguillon, losing General Alexander Dury killed among 800 casualties, mainly captured (7–12 September 1758).

St Charles, Arkansas ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Union gunboats under commander Augustus H. Kilty, with Colonel Graham N. Fitch, advanced up the White River in Arkansas to attack the Confederate batteries at St Charles, commanded by Captain Joseph Fry. A severe action saw St Charles taken, although the Union gunboat Mound City was hit and her boiler exploded, with 125 killed and many wounded, including Kilty (17 June 1862).

St Charles, Quebec ❙ 1837 ❙ French-Canadian Rebellion

When French Canadians in Quebec declared independence, they repulsed British and Canadian Loyalists east of Montreal at St Denis. Two days later, further south at St Charles, rebel militia under Thomas Storrow Brown were badly beaten by Loyalist Colonel George Augustus Wetherall. Further defeat in a few weeks at St Eustache effectively ended the rising (25 November 1837).

St Clair's Defeat ❙ 1791 ❙ Little Turtle's War

General Arthur St Clair, attempting to avenge Harmar's Defeat (October 1790), entered Ohio with 600 regulars and 1,500 militia. On the Wabash at the site of Fort Recovery, his camp was attacked by Little Turtle of the Miami and the Shawnee Blue Jacket. Over 900 troops and camp followers were killed in the worst white defeat in North America, though St Clair was exonerated (4 November 1791).

St Croix ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See St Thomas

St Denis, France ❙ 1567 ❙ 2nd French War of Religion

At risk of fresh attacks by Catholic Royalists, Huguenot leader Louis I de Bourbon Prince of Condé regathered his forces and met Anne Duke of Montmorency northeast of Paris at St Denis. Despite an heroic Huguenot defence and the death of 74-year-old Montmorency, the battle was a narrow Catholic victory. A new peace was quickly secured (10 November 1567).

St Denis, France ❙ 1678 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Four days after a treaty ended war between France and Holland, William of Orange, apparently unaware, attacked Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg besieging Mons in modern Belgium. The Dutch suffered heavy losses in a violent clash near the Abbey of St Denis before the armies disengaged. News of the peace treaty was confirmed next day (14 August 1678).

St Denis, Quebec ❙ 1837 ❙ French-Canadian Rebellion

When French Canadians in Quebec declared independence, British and Canadian Loyalists led by Colonel Charles Gore marched against rebel leader Wolfred Nelson at St Denis, northeast of Montreal. Gore was repulsed in a badly handled action and retreated when reinforcements approached under George Étienne Cartier. Other Patriots were defeated at St Charles (23 November 1837).

St Denis, Réunion ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

See Réunion

St Dizier (1st) ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

While manoeuvring east of Paris to prevent a junction of the Prussian and Austrian armies, Napoleon Bonaparte sent Marshal Claude Victor against General Gebhard von Blucher at St Dizier, southeast of Chalons. Blucher had left for Brienne and a sharp action forced a Russian rearguard under General Sergei Lanskoi to withdraw. The Emperor then entered the town (27 January 1814).

St Dizier (2nd) ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

Just days after withdrawing at Arcis-sur-Aube, Napoleon Bonaparte continued to manoeuvre in the rear of the Allied advance on Paris. At St Dizier, southeast of Chalons-sur-Marne, he checked Baron Ferdinand von Winzingerode, probing south from Vitry. The Prussians lost 1,500 men and nine guns, but Bonaparte was unable to fight his way through to his capital (26 March 1814).

St Dogmael ❙ 1088 ❙ Welsh Dynastic War

See Llandudoch

St Domingo ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

See Santo Domingo

St Étienne ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

British General Sir John Hope and the German Legion under General Heinrich Hinuber led the Allies closing in on Bayonne in southwestern France, where they attacked the eastern suburb of St Étienne. The area finally fell to the combined assault, though at the cost of over 300 mainly German casualties. French losses were around 100 (25 February 1814).

St Eustache ❙ 1837 ❙ French-Canadian Rebellion

Three weeks after rebels in Quebec were defeated at St Charles, Governor Sir John Colborne and Loyalist Colonels George Augustus Wetherall and John Maitland attacked the final holdouts under Jean-Olivier Chénier at St Eustache, 18 miles northwest of Montreal. Chénier and about 70 others were killed in a violent attack. The town was then destroyed and the rising was crushed (14 December 1837).

St Eustatius ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When Britain declared war on Holland, Admiral George Rodney was sent to attack the rich Dutch West Indies trading island of St Eustatius. Rodney secured a massive amount of treasure, although much was recaptured off the Scilly Isles in May. St Eustatius was retaken by Admiral Francois-Claude de Bouillé (25 November) but was eventually returned to Holland (3 February 1781).

St Fagan's ❙ 1648 ❙ British Civil Wars

With war virtually over, Parliamentary forces in south Wales mutinied over pay and declared for the King. Up to 8,000 under General Rowland Laugharne advanced on Cardiff and attacked about 3,000 Parliamentarians under Colonel Thomas Horton at St Fagan's. Perhaps the largest battle on Welsh soil saw the Royalist rebels routed and they fell back on Pembroke (8 May 1648).

St Foy ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

See Quebec

St Francis ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

Determined to punish Indians who supported the French and had taken hundreds of English scalps, General Jeffrey Amherst sent New Hampshire militia under Major Robert Rogers against the Abenaki at St Francis in northern Maine. A dawn attack saw "Rogers Rangers" kill about 200 warriors and destroy the village. They suffered heavy losses during the return to Charlestown (April 1760).

St Fulgent ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Royalist rebel leader Francois-Athanase Charette defeated Republican General Jean-Baptiste Kléber at Torfou, then marched southeast to St Fulgent against some of Kléber's defeated force plus fresh troops from the south under General Jean Mieskowski. Charette won the resulting confused night-time action, though most of the Republicans slipped away in the dark (23 September 1793).

St Gall ❙ 1403 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

See Speicher

St George's Battle ❙ 1774 ❙ Rohilla War

See Miranpur Katra

St George's Channel ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

After a highly successful campaign against merchant shipping campaign off England, the 18-gun American brig Argus (Captain William H. Allen) was attacked to the west in St George's Channel by the 20-gun British sloop Pelican (Captain John F. Maples). Allen was mortally wounded in a heavy broadside and, with her rigging shot away and boarded, Argus was forced to strike (14 August 1813).

St Giovanni ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Trebbia

St Gotthard ❙ 1664 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Facing an advance into Hungary by an Ottoman army under Grand Vizier Ahmed Fazil Koprulu, Imperial Field Marshal Raimondo Montecuccoli established himself on the right bank of the Raab at St Gotthard, on the route to Graz and Vienna. A fierce battle prevented the Ottomans from crossing the river and a week later they signed a treaty of peace with the empire (1 August 1664).

St Jakob on the Birs ❙ 1444 ❙ Old Zurich War

During a truce in the Hundred Years War, Charles VII of France sent the Dauphin Louis to intervene in Switzerland on behalf of Emperor Frederick III and relieve the Confederate siege of Zurich. While the French and their mercenaries destroyed the outnumbered Swiss at Saint Jakob on the Birs, south of Basel, heavy losses persuaded Louis to make peace and withdraw (24 August 1444).

St Jakob on the Sihl ❙ 1443 ❙ Old Zurich War

When Zurich entered into a special alliance with the Habsburg House of Austria, the Swiss Forest Cantons and Glarus marched against Zurich itself and inflicted a sharp defeat to the south at St Jakob on the Sihl, killing Zurich Burgomaster Rudolf Stussi. However, when Confederate forces besieged Zurich a year later, France intervened at the battle of St Jakob on the Birs (22 July 1443).

St James ❙ 1426 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Avranches

St James Day ❙ 1666 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

See North Foreland

St Jean ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See St Johns

St Jean d'Angely ❙ 1621 ❙ 1st Huguenot Rebellion

In response to French Huguenots holding an unauthorised assembly in La Rochelle, Louis XIII and his Minister Alfred de Luynes sent an army, which besieged the nearby fortress of St Jean d'Angely, defended by Benjamin of Soubise. Duke Francois de Lesdiguieres forced a capitulation after almost a month and the Royalist army turned its attention to Montauban (30 May–25 June 1621).

St Jean de Losne ❙ 1636 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Imperial forces under Count Matthias Gallas led a fresh invasion of France, crossing the Rhine while General Johann von Werth invaded the north and captured Corbie. West of Dole, Gallas was delayed by the fortress of St Jean de Losne. Inspired by their courageous resistance, Louis XIII personally took command of his army and the Allies finally had to withdraw (August–November 1636).

St Jean de Luz ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Creating a large-scale diversion the day before his main attack on the Nivelle, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington sent General Sir John Hope against St Jean de Luz, on the French right near the Franco-Spanish border. Hope's feint, involving about 20,000 men, was a brilliant opening to the main advance the following day further inland along the Nivelle (9 November 1813).

St Johns (1st) ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As part of the attack on Fort Ticonderoga, Americans Colonel Benedict Arnold and Major Ethan Allen marched north against St Johns, southeast of Montreal, commanding the route from Lake Champlain to the St Lawrence. The Americans captured the strategic fort and a small sloop before they were forced to withdraw by a large British relief column approaching from Chambly (17 May 1775).

St Johns (2nd) ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Determined to block America's advance towards Montreal, Major Charles Preston held the strategic fort at St Johns to the southeast against repeated attacks by Generals Richard Montgomery and Philip Schuyler. The fort had to surrender after the fall of nearby Chambly and defeat of a relief column at Longueuil (30 October). Montreal fell ten days later (5 September–2 November 1775).

St John's Bluff ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Union General John M. Brannan determined to secure shipping on Florida's St John's River, taking a force supported by ships under Captain Charles Steedman against the Confederate battery at St John's Bluff, guarding the river near Jacksonville. Attacked by land and on the river, Confederate artillery commander Colonel Charles F. Hopkins was forced to abandon the position (1–3 October 1862).

St John's Wood ❙ 1847 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

Two months after a failed attack on the Rutland Stockade, protecting Wanganui, Topine Te Mamaku launched a fresh attack on the settlement, now garrisoned by 1,200 men under Colonel William A. McCleverty, supported by Maori allies. Heavy fighting near the stockades at St John's Wood saw Te Mamaku eventually driven off. He later sued for peace and was pardoned (19 July 1847).

St Julien ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Opening the Second Battle of Ypres, Duke Albrecht attacked around Gravenstafel to the northeast, then further north, where he seized the village of St Julien from the Canadians. After a failed counter-attack, British commander Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien was dismissed for withdrawing to shorten the line. Sir Herbert Plumer faced the Germans days later at Frezenberg (24 April–4 May 1915).

St Kitts ❙ 1667 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

See Nevis

St Kitts ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

French Admiral Francois Comte de Grasse landed a large force on the West Indian island of St Kitts and drove British General Thomas Fraser into a defensive position at Brimstone Hill. Admiral Sir Samuel Hood (1724–1816) arrived and repulsed de Grasse with victory at sea off Basseterre (25–26 January). But he was unable to assist the garrison ashore and Fraser had to surrender (11 January–12 February 1782).

St Kitts ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

A few days after unsuccessfully attacking the British West Indian island of Dominica, French General Joseph Lagrange sailed north and landed on St Kitts, where the outnumbered garrison took to the hills. Having plundered the city of Basse-Terre, Lagrange withdrew, taking five merchants ships he captured in the harbour (27 February 1805).

St Laurent ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coaltion)

See San Lorenzo

St Lazaro ❙ 1746 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

See Piacenza

St Lo ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

After the great Allied landing in Normandy, American General Charles Corlett drove inland against the strategic transport center of St Lo on the River Vire. Brutal defence under Panzer General Fritz Bayerlein saw severe house-to-house fighting before St Lo was finally taken at the cost of 11,000 American casualties. The Americans then attacked west towards Avranches (7–18 July 1944).

St Louis ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

On campaign against Spanish presence in Missouri Territory, British under Emanuel Hesse, with a large force of Indian allies led by Chiefs Wabasha and Matchekewis, attacked San Luis de Ylinoises (modern St Louis). Governor Don Fernando de Leyba's outnumbered Spanish regulars and militia boldly drove off the attack and the Spaniards later hit back at Fort St Joseph (26 May 1780).

St Lucia ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

French Admiral Charles-Hector Comte d'Estaing arrived in the West Indies just too late to prevent Admiral Sir Samuel Barrington and General James Grant invading St Lucia, so instead landed troops to relieve the capital, Castries. Driven off with heavy losses by General Sir William Meadows, d'Estaing re-embarked, leaving the local French garrison to surrender (12–28 December 1778).

St Lucia ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

A month after returning to St Lucia from failure off Martinique, British Admiral George Rodney faced the approaching fleet of Admiral Luc-Urbain Comte de Guichen. After days of manoeuvring off St Lucia, they met in a brief action, then again four days later. Three British ships were disabled, but de Guichen's supplies were running low and he withdrew (15 & 19 May 1780).

St Lucia ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Progressing south after capturing Martinique (23 March), a British expedition under Admiral Sir John Jervis and General Sir Charles Grey landed on St Lucia. The fortress of Morne Fortunee quickly fell and General Nicolas Ricard surrendered. However, the small British garrison evacuated in June 1795 in the face of a bloody Negro revolt. The island had to be retaken in 1796 (1 April 1794).

St Lucia ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

When France recaptured St Lucia in 1795, Admiral Sir Hugh Christian took a large force to the West Indies under Generals Sir Ralph Abercromby and John Moore. General Goyrand surrendered St Lucia after three weeks' fighting and Moore became Governor. However, St Lucia was returned to France under treaty in 1802 and had to be taken a third time in 1803 (27 April–24 May 1796).

St Lucia ❙ 1803 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

After the French West Indian island of St Lucia had been taken in 1794 and again in 1796, then returned to France in 1802, British Commodore Samuel Hood (1762–1814), Commander in Chief of Leeward Islands Station, and General William Grinfield took a third expedition. When they stormed Morne Fortunee, the island fell for the last time and was ceded to Britain in 1814 (21 June 1803).

St Malo ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

American forces broke out from Normandy and captured Avranches, while General Troy Middleton was sent west into Brittany to seize the key German-held ports. First objective was St Malo, protected by a series of strong fortresses. Nearby Dinard was taken and vicious house-to-house fighting saw St Malo itself fall. The Americans then continued west against Brest (3–16 August 1944).

St Maria ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General Jean-Joseph Dessoles faced a fresh Austrian offensive in eastern Switzerland, where he was attacked by Count Heinrich von Bellegarde at St Maria, east of St Moritz. Driven back by massively superior forces, Dessoles led a remarkable withdrawal west through Zernetz, then south through the mountains to Tirano on the Upper Adda in Italy (22 April 1799).

St Mary's ❙ 1645–1646 ❙ Ingle's Rebellion

With England racked by religious war, skirmishing occurred in the colonies between Puritan Virginia and Catholic Maryland, where the Puritan trader Richard Ingle captured and plundered the Maryland capital, St Mary's.

Catholic leader Philip Calvert later retook the settlement and its Assembly later passed its famous Tolerance Act guaranteeing religious freedom (February 1645–August 1646).

St Mary's Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Union General Philip Sheridan returned from raiding the Confederate rear at Trevilian Station (12 June), he crossed the Chickahominy at Jones Bridge southeast of Richmond and was intercepted by General Wade Hampton's cavalry at St Mary's Church near Charles City, Virginia. Sheridan managed to drive off the attack and he rejoined the Union army on the James (24 June 1864).

St Mary's Clyst ❙ 1549 ❙ Western Rebellion

When pro-Catholic forces in Cornwall and Devon besieged Exeter, Lord John Russell awaited reinforcement by German and Italian mercenaries, then marched to relieve the siege. About 6,000 rebels attacked Russell just east of the city at St Mary's Clyst but were badly defeated with about 1,000 killed. The rebels had to lift the siege and were routed by Russell at Sampford Courtenay (4 August 1549).

St Michael-Leoben ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Two weeks after driving Archduke John of Austria out of northern Italy with victory at the Piave, Prince Eugène de Beauharnais marched north and crashed into Austrian Field Marshal Franz von Jellichich northwest of Graz at St Michael and Leoben. Routed by General Paul Grenier, the beaten Austrian force withdrew to join Archduke John and soon shared his defeat at Raab (25 May 1809).

St Mihiel ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

In the wake of Allied success at the Marne and Amiens, American commander John Pershing, with French support, attacked the St Mihiel salient, southwest of Verdun. The surprised Germans lost 15,000 prisoners and over 250 guns, but most of their army escaped the American pincer movement. The Allied offensive was soon renewed north of Verdun on the Meuse (12–16 September 1918).

St Nazaire ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Attacking the German battleship dock at St Nazaire on the Loire, commander Robert Ryder rammed the destroyer Campbelltown, packed with explosives, into the dock gates while commandos demolished port facilities. Next day, Campbelltown blew up, wrecking the dock and killing many Germans. The raid cost the British 169 killed and 200 captured out of 611 (28 March 1942).

St Omer ❙ 1677 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Cassel

St Paul ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

British Commodore Josias Rowley took six ships west from Rodrigues to the Indian Ocean island of Réunion and landed with about 600 troops and seamen under Captain Nesbit Willoughby near the main harbour at St Paul. Attacking from the landward side, they seized the batteries and joined the squadron taking a French frigate and two prizes before they withdrew (21 September 1809).

St Paul* vs Terror ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

See San Juan, Puerto Rico (2nd)

St Petersburg ❙ 1917 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Petrograd

St Petersburg ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

See Petrograd

St Pierre and Miquelon ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

A minor skirmish against France's overseas territories saw British forces from Halifax, Canada, under General James Ogilvie attack the small fishing islands of St Pierre and Miquelon, south of Newfoundland. The garrisons capitulated without bloodshed and were removed, along with the French civilian inhabitants, to the Canadian mainland (14 May 1793).

St Pierre d'Irube ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Three days after being defeated on the Nive, near the Franco-Spanish border, French Marshal Nicolas Soult skillfully moved his troops through Bayonne to attack in the east, between the Nive and Adour. General Sir Rowland Hill personally led a courageous counter-attack and hard fighting around the village of St Pierre forced Soult back to Bayonne (13 December 1813).

St Pol de Léon ❙ 1346 ❙ Hundred Years War

Amid the struggle for the Dukedom of Brittany, Sir Thomas Dagworth captured Roche-Derrien after three days' siege, then faced a heavy assault by Charles of Blois at St Pol de Léon, northwest of Morlaix. Standing firm, the outnumbered English longbowman caused heavy French losses and Blois withdrew. He attempted a further attack a year later at Roche-Derrien (9 June 1346).

St Privat la Montagne ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Gravelotte

St Quentin ❙ 1557 ❙ 5th Habsburg-Valois War

Emperor Phillip II resumed the war in northern France by sending Emmanuel Philibert Duke of Savoy to recover territory seized by Henry II. While the Spanish army and its English allies besieged St Quentin, bravely defended by Admiral Gaspard de Coligny, a French relief force under Duke Anne of Montmorency was utterly routed. The city fell two weeks later (10 August 1557).

St Quentin ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

The final outside attempt to relieve besieged Paris saw General Louis Léon Faidherbe take 50,000 men against a force of about 30,000 Germans under General August von Goeben near St Quentin, east of Péronne. Seven hours of fighting saw Faidherbe driven off with the loss of 3,000 casualties and 10,000 prisoners. Paris capitulated a week later (19 January 1871).

St Quentin ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Guise

St Quentin Canal ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Assaulting the Hindenburg Line, British General Sir Henry Rawlinson and French under General Marie Debeney stormed over the St Quentin Canal, north of St Quentin. Despite heavy losses, the Allies seized the key tunnelled canal section near Bellicourt and the strategic Riqueval Bridge near Bellinglise. They then advanced on Cambrai and Le Cateau (29 September–2 October 1918).

St Thomas ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

See St Thomé

St Thomas ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

In order to prevent France seizing the Danish-held West Indian islands of St Thomas and St Croix, which had been temporarily occupied by Britain in 1801, a fresh force was sent under Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane and General Henry Bowyer. Both islands were taken after brief resistance by the Danish garrison. They were returned to Denmark after the war (22–25 December 1807).

St Thomé ❙ 1746 ❙ 1st Carnatic War

After British surrender of Madras (21 September), French commander Duval D'Espréménil faced 10,000 Indians under Maphuz Khan, whose father Anwar-ud-Din, Nawab of Arcot, had been promised the city for remaining neutral. A sortie with 900 men saw French Colonel Paradis rout the Indian force at nearby St Thomé and Madras was secured for France (3 November 1746).

St Vincent ❙ 1606 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

See Cape St Vincent

St Vincent ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Admiral Charles-Hector Comte d'Estaing, French commander in the West Indies, having failed to prevent British forces capturing St Lucia (December 1778), took a force south from Martinique. Eluding British Admiral John Byron, he seized the island of St Vincent and a few weeks later also captured Grenada. Both territories were regained by Britain at the end of the war (16 June 1779).

St Vincent ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

With the West Indian island of Grenada secured in June, General Sir Ralph Abercromby sailed to St Vincent to put down a French-supported rebellion against British rule by negroes and Carib Indians. Unlike the quick success in Grenada, it took four months and 4,000 troops before Negro leader Martin Padre finally surrendered (June–4 October 1796).

St Vincent ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Cape St Vincent

St Vincent ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Cape St Vincent

St Vincent ❙ 1833 ❙ Miguelite Wars

See Cape St Vincent

St Vith ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

At the start of the German advance into the Ardennes, General Hasso von Manteuffel sent Panzer forces across the Schnee Eifel Ridge against the Belgian crossroads town of St Vith. American armoured units under General Bruce Clarke fought a classic delaying defence before they were forced to withdraw. The German offensive then swung south against Bastogne (17–23 December 1944).

Saintes ❙ 1242 ❙ Anglo-French Wars

Henry III of England was trying to regain Angevin land lost by his father King John when he was defeated by Louis IX at Taillebourg, near the Charente River southeast of Rochefort. Henry was then abandoned by his French ally, the Count de la Marche and next day lost again at nearby Saintes. The two kings made peace and Louis forbade his nobles to hold fiefs from both crowns (22 July 1242).

Saintes ❙ 1351 ❙ Hundred Years War

When French Marshals Guy de Nesle and Arnaud d'Endreghem advanced into Poitou and besieged St Jean d'Angely and Saintes, an English force under Sir John Beauchamp marched north from Bordeaux. They met and fought dismounted near Saintes, where the French were badly defeated. Nesle and d'Endreghem were both captured but were eventually ransomed (7 April 1351).

Saints ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Admiral Francois Comte de Grasse, sailing from Martinique against Jamaica, fought indecisively off Dominica and days later met British Admiral George Rodney in a large engagement near the Saints, small islands between Guadaloupe and Dominica. A brilliant victory saw Rodney break the French line and capture six ships, effectively ending the naval war in the west (12 April 1782).

Saipan ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With the Marshall Islands secured (20 February), General Holland Smith and Admiral Kelly Turner sailed into the Mariana Islands, first attacking the northern island of Saipan. After shocking losses on both sides, many Japanese committed suicide, including Admiral Chuichi Nagumo and General Yoshitsugu Saito. Defeat triggered the fall of Premier Tojo, just 1,200 miles away in Tokyo (15 June–9 July 1944).

Sajo ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Invasion of Europe

Sweeping into Eastern Europe, the Mongol Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) and his brilliant commander Subetai conquered much of Russia and Poland, advancing west from Kiev (1240) to force the Carpathian Passes into Hungary. Northeast of Budapest near Mohi, King Bela IV was routed on the Sajo River. On the death of the Khan Ogedai in December the Mongols withdrew from Europe (11 April 1241).

Sakarya ❙ 1921 ❙ 2nd Greco-Turkish War

King Constantine of Greece advanced into Anatolia through a bloody action at Eskisehir (17 July), attacking Turkish positions along the Sakarya, 40 miles west of Ankara, where Mustafa Kemal had taken personal command. After three weeks of heavy fighting, the Greeks finally had to withdraw. Kemal counter-attacked a year later through Afyon (23 August–13 September 1921).

Saladillo ❙ 1869 ❙ 1st Cuban War of Independence

See Bayamo

Salado ❙ 1340 ❙ Later Christian Reconquest of Spain

See Rio Salado

Salado ❙ 1813 ❙ Gutiérrez-Magee Expedition

See Rosillo

Salado ❙ 1842 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Having occupied San Antonio, Mexican General Adrian Woll was lured out to attack 200 appoaching Texans under Colonel Mathew Caldwell in camp seven miles to the northeast at the Salado. When 800 charging Mexicans were driven off with about 120 casualties, Woll withdrew to San Antonio, though a small American force was destroyed in Dawson's Massacre (18 September 1842).

Salaita ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

General Wilfred Malleson attempted an offensive in German East Africa, sending 6,000 men against Major Georg Kraut in a strong position at Salaita, east of Kilimanjaro near Taveta. Terrible losses in a frontal assault against machine-guns saw the mixed British force flee towards Serengeti. General Jan Smuts soon took command and attacked around Morogoro (12 February 1916).

Salala ❙ 1817 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

During his advance into Chile, General José de San Martin sent the northern wing of his Army of the Andes under Juan Manuel Cabot against the port of Coquimbo. On the nearby Salala Plains, Cabot defeated the Spanish-Chilean garrison to secure the fort and the coast. Two days later San Martin's main force fought the decisive battle further south at Chacabuco (11 February 1817).

Salamanca, Mexico ❙ 1858 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Opposing the new Liberal constitution, Conservative commander Luis Osollo, supported by Generals Miguel Miramón and Tomás Mejía, attacked Liberal commanders Anastasio Parrodi and Leandro Valle at Salamanca, east of Guadalajara. The Conservatives secured a decisive victory, with Guadalajara taken two weeks later, and Liberal leader Benito Juarez left for Panama (10 March 1858).

Salamanca, Spain ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advancing north from the capture of Salamanca was surprised by a counter-offensive by French Marshal Auguste Marmont. Withdrawing to the plain south of Salamanca, Wellington achieved one of his most outstanding victories, with heavy French casualties including Marmont wounded. Wellington then advanced to seize Madrid (22 July 1812).

Salamanca Forts, Spain ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As part of his offensive in central Spain, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advanced against the three heavily fortified convents controlling the River Tormes at Salamanca. Two weeks of desperate fighting saw Wellington's Anglo-Portuguese troops seize all three—San Vincente, San Cayetano and La Merced—before capturing the unfortified city of Salamanca (14–27 June 1812).

Salamaua ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

With Papua secured at Sanananda (22 January), Australian General Edmund Herring, with American support, advanced northwest into New Guinea against General Hotazo Adachi. In severe fighting for key airfields, the Allies took Salamaua (11 September) and Lae four days later. They then led a co-ordinated land and sea attack north against the Huon Peninsula (May–15 September 1943).

Salamcheh ❙ 1988 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Five weeks after a stunning victory to regain Al Faw, Iraq launched another offensive east and southeast of Basra towards the town of Salamcheh. Facing a massive barrage of artillery and nerve gas, the Iranian defenders fought bravely before being forced into retreat, abandoning huge quantities of arms and equipment, effectively bringing the war in the south to an end in a single day (25 May 1988).

Salamina ❙ 1841 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders

Marching into Antioquia to support rebel leader Colonel Salvador Córdoba, Colonel José María Vesga was met 23 miles north of Manizales, at Salamina, by government forces under General Braulio Henao. Vesga was heavily defeated and captured. After the rebels were routed two months later at La Chanca (11 July), Vesga was executed (9 August) in the Plaza at Medellín (5 May 1841).

Salamis, Cyprus ❙ 497 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

Darius I of Persia secured victory at Ephesus (498 BC), then sent a force to recapture Cyprus, where Onesilus, brother of the King of Salamis, was besieging Phoenician Amathus. The Ionian fleet arrived to beat the Persians at sea, but on the plains outside Salamis, Onesilus was defeated and killed. Salamis surrendered and the Persians reconquered Cyprus before returning to Ionia to besiege Miletus.

Salamis, Cyprus ❙ 450 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

During a truce in the Peloponnesian War after victory at Oenophyta (457 BC), Athens sent a large fleet under Cimon against Persian-held Cyprus and the southern city of Citium (near modern Larnaca). Although Cimon died during the siege, his forces won a major victory over a Phoenician and Cilician fleet further east off Salamis. However, Athens then withdrew and made peace with Persia.

Salamis, Cyprus ❙ 306 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

In war among the successors of Alexander the Great, Demetrius Poliorcetes, son of Antigonus, attacked Cyprus, held for Ptolemy of Egypt by his brother Menelaus, who was defeated outside Salamis and fell back under siege. Ptolemy sailed with a relief force and was defeated off Salamis, losing over 100 ships. Salamis surrendered, but Demetrius soon failed against Rhodes.

Salamis, Greece ❙ 480 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

When King Xerxes of Persia occupied Athens after victory at Thermopylae, his advancing ships were met to the west at Salamis by the much smaller Athenian-Spartan fleet led by Themistocles and Eurybiades. One of history's decisive naval actions saw the Persian fleet mauled and Xerxes withdrew, leaving Mardonius to occupy central Greece until defeat at Plataea (23 September 480 BC).

Salangarh ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

See Sholinghur

Sala Phou Khoun ❙ 1975 ❙ Laotian Civil War

Coinciding with the renewed North Vietnamese advance towards Saigon, North Vietnamese and Communist Pathet Lao forces launched a new offensive in northern Laos. General Vang Pao's

Meo tried to hold a strategic position at Sala Phou Khoun, but without air support they were defeated and withdrew into exile. Vientiane fell without a fight and the Pathet Lao seized Laos (March–April 1975).

Saldanha Bay ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

When the Batavian fleet under Admiral Engelbertus Lucas arrived at Saldanha Bay in South Africa to recapture Cape Colony from the British, a small force under General James Craig marched overland to oppose the landing. Meanwhile, Admiral Sir George Keith Elphinstone arrived with a British squadron and after a sharp action the Dutch were forced to surrender (7–17August 1796).

Salem Church ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Having taken Fredericksburg on the Rappahannock, Union General John Sedgewick marched west to support General Joseph Hooker at Chancellorsville, Virginia. Attacked front and rear at Salem Church next day by units of Robert E. Lee's Confederate army, Sedgewick was forced to retire. With his reinforcements beaten, Hooker was decisively defeated and retreated east (3–4 May 1863).

Salerno ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

With Sicily secured in mid-August, Anglo-American forces under General Mark Clark began a massive amphibious landing at Salerno, 50 miles south of Naples. General Heinrich von Vietinghoff led a powerful counter-attack, which seriously threatened the beachhead before reinforcements and naval and air bombardment broke the defence and the Allies advanced to Naples (9–18 September 1943).

Salgótarján ❙ 1919 ❙ Hungarian-Czech War

Czech troops were poised on the northern border of Bolshevik Hungary when Hungarian General Aurél Stromfeld led an offensive into Slovakia and secured a brilliant victory at Salgótarján, then captured Miskolc further east. Two days later a Czech counter-offensive at Miskolc was driven off with costly Hungarian losses and the Hungarians were soon checked at Nove Zamky (20–23 May 1919).

Salher ❙ 1671–1672 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Maratha General Shivaji defeated the Mughals at Dindori, then captured the mountain fortress of Salher, southeast of Surat, near Mulher (January 1671). Salher was subsequently besieged by Dilir Khan, who then left to attack Poona and Shivaji sent Moropant Pingle and Pratap Rao Gujar. A great victory saw Mughal General Ikhlas Khan routed and captured (September 1671–February 1672).

Salices ❙ 377 ❙ 5th Gothic War

See Ad Salices

Salihiyya ❙ 1773 ❙ Mamluk Wars

Driven out of Cairo by his former lieutenant Abu'l-Dhahab, the Great Mamluk Ali Bey fled to his ally Shayk Zahir al-Umar of Acre and, after helping him capture Jaffa, raised a fresh army and attempted to recover power in Egypt. In the eastern Nile Delta at al-Salihiyya, Ali Bey was defeated and fatally wounded, dying a week later in Cairo. In 1775 Abu'l-Dhahab recaptured Jaffa (1 May 1773).

Salinas, Peru ❙ 1538 ❙ Spanish Civil War in Peru

After Diego del Almagro seized control of Peru at Abancay (July 1537), he faced an attack at Cuzco by Hernando Pizarro, who secured a decisive victory at nearby Salinas. Almagro's General, Rodrigo Orgoñez, was beheaded and Almagro himself was executed ten weeks later. The victor's brother Francisco Pizarro was restored to power, but he was assassinated four years later (26 April 1538).

Salinas, Spain ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In a battle-scale guerrilla action in the mountains of southern Navarre, insurgent leader

Francisco Espoz y Mina attacked a massive French convoy heading for Mondragon (modern Arrasate). Battle at the Pass of Salinas, 15 miles northeast of Vitoria, cost the French over 500 killed, while the guerrillas seized invaluable booty as well as releasing more than 400 Spanish prisoners (9 April 1812).

Salineville ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Confederate General John H. Morgan ended his destructive raid into Kentucky and Ohio by escaping the disastrous defeat at Buffington Island (19 July) only to be pursued north along the Ohio through Salineville by Union forces under General James M. Shackelford. Defeated and surrounded at nearby New Lisbon, Ohio, Morgan and his last 360 men were forced to surrender (26 July 1863).

Salisbury ❙ 552 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

See Searobyrg

Salkehatchie ❙ 1715 ❙ Yamasee Indian War

When the Yamasee of South Carolina united with other Indian tribes in well co-ordinated attacks on settlers on the Ashley River (15 April 1715), Governor Charles Craven led a 1,200-strong militia force against the Indian allies on the Salkehatchie, west of Charleston. The Yamasee were routed in a decisive campaign and the survivors fled across the Savannah into Spanish Florida.

Salkehatchie River ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Rivers' Bridge

Salmas ❙ 1605 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

See Sufiyan

Salmon Falls ❙ 1690 ❙ King William's War

Six weeks after the Canadian raid on Schenectady, New York, Governor Louis de Buade Comte de Frontenac sent a Canadian and Indian force under Joseph-Francois Hertel against Salmon Falls, near Rollinsford, New Hampshire. Having brutally destroyed the town, Hertel heavily defeated pursuing militia from nearby Portsmouth before withdrawing. He soon joined the attack on Fort Loyal (18 March 1690).

Salonika ❙ 1430 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

When the Byzantines sold Salonika (modern Thessalonika) to Venice, Ottoman Sultan Murad II declared war on his former ally and attacked Venetian possessions in the Adriatic and southern Greece. Building up his fleet, Murad besieged the Greek city and overwhelmed the Venetian garrison. Venice was forced to accept peace and continued trade under Ottoman authority (March 1430).

Salonika ❙ 1915–1918 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Anglo-French forces attempting to aid Serbia against German and Bulgarian attack made scant headway when they landed at Salonika in Greece. Although offensives were attempted at the Vardar, Florina, Monastir, Lake Prespa and Doiran, the Salonika campaign tied up huge numbers of Allied troops for little gain until the final advance on the Vardar (6 October 1915–29 September 1918).

Salonta ❙ 1636 ❙ Transylvanian-Turkish Wars

Hussein Nasuh, commander of Buda and son of Grand Vizier Nasuh Pasha, rebelled against centralised Ottoman control and invaded Transylvania, held by Prince George Rákóczi I under Turkish suzereignty. A brilliant night attack on the Turkish camp at Salonta, near the Hungarian border, saw Rákóczi's troops inflict a terrible defeat, which greatly enhanced his reputation (October 1636).

Salsette ❙ 1774 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Thana

Salsu ❙ 612 ❙ Sino-Korean Wars

Leading a claimed million men against the North Korean Kingdom of Koguryo, Sui Emperor Yang Di sent General Yu Chong Sheng advancing towards Pyongyang. Ambushed at the Salsu (modern Chongchon) by Korean General Ulchi Mundok, the Chinese suffered a terrible rout and withdrew with perhaps 300,000 men lost. Another invasion was blocked 33 years later at Ansi-song (August 612).

Salt ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)
See Es Salt

Salta ❙ 1813 ❙ Argentine War of Independence
Five months after defeat at Tucumán, in northwestern Argentina, Spanish General Pío Tristán withdrew further north to Salta, where he was attacked in a well-entrenched position by Patriot General Manuel Belgrano. A decisive victory for Belgrano secured 3,500 prisoners, 10 cannon and 2,000 rifles. By November he had lost all his strategic gains at Vilcapugio and Ayohuma (20 February 1813).

Saltah ❙ 1847 ❙ Russian Conquest of the Caucasus
Count Mikhail Vorontsov campaigned against Imam Shamil of Dagestan, capturing the rebel village of Girgil, then besieging Saltah, aided by Corsican-born General Charles Burnod. An initial assault was repulsed with 400 Russian casualties, with a further 1,000 casualties a week later when Saltah fell by storm. Vorontsov destroyed the village and withdrew (8 August–26 September 1847).

Saltanovka ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)
See Mogilev

Salt Creek ❙ 1871 ❙ Kiowa Indian War
When Kiowa attacked ten freight wagons on the Salt Creek Prairie, northwest of Fort Worth, Texas, seven out of 12 teamsters were killed and a force was sent from nearby Fort Richardson. After a dangerous confrontation, General William Sherman arrested the Chiefs Satanta, Satank and Big Tree. Satank was killed trying to escape, while the other two were convicted, then pardoned (17 May 1871).

Saltillo ❙ 1840 ❙ Mexican Federalist War
Regrouping in the United States after defeat at Santa Rita de Morelos (25 March), Federalist General Antonio Canales Rosillon sent an American-Mexican vanguard under Samuel Jordan, who took Ciudad Victoria, then met Centralist General Rafael Vasquez near Saltillo. Massively outnumbered, Jordan fought clear and withdrew to Texas, but Canales Rosillon soon capitulated (25 October 1840).

Salt River ❙ 1872 ❙ Apache Indian Wars
See Skeleton Cave

Saltville (1st) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
Union General Stephen G. Burbridge led a raid from Kentucky into southwestern Virginia, advancing on the strategic saltworks near Saltville, defended by Generals Alfred E. Jackson and John S. Williams. After heavy fighting and the loss of about 350 men, the badly outnumbered Union force was repulsed. A number of black prisoners left behind were reportedly murdered (2 October 1864).

Saltville (2nd) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
Leading a second Union raid into southwest Virginia against the saltworks at Saltville, General George Stoneman feinted towards the leadworks at nearby Marion, then marched west on Saltville itself. The Confederate defenders under General John C. Breckinridge were driven off and Stoneman captured and destroyed the works before returning to Knoxville (20–21 December 1864).

Salvador ❙ 1624–1625 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars
Dutch Admiral Jacob Willekens, with Colonel Jan van Dorth, campaigned against Salvador in Portuguese Brazil, landing a large force at Bahia Bay and Governor Diogo de Mendonca Furtado surrendered after very heavy fighting (9 May 1624). Salvador was besieged next year by a great Spanish armada under Fadrique de Toledo

Osorio and had to capitulate (30 March 1624–28 April 1625).

Salvador ❙ 1627 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

Returning to Salvador in Portuguese Brazil, which had been captured, then lost, by Dutch forces, Admiral Piet Heyn attacked Spanish and Portuguese shipping in the port at Bahia. Although massively outnumbered, the Dutch destroyed or captured 22 vessels and Heyn went home with his prizes. He returned to capture the silver fleet in September 1628 off Matanzas (3 March 1627).

Salvador ❙ 1638 ❙ Dutch-Portuguese Colonial Wars

Determined to expand Dutch conquests in Portuguese Brazil, new Governor John Maurice of Nassau recaptured Porto Calvo, then a year later took a force of almost 5,000 men further south against the key city of Salvador. A bold assault nearly secured victory (17–18 May), but Maurice was eventually forced to withdraw. By 1654 Holland had lost all its Brazilian possessions (8 April–26 May 1638).

Salvador ❙ 1822–1823 ❙ Brazilian War of Independence

Early in the war, Portuguese commander in Bahia, Colonel Ignacio Luis Madeira de Melo was besieged at Salvador by Brazilian Colonel Pedro Labatut (later Colonel Joaquim de Lima e Silva). After defeat at Piraja and naval action off Salvador, Madeira eventually evacuated by sea for Lisbon, leaving Portugal's only remaining forces in Montevideo (February 1822–2 July 1823).

Salvador ❙ 1823 ❙ Brazilian War of Independence

Brazilian naval commander Lord Thomas Cochrane sailed from Rio de Janiero against besieged Salvador, where he met Portuguese Admiral João Félix Pereira de Campos in a badly handled battle off the port. Cochrane had to break off the action and withdrew south to Morro de San Paulo, yet claimed victory because the Portuguese fleet remained under blockade in Salvador (4 May 1823).

Salween ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (China)

To break the land blockade of China, General Wei Lihuang crossed the Salween in Yunnan against Japan's General Yuzo Matsuyama. Fighting in high mountains, the Chinese took Tengchong, Longling, Songshan and then Wanting on the border to reopen the Burma Road. The much-delayed campaign cost 19,000 Chinese and 15,000 Japanese killed (11 May 1944–20 January 1945).

Samakov ❙ 1371 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

See Samokov

Samala ❙ 1901 ❙ Wars of the Mad Mullah

On the first expedition against Muhammad Abdullah Hassan of Somaliland, General Eric Swayne led a mainly Somali force southeast from Burao, where his camp at Samala, north of Damot, was attacked by about 5,000 Dervishes under the Mullah himself. The Dervishes were driven off with heavy losses by Captain Malcolm McNeill and soon met Swayne further south at Ferdiddin (2–3 June 1901).

Samalu ❙ 780 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Abbasid Caliph al-Mahdi retaliated for the sack of Hadath (779) by sending a large army into Byzantine Cilicia under his teenage son Harun, with command assigned to Hasan ibn Kahtaba and the Prince's tutor Khalid ibn Barmaki. The fortress of Samalu, near Massissa east of Adana, was forced to surrender after a 38-day bombardment. A second expedition in 782 won at Nicomedia.

Samana ❙ 1709 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

At the head of a massive peasant army, the Sikh leader Banda Singh Bahadur rebelled against Emperor Bahadur Shah and attacked the wealthy Mughal city of Samana, southwest of Patiala in the Upper Punjab. The city fell by storm after three days' fighting in what is claimed to have been the first notable offensive for Sikh arms, followed by a terrible sack and massacre (26 November 1709).

Samanpur ❙ 1815 ❙ British-Gurkha War
See Parsa

Samar ❙ 1900 ❙ Philippine-American War
See Balangiga

Samar ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Despite losses in the Sibuyan Sea in the northern Philippines, Admiral Takeo Kurita sailed east through the San Bernadino Strait and the following day surprised Admiral Clifton Sprague off Samar. The massively out-gunned Americans lost two escort carriers and three destroyers, but Kurita lost three cruisers and withdrew, effectively deciding the battle of Leyte Gulf (25 October 1944).

Samara ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

Counter-attacking against the Czech Legion of former prisoners of war, Red forces retook Kazan (10 September) and advanced down the Volga through Simbirsk (12 September). Then at Samara, the Czech units and their White allies were utterly routed. Czech Colonel Svec killed himself when his troops mutinied and the Red offensive continued east towards Ufa (8 October 1918).

Samaria ❙ 724–722 BC ❙ Assyrian Wars

When King Hoshea of Israel revolted against his Assyrian overlord, King Shalmaneser V of Assyria took a large army to attack the ancient Israeli capital Samaria, northwest of Jerusalem. While Shalmaneser died during the siege, his successor Sargon II stormed and destroyed Samaria, ending the Kingdom of Israel. Its citizens were deported to Media and Israel became an Assyrian Province.

Samarkand ❙ 1025 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

Campaigning north of the Oxus, Mahmud of Ghazni attacked Ilek Khan Ali Tegin of Bokhara, who was suppported by Arslan Israil, son of the great leader Seljuk. Aided by Tegin's rival, Yusuf Kadir Khan of Kashghar, Mahmud secured a decisive victory near Samarkand. Arslan and his followers were permitted to settle in Khorasan, though he was later imprisoned and died in captivity.

Samarkand ❙ 1032 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars
See Dabusiyya

Samarkand ❙ 1141 ❙ Wars of the Great Seljuk Sultanate

Seljuk Sultan Sanjar of Khorasan supressed a rebellion by the Turkoman tribes of Transoxonia, then faced a new alliance between the Qara-Khitai Tatars and neighbouring Turkish Qarluqs. Decisively defeated near Samarkand, Sanjar was forced to abandon Transoxonia and the continuing Turkoman invasion eventually led to the collapse of his kingdom.

Samarkand ❙ 1220 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

On a massive offensive against the Khwarezmian Empire, the Mongol Genghis Khan captured and destroyed Bokhara, then besieged Samarkand, held by Governor Turghay Khan after Sultan Muhammad II fled. When Samarkand fell, it too was destroyed and its inhabitants were massacred. Muhammad was then pursued through his empire to defeat near Hamadan (19 March 1220).

Samarkand ❙ 1497–1498 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

The 15-year-old Mughal Babur led a bold advance to Samarkand, where his small force captured the capital of his ancestor Tamerlane. He then faced a massive army nearby, under the Uzbek leader Muhammad Shaybani Khan and was driven back into the city under siege. Babur was starved into surrender after five months but was allowed to withdraw (November 1497–March 1498).

Samarkand ❙ 1501 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars
See Sar-i-Pul

Samarra ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

See Istabulat

Samawah ❙ 1920 ❙ Iraqi Revolt

While British troops south of Baghdad advanced down the Euphrates towards Kufah, General Frank Coningham advanced upriver from Nasiriyah towards besieged Samawah, held by Major Arthur Hay. After heavy fighting at Khidir (6 October) and Hasbah (13 October), Samawah was relieved. The war soon ended and Britain established Prince Faisal as King of Iraq (July–14 October 1920).

Sambre ❙ 57 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars

As he advanced into northern Gaul across the Aisne, Julius Caesar was confronted by the Belgic Nervii people camped near the Sambre. After some advanced Roman units were ambushed with heavy losses, Caesar counter-attacked and routed his enemy, inflicting massive casualties. Thousands more, including women and children, were sold into slavery and the Nervii were virtually destroyed.

Sambre ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Charleroi

Sambre ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

With his army driven back across the Selle, German commander Erich von Ludendorff resigned. The Allies launched their final offensive along the Sambre between Valenciennes and the Oise, supported by the Americans in the south on the Meuse. Brutal fighting saw Le Quesnoy, Tournai, Mauberge and Mons fall and Germany sued for peace to end the war (1–11 November 1918).

Samgamner ❙ 1679 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Maratha King Shivaji was returning from the sack of Jalna, northeast of Bombay, when he was attacked at Samgamner by Mughal General Ranmast Khan. The King's rearguard held the Mughals for three days of hard fighting before Maratha commander Sidhoji Nimbalkar was eventually killed, along with about 2,000 of his men. It was Shivaji's last battle and he died six months later (November 1679).

Samhud ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

Having routed Mamluk General Murad Bey at the Battle of the Pyramids in July 1798, Napoleon Bonaparte sent Generals Louis Desaix and Louis-Nicolas Davout in pursuit along the Nile. With Murad defeated at Sediman (7 October), they advanced to Samhud, near Garga, where another major Mamluk force was beaten. Murad withdrew and lost again at Aswan (22 January 1799).

Samland ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Pillau

Samokov ❙ 1371 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Fresh from victory at the Maritza, Ottoman Sultan Murad I marched against a coalition of Bulgarian and Serbian Princes under his brother-in-law Prince John Sisman of Trnovo. Supported by General Lala Shahin Pasha, Murad routed and dispersed the Christians at Samokov, southeast of Sofia, marking the beginning of the end of independent Bulgaria.

Samos ❙ 1824 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Turkish Admiral Khosrew Pasha was determined to seize Samos and landed troops before his fleet was met between Ikaria and Samos by Greek Admiral Georgios Sachtouris with Konstaninos Kanaris. With three ships, 100 cannon and 1,000 men lost in heavy fighting, Khosrew was forced to abandon his expedition. He fought again next month further south off Bodrum (11–17 August 1824).

Sampford Courtenay ❙ 1549 ❙ Western Rebellion

Pro-Catholic insurgents in Cornwall and Devon who besieged Exeter were driven off at St Mary's Clyst (4 August), then regrouped to the northwest under Sir Humphry Arundell at Sampford Courtenay. In the final brutal action of the rebellion, they were crushed by Lord John Russell with many prisoners killed. Arundell and other leaders were executed and Russell was ennobled (17 August 1549).

Samugargh ❙ 1658 ❙ War of the Mughal Princes

Bitter war between the sons of ailing Mughal Emperor Shahjahan saw the younger brothers Aurangzeb and Murad Baksh defeat an Imperial army at Dharmat, then march on Agra against the eldest brother, Dara Shikoh. Dara was defeated eight miles east at Samugargh and fled. Aurangzeb then imprisoned his own father and brother Murad and seized the throne (29 May 1658).

Samur ❙ 1583 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

See Vilasa

San ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Aided by a German advance on Warsaw, Austrian General Svetozar Boroevic launched a fresh offensive into southern Poland and managed to relieve besieged Przemysl, west of Lemberg (Lvov). Russian forces under General Radko Dmitriev fought a courageous defence along the San and, with the Germans checked around Warsaw, Boroevic began to fall back (13–14 October 1914).

Sanaa ❙ 1967–1968 ❙ Yemeni Civil Wars

Encouraged by the withdrawal of Egyptian forces supporting the Republican government of North Yemen, Saudi-backed Royalists under Prince Muhammad Hussein attacked the highland city of Sanaa. After an epic 70-day defence, aided by Republicans from South Yemen, the siege was broken and the Royalist war to restore the Imamate was effectively lost (1 December 1967–8 February 1968).

Sanananda ❙ 1942–1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Australian General George Vasey and American Robert Eichelberger took Buna and Gona on the north coast of Papua, but stalled outside the main Japanese beachhead at Sanananda. With both sides reinforced, there was heavy fighting before Sanananda fell and the surviving Japanese were evacuated northwest towards Salamaua (20 November 1942–22 January 1943).

San Andrés ❙ 1913 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Francisco (Pancho) Villa resumed the war in northern Mexico, attacking a Federal force of almost 1,000 men under General Feliz Terrazas advancing towards Chihuahua at San Andrés. Major Benito Artalejo took the town by storm after a daylong action, capturing massive arms and booty. The Federals lost 300 casualties in the action and Villa executed over 300 prisoners (26 August 1913).

San Antonio, El Salvador ❙ 1828 ❙ Central American National Wars

On campaign against President Manuel José Arce of the Central American Federation, General Francisco Morazán of Honduras again invaded El Salvador and defeated Colonel Antonio de Aycinena at San Antonio, on the Rio Lempa near Gualcho. The Federal army capitulated and Morazán entered San Salvador in triumph, then advanced on Guatemala City (9 October 1828).

San Antonio, Texas ❙ 1835 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Advancing through Goliad to occupy San Antonio, Mexican General Martin Perfecto de Cos and 1,200 troops were besieged at the Presidio (known as Bexar) by Texan volunteers. In the final assault by Ben Milam and Frank W. Johnson (5 December), Milam was killed. However, Cos soon surrendered and the Texans captured plentiful guns and ammunition (October–9 December 1835).

San Antonio, Texas (1st) ❙ 1842 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Eight years after losing Texas at San Jacinto, Mexico sent a raiding force of 500 Regular cavalry under General Ráfael Vásquez, who seized San Antonio. Contrary to Texan fears, Vásquez proved not to be the vanguard of a full-scale invasion and he returned across the Rio Grande after indecisive skirmishing. A much larger force tried again six months later (5 March 1842).

San Antonio, Texas (2nd) ❙ 1842 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

French-born Mexican General Adrián Woll led a second large-scale raid into Texas, marching 1,200 troops north to once again secure San Antonio. However, after a week's occupation, Woll was defeated by Texan forces at the nearby Salado River and withdrew towards Mexico with his prisoners. The Texans retaliated in December with a raid against Laredo (11–20 September 1842).

San Bernadino Strait ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Samar

San Carlos, Argentina ❙ 1872 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Despite aiding the government at Cepeda in 1859, Indian leader Juan Calfucurá continued to attack towns on the Pampas in Buenos Aires Province and was met at San Carlos de Bolivar by a large force under General Ignacio Rivas and Indian ally Cipriano Catriel. Calfucurá suffered a decisive defeat with about 200 men killed, effectively ending the Indian raids. He died a year later (8 March 1872).

San Carlos, Falklands ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

When a British amphibious force landed 4,000 men on East Falkland at San Carlos, Argentine planes sank two British ships and badly damaged two others, while the destroyer Coventry was sunk to the northwest. Over 30 Argentine aircraft were lost before a second British landing secured the bridgehead. The troops then marched east towards Stanley and south towards Goose Green (21–26 May 1982).

Sand Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

Colonel John Chivington took a force of cavalry 40 miles northeast of Fort Lyon in eastern Colorado against 500 Cheyenne and some Arapaho led by Black Kettle in camp under a flag of peace at Sand Creek. In a brutal attack at dawn, Chivington's men destroyed the camp, killing about 300, more than half of them women and children, and provoking a bitter war (29 November 1864).

Sandepu ❙ 1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

During an attempted offensive south of Mukden (modern Shenyang), Russian General Aleksei Kuropatkin advanced at the western end of the entrenched positions between Shaho and the Hun River. Launched in heavy snow near the villages of Sandepu and Heigoutai, the mismanaged Russian initiative stalled with severe losses and achieved nothing (25–29 January 1905).

Sandershausen ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

As Duke Charles of Soubise counter-attacked through Hesse, his French vanguard under Duke Victor-Francois of Broglie was met at Sandershausen, on the Fulda northeast of Kassel, by Hessians and Hanoverians under Prince Johann Casimir of Isenburg. Broglie overwhelmed the outnumbered Allies and in October Soubise won a decisive victory at nearby Lutterberg (23 July 1758).

Sandfontein ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

As South African forces invaded German Southwest Africa, General Henry Lukin in the south took Raman Drift on the Orange, while Colonel Ronald Grant advanced upriver to Sandfontein. Attacked by German Colonel Joachim von Heydebreck, the South Africans suffered heavy losses and surrendered. A need to deal with a Boer rising then stalled the Allied campaign (26 September 1914).

Sand Mountain ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Day's Gap

Sandomierz ❙ 1656 ❙ 1st Northern War

Charles X of Sweden renewed his offensive into Poland through Golab, advancing on Lvov.

However, he failed trying to storm Zamosc and fell back to the Vistula near Sandomierz, blockaded in the west by Stefan Czarniecki and Jerzy Lubomirski and in the east by Pavel Sapeiha's Lithuanians. A relief force was beaten at Warka, but Charles broke out and recaptured Warsaw in July (March–April 1656).

San Domingo ❙ 1802–1803 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Santo Domingo Rising)

See Santo Domingo

Sand River ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Zand

Sandwich ❙ 851 ❙ Viking Raids on Britain

Threatened by continued Viking raids on the south English coast, Athelstan, under-King of Kent and brother of Aethelwulf of Wessex, led the Saxon fleet to sea supported by Ealdorman Ealchere. In what is sometimes called England's first naval victory, Athelstan defeated the Danes off Sandwich, reputedly taking ten prizes. The Danes withdrew to the Thames and imminent defeat at Aclea.

Sandwich ❙ 1217 ❙ 1st English Barons' War

See South Foreland

Sandwich ❙ 1460 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Despite their disaster at Ludford Bridge (October 1459), a Yorkist force returned from Calais and landed near Sandwich, Kent, defended by Sir Osbert Mountfort. A fierce action saw John Dinham seize the town, supported by Sir John Wenlock and William Neville Earl of Fauconberg. Richard Neville Earl of Warwick then landed and in July defeated Henry VI at Northampton (20 June 1460).

Sandy Creek ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

American barges moving guns and cables from Oswego to new ships at Sacket's Harbour were met at Sandy Creek on the east shore of Lake Ontario by 200 English marines and sailors under Captain Stephen Popham. Ambushed by 250 riflemen and Oneida Indians led by Captain Daniel Appling, Popham had to surrender and America soon regained naval superiority on Lake Ontario (30 May 1814).

San Esteban de Gormaz ❙ 918 ❙ Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

Ordono II of Leon led a major offensive against the Muslims, advancing across the Douro to campaign as far south as Merida before being challenged by a massive army raised by the Andalusian Umayyad Caliph Abd-ar-Rahman III. Near San Esteban de Gormaz, southwest of Soria, Ordono achieved a brilliant victory, though he was beaten by Abd-ar-Rahman in 920 at Val-de-Junquera.

San Felasco Hammock ❙ 1836 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

While campaigning in northern Alachua County, northwest of modern Gainesville, Florida, 100 local militia on reconnaissance under Colonel John Warren were attacked by Seminoles at San Felasco Hammock, south of Newnansville. A hard-fought action saw Warren's troops almost surrounded before they were saved by effective use of their cannon (18 September 1836).

San Felice ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Barba de Puerco

San Felipe ❙ 1863 ❙ Central American National Wars

President Gerardo Barrios of El Salvador repulsed Guatemalan invaders at Coatepeque (24 February), then turned south to support Liberal rebellion in Nicaragua. However, Barrios was defeated by President Tomás Martínez at San Felipe, a suburb of Leon, and had to return to El Salvador. He soon faced a fresh Guatemalan invasion and siege of his own capital San Salvador (29 April 1863).

San Felix ❙ 1817 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

With Revolutionary forces besieging Angostura in eastern Venezuela, Spanish commander Pablo Morillo sent 1,500 reinforcements under General Miguel de La Torre, who met General Manuel Piar 60 miles to the northeast at San Felix. De La Torre was routed and narrowly escaped capture, losing 500 killed and 500 prisoners. Angostura fell to Piar in July (11 April 1817).

San Fermo ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

At war with Austria in northern Italy east of Lake Maggiore, Giuseppe Garibaldi and 3,000 men captured Varese, then advanced on Como next day, meeting over 6,000 infantry under Marshal Karl von Urban at San Fermo. Despite brave resistance, the Austrians were driven out at bayonet-point. Garibaldi won again at Tre Ponti (15 June), though he achieved little strategic benefit (27 May 1859).

San Fiorenzo ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

With the British navy forced out of Toulon in December 1793, Admiral Sir Samuel Hood (1724–1816) invaded Corsica and landed near San Fiorenzo (St Florent). A storming party under Captain William Beresford seized the town, while survivors of the garrison fled to Bastia. Two French frigates in the harbour were sunk, though one was later recommissioned (7 February 1794).

San Francisco ❙ 1879 ❙ War of the Pacific

When Chile won command of the sea at Angamos (8 October), a 6,000-strong Chilean army under Emilio Sotomayer Baeza landed at Pisagua and captured Dolores, then faced General Juan Buendía's Peruvians marching north from Iquique. Buendía was utterly routed on the nearby Plain of Dolores at Cerros de San Francisco. The Chileans then captured Iquique (19 November 1879).

San Francisco ❙ 1891 ❙ Chilean Civil War

Amid civil war against Chilean President José Manuel Balmaceda, 1,000 Congressist troops led by Colonel Estanislao del Canto Arteaga defeated Loyalist Colonel Eulogio Robles Pinochet and 350 troops northeast of Iquique at Cerros de San Francisco, on the plain of Dolores. Iqique fell next day. After a check at Huara, Canto Arteaga won again weeks later at Pozo Almonte (15 February 1891).

San Gabriel, California ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

Commodore Robert Stockton and General Stephen Kearney continued the offensive against Spanish California and were met northeast of Los Angeles at the San Gabriel by Spanish-Californian forces under Captain José Maria Flores. Falling back with few casualties, Flores was beaten again next day on the plain of La Mesa and American forces re-entered Los Angeles (8–9 January 1847).

San Gabriels, Texas ❙ 1839 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Unaware of the defeat of the Mexican insurrectionist Vicente Córdova at Mill Creek, Manuel Flores set out from Matamaros with food and munitions, escorted by about 30 Indians and Mexicans. Intercepted near the San Gabriels, west of modern Georgetown, Texas, by Texas Ranger James O. Rice, Flores was defeated and killed and the so-called Córdova Rebellion was finally over (17 May 1839).

Sanganer ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Bogged down by heavy rain and unable to cross the swollen Chambal following defeat at Jawra Alipur (20 June), the rebel Tantia Topi made a stand near Sanganer, just south of Jaipur city, against the pursuing Rajputana Field force under General Henry Gee Roberts. The rebels fled after terrible losses to artillery fire and a week later tried to hold the Banas at Kankrauli (7 August 1858).

Sangerhausen ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Sandershausen

Sanggiyan Hada ❙ 1619 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

See Siyanggiayan

San Giovanni ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Trebbia

San Giuliano ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Alessandria

Sangju ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

As Toyotomi Hideyoshi's massive invasion force advanced up the Korean Peninsula from Pusan, Konishi Yukinaga, supported by So Soshitomo, reached Sangju, northwest of Taegu, where General Yi Il attempted to halt the invaders. The largely untrained Korean peasant force was routed and fled with thousands beheaded. Konishi continued north through Chongju (3 June 1592).

San Gregorio ❙ 1817–1818 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence
See Los Remedios

Sangro ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

German General Traugott Herr lost Termoli (7 October) but held the Sangro, the eastern end of the Gustav Line across Italy. A British bridgehead across the river was heavily counter-attacked and almost lost before tanks were brought up. General Sir Bernard Montgomery then drove on across the Moro and took Ortona before heavy losses made him call off his offensive (20–28 November 1943).

Sanguesa ❙ 924 ❙ Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

In reprisal for Christian capture of the castle of Viguera, Abd-ar-Rahman III led an expedition from Cordova into northeastern Spain against Sancho I of Navarre. The opposing forces met at Sanguesa, southeast of Pamplona, and Sancho was routed. The Muslim ruler then went on to sack the abandoned city of Pamplona (22 July 924).

San Ignacio ❙ 1867 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Rebels led by General Juan Sáa and Juan de Dios Videla rose in western Argentina against President Bartolomé Mitre and faced a large force under General Wenceslao Paunero. At San Ignacio, on the Rio Quinto east of San Luis, the Loyalist vanguard under Colonel José Miguel Arredondo inflicted a decisive defeat. The rebels fled to Chile and Arredondo was promoted General (1 April 1867).

San Isidro ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

At the start of the war, 2,000 ill-armed rebels in Nueva Ecija under Mariano Llanera and Pantaleon Belmonte seized the town of San Isidro and besieged Governor Leonardo Walls and the Spanish garrison in their barracks. However, Major Lopez Arteaga arrived with reinforcements next day and the Patriots were driven out after a brutal all-night counter-attack (3–4 September 1896).

San Isidro ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

After American forces captured the Revolutionary capital at Malolos, 30 miles northwest of Manila (31 March), General Henry W. Lawton advanced to the northeast on the newly designated insurgent capital at San Isidro, Nuevo Ecija. The town fell following heavy fighting, but President Emilio Aguinaldo's government eluded capture and retreated upriver to Cabanatuan (17 May 1899).

San Isidro del General ❙ 1948 ❙ Costa Rican Civil War

In the wake of a disputed election, rebels under José María Figueres Ferrer seized San Isidro, commanding the Pan America highway, from the government forces of President Teodoro Picado. Very heavy fighting drove off a counter-attack by Carlos Luis Fallas and General Toribia Tijerno (killed in the withdrawal) and Figueres advanced north towards Cartago (12–14 March 1948).

San Jacinto, Mexico ❙ 1867 ❙ Mexican-French War

Imperial-Mexican Conservative forces under General Miguel Miramón, attempting to block the Liberal re-conquest of Mexico, seized Zacatecas then faced a counter-offensive by General Mariano Escobedo at nearby San Jacinto. Miramón was routed and over 100 prisoners—including his brother Joaquin—were executed. Escobedo continued south against Querétaro (12 February 1867).

San Jacinto, Nicaragua ❙ 1856 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

East of Lake Managua, 300 of William Walker's Filibusters led by American Byron Cole attacked 160 troops under Colonel José Dolores Estrada at San Jacinto. In a celebrated action, the outnumbered Nicaraguans were roused by heroic Sergeant Andrés Castro and drove Cole off. Their courage inspired another defensive victory a month later at Masaya (14 September 1856).

San Jacinto, Texas ❙ 1836 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

General Sam Houston's battered Texans fell back after the disasters at the Alamo and Coleto Creek in March and took a defensive position on the San Jacinto River, southeast of modern Houston, against Mexican General Antonio de Santa Anna. The outnumbered Texans won a brilliant victory, with almost every Mexican killed or captured, effectively securing independence for Texas (20 April 1836).

San Jorge ❙ 1857 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

Soon after the Central American allies drove the American William Walker out of Granada in western Nicaragua, their new commander José Maria Cañas advanced south on Rivas and seized nearby San Jorge. Repeated costly attacks by Charles Henningsen and later by Walker himself failed to dislodge the allies, who then resumed the offensive against Rivas itself (29 January–16 March 1857).

San José ❙ 1835 ❙ Central American National Wars

Twelve years after Costa Rica's capital was moved to San José following victory at Ochomogo, the cities of Cartago, Alajuela and Heredia formed a secessionist League and besieged President Braulio Carrillo in San José. However, League troops were repeatedly defeated and peace assured the dominance of San José. Carrillo was eventually overthrown in 1842 (October 1835).

San José la Arada ❙ 1851 ❙ Central American National Wars

See La Arada

San Juan, Puerto Rico (1st) ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

American naval commander William T. Sampson, on the hunt for the Spanish fleet under Admiral Pascual Cervera, arrived at San Juan, Puerto Rico, where he found no ships, but launched a controversial bombardment of the city. After inflicting heavy damage, Sampson withdrew to blockade Puerto Rico. A Spanish attempt to break the blockade the following month failed (12 May 1898).

San Juan, Puerto Rico (2nd) ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

One of the best-known ship-to-ship actions of the war saw the Spanish destroyer Terror and the old cruiser Isabel II leave San Juan, Puerto Rico, to attack the blockading American auxiliary cruiser St Paul (Captain Charles D. Sigsbee). Isabel II turned back and Terror was badly damaged by very fierce gunfire and run ashore. A month later American forces landed at Guánica (22 June 1898).

San Juan Bridge ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

See Manila

San Juan del Monte ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

In their first major action, 800 ill-trained Katipuneros under Andrés Bonifacio and Emilio

Jacinto attacked the Spanish depot at San Juan del Monte, then advanced on nearby Manila. Met by Spanish reinforcements under General Bernard Echaluse, the insurgents were routed with 153 killed and over 200 captured. Next day Governor Ramon Blanco declared a state of war (30 August 1896).

San Juan de los Llanos ❙ 1817 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Spanish adventurer Francisco Javier Mina landed on the east coast of Mexico at Soto La Marina to raise rebellion and met a much larger Royalist army under Colonel Felipe Castañon at the hacienda of San Juan de los Llanos, near San Felipe, Guanajuato. A one-sided defeat saw Castañon mortally wounded and over 300 men lost. Mina then took his force to Sombrero (29 May 1817).

San Juan de Ulúa ❙ 1838 ❙ Pastry War

When Mexico refused compensation for French nationals looted during an army mutiny—including a pastrycook—French Admiral Charles Baudin besieged San Juan de Ulúa, off Veracruz, held by General Antonio Gaona. After failed negotiations, a brief bombardment forced the "Gibraltar of America" to surrender and Mexico agreed to pay compensation (26 October–27 November 1838).

San Juan Epatlán ❙ 1876 ❙ Diaz Revolt in Mexico

A week after rebels against President Sebastián Lerdo de Tejada were defeated at Icamole, Generals Ignacio Alatorre and Diódoro Corella attacked rebel Generals Fidencio Hernandez and Antonio Couttolenne at San Juan Epatlán in Puebla. After a protracted action—with Corella fatally wounded—the insurgents had to withdraw. Alatorre was routed later that year at Tecoac (28 May 1876).

San Juan Hill ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

Generals Samuel Sumner and Jacob F. Kent advanced through Las Guásimas against Santiago de Cuba. Supported by Colonels Leonard Wood and Theodore Roosevelt, they attacked Spanish outer defences held by General Arsenio Linares. San Juan Hill and Kettle Hill were taken at a cost of over 1,500 American casualties and Santiago surrendered two weeks later (1 July 1898).

San Lazaro ❙ 1746 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

See Piacenza

San Lorenzo, Argentina ❙ 1813 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

When a Spanish squadron of 11 ships from Montevideo attempted to ascend the Parana River in support of Royalist forces in the Upper Provinces, a landing party under Juan Antonio Zabala was surprised at San Lorenzo, 15 miles northwest of Rosario, by Colonel José San Martin's Mounted Grenadiers. San Martin was badly wounded but the Patriots won a decisive victory (3 February 1813).

San Lorenzo, Mexico ❙ 1863 ❙ Mexican-French War

With the strategic Mexican city of Puebla under siege by French General Elie Fréderic Forey, General Ignacio Comonfort led a relief army east from Mexico City. At San Lorenzo, the Mexicans were surprised in an early morning ambush by a French force detached by Forey under General Achille Bazaine. Comonfort was routed and fled and Puebla surrendered ten days later (8 May 1863).

San Lorenzo, Mexico ❙ 1867 ❙ Mexican-French War

While Liberals under General Porfirio Diaz besieged Puebla, an Imperial-Mexican relief force led by General Leonardo Márquez marched east from Mexico City. When Puebla fell (4 April), Diaz pursued Márquez and attacked the government troops at San Lorenzo. Márquez was decisively defeated and abandoned his guns as he withdrew under siege to Mexico City (10 April 1867).

San Lorenzo, Spain (1st) ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

General Pierre Augereau responded to the Spanish invasion of southeastern France by crossing the Spanish border to divert Spanish forces away from the French siege of the fortress at Bellegarde. At San Lorenzo de la Muga, Augereau repulsed Spanish General Amarillas Comte de la Union with heavy losses before being forced to withdraw. However, the siege of Bellegarde continued (13 August 1794).

San Lorenzo, Spain (2nd) ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coaltion)

See Figueras

San Lucas Sacatepéquez ❙ 1871 ❙ Central American National Wars

Liberal revolution against President Vicente Cerna of Guatemala began with the heroic stand at Tacaña (2 April). Miguel Garcia Granados and Justo Rufino Barrios then won several actions before defeating the main government army near Antigua at San Lucas Sacatepéquez. Cerna fled into exile while Garcia Granados entered Guatemala City next day to secure the Presidency (29 June 1871).

San Luis de Ylinoises ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See St Louis

San Luis Potosi ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

See Gallinero

San Luis Potosi ❙ 1863 ❙ Mexican-French War

When Tomás Mejía led a large Imperial force against San Luis Potosi, Liberal General Miguel Negrete abandoned the city without a fight, then gathered reinforcements and launched a bloody counter-offensive. Mejía repulsed the Liberals after heavy fighting, capturing all of Negrete's guns and 800 prisoners, most of whom joined the Imperial cause (December 1863).

San Marcial ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In a co-ordinated effort to relieve the Allied siege of San Sebastian on the Spanish north coast, French Marshal Nicolas Soult led a powerful force across the Bidassoa near San Marcial, where they were heavily repulsed by Spanish General Manuel Freire. Another relief attempt was driven off near Vera, and San Sebastian town fell by storm the same day (31 August 1813).

San Marcos, Honduras ❙ 1876 ❙ Central American National Wars

José María Medina briefly regained power in Honduras with victory at La Esperanza in January, then faced a rapid counter-offensive by President Ponciano Levía, whose General Luis Bográn Baraona attacked at San Marcos River. Medina's army under his namesake Juan Antonio Medina was badly beaten. The usurper lost again at El Naranja (21 February) and fled (13 February 1876).

San Marcos, Venezuela ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Buoyed by his victory over Spanish Royalists at Araure, in western Venezuela, three days later Patriot leader Simón Bolívar sent 1,000 men against the brutal llaneros irregulars under José Tomás Boves at San Marcos on the Guárico. Bolívar's outnumbered Republican force was utterly destroyed and Boves advanced to a further victory in two months at La Puerta (8 December 1813).

San Marcos de Colón ❙ 1907 ❙ Nicaraguan-Honduran War

When President José Santos Zelaya of Nicaragua invaded Honduras, President Manuel Bonilla sent Salamón Ordóñez to defend San Marcos de Colón, near the border northeast of Choluteca. The Hondurans were routed and the invaders seized the city, proclaiming Miguel Bustillo as provisional President. Another disaster followed in March, further south at Namasigue (25 February 1907).

San Mateo, Philippines ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

Recovering from heavy losses at San Juan del Monte, Katipunero rebels under Andrés

Bonifacio and Emilio Jacinto withdrew to the Montalban hills and soon attacked San Mateo. The rebels seized the town for their first significant victory, but the Spanish quickly counterattacked. After heavy fighting along the Langka River, Bonifacio's forces retreated to Balara (September 1896).

San Mateo, Philippines ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

Threatened by Philippine insurgent activity near Manila, American commander Elwell S. Otis sent a small column under General Henry W. Lawton against General Licerio Geronimo, 15 miles to the northeast on the Mariquina at San Mateo, Morong. The courageous Lawton was killed during a fierce action fought in heavy rain and his defeated force returned to Manila (19 December 1899).

San Mateo, Venezuela ❙ 1814 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Patriot Simón Bolívar followed defeat at La Puerta in north Venezuela (3 February) by taking a defensive position at San Mateo, east of Lake de Valencia, against Spanish irregulars led by José Tomás Boves. Another Spanish force was beaten at nearby La Victoria and Boves was repulsed in two brutal attacks on San Mateo before Bolívar withdrew west to Valencia (28 February & 25 March 1814).

San Miguel de Tucumán ❙ 1812 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

See Tucumán

San Miguelito ❙ 1860 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

See Calpulalpam

San Millan ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As part of the manoeuvring before the great Allied victory at Vitoria, a French division under General Antoine-Louis Maucune was unexpectedly intercepted south of the Ebro at San Millan de la Cogolla by British units under Generals John Vandeleur and James Kempt. The French were badly mauled and took no part in the main battle three days later (18 June 1813).

San Munoz ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Huebra

Sannah's Post ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Christiaan de Wet abandoned Bloemfontein after Driefontein and led an offensive against the Sannah's Post pumping station on the Modder, 20 miles east of Bloemfontein. Despite reinforcements being available within sound of the guns, no help was sent to General Robert Broadwood, who lost 117 wagons, seven guns and 480 prisoners. De Wet continued south to Reddersburg (31 March 1900).

Sannaiyat ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

After another attempt to relieve Kut-al-Amara was repulsed at Dujaila (8 March), new Anglo-Indian commander General George Gorringe led 30,000 men in a final effort to save the besieged city on the Tigris. Four major assaults were launched against the Turks at nearby Sannaiyat—with five Victoria Crosses won—but the British were driven off and Kut fell a week later (5–22 April 1916).

Sannaspos ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Sannah's Post

San Nicolás ❙ 1811 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Near the start of Argentina's war against Spain, a small Patriot squadron under Juan Bautista Azopardo was sent up the Parana to aid General Manuel Belgrano's campaign in Paraguay. At San Nicolás, 37 miles southeast of Rosario, the squadron was intercepted and destroyed by Spanish ships from Montevideo and Spain retained control of the rivers (2 March 1811).

San Pascual ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

American General Stephen Kearney, marching overland into Spanish California, was blocked northeast of San Diego at San Pascual by a Spanish-Californian force under Captain Andrés Pico. Reinforced from the north by Lieutenant Andrew Gray, Kearney fought a hard but inconclusive action. However, he took San Diego six days later then marched north to San Gabriel (6 December 1846).

San Patricio ❙ 1836 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

While Mexican commander General Antonio de Santa Anna invaded Texas to retake San Antonio, a smaller force under General José Urrea advanced along the Gulf Coast. At San Patricio, Urrea destroyed a Texan force under Frank Johnson. He then defeated other Texan forces at Refugio and Agua Dulce Creek as he advanced inland towards Coleto Creek (27 February 1836).

San Payo ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Oitaven

San Pedro, Cuba ❙ 1896 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

See Punta Brava

San Pedro, Venezuela ❙ 1892 ❙ Venezuelan Civil Wars

When President Raimondo Andueza Palacio tried to extend his power, Joaquín Crespo led the ''Legalist Revolution,'' which overthrew Palacio and his successor, Guillermo Tell Vellegas. After numerous engagements over six months, General Domingo Monagas was finally defeated at San Pedro, near Los Tegues. Crespo entered Caracas next day and became President (5 October 1892).

San Pedro Perulapán ❙ 1839 ❙ Central American National Wars

Salvadoran President Francisco Morazán defeated Honduran-Nicaraguan invaders at Espiritu Santo (6 April), then faced a renewed invasion under Francisco Ferrera. Just north of San Salvador at San Pedro Perulapán, Ferrera was beaten and withdrew to Nicaragua. As a result, Morazán soon invaded Guatemala while another Salvadoran army in Honduras won at Soledad (25 September 1839).

San Pedro Sula ❙ 1919 ❙ Honduran Civil War

When former President Francisco Bertrand tried to install his brother-in-law Nazario Soriano after a disputed election, Rafael López Gutiérrez raised rebellion at Danlí, while General Vicente Tosta advanced on San Pedro Sula. After a weeklong battle, with heavy civilian losses, the US intervened. Bertrand and Soriano fled into exile and López Gutiérrez was elected (September 1919).

San Petru ❙ 1611 ❙ Balkan National Wars

Gabriel Bathory of Transylvania invaded Wallachia and Prince Radu Serban was forced to withdraw into Moldavia. An effective counter-attack then saw him to defeat Bathory at San Petru, near Brasov in northwest Transylvania. Turkish forces had meantime invaded Wallachia and installed the loyal Radu Mihnea. Radu Serban went into exile in Austria (September 1611).

San River ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See San

San Roque ❙ 1829 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Shortly after part of General Juan Galo Lavalle's Unitarist force was defeated at Vizcacheras, his Federalist ally General José Maria Paz marched into Córdoba against Juan Bautista Bustos. Paz secured a decisive victory at San Roque, just west of Córdoba, and won again at La Tablada. However, Lavalle himself was defeated a few days later at Puente de Márquez (22 April 1829).

San Saba ❙ 1839 ❙ Cherokee Indian Wars

Pursuing Cherokees on the Colorado after their defeat at the Neches (16 July), Texans under General Ed Burleson intercepted a small group of survivors under Chief Egg and John Bowle (son of Chief Bowle killed at the Neches) near the mouth of the San Saba River. Egg and Bowle were among the few killed, with the others captured, ending war against the Cherokee in Texas (25 December 1839).

San Salvador ❙ 1863 ❙ Central American National Wars

Driven out of El Salvador at Coatepeque in February, President José Rafael Carrera of Guatemala invaded again with Nicaraguan support to capture Santa Ana (3 July), while General Vicente Cerna besieged President Gerardo Barrios in San Salvador. Barrios finally capitulated and fled into exile and Carrera installed Francisco Dueñas as President of El Salvador (July–29 October 1863).

San Sebastian ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Generals Sir Thomas Graham and Gabriel Mendizabal, advancing into the western Pyrenees after the great Allied victory at Vitoria (21 June), besieged the vital port of San Sebastian, defended by General Emmanuel Rey. After heavy losses in failed assaults and a costly French sortie (26 July), the city was stormed and sacked (31 August). The citadel fell a week later (25 June–8 September 1813).

San Sebastian ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

A fresh offensive against government forces at San Sebastian in Navarre saw 10,000 Carlists with artillery support attack the lines at nearby Pasajes, held by the British Legion under General Sir George de Lacy Evans. While the English and their Spanish allies suffered 500 casualties (including Evans slightly wounded), the Carlists were driven off at a cost of over 1,200 men (1 October 1836).

Santa Ana ❙ 1871 ❙ Central American National Wars

While Salvadorans invaded Honduras after Pasaquina (16 March), rebel Santiago Gonzáles, with Honduran aid, marched against the forces of Salvadoran President Francisco Dueñas at Santa Ana. Gonzáles won a decisive victory and assumed the Presidency. He ended hostilities against Honduras, but a year later overthrew President José María Medina of Honduras at Comayagua (10 April 1871).

Santa Ana Amatlan ❙ 1865 ❙ Mexican-French War

Colonel Ramón Mendez followed Imperial victory at Tacámbaro by securing another decisive victory at Santa Ana Amatlan, southwest of Urupuan. Liberal Generals José María Arteaga and Carlos Salazar were defeated and captured, then executed under the Imperial "Black Decree," along with three Colonels. Mendez himself was executed after the fall of Querétaro in May 1867 (13 October 1865).

Santa Clara ❙ 1958 ❙ Cuban Revolution

Having blunted a massive Batista campaign into the Sierra Maestra in July, rebel forces took the offensive and advanced onto the plains. While Santiago surrendered with little resistance, Ernesto Che Guevara fought the last major battle of the revolution to take Santa Clara. President Fulgencio Batista fled into exile next day and Fidel Castro entered Havana in triumph (28–31 December 1958).

Santa Cruz ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

Recalled from the fall of Malolos, American General Henry W. Lawton led a reconnaissance in force southeast from Manila across Laguna de Bay, where he landed and captured the insurgent stronghold at Santa Cruz. He then marched inland and took several more towns before withdrawing, permitting most of the area to be soon retaken by Philippine General Juan Cailles (10 April 1899).

Santa Cruz de Rozales ❙ 1848 ❙ American-Mexican War

Despite a peace treaty being signed, American General Sterling Price, military Governor of Chihuahua, led an unauthorised expedition into the interior against Mexican commander General Angel Trias. Marching through Chihuahua 35 miles southeast to Santa Cruz de Rozales, Price defeated a force twice his size and captured Trias. It was the last action of the war (16 March 1848).

Santa Cruz de Tenerife ❙ 1657 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

Spain's large West Indies fleet had arrived at Santa Cruz, Tenerife, when it was attacked by English Admirals Robert Blake and Richard Stayner. By evening, all 16 galleons had been burned, blown up or sunk at the cost of about 150 English casualties and no English ship lost. However, Blake was unable to enjoy his success, dying of fever just before his ship reached Plymouth (20 April 1657).

Santa Cruz de Tenerife ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Following victory at Cape St Vincent (14 February), British Admiral Sir John Jervis rashly sent Admiral Horatio Nelson to capture the Manila treasure ship and the Spanish fortress at Santa Cruz de Tenerife in the Canary Islands, held by Governor Don Juan Gutiérrez. With insufficient men, Nelson's boats were driven off at heavy cost and he withdrew, losing his arm in the battle (21–24 July 1797).

Santa Cruz Islands ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Japanese Admiral Nobutake Kondo renewed action after battle in the Eastern Solomons in August, leading a massive combined force towards Guadalcanal. Met near Santa Cruz by Admiral Thomas Kinkaid, a classic long-range carrier duel saw severe loss of aircraft on both sides, but the Americans also had one carrier sunk and their only remaining flat-top was badly damaged (26 October 1942).

Santa Fé ❙ 1680 ❙ Pueblo Rising

Pueblo Indians in modern New Mexico under Popé rose against Spanish rule, killing many settlers and missionaries before launching a large-scale attack on Santa Fé. The Indians were driven off in successive assaults, though Governor Antonio de Otermin withdrew to El Paso, losing about 400 killed. Popé died in 1690 and by 1692 Don Diego de Vargas had retaken Santa Fé (15–17 August 1680).

Santa Fé de Bogotá ❙ 1813 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

In the wake of victory at Ventaquemada, Federalist forces from Tunja under Colonel Antonio Baraya soon marched on Bogotá against Antonio Nariño, Centralist Dictator of Cundinamarca. In battle at nearby Santa Fé, the Federalists were routed and fled, losing over 1,000 prisoners, including Governor Juan Niño. The United Provinces soon agreed to join a central government (9 January 1813).

Santa Fé de Bogotá ❙ 1814 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

See Bogotá

Santa Gertrudis ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

General Rafael Olvera led an Imperial convoy of 1,800 men and 200 wagons from Matamaros towards Monterrey and was attacked at Santa Gertrudis, near Camargo, by almost 4,000 Republicans under General Mariano Escobedo. A disastrous defeat cost Olvera over 500 casualties, 1,000 prisoners, and the entire convoy. Matamaros itself soon surrendered (16 June 1866).

Santa Inés, Mexico ❙ 1863 ❙ Mexican-French War

During their siege of Puebla, the French launched a powerful dawn attack against fortifications at Santa Inés, held by General Felipe Berriozábal, supported by Generals Nicolás de Regules and Luis Ghilardi. One of the most important actions of the siege saw the Imperial troops driven off with 240 casualties and 200 prisoners. The Republicans also lost almost 200 killed (25 April 1863).

Santa Inés, Venezuela ❙ 1859 ❙ Venezuelan Federalist Revolt

Amid a chaotic Presidential succession, Federalist army officers opposed the central government and the rival forces met in battle at Santa Inés, southeast of Barinas. Federalist General Ezequiel Zamora secured a clear victory over the Constitutionalist army of General Pedro Ramos. However, the government regained the upper hand two months later at Cople (10 December 1859).

Santa Isabel, Coahuila ❙ 1866 ❙ Mexican-French War

While campaigning east of Torréon near Parras, a French-Mexican column under General Paul-Amable de Brian was attacked at Santa Isabel by over 1,000 Republican troops led by General Andrés Viesca, supported by Colonels Francisco Naranjo and Jerónimo Treviño. The Imperialist force was heavily defeated, losing all its guns and over 100 dead, including de Brian (1 March 1866).

Santa Isabel, Sonora ❙ 1916 ❙ Villa's Raids

With rebel leader Francisco (Pancho) Villa isolated after the Mexican Revolution, his ally Colonel Pablo López ambushed a train at Santa Isabel in Sonora, murdering American mining engineer Charles R. Watson and 16 others. López—later executed by government forces—claimed the massacre was ordered by Villa, who raided into the United States two months later at Columbus (10 January 1916).

Santa Lucia ❙ 1848 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

When King Charles Albert of Sardinia joined the War of Independence against Austria, he achieved an early victory at Goito (10 April). Following an indecisive skirmish at Pastrengo, however, he met the full force of Marshal Josef Radetzky's Austrians at Santa Lucia, east of Treviso, northwest of Venice. The King suffered a major defeat and lost again a few weeks later at Curtatone (6 May 1848).

Santa Marta ❙ 1702 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

British Admiral John Benbow was cruising off Colombia when he met a superior French squadron under Admiral Jean-Baptiste Ducasseand. A running four-day action between Cartagena and Santa Marta saw Benbow badly wounded. His six captains were court-martialled for failing to provide support and two were executed. On 4 November, Benbow died of his wounds (20–24 August 1702).

Santa Marta ❙ 1815 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

See Cartagena, Colombia

Santander ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

On an offensive against the northern coast of Spain to relieve pressure on the Allied campaign around Salamanca, British Admiral Sir Home Popham seized several fortresses, then joined guerrilla leader Tomás Campillos attacking Santander, defended by French General Jean Dubreton. Reinforced by Spanish General Gabriel Mendizabal, Popham captured the vital port (22 July–3 August 1812).

Santander ❙ 1937 ❙ Spanish Civil War

Nationalist General Fidel Dávila captured the Basque capital of Bilbao (18 June), then turned west against Santander, held by poorly equipped troops under General Mariano Gamir Ulíbarri. Driven out by artillery and aerial bombardment, Ulíbarri flew to France, effectively ending organised Basque resistance and leaving Gijon as the last remaining Republican city in the north (14–25 August 1937).

Sant'Angelo ❙ 998 ❙ Later German Imperial Wars

When the patricius John Crescentius drove Pope Gregory V out of Rome and had John XVI appointed, Gregory appealed to his cousin Emperor Otto III of Germany, who led an army into Italy. The anti-Pope was captured fleeing the city and was brutally mutilated, while Otto besieged Crescentius in the Castello Sant'Angelo. When the fortress fell by storm, Crescentius was executed and Gregory was restored.

Santarem ❙ 1147 ❙ Christian Reconquest of Portugal

At the head of a renewed offensive against the Muslims of central Portugal, King Alfonso I attacked the powerful fortified city of Santarem on the Tagus. In a brilliant night-time assault, his troops took the city by a surprise escalade of the walls. Santarem fell, followed by indiscriminate slaughter of the population (March 1147).

Santarem ❙ 1834 ❙ Miguelite Wars

See Asseiceira

Santa Rita de Morelos ❙ 1840 ❙ Mexican Federalist War

Five months after defeat at Alcantra, Mexican President Anastasio Bustamente sent General Mariano Arista against Federalist rebels under Antonio Canales Rosillon. After repulsing an advance on Monterrey, Arista pursued the Federalists to Santa Rita de Morelos, in Coahuilla, where Canales Rosillon was routed. His second in command, Antonio Zapata, was captured and executed (24–25 March 1840).

Santa Rosa, Entre Rios ❙ 1870 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Federalist General Ricardo López Jordán assassinated Governor Justo José Urquiza of Entre Rios and seized power (11 April 1870), after which President Domingo Faustino Sarmiento sent General Ignacio Rivas, who met the rebels at the arroyo of Santa Rosa in Entre Rios. Despite being outnumbered, Rivas secured a bloody victory and months later won again at Ñaembé (12 October 1870).

Santa Rosa, Honduras ❙ 1863 ❙ Central American National Wars

Driven out of El Salvador at Coatepeque (24 February), President José Rafael Carrera of Guatemala sent General Vicente Cerna into Honduras, supported by Nicaragua. Near Santa Rosa, Cerna won a decisive victory, which brought down President Victoriano Castellamios. The Allies recognised José María Medina and Carrera invaded El Salvador to besiege San Salvador (16 June 1863).

Santa Rosa, Mendoza ❙ 1874 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

A rising against the election of President Nicolas Avellaneda saw troops from Mendoza under General José Miguel Arredondo defeat and kill government commander Colonel Amaro Catalán at Santa Rosa, southeast of Mendoza. In a second action, General Juilo Roca, though severely wounded, defeated and captured Arredondo, ending the rebellion (29 October & 7 December 1874).

Santa Rosa de Copán ❙ 1856 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

American adventurer William Walker effectively seized power in Nicaragua after capturing Granada (October 1855), then entered northern Costa Rica, where part of his Filibuster force under Colonel Louis Schlessinger reached Santa Rosa, north of Liberia. Costa Rican President Juan Rafael Mora stormed the Filibuster camp and the invaders fled back over the border to Rivas (20 March 1856).

Santa Rosa de Copán ❙ 1919 ❙ Sapoa Revolution

Exiles in Nicaragua, attempting to overthrow President Frederico Tinoco of Costa Rica, invaded across the Sapoa, where rebel leader Alfredo Volio Jiménez died in a skirmish. After defeat at Santa Rosa de Copán, north of Liberia, his successor Julio Acosta Garcia led the survivors back to Nicaragua. Soon afterwards, Tinoco's brother was murdered and he went into exile (8 May 1919).

Santa Rosa de Copán ❙ 1955 ❙ Costa Rican Civil War

Christian Socialist forces loyal to former President Rafael Calderón Guardia—ousted from government in Costa Rica after defeat at Ochomogo in 1948—invaded from Nicaragua against Conservative President José María Figueres Ferrer. The counter-revolution was repulsed at Santa Rosa de Copán, north of Liberia, though Calderón was eventually permitted to return (11 January 1955).

Santa Rosa Island ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Early in the war in the south, Confederate forces under General Richard H. Anderson attacked Union troops on Santa Rosa Island, off Pensacola Bay, Florida. Although Anderson secured initial success against New York Zouaves under Colonel William Wilson, he was counter-attacked by Colonel Harvey Brown from Fort Pickens and had to withdraw to the mainland (9 October 1861).

Santa Vittoria ❙ 1702 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Louis Duke de Vendôme took command after Francois de Neufville Marshal Villeroi was captured at Cremona and advanced to relieve Mantua. Prince Eugène of Savoy ordered Imperial cavalry under General Annibale Visconti to shadow the French, but they were surprised and routed at Santa Vittoria. Eugène raised the siege of Mantua and pursued Vendôme south to Luzzara (26 July 1702).

Santiago ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Martin La Carrera marched on Santiago to support guerrilla leaders Pablo Morillo and Garcia del Barrio and the ill-armed Spanish force was met by French General Antoine-Louis Maucune on the nearby plain of Campo de la Estrella. Maucune's force was routed, with over 600 men lost, and he abandoned Santiago, withdrawing towards Corunna (22 May 1809).

Santiago Bay ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

American forces which captured San Juan Hill outside Santiago de Cuba (1 July), threatened the Spanish fleet in Santiago Bay and Admiral Pascual Cervera was ordered to attempt a breakout. Met by part of the American blockading squadron under Commodore Winfield S. Schley, Cervera lost all seven of his ships with terrible casualties. Santiago soon surrendered (3 July 1898).

Santiago de Cuba ❙ 1741 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

English Admiral Edward Vernon followed his disaster at Cartagena in April by taking a large force against Santiago in Spanish Cuba. Troops under General Thomas Wentworth landed at Guantánamo Bay, where badly strained relations between army and navy broke down. When Wentworth refused to advance on Santiago, the expedition withdrew in utter failure (18 July–7 December 1741).

Santiago de Cuba ❙ 1898 ❙ Spanish-American War

With victory at Las Guásimas, American commander William R. Shafter advanced on the key city of Santiago de Cuba, where he soon captured the outer defences at San Juan Hill. Following total destruction of the Spanish fleet in Santiago Bay, General José Toral negotiated to surrender the city and also troops in outlying areas, virtually ending the war in Cuba (24 June–17 July 1898).

Santo Domingo ❙ 1586 ❙ Drake's Caribbean Raid

On a large-scale English raid into the Caribbean, Admiral Sir Francis Drake took about 30 ships against Santo Domingo City in Hispaniola (modern Dominican Republic). Finding the once-prosperous Spanish city greatly reduced, Drake took his revenge by burning most of the buildings before the citizens paid a ransom to save the rest. He then sailed south to Cartagena (January 1586).

Santo Domingo ❙ 1655 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

Cromwellian England despatched Admiral Sir William Penn to the West Indies, where he landed more than 7,000 troops under Colonel Robert Venables on Spanish Santo Domingo (modern Dominican Republic). The British force was heavily defeated after a badly managed campaign and they re-embarked to move further west against Jamaica (13–25 April 1655).

Santo Domingo ▌ 1802–1803 ▌ Napoleonic Wars (Santo Domingo Rising)

Sent to Santo Domingo to suppress rebel Francois Toussaint l'Ouverture, French General Charles Leclerc suffered costly losses at Crête-à-Perriot (March 1802), then treacherously seized l'Ouverture. Leclerc died of fever and the rebel Jean Jacques Dessalines later seized Port-au-Prince and Cap Francais. When Fort St Nicolas fell (4 December 1803), he declared independent Haiti.

Santo Domingo ▌ 1806 ▌ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

When part of the French fleet from Brest under Admiral Corentin de Leissegues crossed the Atlantic, they were pursued by Admiral Sir John Duckworth, joined in the West Indies by Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane. Attacked in Santo Domingo harbour (in modern Dominican Republic), all five French ships of the line were destroyed or captured. Only two frigates escaped (6 February 1806).

Santo Domingo ▌ 1809 ▌ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

With France ejected from western Santo Domingo (Haiti) in 1803, General Marie Louis Ferrand held out in neighbouring Spanish Santo Domingo until France and Spain were at war, then unwisely attacked Palo Hincado in El Seibo Province. Defeated by General Don Huan Sanchez, Ferrand killed himself. In July 1810, General Joseph Borquier surrendered after siege in Santo Domingo City (7 November 1809).

Santo Domingo ▌ 1965 ▌ Dominican Civil War

Left-wing forces tried to seize power in Dominica and civil war broke out with Conservatives under General Elias Wessin. Fearing supposed Communist influence, US President Lyndon Johnson sent 20,000 troops to intervene. Forty-seven Americans and perhaps 2,000 Dominicans were killed before Santo Domingo City was secured and a ceasefire was achieved (24 April–23 May 1965).

Santuario, Antioquia ▌ 1829 ▌ Colombian Civil Wars

Colonel José María Córdoba rebelled against the dictatorship of Simón Bolívar and seized the city of Medellín, then faced 900 veteran troops marching from Bogotá under General Daniel Florencio O'Leary. Southeast of Medellín at Santuario, Córdoba was defeated and killed, along with about 200 of his followers. The rebels were later pardoned and the province was pacified (17 October 1829).

Santuario, Cundinamarca ▌ 1830 ▌ Colombian Civil Wars

Rising against newly elected President Joaquín Mosquera, the largely Venezuelan Callao Battalion of Colonel José Florencio Jiménez marched on Bogotá and were met to the west at Santuario by government forces under Colonel Pedro Antonio García. Jiménez secured victory and occupied Bogotá for General Rafael Urdaneta, who then seized government (27 August 1830).

Sao del Indio ▌ 1895 ▌ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

When Spanish Colonel Francisco de Borja Canella marched southwest from Guantánamo to attack Cuban insurgent leader José Maceo, his brother Antonio Maceo joined him by forced march and intercepted the Spaniards on the Bacanao at Sao del Indio. A bloody 36-hour action saw the brothers defeat Canella, who burned his supply train and fled back to Guantánamo (31 August 1895).

Sao Mamede ▌ 1128 ▌ Portuguese War of Succession

Count Henry of Burgundy held Portugal through his wife Teresa, daughter of Alfonso VI of Castile, and at Henry's death his son Alfonso Henriques rebelled against his mother and her Galician lover Ferdinand Peres. Teresa's Galician-Portuguese force was defeated at Sao Mamede, outside Guimaraes, and she died in exile. Alfonso later became King of independent Portugal (24 June 1128).

Sao Miguel ❙ 1583 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese War

After a failed attempt at Terceira to seize the Azores in support of Don Antonio de Crato's claim to the Spanish-held Portuguese throne, a larger Franco-Portuguese fleet under Aymard de Chaste was sent to the Azores to try again. Off Sao Miguel, the second attempt was also defeated by Spanish Admiral Alvaro de Bazán Marquess of Santa Cruz and Spain ruled the Azores as part of Portugal.

Sao Salvador ❙ 1574 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in West Africa

When Jaga nomads overthrew King Alvaro of the Kongo (1568) and sacked his capital, Sao Salvador (modern Mbanza Kongo in northwest Angola), Portuguese musketeers were sent from Sao Tomé. After heavy fighting, the Portuguese recaptured Sao Salvador and reinstated Alvaro. In 1665, at Ambuila, the Portuguese finally overthrew Kongo, which once covered much of west central Africa.

Sao Vicente ❙ 1833 ❙ Miguelite Wars

See Cape St Vincent

Sapienza ❙ 1354 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

Renewed warfare between Venice and Genoa saw Genoa achieve its greatest naval victory over Venice since Curzola (1298) in the Gulf of Sapienza, south of Methone in southwestern Greece. The Venetian fleet under Nicolo Pisani was almost completely destroyed by Genoese Admiral Pagano Doria. Pisani himself was among the thousands of prisoners taken to Genoa (3 November 1354).

Sappa Creek ❙ 1875 ❙ Red River Indian War

In the bloodiest action of the campaign, cavalry under Lieutenant Austin Henley pursued a band of Cheyenne to the Sappa Creek in northwestern Kansas (known to the Cheyenne as Dark Water Creek). Thirty escaped, but Henley's men shot down 19 warriors (including Chief Little Bull) and eight women and children, while two soldiers were also killed. The massacre ended the war (23 April 1875).

Sappony Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While raiding railways southwest of besieged Petersburg, Virginia, Union Generals James Wilson and Augustus V. Kautz were beaten at Staunton River Bridge and marched east towards Stoney Creek Depot. Met at Sappony Church by Confederate General Wade Hampton, returning from Trevilian Station, Wilson was routed and fled north towards Reams Station (28 June 1864).

Sapri ❙ 1857 ❙ Pisacane Rebellion

Carlo Pisacane attempted to renew revolution against the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, landing with about 300 followers on the Coast of Campania, south of Naples. However, the brave yet foolhardy band were heavily defeated at Sapri, with Pisacane and many others killed. The struggle for Italian independence was not renewed for another two years (28 June 1857).

Saragarhi ❙ 1897 ❙ Great Frontier Rising

On Samana Ridge, south of the Khyber Pass, Afridi and Orakzai tribesmen attacked Forts Gulistan and Lockhart, as well as the tiny intervening Sarigarhi heliograph relay station, where 21 Sikhs under Havildar Isher Singh refused to surrender. Massively overwhelmed, they fought to the death. In a unique recognition, all 21 won Britain's highest gallantry award for Indian troops (12 September 1897).

Saragossa ❙ 1118 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

King Alfonso I of Aragon—El Batallador, the Fighter—led a brilliant offensive against the Muslims of Spain, besieging the key city of Saragossa on the Ebro River. Its fall after seven months, followed by the capture of Tudela, encouraged renewed Muslim resistance, although Saragossa became capital of the Kingdom of Aragon (May–18 December 1118).

Saragossa ❙ 1710 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

In the campaign to install Archduke Charles of Austria as King of Spain, General James Stanhope's Anglo-Austrian army advanced from their victory at Almenar (27 July) to challenge the Franco-Spanish army of Philip V under the walls of Saragossa. A one-sided rout cost Philip's army massive casualties and prisoners, as well as all their artillery (20 August 1710).

Saragossa (1st) ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

French General Charles Lefebvre-Desnouettes advanced down the Ebro River in northern Spain and besieged the strategic city of Saragossa, which held out for two months against a massive and bloody attack. Parts of the city were captured before the siege was lifted following French defeat at Baylen. Saragossa fell to a renewed siege later the same year (15 June–13 August 1808).

Saragossa (2nd) ❙ 1808–1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Four weeks after victory at Tudela, the French advanced down the Ebro to besiege Saragossa, defended by Spanish General José Palafox. Under successive command of Generals Bon Adrien Moncey, Édouard Mortier, Androche Junot and Jean Lannes, the siege and assaults cost over 50,000 Spanish lives by the time the ruined city was taken by storm (20 December 1808–20 February 1809).

Saragossa ❙ 1937 ❙ Spanish Civil War

In an effort to distract the offensive against Santander, Republican General Sebastián Pozas took 80,000 men from Catalonia into Aragon towards Saragossa. Though the small town of Belchite fell, Nationalist commander Miguel Ponte led a powerful defence and Saragossa was saved, as well as Huesca and Teruel, finally halting the Republican offensive (24 August–30 September 1937).

Sarajevo ❙ 1878 ❙ Austro-Turkish War in Bosnia

Determined to secure Bosnia-Herzogovina under the treaty which ended the Russo-Turkish War, Austria sent a large force under Baron Josef Philippovic von Philippsburg to oust the reluctant Turks. After a sharp campaign (said to have cost over 5,000 Austrian casualties), the capital Sarajevo was bombarded and taken by storm and the Turks eventually withdrew (19 August 1878).

Sarajevo ❙ 1992–1996 ❙ Bosnian War

With Bosnia torn apart by civil war, Serb forces besieged the capital Sarajevo, housing mainly Croats and Muslims. Shelling from nearby hills and the taking of UN hostages provoked NATO air-strikes and counter-attack by UN artillery, but the four-year siege was not lifted until peace talks ended the war. Sarajevo lost perhaps 10,000 killed and 50,000 wounded (6 April 1992–29 February 1996).

Sarandáporon ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

Prince Constantine of Greece supported his Balkan allies by invading Macedonia through Elasson to advance on Turks in the strategic pass at Sarandáporon, between the Kamvounia and Pieria Mountains. Attacking in heavy rain, Constantine routed the Turks and seized nearby Servia, then took Kozani and Veria before advancing on Thessalonica through Jannitsa (22 October 1912).

Sarandi ❙ 1825 ❙ Uruguayan War of Independence

When Uruguayan Juan Antonio Lavalleja and the "Thirty-Three Immortals" declared independence from Brazil, they recruited a Patriot army. North of Montevideo at Sarandi, Lavalleja decisively beat an Imperial force under Colonel Bentos Manuel Ribeiro. He then briefly annexed Uruguay to Argentina, which secured victory over Brazil in February 1827 at Ituzaingó (12 October 1825).

Saratoga, Cuba ❙ 1896 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

As rebel leader Máximo Gómez entered Camaguey Province in eastern Cuba, Spanish General Jimenez Castellanos marched out from Puerto Principe (modern Camaguey City) and was attacked at nearby Saratoga. Castellanos suffered heavy casualties and when Spanish reinforcements arrived, he retreated to Puerto Principe. Gómez was too exhausted to pursue (9–11 June 1896).

Saratoga, New York (1st) ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Despite disastrous defeat at Bennington for his offensive from Canada (16 August), General John Burgoyne continued into New York State. South of Saratoga at Bemis Heights he was blocked by Americans under General Horatio Gates. A drawn action with very heavy fighting cost Burgoyne 600 men, but he held his position and fought again at the same site three weeks later (19 September 1777).

Saratoga, New York (2nd) ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British General John Burgoyne became isolated in his failed offensive from Canada when he was checked at Bemis Heights, west of Saratoga. After three weeks, he renewed his attack on General Horatio Gates. Despite the courage of General Simon Fraser, who was mortally wounded, Burgoyne was defeated by General Benedict Arnold and surrendered ten days later (7 October 1777).

Saraun ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Chanda, Uttar Pradesh

Sarbinowo ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Zorndorf

Sardarapat ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

Following the collapse of Tsarist Russia, Turkish forces crossed the pre-war Russian border to seize Kars and advance on the Armenian capital of Erivan. In a much-celebrated action at Sardarapat, Armenian Generals Movses Silikian and Tovmas Nazarbekian routed General Ferid Vehip Pasha. Independence was declared that day, though the Turks struck back at Baku (28 May 1918).

Sardinia ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

An Anglo-Dutch fleet under Admiral Sir John Leake launched a fresh offensive in the central Mediterranean, sailing from Barcelona for Sardinia. When Spanish Viceroy the Conde de San Antonio hesitated to surrender, the capital Cagliari was shelled. The island capitulated next day and Leake sent his deputy Admiral Sir Edward Whitaker against Minorca (1–2 August 1708).

Sardis ❙ 546 BC ❙ Persian-Lydian War

Soon after losing disastrously to Cyrus II the Great of Persia at Pteria and Thymbria, King Croesus of Lydia was besieged in his capital at Sardis, near Salihli in modern western Turkey, which fell by storm after 14 days. Though Croesus was well treated by Cyrus, the rapid destruction of the seemingly powerful Kingdom of Lydia heightened the Persian threat to Greek cities on the Aegean.

Sargana ❙ 591 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

See Ganzak

Sarhu ❙ 1619 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

Threatened in the north by rising Manchu power under Nurhachi, Ming General Yang Hao took a massive army into Liaodong (southern Manchuria). He then unwisely divided his force and General Du Song prematurely advanced on the Manchu. Ambushed at Sarhu, Du Song fled. The Ming and their Korean allies were defeated again next day further east at Siyanggiayan (14 April 1619).

Sari Bair ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

British commander Sir Ian Hamilton resolved to break the Gallipoli deadlock and ordered a broad attack on the strategic Sari Bair Ridge. Aided by a diversion in the south at Lone Pine and a fresh landing in the north at Suvla Bay, British forces advanced at Hill Q and Chunuk Bair. Mustafa Kemal counter-attacked in force and the offensive failed with bloody losses (6–10 August 1915).

Sarikamish ❙ 1914–1915 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

Determined to capture the Russian Caucasus, Turkish War Minister Enver Pasha led 90,000 men towards Kars and was met in bitter winter conditions at Sarikamish (now in Turkey) by the army of Viceroy Illarian Vorontsov under General Aleksandr Myshlaevsky. The Turks were destroyed by battle and frostbite and fewer than 20,000 returned to Erzurum (25 December 1914–4 January 1915).

Sar-i-Pul ❙ 1501 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

The teenage Mughal Babur led a new advance on Samarkand and retook the city by surprise, where he again faced a large Uzbek army under Muhammad Shaybani Khan. At Sar-i-Pul, in northern Afghanistan near the Band-i-Amir, Babur's General Kasim Beg allowed his advance units to be surrounded. After suffering a decisive defeat Babur was once more forced to withdraw (April 1501).

Sarjahan ❙ 1029 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

Near the end of his reign, Mahmud of Ghazni sent his son Masud into Persia against Ibrahim ibn Marzuban, known as Salar, who withdrew to the fortress of Sarjahan, 60 miles northeast of Isfahan. Supported by Salar's rival Marzubin ibn Hasan, Masud destroyed Salar in battle nearby, then went on to capture Hamadan and Isfahan, securing central Persia for Ghazni (13 September 1029).

Sark ❙ 1448 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Border Wars

After Sir Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland invaded Scotland and burned Dunbar in May 1448, the Scots burned his family castles at Alnwick and Warkworth. Henry VI then gave him troops for a fresh invasion. However, at the River Sark, near Gretna on the Solway Firth, Northumberland was defeated by Scots under Hugh Douglas Earl of Ormond and taken prisoner (23 October 1448).

Sarkany ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Mór

Sarmada ❙ 1119 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

See Antioch, Syria

Sarmi ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

American forces on the north coast of New Guinea quickly took Wakde, but General Edwin Patrick (later General Franklin Sibert) faced prolonged defence on the nearby mainland around Sarmi under General Hachiro Tagami. Although Lone Tree Hill was taken after heavy losses (24 June), the Americans finally abandoned the Sarmi area after losing over 600 killed (17 May–September 1944).

Sarmizegethusa ❙ 102 ❙ 1st Dacian War

When peace talks failed in 101 after the inconclusive battle at Tapae, Roman Emperor Trajan launched a fresh offensive against Decebalus of Dacia (largely modern Romania). After progessively capturing the Mulbach fortresses, Trajan besieged the Dacian capital at Sarmizegethusa (modern Varhély). Decebalus capitulated to save his city and made peace, while Trajan took the honorific Dacicus.

Sarmizegethusa ❙ 105 ❙ 2nd Dacian War

Decebalus of Dacia once more resumed war against Rome and Emperor Trajan crossed the Danube, where he routed the Dacian army outside the capital Sarmizegethusa (modern Varhély). Decebalus fled to the north but was eventually surrounded and killed himself, ending the war. Rome then annexed and settled Dacia, which largely comprised the area of modern Romania.

Sarnal ❙ 1572 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Emperor Akbar defeated Sultan Muzaffar II of Gujarat at Ahmadabad (2 September), then turned south against the Mirza. When Ibrahim Husain Mirza withdrew from Baroda, Akbar intercepted him at Sarnal on the Mahi and, with a dangerously small force of horsemen, won a decisive victory. Akbar captured Surat (11 January 1573) to complete his conquest of Gujarat (24 December 1572).

Sarnus ❙ 553 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Mount Lactarius

Sarsa ❙ 1704 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

Despite promising Guru Gobind Singh safe passage after the siege of Anandpur, Mughal General Wazir Khan pursued the survivors. At Shahi Tibbi, Jiwan Singh was killed in a rearguard action. The Sikhs were then destroyed while crossing the Sarsa, with the Guru's two younger sons captured and later murdered. Gobind was defeated next day at Chamkaur (21 December 1704).

Sarum ❙ 552 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

See Searobyrg

Sarus ❙ 625 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

Despite his victory at Arcesh, Byzantine Emperor Heraclius was pursued west across the Euphrates into Cilicia by a Sassanian Persian army under Shahbaraz. But at the Sarus (modern Seyhan) River, Heraclius won a sharp action and disengaged north to Caesarea. Shahbaraz was then ordered west to support the Avars against Constantinople, where the Persian advance suffered a costly repulse.

Sarvantikar ❙ 1266 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

After defeating Mongol invaders at Ain Jalut in 1260, the Mamluk Sultan Baibars sent commander Qalawun through the Amanus Mountains into Cilicia against Hethum II of Armenia. A decisive battle with the King's sons and Templar knights at Sarvantikar saw Prince Thoros of Armenia killed and his brother Leo captured. The Muslims then ravaged Cilicia before attacking Antioch (24 August 1266).

Sasbach ❙ 1675 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Within six months of his victories at Mühlhausen and Turckheim, French Marshal Henri de Turenne manoeuvred east of the Rhine to prevent Prince Raimondo Montecuccoli's Imperial army relieving Strasbourg. However, Turenne was killed by a cannonball while preparing to attack at Sasbach, near Buhl, and Montecuccoli drove the demoralised French back across the Rhine (27 July 1675).

Saseno ❙ 1264 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

With the Venetian navy misled into attacking Tyre, Genoese Admiral Simone Grillo ambushed the annual Venetian trade convoy to the Levant, commanded by Michele Dauro, as it left the Adriatic. Near the island of Saseno, in the Otranto Channel, the escort was defeated and the entire merchant fleet was captured. Venice was avenged two years later off Trapani (14 August 1264).

Sasowy Rog ❙ 1633 ❙ Polish-Tatar Wars

Nine years after beating Tatars at Martynow, Polish Hetman Stanislas Koniecpolski marched south against a fresh Tatar invasion of Podlia in southwest Ukraine under Abaza Mehmed, the Ruthenian-born Pasha of Vidin. The Hetman surprised and routed the Tatars in camp at Sasowy Rog on the Pruth. But he failed to pursue and within months the Tatars advanced again on Kamieniec (July 1633).

Sassiah ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Shahganj

Sassoferrato ❙ 295 BC ❙ 3rd Samnite War
See Sentinum

Sas van Gent ❙ 1644 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Frederick Henry of Orange was determined to secure the southern Netherlands and besieged Sas van Gent, west of Antwerp. When the Dutch drove off Spanish forces under the Marquis de Tor de Laguna and stormed the outer defences, Governor Andrés de Prada capitulated. The following year, the Stadtholder further consolidated his gains by capturing nearby Hulst (27 July–5 September 1644).

Satara ❙ 1690 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

With Mughal forces campaigning in central India, General Sharza Khan (later Rustum Khan) was marching to besiege Satara, south of Poona, when advance units led by his son Ghalib were attacked by Maratha Generals Santaji Ghorpade and Dhanaji Jadhav. When Sharza Khan advanced to his son's aid, both were captured in a Mughal defeat which cost 1,500 men (4 June 1690).

Satara ❙ 1699–1700 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

In a renewed offensive against the Marathas of central India, Mughal Emperor Aurangzeb sent a large army against the powerful fortress of Satara, south of Poona. Despite repeated assaults by the Maratha field army under Dhanaji Jadhav, Mughal forces destroyed large sections of the walls with giant mines and garrison commander Subhanji surrendered (December 1699–21 April 1700).

Sathinungulum ❙ 1790 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

After British forces in southern India captured Coimbatore, Colonel John Floyd advanced on the Gajalhatti Pass, where Tipu Sultan made a brilliant surprise descent. Floyd lost his guns and over 500 men in a heavy assault near Sathinungulum. However, the death of Tipu's General Burhan-ud-din delayed the Mysorean advance and the survivors escaped back to Coimbatore (13 September 1790).

Sattelberg ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
See Huon Peninsula

Satus ❙ 1856 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars

Yakima Chief Kamiakin continued resisting white expansion in southern Washington despite defeat at Union Gap (October 1855) and attacked five companies under Colonel Thomas R. Cornelius on the Satus, near the Oregon state line. While caught unawares, Cornelius managed to escape south to Fort Dalles with few casualties. Kamiakin won again in 1858 at Pine Creek (9 April 1856).

Sauce Grande ❙ 1840 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

Recovering from defeat at Yerua and Cagancha in late 1839, Federalist General Pascual Echague, Governor of Entre Rios, supporting Dictator Manuel de Rosas, met Unitarist Juan Galo Lavalle at Sauce Grande, east of Bahia Blanca. Lavalle was decisively beaten and driven back across the Parana. His anti-Rosas forces soon lost again at Quebracho Herrado and Famaillá (16 July 1840).

Sauchieburn ❙ 1488 ❙ Scottish Barons' Rebellion

In rebellion against James III in support of the King's 15-year-old son, Scottish nobles led by Patrick Lord Hailes, Alexander Lord Home and Andrew Lord Gray marched towards Stirling. At nearby Sauchieburn they defeated the outnumbered Loyalist army. The King was killed in mysterious circumstances while fleeing and his treacherous son became James IV (11 June 1488).

Saucourt ❙ 881 ❙ Viking Raids on France

Vikings who invaded the Low countries won a brutal victory in Saxony at Ebsdorf, but the following year they met a large army under Louis III of the West Franks, at Saucourt, on the Somme in Ponthieu. The teenage King Louis won a brilliant victory, which checked the Norse threat, but he died a year later in a riding accident. The Vikings soon regrouped to besiege Paris (3 August 881).

Saugor ❙ 1680 ❙ Mughal-Berad Wars
See Sagar

Saugor ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny
See Sagar

Saule ❙ 1236 ❙ Early Wars of the Teutonic Knights
See Siauliai

Saumur ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Following early rebel success in the counter-revolution in western France at Thouars and Fontenay, the Royalist rising reached a high-point with victory at Saumur, on the Loire southeast of Angers, defended by Republican General Louis Berthier. Royalist rebels led by Jacques Cathelineau captured the town, along with massive stores of supplies and arms, including 50 cannon (9 June 1793).

Saunshi ❙ 1777 ❙ Maratha-Mysore Wars

Haidar Ali of Mysore recovered from loss at Chinkurli (1771) to regain Coorg and Malabar, previously lost to the Marathas, then sent a force under Mohamed Ali across the Tungabhadra in southern India. Near Dharwar at Saunshi, Patwardhan Chief Konher Rao was defeated and killed and Padurang Rao was captured. As a result, many local Chiefs soon submitted to Haidar (8 January 1777).

Sauroren ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
See Sorauren

Savage's Station ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

In the fourth of the Seven Days' Battles, east of Richmond, Virginia, Confederate General John B. Magruder, despite losses at Garnett's and Golding's Farms, attacked the Union rearguard withdrawing from Gaines' Mill. At Savage's Station, Union General Edwin Sumner lost about 1,500 casualties and abandoned 2,500 wounded as he withdrew across White Oak Swamp (29 June 1862).

Savandrug ❙ 1755 ❙ War Against Malabar Pirates

While campaigning against the pirate Chief Tulaji Angria, active on India's Malabar Coast between Bombay and Goa, Commodore Sir William James of the Bombay Marine joined Maratha land forces to attack and capture the pirate base at Savandrug (modern Savandurg). Savandrug was then handed to the Marathas and Angria was defeated again a year later at Gheria (2 April 1755).

Savandrug ❙ 1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

When Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war against Britain, Governor-General Charles Earl Cornwallis took Bangalore (21 March) and Nandi Drug (17 October), then sent Colonel James Stuart (1741–1815) against Savandrug, southwest of Bangalore. After two days of bombardment, the mountain fortress fell by assault, setting up the campaign against Seringapatam (21 December 1791).

Savannah ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Colonel Archibald Campbell led a fresh British offensive in the south, landing near Savannah, Georgia, to advance on the city, supported by Captain Sir James Baird. American General Robert Howe attempted to defend Savannah with outnumbered militia but was badly defeated. He withdrew with heavy losses and Campbell seized many ships in the harbour (29 December 1778).

Savannah ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Attempting to take the offensive in the south, American General Benjamin Lincoln and 4,500 troops under French Admiral Charles-Hector Comte d'Estaing besieged Savannah, Georgia, held by General Augustine Prevost. After suffering very heavy losses in a rash assault

(9 October), d'Estaing sailed for France and Lincoln had to withdraw towards Charleston (3 September–28 October 1779).

Savannah ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Charleston, South Carolina

Savannah ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Fort McAllister

Savanur ❙ 1756 ❙ Maratha Rebellions

Maratha General Muzaffar Khan Gardi rebelled against Peshwa Balaji Rao and sought an alliance with the Nawab of Savanur, in western India. In common cause against the rebel, the Peshwa and Nizam Salabat Jang of Hyderabad besieged Savanur and subjected it to a bombardment by western artillery. Muzaffar Khan fled and the Nawab surrendered (March–18 May 1756).

Savar ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

After occupying Swedish Finland in the wake of decisive victory at Oravais (September 1808), Russian General Nikolai Kamenski pursued the retreating Swedes north around the Gulf of Bothnia into Sweden. At Savar, near Umea, in the bloodiest action of the campaign, Kamenski forced Swedish General Gustav Wachtmeister to withdraw and Sweden finally made peace (19 August 1809).

Save ❙ 388 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars

See Siscia

Savenay ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Sent to suppress the Vendée Rebellion in western France, Republican General Jean-Baptiste Kléber and his veterans beat the Royalist rebels at Cholet and Le Mans in late 1793, then marched against them at Savenay, a village northwest of Nantes. A final brutal battle saw the counter-revolution virtually annihilated, though the Royalist cause lingered for several years (23 December 1793).

Saverne ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War

See Zabern

Savo Island ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Responding to American landings on Guadalcanal and Tulagi, Admiral Gunichi Mikawa's cruiser squadron surprised the Allied covering force of Admiral Victor Crutchley at night near Savo Island. Within half an hour, one Australian and three American heavy cruisers were sunk with heavy loss of life. Mikawa retired unscathed, but lost a cruiser to submarine attack next day (8–9 August 1942).

Savona ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Genoa

Savra ❙ 1385 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Sultan Murad I took advantage of an internal struggle between Prince Balsha II of Albania and his former ally Charles Thopia, sending the Ottoman army under Pasha Hayredin, who attacked the massively outnumbered Albanians on the Plain of Savra, on the left bank of the Devoll. Balsha was defeated and killed and the Turks effectively gained control of Albania (November 1385).

Saw ❙ 238 BC ❙ Truceless War

While former mercenaries continued to besiege Carthage, Hamilcar Barca and his Numidian ally Naravas surrounded the mercenaries at a location referred to as the Saw, probably south of Carthage. Rebel leaders Spendius and Autaritus were seized when they tried to negotiate and their army was destroyed, with perhaps 40,000 killed. The Carthaginians then attacked the rebel camp at Tunis.

Saxa Rubra ❙ 312 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

See Milvian Bridge

Sayler's Creek ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As General Robert E. Lee's defeated Confederates retreated west from Petersburg, Virginia, part of his force under Generals Richard S. Ewell and John B. Gordon was attacked by General Philip Sheridan near Deatonsville at Sayler's Creek. Ewell and most of his force surrendered after hard fighting and Gordon led the survivors towards High Bridge on the Appomattox (6 April 1865).

Sbeitla ❙ 647 ❙ Muslim Conquest of North Africa

See Sufetula

Scapa Flow ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

One of Germany's most famous submarine exploits occurred in the first days of the war when Captain Günther Prien took U-47 into Scapa Flow, the Royal Navy base in the Orkneys. The battleship Royal Oak was sunk with more than 830 men killed and Prien became the first U-boat commander to win the Knights Cross. He was lost with U-47 in March 1941 (3 September 1939).

Scarborough ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)

Four months after German failure off Helgoland, Admiral Fritz von Hipper took the initiative and led five battle cruisers, with light cruisers and destroyers, against England's east coast. Scarborough was bombarded, with considerable damage and 15 civilians killed, while Whitby and Hartlepool were also shelled. A month later, another German raid was intercepted on Dogger Bank (16 December 1914).

Scarpe ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

On the northern flank of the Allied offensive east from Arras, British and Canadians under General Henry Horne advanced rapidly along the Scarpe River towards Douai. After the Allies took the key fortified town of Monchy, the retreating Germans resisted strongly at Bullecourt before it finally fell. Horne then moved south to support the main attack towards Bapaume (26–31 August 1918).

Scarperia ❙ 1351 ❙ Florentine-Milanese Wars

At the start of a campaign by Milan to expand its power in northern Italy, Giovanni Visconti sent Giovanni Oleggio into Florentine-ruled Tuscany, where he was stalled by the heroic defence of the town and fortress of Scarperia, in the Mugello Hills, northeast of Florence. After a 55-day siege, a Florentine relief force under Salvestro de Medici defeated Oleggio and forced the invaders to withdraw.

Scarpheia ❙ 191 BC ❙ Roman-Syrian War

See Thermopylae

Scarpheia ❙ 146 BC ❙ Roman-Achaean War

With Rome distracted by war against Carthage, the Achaean League of Greek city-states tried to counteract growing Roman domination of Greece. The advancing allies under Diaeus and Critolaus were driven back from Heraclea, then were attacked at Scarpheia, east of Thermopylae, by Romans led by Quintus Caecilius Metellus. The Achaeans were routed, with Critolaus missing, presumed killed.

Scearston ❙ 1016 ❙ Danish Conquest of England

See Sherston

Sceaux ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Chatillon-sous-Bagneux

Schaenzel ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Platzberg

Scharnhorst* ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

See North Cape

Scheldt Estuary ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Despite the fall of Antwerp, powerful German forces blocked the Scheldt Estuary, 55 miles downstream. Very heavy fighting saw Canadian General Guy Simonds seize the southern shore at Breskens and the South Beveland Isthmus before attacking the fortress of Walcheren, held by General Wilhelm Daser. The Allies lost over 12,000 casualties to open the river (1 October–8 November 1944).

Schellenberg ❙ 1599 ❙ Balkan National Wars

See Selimbar

Schellenberg ❙ 1704 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

See Donauwörth

Schenectady ❙ 1690 ❙ King William's War

As part of King William's War—the American phase of the War of the Grand Alliance—a Canadian-Indian force under Nicolas d'Ailleboust de Manthet and Jacques le Moyne de Saint-Hélène attacked Schenectady, New York. During a night raid, they killed 60 and returned to Montreal with 25 prisoners and massive plunder. Other French forces marched on Salmon Falls (8 February 1690).

Scheveningen ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War

Following his losses at the Gabbard Bank (15 June), Dutch Admiral Maarten Tromp broke through the ensuing English blockade of the Dutch Coast and was killed in battle off Scheveningen, near the Hague. English Admiral George Monck drove the Dutch back to Texel with ten ships lost to his eight and claimed the hard-fought victory. The following year the Dutch sought peace (10 August 1653).

Schladming ❙ 1526 ❙ German Peasants' War

With peasant rebellion spreading into Austria, Archbishop Mathhaus Lang of Salzburg called on veteran General Sigismund von Dietrichstein, whose Bohemians ravaged Styria before being routed by peasants under Michael Geismaier at Schladming, east of Bischofshofen. Dietrichstein and 40 officers were executed and war continued until 1527 when Geismaier was assassinated (3 July 1526).

Schleitz ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

As Napoleon Bonaparte's army converged on Prussia, Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte advanced between the Saal and Elster to defeat a Prussian force under Count Bogislav Tauenzien west of Plauen at Schleitz. Although only a small action with just 400 Prussian casualties, it was a serious blow to Prussian morale and a prelude to the twin defeats at Auerstadt and Jena (9 October 1806).

Schlettstadt ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

German commander Karl August Werder captured Strasbourg (28 September), then ordered General Hermann von Schmeling south along the Rhine against Schlettstadt (French Sélestat). The fortress capitulated following a heavy bombardment, yielding 2,400 prisoners and 120 guns. Von Schmeling then took his siege-train further south against Neu-Breisach (20–24 October 1870).

Schliengen ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Defeated by Archduke Charles of Austria close to the Rhine at Emmendingen (19 October), French General Jean Victor Moreau sent part of his force back across the river, then withdrew south as far as Schliengen, where he attempted to make a stand. Driven back by a powerful Austrian attack, Moreau finally withdrew across the Rhine over the next two days at Huningue (24 October 1796).

Schlusselberg ❙ 1702 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Noteborg

Schmidt ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Hürtgen Forest

Schnee Eifel ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

General Walther Lucht opened the German advance into the Ardennes, assaulting the Schnee Eifel Ridge, just inside the German border, occupied by inexperienced American troops under General Alan W. Jones. They were overwhelmed with 8,000 captured—the worst American surrender of the European war—and the Germans advanced into Belgium towards St Vith (16–20 December 1944).

Schonchin Flow ❙ 1873 ❙ Modoc Indian War

During fighting against the Modoc in the Lava Beds of northern California, Captain Evan Thomas and Lieutenant Thomas Wright led a 68-man patrol to the Schonchin Flow, where they were ambushed by Captain Jack (Kintpuash) and Scarfaced Charley. Thomas, Wright and 23 others were killed and the war continued until the second assault in the Lava Beds (26 April 1873).

Schooneveld ❙ 1673 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Prince Rupert and French Admiral Jean d'Estrées prepared for an Anglo-French invasion of the Netherlands by attacking the Dutch fleet in the Schooneveld at the mouth of the Scheldt. Admiral Mihiel de Ruyter counter-attacked with favourable winds and drove the Allies off, sinking many French ships. A second battle six days later was indecisive yet ended the planned invasion (7 & 14 June 1673).

Schuinshoogte ❙ 1881 ❙ 1st Anglo-Boer War

See Ingogo

Schwaderloch ❙ 1499 ❙ Swabian War

In their final struggle for freedom, the Swiss cantons marched against the Habsburg cities of the Swabian League and two miles from Constance at Schwaderloch, they defeated a much larger German force. Further Swiss victories over the next few months at Frastenz, Calven and Dornach eventually forced Emperor Maximilian to grant them virtual independence (11 April 1499).

Schwechat ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

After Hungarian revolutionaries declared independence from Habsburg rule, over 20,000 Hungarians under General Johann Moga and Colonel Artur Gorgey marched to support a workers' rising in Vienna. Outside the city at Schwechat, Count Joseph Jellacic and Prince Adolph Auersperg repulsed the Hungarian militia with heavy losses. Vienna fell a few days later (30 October 1848).

Schwedaung ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

See Prome

Schweidnitz ❙ 1642 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Marshal Lennart Torstensson took command of the Swedish army after its victory at Wolfenbüttel and the following year led a fresh advance into Silesia against a Saxon army on the Bystrzyca, southwest of Breslau at Schweidnitz. The Saxons were heavily defeated—with a massive loss of guns—and Torstensson then seized the city and marched into Moravia towards Olmütz (3 June 1642).

Schweidnitz ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

While campaigning in Saxony at Rossbach, Frederick II of Prussia left his brother Duke August-Wilhelm of Bevern to hold Silesia, where Austrian General Franz Leopold Nadasdy besieged Schweidnitz. When the Duke of Bevern was defeated nearby, the fortress fell after seven weeks yielding 7,000 prisoners. The Austrians then concentrated for battle days later at Breslau (11 November 1758).

Schweidnitz ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Reichenbach, Poland

Schweinfurt ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

In a daylight raid on the German ball-bearing industry at Schweinfurt in Bavaria, 291 American bombers were escorted only part of the way and suffered terrible losses to German fighters. The war's costliest air attack (Black Thursday) saw over 600 men killed in 64 bombers shot down and 138 damaged. Such raids ended until long-range fighter escort became available (14 October 1943).

Schweinschadel ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Sent to oppose the Prussian invasion of Bohemia, Austrian General Tassilo Festetics arrived too late to save Königinhof (captured after defeat at Soor) then met General Karl Friedrich von Steinmetz north of Josefstadt marching west from victory at Skalitz. After a three-hour cannonade at Schweinschadel with 800 prisoners lost, Festetics fell back on the fortress at Josefstadt (29 June 1866).

Schwetz ❙ 1462 ❙ Thirteen Years War

See Puck

Sciari Sciat ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

See Sidi El Henni

Scilly Isles ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British Admiral Sir William Hotham was escorting a convoy with treasure seized at St Eustatius with just two ships of the line and three frigates, when he was intercepted west of the Scilly Isles by a strong squadron under Admiral Toussaint-Guillaume de la Motte-Picquet. Hotham wisely dispersed his heavily outnumbered convoy and the French recaptured most of the treasure (2 May 1781).

Scimitar Hill ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

After replacing the incompetent Sir Henry Stopford at Suvla Bay, General Beauvoir de Lisle launched the last major offensive on the Gallipoli front towards Scimitar Hill. Despite a diversionary attack further south at Hill 60, the British assault against strong Turkish defences cost over 5,000 casualties for no gain. In December the Allies evacuated Suvla Bay (21 August 1915).

Scotitas ❙ 199 BC ❙ Spartan-Achaean Wars

With Sparta recovering from defeat at Mantinea (207 BC), new ruler Nabis led a fresh offensive into northern Laconia, where he was attacked near the Tegean border at Scotitas by Achaean forces under Philopoemen of Megalopolis, now Praetor of Achaea. Nabis suffered a bloody defeat and a temporary truce followed until he resumed the war and was defeated at Argos and Mount Barbosthene.

Scutari ❙ 1474 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

Sultan Mehmed II renewed his war against Venetian Albania, sending 80,000 men under Hadim Suleiman Pasha against Scutari (modern Shkoder), held by Antonio Loredan. Although massive bombardment demolished the walls, high earthworks remained and a Turkish assault was repulsed with 7,000 dead. Suleiman withdrew on false reports of Venetian reinforcements (15 July–28 August 1474).

Scutari ❙ 1478–1479 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

Four years after a failed campaign against Albania, Sultan Mehmed II concluded his war against Venice's trading colonies by launching a renewed assault against Scutari (modern Shkoder). Nearby Krujë was captured, but Scutari's garrison held out against siege until Venice sued for peace, yielding Scutari and other Adriatic possesssions to the Turks (22 June 1478–25 January 1479).

Scutari ❙ 1912–1913 ❙ 1st Balkan War

When Montenegro advanced into Albania towards Scutari, poor strategy and delay allowed the city to be reinforced before it came under siege. King Nicholas of Montenegro took command and made costly assaults before Essad

Pasha finally surrendered. The Great Powers later forced Nicholas to give up the prize which had cost almost 10,000 Montenegrin lives (23 October 1912–23 April 1913).

Seacroft Moor ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

To cover the Parliamentary withdrawal from Selby to Leeds by Ferdinando Lord Fairfax, his son Sir Thomas Fairfax assaulted Tadcaster, near York. While withdrawing across Bramham Moor to Seacroft Moor, Sir Thomas was attacked in force and was heavily defeated by Royalist cavalry under George Lord Goring, losing 200 killed and 800 prisoners (30 March 1643).

Searobyrg ❙ 552 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

After inheriting Wessex from his father Cerdic, Cynric of the West Saxons advanced the borders of the kingdom to the west and inflicted a sharp defeat on the Britons at Searobyrg (Old Sarum), just north of modern Salisbury. The expansion of Wessex continued with further victories over the next 25 years at Beranbyrg, Bedcanford and Deorham.

Sebastia ❙ 1070 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars

When Byzantine Emperor Romanus IV attempted to drive the Turks out of Anatolia, part of his army under Manuel Comnenus was attacked at Sebastia by a Turkish force under Er-Sighun, son of Yusuf Inal and a rebel kinsman of the Great Seljuk Alp Arslan. The Byzantines suffered a costly defeat, after which Turkish forces sacked Chonae. In August 1071 Alp Arslan himself seized Manzikert.

Sebastopol ❙ 1854–1855 ❙ Crimean War

See Sevastopol

Sebastopolis ❙ 692 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Following a treaty violation by Emperor Justinian II, Umayyad Caliph Abd-al-Malik sent troops under his brother Mohamed into Byzantine Armenia and the armies met west of Sebastia at Sebastopolis (modern Sulusaray). When the Emperor appeared to secure initial success, his Slav troops under Nebulus changed sides and he was routed, effectively delivering Armenia to the Arabs.

Seccandun ❙ 757 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Facing rebellion by the nobleman Beornred, King Aethelbald of Mercia was defeated and deposed at Seccandun (modern Seckington), east of Tamworth, Warwickshire. Aethelbald was either killed in the battle or murdered soon afterwards, possibly by his own bodyguard. However, the usurper Beornred enjoyed only a very brief reign before being overthrown by Aethelbald's kinsman, Offa.

Secchia ❙ 1734 ❙ War of the Polish Succession

Joseph Lothar Count von Königsegg regrouped the Austrian army after defeat at Parma (29 June) and led a surprise dawn attack across the Secchia, southeast of Mantua, against Marshal Francois-Marie Broglie. The French were driven back, losing 3,000 prisoners, before Marshal François de Coigny restored order and counter-attacked a few days later at Guastalla (15 September 1734).

Secessionville ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

A fresh advance against the defences of Charleston Harbour, South Carolina, saw Union General Henry W. Benham attack Fort Lamar, at Secessionville on James Island, bravely defended by General Nathan G. Evans and Colonel Thomas G. Lamar. Driven off from costly frontal assaults, Benham was forced to withdraw. He was later relieved of command and demoted (16 June 1862).

Seckington ❙ 757 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Seccandun

Secundrabagh ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Sikander Bagh

Sedan ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

When Napoleon III was trapped at Sedan by Prussian armies under General Helmuth von Moltke and Prince Friedrich Wilhelm, General Auguste Ducrot suffered a decisive defeat, losing 17,000 casualties and 20,000 prisoners. One of France's worst military disasters saw General Emmanuel Wimpffen surrender 82,000 men. Napoleon himself was captured and soon abdicated (1 September 1870).

Sedd-el-Bahr ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

See Helles

Sedgemoor ❙ 1685 ❙ Monmouth Rebellion

Rebelling against his Catholic uncle King James II of England, James Duke of Monmouth raised a Protestant revolt in the west, comprising largely miners and peasants. At Sedgemoor, near Bridgewater in Somerset, he was crushed by General Louis Duras Earl of Feversham and John Churchill. Monmouth was beheaded and over 1,000 rebels were executed or transported (6 July 1685).

Sediman ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

Napoleon Bonaparte routed General Murad Bey at the Battle of the Pyramids in July but soon became concerned about the Mamluk leader's presence on the Upper Nile and sent General Louis Desaix. At Sediman, 75 miles south of Cairo on the Bahr Yusuf, Desaix's infantry routed the Egyptians. A further victory in February 1799 at Aswan destroyed the Mamluk army (7 October 1798).

Seedasser ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War

See Sidassir

Seekonk ❙ 1676 ❙ King Philip's War

In war against Wampanoag Chief Metacomet—known by American colonists as King Philip—his Narrangansett ally Canonchet escaped the defeat at the Great Swamp Fight and three months later had his revenge ambushing Captain Michael Pierce near Seekonk, east of Providence, Rhode Island. Pierce and 40 militia were killed, but Canonchet was soon captured and executed (26 March 1676).

Segesvár ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

With Austria driven out of Hungary after Hatvan and Waitzen in April, Russia intervened to help. Following victory at Pered (21 June), Russian General Ivan Paskievich joined up with new Austrian commander Julius von Haynau to beat Hungarian General Josef Bem in Transylvania at Segesvár (modern Sighisoara). Bem withdrew west for the decisive battle at Temesvár (31 July 1849).

Segeswald ❙ 757 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Seccandun

Segoyuela ❙ 713 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain

A Muslim army under Tarik ibn Ziyad advancing towards central Spain against the Christian Visigoths received reinforcements from Musa ibn Nusair, Arab Governor of the Maghreb (North Africa) and achieved a massive victory at Segoyuela, in Salamanca Province. Coming after similar defeats at Guadalete and Ecija, the battle effectively ended the Visigothic Kingdom in Spain (September 713).

Sehested ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Denmark was attacked in Holstein by Germans, Russians and Swedes led by former French Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte (now Crown Prince of Sweden). Danish troops under Frederick of Hesse achieved a remarkable victory at Sehested, west of Kiel. However, Denmark lacked support in subsequent peace talks and was forced to cede Norway to Sweden (10 December 1813).

Seine ❙ 1416 ❙ Hundred Years War

See Harfleur

Sekigahara ❙ 1600 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

After Japanese ruler Toyotomi Hideyoshi died in 1598, his leading General Tokugawa Ieyasu rejected the six-year-old heir Hideyori and fought Loyalist commander Ishida Mitsunari at Sekigahara, east of Lake Biwa. In one of Japan's greatest battles, Mitsunari and his allies were routed and Ieyasu founded the 250-year Tokugawa Shogunate. Hideyori retired to Osaka Castle (20 September 1600).

Sekou ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Following a terrible rout in Romania at Dragasani, Greek leader Georgakis Olympios and the Albanian Yannis Farmakis tried to reach Russia and became surrounded in the monastery at Sekou, west of Jassy. After a brief siege, Georgakis blew himself up to avoid capture. Farmakis and his officers surrendered on condition of amnesty, but were tortured and executed (September–4 October 1821).

Se La ❙ 1962 ❙ Sino-Indian War

In the wake of Chinese victory at the Namka Chu in northeast India (20 October), the border war eased for diplomatic manoeuvring and India reinforced the forward position at Se La. When the Chinese attacked again in force, Brigadier Hoshiar Singh initially held them off and inflicted costly losses. He was finally overwhelmed and the invaders drove south on Bomdila (16 November 1962).

Selby ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

As Ferdinando Lord Fairfax and his son Sir Thomas led a Parliamentary army into Yorkshire, Royalist commander William Cavendish Earl of Newcastle sent Sir John Belasyse to meet the invaders. Belasyse was routed south of York at Selby, with heavy losses in men and guns, and the Royalists in the north were forced back on York (11 April 1644).

Sele ❙ 212 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

See Silarus

Sele ❙ 71 BC ❙ 3rd Servile War

See Silarus

Selimbar ❙ 1599 ❙ Balkan National Wars

Prince Michael of Wallachia resolved to unite the Romanians and (with Habsburg consent) invaded southern Transylvania against Prince Andreas Bathory. Michael defeated General Gaspar Kornis at Selimbar, near Hermannstadt (modern Sibiu), then proclaimed himself Prince of Transylvania. He seized Moldavia after victory in May 1600 at Khotin (28 October 1599).

Selinus ❙ 409 BC ❙ Carthaginian-Syracusan Wars

Determined to avenge his grandfather's defeat and death at Himera in 480 BC, Carthaginian commander Hannibal led a fresh invasion of Sicily, landing in the southwest to attack Selinus. A relief force from Syracuse under Diocles arrived too late and the city was taken by storm after a brief siege. It was then put to the sack and Hannibal moved north against Himera.

Sellasia ❙ 222 BC ❙ Cleomenic War

With the northern Peloponnese threatened by Cleomenes III of Sparta after victory in 226 BC at Hecatombaeum, Antigonus III of Macedon marched south with 10,000 men and gathering about 18,000 local troops. North of Sparta at Sellasia, Cleomenes was outnumbered and crushed. He fled to Egypt and Antigonus dominated much of the Peloponnese through the Achaean League (July 222 BC).

Selle ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Outflanking the Germans in the north at Courtrai, the main Allied offensive further south continued through Le Cateau across the Selle, led by British Generals Sir Henry Rawlinson and Julian Byng and French under General Marie Debeney. Defensive positions along the river were stormed and Valenciennes was captured as the Germans fell back on the Sambre (17–25 October 1918).

Selma ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As the war approached its end, Union General James H. Wilson led a large-scale cavalry raid into Alabama, advancing on Confederate Selma, defended by Generals Nathan B. Forrest and Richard Taylor. A bold assault by Wilson took the city by storm. He also captured Montgomery, then entered Georgia to take Columbia and Macon before peace brought a conclusion to hostilities (2 April 1865).

Selsey ❙ 477 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

See Cymensore

Selwood ❙ 1016 ❙ Danish Conquest of England

See Penselwood

Semen ❙ 1818 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Patriot leader Simón Bolívar advancing from victory at Calabozo (12 February) pursued Spanish Pablo Morillo into Guárico and they met at Semen, near La Puerta, north of San Juan de los Morros. Bolívar was routed in a bloody action with 800 men killed and 400 captured, but recovered at Queseras del Medio. Severely wounded, Morillo was created Marquis de La Puerta (16 March 1818).

Semendria ❙ 1439 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

Sultan Murad II invaded Serbia, where Despot George Brankovic left his sons Gregor and Stefan to hold the strategic fortress of Semendria (modern Smederevo). While Albert I of Hungary took an army to the Danube, he failed to provide aid and the starving garrison surrendered, with the Brankovic brothers captured and later blinded. Murad returned to Edirne and the next year besieged Belgrade.

Semendria ❙ 1441 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

See Császáhalom

Semigallia ❙ 1626 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

See Wallhof

Seminara ❙ 1495 ❙ Italian War of Charles VIII

After Charles VIII of France invaded Italy to claim Naples, Spanish reinforcements under Gonsalvo de Cordoba landed in Calabria and the armies met at Seminara, northeast of Reggio. The Spanish were beaten by a smaller French force under General Bernard Stuart Seigneur d'Aubigny, though Cordoba's victory a year later at Aversa drove France temporarily out of Italy (28 June 1495).

Seminara ❙ 1503 ❙ Italian War of Louis XII

While the end of the war between France and Spain over Naples focused on the siege of Barletta and battle at Cerignola, French General Bernard Stuart Seigneur d'Aubigny was campaigning independently in Calabria. However, northeast of Reggio at Seminara (site of his victory in 1495), he lost badly just a few days before the decisive French defeat at Cerignola (21 April 1503).

Sempach ❙ 1386 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

When Swiss cities joined the South German Swabian League against King Wenceslas and the House of Habsburg, Leopold III of Austria and his commander Johann von Ochenstein took an army into Switzerland. At Sempach, near Lucerne, outnumbered Swiss pikemen killed Leopold and destroyed his knights fighting dismounted. A further defeat at Nafels in April 1388 ended the war (9 July 1386).

Sendaigawa ❙ 1587 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Toyotomi Hideyoshi intervened in Kyushu to repulse Satsuma forces, advancing down the west coast while his half-brother Hidenaga won in the east at Takashiro. Attempting to block him at the Sendaigawa near Oguchi with a massively outnumbered Satsuma army, Niiro Tadamoto was heavily defeated (reputedly spared in single combat) and withdrew south to Kagoshima (6 June 1587).

Seneffe ❙ 1674 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

On campaign against the Allies in the Dutch Republic, Louis II de Bourdon Prince of Condé attacked Spanish, German and Dutch under William of Orange marching to invade France. An indecisive struggle around Seneffe, near Nivelle, cost both sides heavy losses. Although the Allies could not be dislodged, their invasion was thwarted and Condé claimed the strategic gain (11 August 1674).

Senegal ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (West Africa)

At war with the French in West Africa, Britain sent six ships under Captain Henry Marsh, who sailed to the Senegal River with 200 Marines. Port Louis fell after hard fighting, yielding 230 prisoners and 92 guns as well as gold and ivory, although the squadron was insufficient to capture nearby Gorée. At the end of the war, Britain retained Senegal (23–30 April 1758).

Senegal ❙ 1804 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

See Gorée

Senekal ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Biddulphsberg

Senigallia ❙ 551 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Sinigaglia

Senlac ❙ 1066 ❙ Norman Conquest of Britain

See Hastings, England

Sennheim ❙ 1638 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

In a fresh attempt to save Breisach, besieged by Bernard of Saxe-Weimar after victory at Rheinfelden and Wittenweier, an Imperial force under Duke Charles of Lorraine advanced on the Rhine from the west. They were intercepted and destroyed at Sennheim (French Cernay) outside Mühlhausen by Duke Bernard, who resumed his siege and starved Breisach into surrender (15 October 1638).

Senova ❙ 1878 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Defending the strategic Shipka Pass through the Balkan Mountains, the Russian garrison received reinforcements from the fall of Plevna and General Mikhail Skobelev attacked the camp of Vessil Pasha two miles south at Senova near Kazanlik. Vessil was routed, losing 4,000 casualties and 26,000 prisoners. After the fall of Plovdiv Turkey sued for peace (8–9 January 1878).

Sens ❙ 356 ❙ Alemannic Invasion of Roman Gaul

Roman commander Flavius Claudius Julianus was sharply defeated near Rheims, yet restored his military reputation later that year at Sens in central Gaul. Attacked in his winter quarters by a large body of Alemanni tribesmen, Julianus led a courageous monthlong defence until the Germans were driven off and had no choice but to withdraw.

Sens ❙ 886–887 ❙ Viking Raids on France

Following the long Viking siege of Paris—which ended in 886 when Norse leader Sinric was paid off by King Charles III the Fat—Sinric took his army against the city of Sens, southeast of Paris. An heroic defence saw the city hold out against siege for six months before the Norsemen were finally driven off and withdrew.

Senta ❙ 1697 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Zenta

Sentinum ❙ 295 BC ❙ 3rd Samnite War

Recovering after Camerinum, Romans under Fabius Maximus Rullianus and Decius Mus quickly attacked Samnite commander Gellius Egnatius and his allies further north at Sentinum (modern Sassoferrato). Despite heavy Roman losses (including Decius killed), Egnatius was defeated and killed. Gauls and Etruscans made peace, but the Samnites fought on until beaten in 293 BC at Aquilonia.

Sentry Hill ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Encouraged by success at Te Ahuahu (6 April), about 200 warriors of the religio-military Hauhau led by Hepanaia Kapewhiti attacked Sentry Hill (Te Morere), east of New Plymouth, held by 75 regulars under Captain William Shortt. Believing themselves immune to bullets, about 50 Hauhau were killed in a frontal assault (including Kapewhiti himself) before the rest were driven off (30 April 1864).

Seoni ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

With the Maratha army destroyed at Ashti in February, Peshwa Baji Rao II was driven northeast by General Sir John Doveton (1768–1847) and ran into Colonel Sir John Worthington Adams at Seoni. Baji Rao was routed and fled, abandoning his guns and stores. He withdrew west to Asirgargh to start the negotiations, which led to his eventual exile and British annexation of the Maratha territory.

Seoul ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

See Chongju

Seoul (1st) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

At the start of the war, North Koreans stormed across the border and the main force advanced on Seoul, where South Korean General Chae Byong Duk was completely outmanoeuvred. His premature demolition of bridges on the Han cost men and equipment and ended any hope of resistance. General Lee Kwon Mu took the city in three days then attacked across the Han (25–28 June 1950).

Seoul (2nd) ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

After landing at Inchon, General Edward Almond raced east towards Seoul and took Yongdung-po (22 September). However, his Marines met costly losses failing to storm the Han before being joined by Army General Walton Walker from the Pusan Perimeter. Seoul was taken after further fighting and the Americans and South Koreans moved north on Pyongyang (18–28 September 1950).

Seoul ❙ 1951 ❙ Korean War

With Seoul lost (4 January) after defeat at the Chongchon, General Matthew Ridgeway checked the Communist offensive at Chipyong (15 February), retook territory south of the Han in Operation Killer, then began Operation Ripper. After heavy fighting, the Allies retook Seoul (14 March), followed by Hongchon and Chunchon, and the Chinese fell back through Munsan (7–31 March 1951).

Sepeia ❙ 494 BC ❙ Spartan-Argive Wars

King Cleomenes was determined to expand Spartan power and took a large and well-organised force against Argos in the eastern Peloponnese. In a bloody and decisive action at Sepeia, near Tiryns at the head of the Gulf of Argolis, the Argive army was utterly destroyed, though Cleomenes wisely spared the capital Argos. Victory virtually confirmed Spartan supremacy in southern Greece.

Seria ❙ 1962 ❙ Brunei Rebellion

When Indonesian-backed rebels began a revolt in Brunei, Gurkhas secured the capital, Brunei Town, and British regulars under Colonel William McHardy were airlifted from Singapore to retake the important oil town of Seria, 50 miles to the southwest. Landing under fire at the main airfield, the Highlanders stormed Seria without loss and freed oil company hostages (10–12 December 1962).

Seringapatam ❙ 1792 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

When Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war against Britain, Governor-General Charles Earl Cornwallis captured Bangalore, then advanced against the Mysorean capital at Seringapatam (modern Srirangapatnam). After a full-scale siege, which cost Tipu over 4,000 men and all his guns, the Maharaja ended the war, ceding half his territory to Britain (15–16 February 1792).

Seringapatam ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War

Tipu Sultan of Mysore once again resumed war with Britain and General George Harris brushed his army aside at Malavalli, then advanced on Seringapatam (modern Srirangapatnam). General David Baird stormed the fortress after bombardment breached the walls and Tipu died in the assault. The attack ended the war, finally securing southern India for Britain (6 April–4 May 1799).

Seringham ❙ 1752 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

Driven back from Trichinopoly in southeast India, Nawab Chanda Sahib of Arcot and French Colonel Jacques Law withdrew to siege by Major Stringer Lawrence at nearby Seringham (modern Srirangam). Facing disaster, Law negotiated safe surrender for the Nawab, then surrendered 3,000 men and 40 guns. Chanda Sahib was later murdered by his Tanjorean captors (10 April–13 June 1752).

Seritsa ❙ 1501 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War

Beaten by Duke Ivan III of Moscow at the Vedrosha (July 1500), Alexander of Lithuania and Poland secured aid from the Livonian Order, whose Master Walther von Plettenberg threatened Pskov. Ivan sent Prince Daniil Penkov, with Ivan Gorbaty of Pskov, but at the Seritsa, near Isborsk, the Russian army was destroyed by artillery and fled. Russia was soon avenged at Helmed (27 August 1501).

Serravalle ❙ 1544 ❙ 4th Habsburg-Valois War

Following his defeat at Ceresole, south of Turin in April, Imperial commander Alfonso d'Avalos Marquis del Vasto attacked a large body of Italians marching from the east to reinforce Francis de Bourbon Prince d'Enghien. The mercenaries under Marshal Piero Strozzi were heavily defeated at Serravalle Libarna, near Novi Ligure, with a large number taken prisoner (2 June 1544).

Sesia ❙ 1524 ❙ 1st Habsburg-Valois War

Two years after Francis I of France was driven from Lombardy at Bicocca, he sent Admiral William de Bonnivet, who took Milan but was repulsed at Rebecco by Imperial commander Fernando d'Avalos Marquis of Pescara. On the Sesia near Romagnano, northwest of Novara, the retreating French were routed, with Bonnivet wounded and Chevalier Pierre Terrail de Bayard killed (30 April 1524).

Seskar ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Kronstadt Bay

Seta ❙ 1184 ❙ Gempei War

See Uji

Settat ❙ 1908 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

With the Moroccan siege of Casablanca driven off by action at Taddert, new French commander General Albert d'Amade took 2,500 men three days south against Moulai Hafid at Settat. An over-managed drill-book assault allowed the Moroccans to escape, although 40 were killed in the pursuit. D'Amade withdrew and tried again a week later at Wadi M'Koun (15 January 1908).

Sevastopol ❙ 1854–1855 ❙ Crimean War

The Anglo-French forces of General Fitzroy Somerset Lord Raglan and General Francois Canrobert advanced across the Alma and besieged the fortress of Sevastopol, brilliantly defended by General Frants Todleben. With a final relief attempt repulsed at the Chernaya, and the storming of the Malakov, Russia withdrew, effectively ending the war (28 September 1854–9 September 1855).

Sevastopol ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)

Without any declaration of war, the German-manned Turkish cruisers Goeben (Yavuz) and Breslau (Midilli) led a Turkish squadron against Russian ports in the Black Sea. Admiral Wilhelm Souchon in Goeben bombarded Sevastopol, while other ships attacked Odessa and Novorossisk. Russia responded by declaring war and soon fought back off Cape Sarych (29 October 1914).

Sevastopol ❙ 1941–1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

General Erich von Manstein broke into the Crimean Peninsula at Perekop and advanced on the great fortified naval base at Sevastopol, held by General Ivan Petrov. After a failed initial assault, the Germans went to clear Kerch, then returned to reduce Sevastopol (7 June). It fell after a 250-day siege with 90,000 captured. Manstein was made a Field Marshal (30 October 1941–3 July 1942).

Sevastopol ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As Russian forces invaded the Crimea through Perekop and Kerch, the German Seventeenth Army under General Erwin Jaenecke fell back on Sevastopol, where Russians attacked behind heavy artillery. Although many escaped by sea before the fortress fell, the Germans lost perhaps 50,000 men killed or captured at Sevastopol, or in a final stand at nearby Cape Khersonessky (7–9 May 1944).

Seven Days' Battles ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

After advancing through Virginia from Yorktown, Union commander George B. McClellan fought a weeklong series of battles east and south of Richmond, which led to his withdrawal and the end of the Peninsula campaign. The battles were at Oak Grove, Beaver Dam Creek, Garnett's and Golding's Farms, Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp and Malvern Hill (25 June–1 July 1862).

Sevenoaks ❙ 1450 ❙ Cade's Rebellion

Rebelling over land grievances, the men of Kent marched on London led by Jack Cade, an Irish-born former soldier. South of the capital at Sevenoaks, the insurgents beat a heavily outnumbered Royalist army, killing commander Sir Humphrey Stafford. The rebels then entered the capital and were defeated at London Bridge. The rebellion soon collapsed with many leaders executed (18 June 1450).

Seven Pines ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union commander George B. McClellan advancing along the Virginia Peninsula was met east of Richmond at Seven Pines by General Joseph E. Johnston (who was wounded and succeeded by General Gustavus W. Smith). Despite almost 6,000 Union and 8,000 Confederate casualties, both sides claimed victory, though McClellan withdrew through the Seven Days' Battles (31 May–1 June 1862).

Seven Springs ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See White Hall

Seventythree Easting ❙ 1991 ❙ 1st Gulf War

See Wadi al-Batin

Severndroog ❙ 1755 ❙ War Against Malabar Pirates

See Savandrug

Severndroog ❙ 1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

See Savandrug

Seville ❙ 1248 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

Ferdinand III of Castile captured Cordova from the Moors (1236) and advanced down the Guadalquivir River to besiege Seville, defended by Arab General Muhammed ibn al-Akhmar. The garrison held out until Ferdinand sent ships to blockade supplies arriving along the river and the city was starved into surrender. The fall of Seville left the Moors in Spain with little beyond Granada.

Sewell's Point ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Within weeks of war starting at Fort Sumter, two Union gunboats under Lieutenant Daniel L. Braine blockading Chesapeake Bay engaged the Confederate Battery at Sewell's Point, just north of Norfolk, commanded by General Walter Gwynn. The gunboats were driven off after indecisive action and a fresh assault was attempted ten days later at Aquia Creek (18–19 May 1861).

Shabatz ❙ 1476 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

See Sabac

Shabatz ❙ 1521 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

See Sabac

Shabatz ❙ 1806 ❙ 1st Serbian Rising

See Misar

Shabatz ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

See Sabac

Shabkadr ❙ 1897 ❙ Great Frontier Rising

Soon after Pathan tribesmen inspired by Mullah Sadullah were driven off from a siege at Malakand, further south and just 15 miles from Peshawar itself, a reported 5,000 Mohmand tribesmen from the west attacked the Border Police fort at Shabkadr. A column from Peshawar under Colonel (later Sir) John Woon dispersed the rebels with a flank attack by Bengal Lancers (7 August 1897).

Shaggy Ridge ❙ 1943–1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

General George Vasey's 7th Australian Division, advancing up the Markham-Ramu Valley in New Guinea, confronted Japanese forces of the Eighteenth Army entrenched on a massive feature in the Finisterre Mountains which the Australians called Shaggy Ridge. A slogging three-month fight finally cleared the last Japanese defenders and the advance continued (October 1943–January 1944).

Shahdadpur ❙ 1843 ❙ British Conquest of Sind

In an opportunistic war against the Baluchi Amirs of Sind (in modern Pakistan), British General Sir Charles Napier routed a massive Baluchi force under Sher Muhammad near Miani (17 February), then captured his capital at Mirpur and sent Major John Jacob to pursue the Amir into the Sind desert. The Lion of Mirpur was finally defeated at Shahdadpur and fled across the Indus (14 June 1843).

Shahganj ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

With rebel forces approaching Agra, Brigadier Thomas Polwhele marched six miles from the city to meet his opponents at Shahganj. While his troops fought courageously in a badly handled action, their ammunition had been destroyed during a needless delay under artillery fire. Heavily outnumbered, Polwhele was forced to retreat to Agra and was later relieved of command (5 July 1857).

Shahi Tibbi ❙ 1704 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

See Sarsa

Shaho ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

Russian General Fleisher was reinforced after victory in southern Manchuria at Haicheng (12 August) and advanced west towards Niezhuang, while commander General Deian Ivanovich Subotich marched direct to Shaho, north of Anshan, held by over 50,000 Chinese. An artillery duel and sharp fighting forced the Chinese to withdraw north through Liaoyang (27 September 1900).

Shaho ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Withdrawing north into Manchuria from Liaoyang (3 September), Russian General Aleksei Kuropatkin turned on Marshal Iwao Oyama's pursuing Japanese south of Mukden (modern Shenyang) at Shaho. Heavy fighting along an extended front cost about 40,000 Russian and 16,000 Japanese casualties before winter conditions forced both sides to dig in behind barbed wire (7–16 October 1904).

Shahrabad ❙ 1117 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

See Ghazni

Shahr Rey ❙ 1194 ❙ Wars of the Great Seljuk Sultanate

When Toghril III—last of the Great Seljuk Sultans of Iran—attempted to reassert his influence, the Caliph called for help from Sultan Tekish of Khwarezm. In battle at Shahr Rey, south of Tehran, Toghril was defeated and killed—reportedly when he accidentally hit his own horse with his mace and fell. As a result, much of western Persian was lost to the Khwarezmian Empire.

Shaiba ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Turkish forces driven out of Basra after defeat at Sahil in November 1914 later tried to retake the city near the mouth of the Euphrates. Advancing on Basra, they were blocked by the small British garrison west of the city at Shaiba. A three-day defence saw the Turks driven off after heavy losses on both sides. General Sir John Nixon then advanced upriver against Amara (12–14 April 1915).

Shakargarh ❙ 1971 ❙ 3rd Indo-Pakistan War

Indian General Khem Karan Singh responded to a Pakistani invasion through Chhamb by launching a massive counter-offensive further south to pinch off the strategic Shakargarh Salient, west of Pathankot. The largest armoured battle of the war saw heavy losses in men and tanks on both sides, but Pakistan was badly defeated with 45 tanks destroyed and had to sue for peace (8–16 December 1971).

Shakarkhelda ❙ 1724 ❙ Mughal-Hyderabad War

Four years after victory over Imperial armies at Ratanpur and Balapur, the ambitious Nizam-ul-Mulk and his commander Iwaz Khan defeated and killed Mabariz Khan, Mughal Governor of Patna, at Shakarkhelda (modern Fathkelda), northeast of Aurangabad. Nizam was pardoned by Emperor Muhammad Shah and eventually became independent ruler of Hyderabad (11 October 1724).

Shalateng ❙ 1947 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

As Pakistan-backed Muslim tribesmen stormed into Indian Kashmir through Uri, they paused to loot. The Maharaja of Kashmir appealed to India, which sent forces under Brigadier Lionel Protip "Bogie" Sen to reinforce Srinigar. The rampaging tribesmen were routed at nearby Shalateng and the capital was saved. Sen's Indian regulars soon advanced to retake Baramula and Uri (7 November 1947).

Shamkhor ❙ 1826 ❙ Russo-Persian Wars

When Persia invaded Russian Azerbaijan, Amir Khan of Erivan captured Yelizavetpol, then faced a much smaller Russian force under General Valerian Gregorevich Madatov further west at the Shamkhor River. Superior Russian artillery led to a Persian rout, after which Madatov occupied Yelizavetpol. Ten days later he helped defeat the main Persian army (3 September 1826).

Shamsabad ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Threatened by a large rebel force which had crossed the Ganges just 12 miles upstream of his base at Fateghar, General Sir Colin Campbell sent Brigadier Adrian Hope northwest on an overnight march. A surprise attack at the village of Sutia, just outside Shamsabad, saw Hope inflict a heavy defeat. The rebels fled back across the Ganges, abandoning four guns (27 January 1858).

Shangani ❙ 1893 ❙ Matabele War

Major Patrick Forbes led a British column into Matabeleland (in modern Zimbabwe) against the great King Lobengula and crossed the Shangani River, where his camp was attacked by about 5,000 Matabele under Manonda and Mjaan. Routed by cannon and Maxim guns, Manonda hanged himself in shame. Forbes then advanced through Bembesi towards Bulawayo (25 October 1893).

Shangani Incident ❙ 1893 ❙ Matabele War

As the great Matabele King Lobengula fled north from Bulawayo after defeat at Bembesi, Major Patrick Forbes in pursuit sent a small patrol under Major Allan Wilson, which stumbled into the main Matalebe army and was trapped by the flooded Shangani. In a legendary heroic stand, the 35 troopers were all killed. Lobengula continued his flight and later died of fever (4 December 1893).

Shangdang ❙ 1945 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

During Chinese peace negotiations after World War II, over 35,000 Nationalists under warlord Yan Xishan invaded southeast Shanxi and occupied Tunliu, Lucheng and Xiangyuan in the Shangdang area, north of Changzhi. Attacked by Communist General Liu Bocheng, the Kuomintang were decisively defeated. Liu moved east to meet another incursion at Handan (15 October 1945).

Shanggao ❙ 1941 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

On a fresh offensive into northern Jiangxi, Japanese advanced southwest from Nanchang along the Xin Jiang towards Shanggao. The Chinese 19th Army under General Luo Zhuoyin fought a bloody defence east of the city. After heavy fighting and a threatened encirclement, the Japanese had to withdraw. The next enemy offensive was further west against Changsha (22–25 March 1941).

Shanghai ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Having driven off the Imperial siege of Nanjing in May, Taiping commander Hong Rengan and General Li Xuicheng advanced east towards the great international city of Shanghai. Following action to the west at Songjiang and Qingpu, Hong attempted to occupy the city but was attacked by "neutral" French and British troops and withdrew after four days (18–21 August 1860).

Shanghai ❙ 1862 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Taiping commander Li Xiucheng secured Hangzhou, then days later attacked Shanghai, held by British Admiral James Hope, French Admiral Léopold Protet and irregulars under American Frederick T. Ward (later reinforced by Imperial General Li Hongzhang). After months of bloody fighting, Tan Shaoguang's final assault failed and the Taiping withdrew (7 January–30 August 1862).

Shanghai ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Turning north after capturing Hangzhou, Nationalist commander Bai Chongxi and General Xue Yeu attacked Shanghai, held for the northern warlord Sun Zhuanfang by Bi Shu Cheng. After Admiral Yang Shu Zhang declared for the Kuomintang, the city fell by storm and Nanjing, further west, fell two days later. Bi Shu Cheng fled but was captured and executed (18–22 March 1927).

Shanghai ❙ 1932 ❙ Shanghai Incident

In response to a boycott and anti-Japanese riots in Shanghai, a Japanese army of 70,000 landed to attack the great Chinese city. Supported by devastating air and naval firepower, they crushed the local garrison. A League of Nations ceasefire was eventually signed and the Japanese withdrew after China agreed to end the boycott (29 January–4 March 1932).

Shanghai ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

While Japanese forces in northern China advanced from Beijing towards Taiyuan, another offensive began on the central coast, where up to 200,000 men were thrown against Shanghai. Chinese commander Chang Fakui fought a prolonged defence before he was eventually overwhelmed by numbers and withdrew west towards Nanjing (13 August–11 November 1937).

Shangkao ❙ 1941 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Shanggao

Shangqiu ❙ 757 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion
See Suiyang

Shanhaiguan ❙ 1644 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

When rebel leader Li Zicheng captured Beijing and overthrew the Ming Dynasty, Ming General Wu Sangui invited his enemy Manchu Prince Dorgon to come to his aid. In a massive battle at the Great Wall at Shanhaiguan, Li's forces suffered a terrible defeat and withdrew towards Tongguan. Dorgon seized Beijing and the new Manchu (Qing) Dynasty reigned until 1912 (27 May 1644).

Shanhaiguan ❙ 1924 ❙ 2nd Zhili-Fengtian War

As warlords fought for northern China, Zhili leader Kao Kun in Beijing sent Generals Wu Beifu and Feng Yuxiang east to Shanhaiguan against Zhang Zuolin of Manchuria (whose army had been repulsed at Changxindian). After costly fighting, Feng changed sides and returned to overthrow Kao by coup (22 October), giving Zhang control of Beijing (October 1924).

Shanhaiguan ❙ 1945 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

With World War II newly over, Nationalist Chinese entered Soviet-occupied Manchuria and met Communist Chinese at the Liao River, where severe fighting developed around Shanhaiguan Pass at the seaward end of the Great Wall. Attacking with tanks, the Nationalists broke through and reached as far as Jinzhou before an American-imposed ceasefire (10–16 November 1945).

Shao-Hsing ❙ 1359 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty
See Shaoxing

Shaoxing ❙ 1359 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

Amid warlord rivalry during the decline of the Yuan Dynasty, Zhang Shicheng of Wu seized Shaoxing, southeast of Hangzhou, where his General Lu Chen soon faced a large Ming army under Hu Dahai. The epic siege of Shaoxing saw months of bitter fighting among flooded levees before losses and disease forced the Ming to withdraw. Zhang Shicheng was finally overcome in 1367 at Suzhou.

Sharashett ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War
See Sidi El Henni

Sharkiyan ❙ 1008 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars
See Balkh

Sharm el-Sheikh ❙ 1956 ❙ Arab-Israeli Sinai War
See Straits of Tiran

Sharon ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)
See Megiddo

Sharpsburg ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
See Antietam

Sharqat ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

The war was almost over when Anglo-Indian commander Sir William Marshall determined to secure the Upper Tigris and sent General Sir Alexander Cobbe against Ismail Haqqi Bey north of Baghdad around Sharqat. Very heavy action forced about 18,000 Turks to surrender and Mosul was occupied. Commander Ali Ihsan Pasha signed a local armistice to end the conflict (26–29 October 1918).

Sharur ❙ 1501 ❙ Persian-Turkoman Wars

At war with the Turkomans of the south Caucasus, Sheikh Ismail of Ardabil in northern Iran marched into the Araxes Valley in pursuit of Sultan Alwand of the Ak Koyunlu (White Sheep) Turkoman confederacy. At Sharur, Alwand was routed and fled. Ismail then captured Tabriz and two years later he advanced to completely destroy the Turkomans at Hamadan (August 1501).

Sharwa ❙ 1019 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

Mahmud of Ghazni led his army from Afghanistan into India, advancing through Kanauj against Raja Chandar Ray of Sharwa, who abandoned his capital and took to the forest. Mahmud pursued him and dealt out a terrible defeat. He then sacked Sharwa and seized a massive plunder, including gold, silver and reputedly over 50,000 slaves and 350 elephants (6 January 1019).

Shayuan ❙ 537 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

With the north China kingdom of Wei divided, Gao Huan of Eastern Wei led a failed advance west. A few months later he invaded again with a force claimed to be well over 100,000-strong. The outnumbered Western Wei army under Yuwen Tai ambushed the invaders at Shayuan, inflicting massive losses. A Western counter-offensive the following year was halted at Heqiao (19 November 537).

Sheerness ❙ 1667 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

See Medway

Sheikan ❙ 1883 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

See El Obeid

Sheikhabad ❙ 1866 ❙ Later Afghan War of Succession

In a war of succession following the death of Dost Muhammad, Amir Sher Ali marched from Kandahar to recover Kabul, seized by his brother Azim Khan and nephew Abdur Rahman (son of Afzal Khan). Despite commanding 15,000 troops, the Amir was heavily defeated 30 miles south of Kabul at Sheikhabad. Azim Khan and Afzal Khan were proclaimed joint rulers (9 May 1866).

Sheik Sa'ad ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

As British forces led by Sir Fenton Aylmer advanced up the Tigris to relieve besieged Kut-al-Amara, the Meerut Division under General Sir George Younghusband was sent forward to attack the Turks 20 miles downstream from Kut at Sheik Sa'ad. The outnumbered and ill-equipped British lost 4,000 men in a futile assault, though the Turks withdrew upstream to the Wadi (7 January 1916).

Shelon ❙ 1471 ❙ Muscovite Wars of Expansion

Determined to crush pro-Lithuanian Novgorod, Duke Ivan III of Moscow sent a converging force under the command of Prince Daniil Dimitrievich Kholmsky, supported by the army of Pskov. The larger Novgorod army was routed in a decisive action southwest of Novgorod at the Shelon, with a claimed 12,000 killed. The Muscovites soon won again at the Shilenga (14 July 1471).

Shenhe ❙ 395 ❙ Wars of the Sixteen Kingdoms Era

When the Xianbei leader Taowu established the Kingdom of Wei in northern China, his southern neighbour Murong Chui of Later Yan sent his son Murong Bao against him. At Shenhe, near Horinger in Inner Mongolia, the Yan army was utterly routed. After Murong Chui died the following year, Taowu gradually conquered Yan, capturing the cities of Zhongshan and Ye (December 395).

Shenyang ❙ 1621 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

Manchu commander Nurhachi destroyed an Imperial army in Manchuria in 1619 at Sarhu, Siyanggiayan and Niumaozhai, then attacked the well-fortified city of Shenyang. The Ming garrison marched out to meet him but were cut off and badly defeated. Nurhachi seized the city as his capital and renamed it Mukden. Five years later he advanced into China itself and was repulsed at Ningyuan.

Shenyang ❙ 1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Mukden

Shenyang ❙ 1931 ❙ Manchuria Incident

See Mukden

Shenyang ❙ 1946 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Mukden

Shenyang ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Mukden

Shepherdstown ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

General Robert E. Lee's Confederate army was withdrawing south from Antietam, Maryland, when his rearguard under Generals William N. Pendleton and Ambrose P. Hill attacked General Fitz-John Porter at Boteler's Ford on the Potomac near Shepherdstown, West Virginia. Porter was defeated, but failure to pursue cost General George B. McClellan his army command (19–20 September 1862).

Sheria ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Within days of destroying the Turkish left flank at Beersheba, British commander Sir Edmund Allenby ordered a naval bombardment of the western end of the Turkish line at Gaza, then struck from the east through Sheria to cut off their retreat. Following a costly defeat at Sheria, the Turks evacuated Gaza and withdrew north through El Mughar towards Jerusalem (6 November 1917).

Sheriffmuir ❙ 1715 ❙ Jacobite Rebellion (The Fifteen)

Rising in support of James Stuart—the Old Pretender—John Erskine Earl of Mar led a Jacobite army to Sheriffmuir, near Dunblane north of Stirling, against a much smaller Hanoverian force under Archibald Campbell Duke of Argyle. Both sides lost about 500 men in an indecisive action and a Jacobite defeat the same day at Preston made Mar flee to France (13 November 1715).

Sherpur, India ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

Emperor Shah Alam II and General Kamgar Khan launched a new invasion of Bengal, where they defeated Raja Ramnarain at Masumpur. Two weeks later, they faced a large British-Indian army under Major John Caillaud and Miran, son of Nawab Mir Jafar of Bengal. The Emperor was routed in a sharp action southeast of Patna at Sherpur and withdrew south to Bihar city (22 February 1760).

Sherpur, Afghanistan ❙ 1879 ❙ 2nd British-Afghan War

When British General Sir Frederick Roberts occupied Kabul after victory at Charasia, he was besieged by about 100,000 Afghan tribesmen under Mohammed Jan. At nearby Sherpur cantonment, Roberts repulsed repeated attacks, then counter-attacked for a decisive victory. Former Amir Yakub Khan's cousin, Abdur Rahman, was then made Amir (11–23 December 1879).

Sherston ❙ 1016 ❙ Danish Conquest of England

Shortly after succeeding his father Aethelred as King of Wessex, Edmund Ironside defeated Knut, son of the great Sweyn Forkbeard of Denmark, at Penselwood. The Danish and Saxon armies then met again in an inconclusive engagement at Sherston (formerly Scearston), near Malmesbury, Wiltshire. The decisive battle at Ashingdon later that year completed the Danish conquest of England.

Shevardino ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As the French army advanced into Russia past Smolensk, Generals Jean Dominique Complans and Josef Poniatowski led about 35,000 men against the Shevardino redoubt, held by Prince Gorchakov II. Fierce fighting and heavy bombardment cost about 8,000 men on either side before the outnumbered Russians were ordered to withdraw to nearby Borodino (5 September 1812).

Shijo Nawate ❙ 1348 ❙ War of the Japanese Emperors

With victory at Minatogawa and the heroic death of Kusunoki Masashige (1336), Ashikaga Takauji created a rival court at Kyoto, provoking years of warfare. Eventually, Ashikaga Generals Ko Moronao and Ko Moroyasu attacked Emperor Go-Murukami at Yoshino. A bloody disaster at nearby Shijo Nawate saw Imperial champion Kusunoki Masatsura defeated and killed (4 February 1348).

Shilenga ❙ 1471 ❙ Muscovite Wars of Expansion

Two weeks after a crushing victory over Novgorod at the Shelon, another Muscovite army under General Boris Slepts attacking in the north was met by Novgorod's commander Prince Vasili Shuiski at the Shilenga, where Slepts won a second decisive victory. Within a few years Duke Ivan III of Moscow captured Novgorod itself (1478) and annexed much of the land of the Dvina (27 July 1472).

Shiloh ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union commander Ulysses S. Grant secured western Kentucky at Fort Donelson, then advanced up the Tennessee and was surprised at Shiloh by Confederate General Albert S. Johnston. In one of the war's bloodiest actions, Grant counter-attacked for a costly victory. With Johnston killed, General Pierre G. T. Beauregard led the retreat south into Mississippi to Corinth (6–7 April 1862).

Shimabara ❙ 1584 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

See Okita Nawate

Shimbra-Kure ❙ 1529 ❙ Adal-Ethiopian War

When Ahmad ibn Ibrahim (Ahmad Grañ) became leader of the Muslim Somali state of Adal, he declared war against Ethiopia. After bloody campaigning, he met Emperor Lebna-Dengel (David II) in battle at Shimbra-Kure, where the Imperial army was decisively defeated. Ibrahim subjugated much of Christian Ethiopia before he was finally halted at Wayna Daga (16 October 1529).

Shimoga ❙ 1791 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

Nizam Ali of Hyderabad joined Britain in renewed war against Tipu Sultan of Mysore by supporting Maratha General Parashuram Bhau and Captain John Little invading Bednur Province against an 8,000-strong force under Tipu's cousin Muhammad Raza (the Binky Nabob). The Mysoreans were routed near Shimoga, losing their guns and baggage, and Bhau took the city (3 January 1791).

Shimonoseki ❙ 1864 ❙ Shimonoseki War

Soon after Choshu failed to seize Kyoto, British, Dutch and French warships under Admirals Sir Augustus Kuper and Jean-Louis Jaurès attacked the Choshu port of Shimonoseki, commanding the Strait between Kyushu and Honshu in southern Japan. A massive bombardment and capture of the shore battery forced Mori Motonori to open the Strait to western trade with Yokohama (5–8 September 1864).

Shinowara ❙ 1183 ❙ Gempei War

Pursued south towards Kyoto after a disastrous defeat at Kurikara, Taira Komemori was caught just days later at Shinowara by the victorious army of Minamoto Yoshinaka, now joined by his uncle Yukiie. Komemori was once again routed and fled to Kyoto. The Taira evacuated the capital, taking the boy-Emperor Antoku, then withdrew west, where they defended Mizushima (12 June 1183).

Shipka Pass ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Determined to hold the Shipka Pass in the Balkan Mountains, to prevent Turkish aid to Plevna, Russian forces faced a massive attack by Suleiman Pasha. When General Feodor Radetzky arrived with reinforcements, the Turks were repulsed with terrible losses on both sides. Russia held the pass for five months with further victories at Mount St Nicholas and Senova (20–27 August 1877).

Shirakawa ❙ 1156 ❙ Hogen War

During a disputed succession in Japan, Fujiwara Yorinaga and Minamoto Tameyoshi tried to restore former Emperor Sutoku against Emperor

Go-Shirakawa. Attacking at night, Taira Kiyomori and Minamoto Yoshitomo stormed the rebel stronghold at Shirakawa Palace, just northeast of Kyoto. Yorinaga and Tameyoshi were killed and Sutoku was exiled, ending the attempted coup (29 July 1156).

Shiraz ❙ 1393 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol Tamerlane marched into Persia after victory over the Golden Horde at Kunduzcha (June 1391) and attacked Shah Mansur, who had rebelled against Mongol rule imposed when Tamerlane overthrew a previous Shah in 1387. On the Plain of Patila near his capital at Shiraz, in modern southern Iran, Mansur was defeated and killed and the Muzaffarid Dynasty came to an end.

Shiraz ❙ 1730 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

See Zarghan

Shiraz ❙ 1758 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

With Isfahan recaptured after victory over Azad Khan Afghan at Urmiya (July 1757), Mohammad Hasan Khan of Qajar marched to besiege Shiraz, held by the Regent Karim Khan Zand and his brilliant General Shaykh Ali Khan. Having suffered heavy losses to sorties and attacks in the rear by Afghans and Uzbeks, Mohammad Hasan withdrew. He was defeated early the next year at Ashraf.

Shiraz ❙ 1780–1781 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

During the war of succession following the murder of the usurper Zaki Khan of Persia, his nephew Ali Murad laid siege to his uncle Sadiq Khan, who had returned from Basra and occupied Shiraz. The city fell by treachery after eight months, following which Ali Murad murdered his uncle. His family then took the throne and moved the capital to Isfahan (August 1780–February 1781).

Shirbarghan ❙ 1646 ❙ Mughal-Uzbek Wars

See Balkh

Shire ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

In a third offensive to secure northern Ethiopia after Amba Aradam and Tembien, Marshal Pietro Badoglio sent General Pietro Maravigna west from Aksum to attack Ras Imru at Shire (modern Ednaselassie). The Italians were stalled in hard fighting before massive artillery fire drove Ras Imru south across the Takkaze, with hundreds killed by pursuing aircraft (29 February–2 March 1936).

Shiroyama ❙ 1877 ❙ Satsuma Rebellion

Rebel Japanese Marshal Saigo Takamori was driven back from Kumamoto to Kagoshima in southern Kyushu, where he found himself surrounded on land and sea by Imperial forces. A bloody last stand at Shiroyama, overlooking Kagoshima Bay, saw many of his supporters die in a final suicidal charge. The great General committed seppuku, ending Japan's last civil war (24 September 1877).

Shirts ❙ 1544 ❙ Scottish Clan Wars

The "Battle of the Shirts" climaxed a long feud between the MacDonalds of Ranald and the Frasers, who fought to annihilation at Laggan on Loch Lochy. Fighting in shirts after removing their plaids because of the heat, both sides suffered terrible casualties in hand-to-hand combat. Lord Lovat and 300 Frasers were killed, including his heir, leaving the MacDonalds to claim victory (3 July 1544).

Shizugatake ❙ 1583 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

When Toyotomi Hideyoshi seized power after the death of Oda Nobunaga, he was opposed by Oda's son Nobutaka and Shibata Katsuie of Echizen, who sent Sakuma Morimasa to besiege the mountain fortress of Shizugatake (near modern Kinomoto). Hideyoshi routed Morimasa, after which Katsuie and Nobutaka committed suicide.

He then fought Oda Nobuo at Nagakute (11 June 1583).

Shoal Creek ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Pursued through Round Mountain and Chusto-Talasah, pro-Union Creeks and Seminoles under Chief Opothleyaholo were attacked on Shoal Creek (Chustenalah) in northeast Okalahoma by Confederate Colonels James McIntosh and Douglas H. Cooper. In a decisive defeat, the Indians quickly ran out of ammunition and fled north into Kansas, posing no further threat (26 December 1861).

Sholapur ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

Fleeing after destruction of the Maratha army at Ashti and Seoni, Peshwa Baji Rao II's troops under Chief Gompat Rao made a stand near Sholapur, southeast of Bombay. British General Theophilus Pritzler routed the Marathas, killing over 1,000, and the fortress surrendered five days later. Within weeks the British then turned against the forts at Chanda and Malegaon (10 May 1818).

Sholinghur ❙ 1781 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

Weeks after heavy defeats at Porto Novo and Pollilore, Haidar Ali of Mysore and his son Tipu Sultan tried to block General Sir Eyre Coote advancing to relieve the siege of Vellore. A one-sided disaster northwest of Vellore at Sholinghur cost the Mysorean army terrible casualties, yet within six months Tipu was successful at Kumbakonam and Cuddalore (27 September 1781).

Shrewsbury ❙ 50 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

See Caer Caradoc

Shrewsbury ❙ 1403 ❙ Percy's Rebellion

A large-scale rebellion against Henry IV of England saw Sir Henry Percy (Hotspur) and Scots under Archibald Earl of Douglas enter Cheshire against Henry, Prince of Wales. At Hateley Field, near Shrewsbury, they instead encountered the King and his full army. Douglas was captured and Hotspur was killed. His father the Earl of Northumberland fought on until 1408 at Bramham Moor (21 July 1403).

Shrubs ❙ 1712 ❙ 2nd Villmergen War

See Bremgarten

Shuangduiji ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Reeling before the Communist Huaihai offensive, Nationalist General Huang Wei and 125,000 men advancing on besieged Xuzhou were trapped to the southwest at Shuangduiji between Generals Chen Yi and Liu Bocheng. A relief army from Xuzhou was stopped at Chenguanzhuang, after which Huang's army was annihilated and he was captured (23 November–15 December 1948).

Shubra Khit ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Middle East)

Napoleon Bonaparte invaded Egypt to seize Alexandria (2 July), then advanced up the Nile from Rosetta. At Shubra Khit, his small flotilla engaged a larger group of heavily manned Mamluk vessels. During an indecisive struggle, French artillery on the bank sank the Mamluk flagship. The survivors afloat and ashore then fled south towards the Pyramids (13 July 1798).

Shumen ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

See Kozludzha

Shumla ❙ 377 ❙ 5th Gothic War

See Marcianopolis

Shumla ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

See Kozludzha

Shupiyan ❙ 1819 ❙ Afghan-Sikh Wars

A year after the fall of Multan, Sikh leader Ranjit Singh led a Punjabi army into Kashmir and sent Misr Dewan Chand and Prince Kharak Singh against Shupiyan, south of Srinigar, held by Jabbar Khan, brother of Governor Azim Khan. With his Afghan troops hard hit by artillery, Jabbar Khan escaped badly wounded. Srinigar was occupied next day and Ranjit secured Kashmir (3 July 1819).

Shusha ❙ 1795 ❙ Persian-Georgian War

As part of the campaign to expand his northern lands, Aga Mohammad Khan of Persia led his army to the Araxes, where he attacked Shusha, defended by Ibrahim Khan of Qarabagh. Ibrahim surrendered after a sharp siege and agreed to pay tribute, while Aga Mohammad Khan marched into Christian Georgia against Tiflis (8 July–9 August 1795).

Shusha ❙ 1826 ❙ Russo-Persian Wars

Persian Prince Abbas Mirza renewed war against Russia and besieged the frontier fortress of Shusha, bravely held by Colonel Iosif Antonovich Reut and 1,800 men. The delay allowed commander Alexei Ermolov to prepare a counter-attack and, following Persian defeat at the Shamkhor, Abbas Mirza left Shusha to meet the Russians a week later at Yelizavetpol (July–5 September 1826).

Shwegyin ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

Concluding the British retreat from Burma, General William Slim fell back through Kyaukse and Monywa and his rearguard was surprised at Shwegyin, on the upper Chindwin near Kalewa. Despite inflicting unexpectedly high casualties on General Shozo Sakurai, the British had to destroy their tanks and guns and withdraw into India to begin the terrible march to Imphal (9–11 May 1942).

Sialkot ❙ 1761 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

Ahmad Shah Durrani returned to Afghanistan following victory at Panipat in January, then sent Nur-ud-din Khan and 12,000 Afghans to punish the Sikhs for attacking his army as it was crossing the Punjab. Repulsed at the Chenab by Charat Singh, Nur-ud-din withdrew under siege to Sialkot, northeast of Lahore. He eventually fled in disguise and his army was starved into surrender (August 1761).

Sialkot ❙ 1763 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

After another invasion of the Punjab, General Ahmad Shah Durrani returned to Kabul and left Kabuli Mal as Governor in Lahore, where he came under increasing Sikh pressure. In battle at Sialkot, northeast of Lahore, Charhut Singh Sukerchakia defeated Afghan forces under General Jahan Khan and besieged Lahore to impose terms. This provoked a fresh Afghan invasion (November 1763).

Sialkot ❙ 1965 ❙ 2nd Indo-Pakistan War

Two days after her offensive towards Lahore, India opened a new front further north towards Sialkot to cut communications with the capital. Large-scale armored actions southeast of Sialkot around Chawinda, Phillora and Buttar Dograndi saw both sides suffer heavy losses. With no sign of any breakthrough, the combatants agreed to accept a UN ceasefire (8–22 September 1965).

Sian ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Xi'an

Siauliai ❙ 1236 ❙ Early Wars of the Teutonic Knights

The German Sword Brethren and Crusaders from Holstein advanced from Livonia into Lithuania to meet Duke Mindaugus and the Samogitian leader Vykintas. Trapped on soft ground at Siauliai, the knights were destroyed with Master Volquin killed. The survivors were absorbed into the Livonian Order and German expansion east was soon checked at Lake Peipus (22 September 1236).

Sibir ❙ 1582 ❙ Russian Conquest of Siberia

See Kashlyk

Sibiu ❙ 1599 ❙ Balkan National Wars

See Selimbar

Sibiu ❙ 1916 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars
See Hermannstadt

Sibiu ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)
See Hermannstadt

Sibuyan Sea ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
Admiral Takeo Kurita was heading east through the Philippines towards Leyte Gulf when he was attacked in the Sibuyan Sea by aircraft from Admiral Marc Mitscher's Task Force. Despite losing a carrier to land-based air attack, Mitscher sank the giant battleship Musashi and damaged the other Japanese battleships. Kurita withdrew to regroup then attacked off Samar (23–24 October 1944).

Sicilian Vespers ❙ 1282 ❙ War of the Sicilian Vespers
Less than 20 years after Charles of Anjou killed King Manfred and seized Sicily and Naples, a popular rising was triggered when a French soldier reportedly insulted a young bride walking to Vespers near Palermo. In the resulting uprising—the Sicilian Vespers—thousands of French soldiers and their families died and Sicily was claimed by Manfred's son-in-law, Pedro III of Aragon (30 March 1282).

Sicily ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)
After victory in Tunisia, 180,000 Allied troops landed in southern Sicily in one of the largest amphibious operations of the war. There was costly fighting at Gela, Catania and Troina, before Palermo and Messina were captured to secure the island. However, 100,000 Axis troops escaped to the Italian mainland, along with 10,000 vehicles and about 50 tanks (9 July–17 August 1943).

Sidassir ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War
Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war with Britain in southern India and Generals George Harris and James Stuart (1741–1815) threatened his capital at Seringapatam. West of Mysore near Piriyapatna at Sidassir (modern Siddeswara), Colonel John Montresor's vanguard was surrounded. But they were relieved by Stuart after a courageous overnight stand and the advance continued (6 March 1799).

Siddeswara ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War
See Sidassir

Side ❙ 190 BC ❙ Roman-Syrian War
See Eurymedon

Sidi Abd-el-Jelil ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War
See Zanzur (1st)

Sidi Barrani ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)
When Italy entered the war, Marshal Rudolfo Graziani invaded Egypt from Libya and set up fortified positions south from Sidi Barrani. General Richard O'Connor outflanked and routed General Mario Berti's Italians, capturing over 40,000 men plus tanks and guns. He then invaded Libya at Bardia, while other forces went to Eritrea and beat the Italians at Agordat (9–12 December 1940).

Sidi Ben Othman ❙ 1912 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa
In response to Sultan Mulai Hafid abdicating at Fez, the pretender El Hiba seized Marakesh (18 August). French Colonel Charles Mangin arrived with 5,000 men and El Hiba rashly marched north and attacked a French square at nearby Sidi Ben Othman. Cannon, machine-guns and modern rifles killed over 2,000 Moroccans before they withdrew and Marakesh was secured (6 September 1912).

Sidi Bilal ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War
See Zanzur (2nd)

Sidi Bou Zid ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)
See Faid Pass

Sidi El Henni (1st) ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

On a determined offensive against Italian-held Tripoli, a large Turko-Arab force assaulted positions east of the city, mainly around Sidi El Henni. Two Italian companies were virtually destroyed before General Guglielmo Pecori-Giraldi sent reinforcements. Very hard fighting saw the line eventually stabilised before a renewed attack days later around Sidi Mesri (23 October 1911).

Sidi El Henni (2nd) ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

See Sidi Mesri (2nd)

Sidi Mesri (1st) ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

Three days after intense fighting east of Tripoli around Sidi El Henni, the Turko-Arab army renewed its offensive in a dawn attack along an extended line, with the heaviest fighting around Sidi Mesri. While the Turks were eventually driven off, the two actions cost the Italians over 400 killed and they withdrew their line for better defence before counter-attacking a month later (26 October 1911).

Sidi Mesri (2nd) ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

Having absorbed Turko-Arab attacks east of Tripoli around Sidi El Henni and Sidi Mesri, well-reinforced Italian General Felice de Chaurand launched a massive counter-attack over the same ground. Supported by artillery and naval bombardment, the Italians retook Sidi Mesri after heavy fighting and also Sidi El Henni. They then advanced south towards Ain Zara (26 November 1911).

Sidi Nsir ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

As German forces in southern Tunisia struck at Kasserine, Colonel Rudolph Lang in the north advanced on Beja. The full weight of his assault fell on Colonel Charles Newnham and a small British force dug in at Sidi Nsir, who managed to disable up to 40 German tanks. While almost the entire unit became casualties, their delaying action helped ensure Lang's defeat at Hunt's Gap (26 February 1943).

Sidi Rezegh ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Six months after British failure at Sollum-Halfaya to relieve Tobruk, new commander Sir Claude Auchinleck sent General Sir Alan Cunningham on a fresh offensive around Sidi Rezegh. Despite Italian resistance at Bir Gubi and a powerful German counter-attack, General Erwin Rommel had to abandon Cyrenaica. He soon struck back at Mersa Brega (18 November–7 December 1941).

Sidi Sliman ❙ 1915 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

In renewed campaigning against the Zaia of central Morocco six months after disaster at El Herri, Colonel Noel Garnier-Duplessis marched southwest from Khenifra and was attacked at Sidi Sliman near Kasbah Tadla by up to 4,000 tribesmen. The Berbers lost 300 killed and 400 wounded in two days of heavy fighting, but continued to attack French convoys around Khenifra (15–16 May 1915).

Sidon ❙ 1110 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Baldwin I of Jerusalem captured the Mediterranean ports of Acre, Tripoli and Beirut, then used the arrival of the so-called "Norwegian Crusade" under King Sigurd I to attack Sidon (modern Saida, Lebanon). Supported at sea by Venetian ships under Doge Ordelafo Falieri, Baldwin besieged Sidon for two months against strong resistance before forcing its surrender (19 October–4 December 1110).

Sidon ❙ 1196 ❙ 4th Crusade

A year after the fall of Joppa to the Ayyubid Sultan al-Adil Saif al-Din, German Crusaders marched north from Acre and challenged the Sultan's army between Tyre and Sidon (modern Saida). Led by the Duke of Saxony, the so-called "German Crusade" inflicted a massive defeat, which led the Muslims to abandon most of the key cities on the Palestine Coast, including Joppa and Sidon.

Sidonia Ghat ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny
See Banki

Siedlce ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

Gathering support after victory at Wawer, Polish rebel General Jan Skrzynecki reorganised his army and at Iganie, near Siedlce east of Warsaw, soon gained another bloody win over Russian forces. Fearing the main Russian army under Field Marshal Hans von Diebitsch, the cautious Skrzynecki failed to follow up. By September the rebels had lost at Ostrolenka and Warsaw (10 April 1831).

Siegfried Line ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Facing the Siegfried Line (West Wall) along Germany's western border, the Allies failed an attempted end-run in the north at Arnhem and there was very costly combat at Aachen, Nancy, Metz, and in the Hürtgen Forest. The Germans counter-attacked in the Ardennes and Alsace before being driven back in continued fighting for the Rhineland (17 September 1944–9 February 1945).

Siena ❙ 1554–1555 ❙ 5th Habsburg-Valois War

Amid resistance to Imperial oppression, Siena held out against attack by Cosmo Duke of Florence and a long siege by Gian Medecino Marquis of Marignano. After defeating a relief army at Marciano (August 1554), Medecino resumed the siege and Marshal Blaise de Montluc's French garrison were eventually starved into surrender, ending the Republic (27 January 1554–April 1555).

Sierck ❙ 1643 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

The 22-year-old Louis II Duke d'Enghien succeeded in his bloody siege of Thionville, then days later took his French troops northeast against the Spanish-held town of Sierck, which commanded the southern approaches to Luxembourg. The small town on the Moselle fell just a few days later and d'Enghien went on to drive the Germans back across the Rhine (August 1643).

Sierra Chica ❙ 1855 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

When Indians of the pampas under the Chief Juan Calfucurá raided settlements in eastern Argentina, they were met at Sierra Chica, northeast of Olavarría, by a national army under Colonel Bartolomé Mitre. A bloody action forced the government troops to withdraw northeast to Azul, though in 1858 Calfucurá suffered a costly defeat at Pigüé (31 May 1855).

Sierra Maestra ❙ 1958 ❙ Cuban Revolution

Determined to crush the revolution of Fidel Castro, President Fulgencio Batista sent General Eugenio Cantillo, with massive superiority in numbers and equipment, against the rebel stronghold in the Sierra Maestra. The prolonged campaign saw bitter fighting and heavy losses on both sides before the rebels finally won at El Jigüe (11 July) and assumed the offensive (May–July 1958).

Sierra Negra ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
See Figueras

Sieveshausen ❙ 1553 ❙ War of the German Reformation

Maurice of Saxony helped Emperor Charles V defeat the Protestant Schmalkaldic League at Mühlberg (1547), then sided with Henry II of France against the Emperor and joined a Protestant coalition against Margrave Albert II Alcibiades of Brandenburg. Maurice's Saxons defeated Albert in bloody battle at Sieveshausen, near Hanover, though Maurice was fatally wounded (9 July 1553).

Siffin ❙ 657 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

When Governor Mu'awiya of Syria raised a revolt aided by Amr ibn al-As, conqueror of Egypt, Caliph Ali invaded Syria with a large army. A long and inconclusive battle was fought at Siffin, on the west bank of the Euphrates near Rakka. Mu'awiya became the first Umayyad Caliph after Ali's assassination in 661, splitting Islam between Sunni and Shi'ite Muslims (26–27 July 657).

Sighisoara ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Segesvár

Sigurds ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

With Whites checked east of Helsinki at Porvoo (12 February), Red commander Ali Aaltonen sent 3,000 men west from the capital against a small White force at Sigurds in Kirkkonummi. The Whites broke out after terrible damage by artillery and were pursued. While about 150 escaped, almost 500 surrendered to Swedish negotiators and were taken prisoner to Helsinki (23–25 February 1918).

Sihayo's Kraal ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

On the first day of the war, as British commander Lord Frederick Chelmsford crossed the Buffalo River into Zululand at Rorke's Drift, his centre column under Colonel Richard Glyn met a Zulu force at nearby Sihayo's Kraal under Sihayo's son Nkhumbi. A sharp action saw 16 Zulus killed, including Nkhumbi, and the British advanced to the fateful campsite at Isandhlwana (12 January 1879).

Siikajoki ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Swedish commander Wilhelm Klingspor retreated north before the Russian invasion of Finland and was replaced by General Karl Johann Adlercreutz, who made an heroic stand at the Siikajoki River, south of Oulu. The Swedes repulsed Russian General Jacob Kulneff to secure a remarkable victory and began a summer counter-offensive through Revolax and Nykarleby (18 April 1808).

Sikandarabad ❙ 1760 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

As Afghans moved into the decaying Mughal Empire, Ahmed Shah Durrani killed Maratha Chief Dattaji Sindhia at Barari Ghat, then pursued his nephew Jankoji Sindhia, who joined with the Maratha Mulhar Rao Holkar. At Sikandarabad, southeast of Delhi, the Marathas were surprised and defeated by Afghan General Jahan Khan though they later managed to take Delhi (4 March 1760).

Sikander Bagh ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

A large force of Highlanders and Indians under General Sir Colin Campbell, marching to relieve the British besieged at Lucknow attacked the Sikander Bagh, a heavily defended position just outside the city. When the walls were breached by artillery, the building was taken in hand-to-hand fighting, with almost 2,000 Sepoys killed. Campbell lost 500 killed and wounded (16 November 1857).

Sikar ❙ 1859 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Pursued by forces under General Sir Robert Napier after defeat at Dausa (14 January), rebel leader Tantia Topi was surprised and routed at Sikar, northwest of Jaipur, by Colonel John Holmes. About 600 disheartened rebels surrendered to the Raja of Bikanir and Tantia fled into the jungle. He was later betrayed to Napier by his former ally Man Singh of Narwar and was hanged (21 January 1859).

Sikasso ❙ 1887–1888 ❙ Franco-Mandingo Wars

Mandingo leader Samory Touré led a renewed offensive on the Ivory Coast, attacking Sikasso, in modern Mali, held by King Tieba of Kénédougou, who called for French aid. Samory was forced to withdraw after a long failed siege—which reportedly cost him 10,000 men and most of his horses—and Tieba signed a friendly treaty with France, further isolating the Mandingo (April 1887–August 1888).

Sikasso ❙ 1898 ❙ Franco-Mandingo Wars

Determined to finally secure the Ivory Coast from Mandingo leader Samory Touré, Colonel René Audéoud attacked Sikasso in modern Mali, where King Babemba Traore had renounced the former friendship with France. Two weeks of bombardment smashed the city's massive walls and the King committed suicide to avoid capture. Samory himself was soon taken at Guélémou (1 May 1898).

Silang ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

On fresh offensive south of Manila, Spanish Governor Camilo de Polaveija and General José Lachambre advanced through Zapote Bridge against General Vito Belarmino at Silang, where Belarmino had to withdraw after an heroic defence. A failed counter-attack by Emilio Aguinaldo and Artemio Ricarte forced the Filipinos to continue falling back to Dasmariñas (16–19 February 1897).

Silao ❙ 1860 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Despite securing victory at Guadalajara, President Miguel Miramón faced a revitalised Liberal force under Generals Jesús González Ortega and Ignacio Zaragoza. Near Guadalajara at Silao, Miramón unwisely met a much larger army and was utterly routed, losing all his artillery and 2,000 prisoners, including General Tomás Mejía. Ortega soon won again at Calderón (10 August 1860).

Silarus ❙ 212 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

While withdrawing from Capua towards Tarentum, the Carthaginian General Hannibal was blocked at the Silarus (modern Sele) by Marcus Centenius Penula, who unwisely attacked with a force comprising at least half unreliable local levies. Surrounded by the Carthaginians, Penula was killed and his force was all but destroyed. A few days later, Hannibal beat another Roman force at Herdonea.

Silarus ❙ 71 BC ❙ 3rd Servile War

After beating three Roman armies, former gladiator Spartacus was trapped in the "toe" of Italy by Marcus Licinius Crassus. His army of escaped slaves broke though to the north, but was blocked by freshly arrived Legions under Marcus Lucullus on the River Silarus in Lucania. Spartacus was defeated and killed and up to 6,000 of his followers were crucified along the Appian Way from Capua to Rome.

Silchester ❙ 296 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

When Marcus Carausius, Roman Tyrant of Britain, was murdered and deposed by his Chief Minister Allectus, Emperor Constantius and his Praetorian Prefect Asclepiodotus took a force to Britain. In battle near Silchester in Hampshire, Asclepiodotus killed Allectus and defeated his largely mercenary army to re-establish Imperial control.

Silipa ❙ 206 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

See Ilipa

Silistria ❙ 971 ❙ Byzantine-Russian Wars

See Dorostalon

Silistria ❙ 1773 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

General Pyotr Rumyantsev led a major Russian offensive against the Turks on the Danube, where he advanced near the key city of Silistria. Despite a successful diversionary attack 20 miles upstream at Turtukai, Rumyantsev was repulsed with heavy losses. He was forced to withdraw across the river and Hirsov became Russia's only remaining position on the southern bank (17 June 1773).

Silistria ❙ 1809 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Russians under Prince Pyotr Bagration renewed warfare on the Danube, capturing several key positions before reaching Silistria, where they were defeated by the Grand Vizier Yusuf Pasha with the loss of 10,000 men. Although General Count Alexander Langeron managed to hold off the Turkish advance, the Russians withdrew across the Danube and Bagration was replaced (26 September 1809).

Silistria ❙ 1810 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

After a costly repulse on the Danube at Silistria in 1809, Russian commander Prince Pyotr Bagration was replaced by General Nikolai Kamenski (son of Count Mikhail), who returned to the Danube in the spring and sent General Count Alexander Langeron to besiege Silistria. The city fell to Langeron after just seven days and Kamenski advanced to capture Giurgiu and Ruschuk (12 June 1810).

Silistria ❙ 1854 ❙ Crimean War

Despite Russian defeat at Oltenitza in late 1853, Marshal Ivan Paskevich crossed the Lower Danube and besieged Silistria, bravely defended by Mussa Pasha (and after his death by Captain James Butler and Lieutenant Charles Nasmyth). Following the Anglo-French landing at Varna, and a final failed assault on Silistria, the Russians withdrew upstream towards Giurgiu (4 May–23 June 1854).

Silkaatsnek ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Zilikats Nek

Silver Creek, Missouri ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Roan's Tan Yard

Silver Creek, Oregon ❙ 1878 ❙ Bannock Indian War

Bannock Indians crossed into Oregon after defeat at Battle Creek (8 June) and joined the Paiute in the Steen Mountains, where they were attacked in camp at Silver Creek, near modern Riley, by Captain Reuben Bernard. Withdrawing to nearby bluffs, the Indians held a strong position until nightfall, but their camp and supplies were destroyed. Reuben soon won again at Birch Creek (23 June 1878).

Simancas, Valladolid ❙ 939 ❙ Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

After leading a successful offensive into central Spain, Emir Abd ar-Rahman of Cordova was challenged by a large army under Ramiro II of Leon and was heavily defeated at Simancas, near Valladolid. Abd-ar-Rahman was beaten again in retreat to the south at Alhandega (modern Fresno Alhandiga), where Muslim commander Najda was killed. The Emir narrowly escaped with his life.

Simancas Barracks, Asturias ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

See Gijon

Simbirsk ❙ 1670 ❙ Cossack Rebellion

Don Cossack leader Stenka Razin led a large-scale peasant uprising on the Volga, where he seized Tsaritsyn and later besieged Simbirsk (modern Ulyanovsk). Tsar Alexis sent an Imperial force under Prince Yuri Baryatinsky and Razin's large but ill-equipped army was routed in a decisive action at Simbirsk. Razin fled to the Don but was soon captured and executed in Moscow (October 1670).

Simbirsk ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Samara

Siming ❙ 1285 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

Despite a check at Champa (1283), Kubilai Khan sent a large army under his son Toghon and General Sodu to secure Annam (in Northern Vietnam). The Mongols achieved initial success before being driven out by a counter-offensive under General Tran Hung Dao. Near the Yunnan border at Siming, Sodu was massively defeated and killed. A renewed invasion in 1288 was destroyed at Bach Dang.

Simmon's Bluff ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

A few days after the costly repulse at Secessionville, guarding Charleston Harbour, South Carolina, a Union raiding party under Lieutenant Alexander C. Rhind landed at Simmon's Bluff, on the east side of Young's Island in Wadmelaw Sound. Confederate forces under Colonel James McCullough were defeated and scattered before the raiders returned to their ships (21 June 1862).

Sindkhed ❙ 1757 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

In renewed war against Hyderabad, Maratha Peshwa Balaji Rao sent his teenage son Viswas Rao and veteran General Dattaji Sindhi to besiege Sindkhed near Jalna, held by the renegade Ramchandra Jadhav. A relief force under Nizam Ali and Ibrahim Gardi Khan reached Sindkhed, where they were routed in a terrible four-day battle. Nizam Ali sued for peace (12–16 December 1757).

Singapore ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Following the disastrous effort to defend the Peninsula of Malaya, British forces under General Arthur Percival withdrew to Singapore. After heavy shelling, General Tomoyuki Yamashita's army stormed the island and Percival was forced to surrender. Britain's worst military defeat saw perhaps 80,000 soldiers captured. More than 12,000 died in captivity (31 January–15 February 1942).

Singara ❙ 348 ❙ Early Byzantine-Persian Wars

Shapur II of Sassanid Persia crossed the Tigris into Mesopotamia and took position near the Roman frontier city of Singara (modern Sinjar, northern Iraq). The Roman army, under personal command of Emperor Constantius, advanced in the heat of the day and drove the Persians back towards their camp. The Persians counter-attacked then withdrew, but Shapur eventually took the city in 360.

Singaraja ❙ 1846 ❙ Dutch Conquest of Bali

Under the pretext of punishing the looting of shipwrecks, 3,000 Dutch colonial troops invaded northern Bali and attacked a claimed 50,000 poorly armed men in Buleleng. A one-sided disaster at Singaraja saw up to 400 Balinese killed and the Royal Palace destroyed. The Raja of Buleleng submitted until fresh resistance was raised two years later at Jagaraga (June 1846).

Singhasari ❙ 1293 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

To avenge the attack on a Mongol envoy, Kubilai Khan sent General Shibi and 20,000 men against King Kertanagara of Singhasari in eastern Java. However, the King was killed by local rebel Jayakatwang of Kediri and the Mongols helped his son-in-law Prince Vijaya defeat and kill the usurper. Vijaya then ambushed and defeated the Mongols, who withdrew with nothing achieved.

Sinhgarh ❙ 1670 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

The great Maratha Shivaji renewed war against the Mughals, attacking the powerful fort of Sinhgarh, guarding the southern approaches to Poona. With the fortress inaccessible to artillery fire, Shivaji sent his champion, Tanaji Malusre, who scaled the walls at night. Terrible fighting saw Tanaji and Mughal commander Uday Bhan Rathor both killed before the fortress was taken (4 February 1670).

Sinigaglia ❙ 551 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

A Goth fleet built by Totila for his invasion of Sicily was supporting a siege of Ancona on Italy's east coast, when it was attacked by Emperor Justinian's ships north of Ancona off Sinigaglia (modern Senigallia). Lacking experience at sea, the Goths were heavily defeated by Byzantine Admiral Artabanes and had to raise the siege, effectively ending their naval operations in the Adriatic.

Sinkat ❙ 1884 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

When an approaching relief force was routed by the Dervish army at El Teb, in eastern Sudan (4 February), the courageous commander of besieged Sinkat, Mohammad Tewfik, refused to surrender but spiked his guns and tried to evacuate his garrison and their families. After less than a mile, they were overwhelmed and massacred. Nearby Tokar surrendered two weeks later (8 February 1884).

Sinnigallia ❙ 551 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Sinigaglia

Sinope ❙ 1853 ❙ Crimean War

Near the start of the war, Russian Admiral Paul Nakhimov attacked Sinope Harbour on the Black Sea, where Osman Pasha commanded nine frigates and three corvettes. With Russia using newly invented naval shells against wooden hulls, the Turkish fleet was utterly destroyed. Over 4,000 died, including Osam fatally wounded. Only one steamer escaped in the smoke (30 November 1853).

Sinpaul ❙ 1575 ❙ Balkan National Wars

When Hungary supported Gaspar Bekes claiming the throne of Transylvania, Prince Stephen Bathory of Transylvania took a substantial force against the Habsburg pretender and, with Turkish aid, defeated him at Sinpaul (Kereloszentpal). Gaspar escaped, though Stephen executed many of his followers. On the strength of his victory, Stephen was elected King of Poland (8 July 1575).

Sinsheim ❙ 1674 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

After the French conquest of Franche-Comte, Louis XIV sent Marshal Henri de Turenne across the Rhine at Philippsburg into Alsace, where he burned much of the Palatinate. Southeast of Heidelberg at Sinsheim, he defeated an Imperial army led by Duke Charles of Lorraine and Count Aeneas Silvia Caprara before advancing along the Rhine to Strasbourg and Enzheim (16 June 1674).

Sinuiju ❙ 1951 ❙ Korean War

One of the largest American air-strikes against a single target saw 48 B-29 bombers with 80 jet escorts attack the Sinuiju Bridge on the Yalu River. In a large-scale response, MiG fighters shot down three bombers, the heaviest American losses to date, and the bridge remained standing. Following the costly raid on Namsi in October, B-29s were withdrawn from daylight operations (12 April 1951).

Sipe-Sipe ❙ 1815 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Argentine General José Rondeau was adancing into Spanish Upper Peru (modern Bolivia), when he was beaten at Venta y Media and a month later suffered decisive defeat at Sipe-Sipe, southwest of Cochabamba. Victory for General Joaquín de la Pezuela consolidated local Spanish rule and he became Viceroy of Peru. Rondeau was replaced by General Manuel Belgrano (26–28 November 1815).

Siping ❙ 1946 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Nationalist advance units driving into Manchuria from Mukden (modern Shenyang) reached the railway city of Siping (Szepingkau), where they were repulsed by well-entrenched Communist forces. Heavily reinforced and equipped with tanks, Nationalist General Sun Liren launched a massive assault and fierce fighting drove the Communists beyond Changchun (17 March & 21 April–19 May 1946).

Siping ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

At the height of the Communist offensive on the Songhua in Manchuria, General Lin Biao seized the strategic railway city of Siping (Szepingkau) and two Nationalist armies were rushed north. Simultaneous attacks from Changchun, Jilin and Mukden (modern Shenyang) under General Chen Mingren forced Lin to abandon Siping, though he soon struck back at Liaoshi (16 June–2 July 1947).

Siping ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Communist General Lin Biao inflicted costly losses in southwest Manchuria in the Liaoshi Corridor, then launched a fresh offensive north of Mukden (modern Shenyang). Heavy fighting saw the Nationalists abandon Jilin (9 March) and Lin captured Siping (Szepingkau) to cut the railway and further isolate Changchun. It fell later in the year in the Liaoshen offensive (February–13 March 1948).

Sirhind ❙ 1555 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Taking advantage of a disputed succession in the Afghan Suri Empire, the former Mughal

Emperor Humayun returned to northern India. At Sirhind in eastern Punjab, his teenage son Akbar and General Bairam Khan crushed the Afghan-Turk force of Sikander Shah. Humayun recaptured Delhi though died soon after, leaving Akbar to secure the empire in late 1556 at Panipat (22 June 1555).

Sirhind ❙ 1710 ❙ Mughal-Sikh Wars

Sikh leader Banda Singh Bahadur's ragged peasant army succeeded in an attack on the Mughal city of Samana, then besieged Sirhind, in the Punjab, defended by a large and well-armed force under the Subedar Wazir Khan. Outside the city at Chhappar Chiri, the Sikhs defeated and killed Wazir Khan and massacred his army. They then stormed and sacked Sirhind (22 May 1710).

Sirhind ❙ 1748 ❙ Indian Campaigns of Ahmad Shah

See Manupur

Siris River ❙ 280 BC ❙ Pyrrhic War

See Heraclea, Lucania

Sirmium ❙ 441 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

During his campaign against the Eastern Roman Empire along the Danube, Attila the Hun captured Margus and Singidunum (Belgrade). Perhaps the worst Roman loss was the attack on the strategic city of Sirmium (modern Sremska Mitrovica) on the Sava. Sirmium was destroyed, with its citizens enslaved. A new invasion two years later took Attila to the walls of Constantinople.

Sirmium ❙ 580–582 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

In a threat to the Byzantine Empire's northern border, Avars under the Khan Baian besieged Sirmium (modern Sremska Mitrovica), then withdrew when Justin II agreed to pay an annual tribute (574). A fresh advance by Baian again besieged the city, which was starved into surrender after two years. The Avars dominated the northern Balkans until Byzantine victory in 601 at Viminacium.

Sironj ❙ 1631 ❙ Mughal-Ahmadnagar Wars

When Mughal commander Khan Jahan Lodi threatened to make an alliance with Nizam Shah II of Ahmadnagar, Emperor Shahjahan declared war. Near Sironj, north of Bhopal, the rebel rearguard was attacked by Bikramajit of Bundelkhand and Khan Jahan's Lieutenant, Darya Khan, was defeated and killed. The rebel commander himself was soon killed near Kalinjar (11 January 1631).

Sirsa ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

Despite a costly debacle at Ruiya (15 April), General Robert Walpole pursued the rebels 40 miles north to Sirsa, on the Ramganga near Aliganj covering Fatehpur. Exercising greater care, Walpole used his artillery better, but delay sending in his cavalry meant heavy fighting before the rebels were driven out with 300 dead. Most escaped before he captured their camp at Aliganj (22 April 1858).

Sirte ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

While escorting an essential fuel-tanker from Alexandria to Malta, British Admiral Philip Vian's cruiser squadron and destroyers met a much larger Italian fleet under Admiral Angelo Iachino, also on escort duty, in the Gulf of Sirte. An indecisive exchange saw the British suffer some damage before the Italians broke off at nightfall. Both sides claimed victory (17 December 1941).

Sirte ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

Determined to prevent desperately needed supplies reaching Malta, Italian Admiral Angelo Iachino with a battleship, three cruisers and destroyers attacked Admiral Philip Vian's cruiser and destroyer escort in the Gulf of Sirte. While the Italians were driven off at the cost of two destroyers to either side, most of the convoy was subsequently lost to German bombers (22 March 1942).

Sis ❙ 1605 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars
See Sufiyan

Sisak ❙ 1593 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars
See Sissek

Siscia ❙ 34 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate
At war with the fierce tribes of the Balkans, Octavian (later Emperor Augustus Caesar) captured the Iapudae capital at Metulum. Later that year he marched east against Siscia (modern Sissek), at the confluence of the Sava and Kupa in modern Croatia. Besieged by land and from the two rivers, Siscia fell after a month and Octavian returned in triumph to Rome.

Siscia ❙ 388 ❙ Later Roman Military Civil Wars
When Magnus Clemens Maximus declared himself Emperor in Britain in 383 and marched into Italy to displace young Valentinian II, Theodosius, Emperor in the East, advanced into the Balkans. He routed the usurper's army under Andragathius on the Sava at Siscia (modern Sissek) near Zagreb, then defeated the usurper's brother at Poetovio and pursued Maximus to Aquileia.

Sishui ❙ 621 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty
See Hulao

Siska ❙ 1593 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars
See Sissek

Sissek ❙ 1593 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars
Hasan Pasha, the Ottoman military Governor of Bosnia, raiding into Croatia found himself facing a large Imperial force led by Michael of Wallachia and Sigismund Bathory of Transylvania outside Sissek, on the Kupa and Save Rivers. Hasan was killed in a terrible defeat. Grand Vizier Sinan Pasha was later sent to avenge the loss and in October he laid siege to Veszprem (20 June 1593).

Sisters Creek ❙ 1844 ❙ Comanche Indian Wars
See Walker's Creek

Sit ❙ 1238 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia
On campaigning in Russia, the Mongols Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) and Subetai invaded the Princedom of Vladimir-Suzdal and destroyed Moscow and Vladimir. They then marched north to the Sit River, where Grand Prince Yuri of Vladimir-Suzdal was defeated and killed by General Burundai. However, spring thaw saved Novgorod and the Mongols marched south towards Kiev (4 March 1238).

Sitibaldi ❙ 1817 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War
Raja Appa Sahib of Nagpur took advantage of renewed war between the British and Peshwa Baji Rao II to attack the local British garrison, who withdrew to the nearby fortress of Sitibaldi. Colonel Hopeton Scott's tiny force withstood the Marathas until they were driven off by Bengal cavalry under Captain Charles Fitzgerald. The Raja was routed a month later at Nagpur (26 November 1817).

Sitka Ghat ❙ 1859 ❙ Indian Mutiny
See Rapti

Sitoli ❙ 1815 ❙ British-Gurkha War
See Almorah

Sittang ❙ 1826 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War
While British General Sir Archibald Campbell advanced up the Irriwaddy from Rangoon, a smaller force moved 50 miles down the Sittang from Shwegyin against the stockade at Sittang, east of Pegu. An initial attack was repulsed, with commander Colonel Edmund Conry killed, before a costly second assault under Colonel Hercules Pepper took the stockade by storm (7 & 11 January 1826).

Sittang ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)
Japanese commander Shojiro Iida crossed the Bilin, then next day sent his key divisions towards the Sittang, where British General John Smyth prematurely destroyed the bridge, leaving 5,000 men and nearly all his heavy equipment on the Japanese side of the river. The survivors then fell back to through Pegu. Smyth's much-debated disaster sealed the fate of Rangoon (22–23 February 1942).

Sivas ❙ 72 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War
See Cabira

Sivas ❙ 1070 ❙ Byzantine-Turkish Wars
See Sebastia

Siwa ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)
Despite the pro-Turkish Senussi Bedouin losing at Agagia (February 1916), rebel Chieftain Sayyid Ahmed attacked towns west of the Suez Canal before withdrawing to the remote Siwa Oasis. In a brilliant expedition south from Salum, General Henry Hodgson led armoured cars across the desert to surprise and beat the Senussi. Sayyid fled to Constantinople on a German submarine (4 February 1917).

Siyanggiayan ❙ 1619 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China
Marching into Manchuria against the rising power of Manchu leader Nurhachi, Ming commander Yang Hao's troops were defeated at Sarhu. The following day, further east at Siyanggiayan, Nurhachi attacked another divided Ming force under General Ma Lin. Once again, the Chinese were routed and fled and the Manchu advanced southeast towards Niumaozhai (15 April 1619).

Skaggerak ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)
See Jutland

Skalice ❙ 1424 ❙ Hussite Wars
Amid an armistice in the brutal doctrinal war among Bohemian Hussites, Jan Zizka led an offensive against Royalist Barons led by Lord John Mestecky of Opocno and Puta of Castolovice. Marching north from Hradec Králové, Zizka inflicted a terrible defeat at Skalice (Skalitz), near Jaromer. He then resumed his factional war with decisive victory in June at Malesov (6 January 1424).

Skalitz ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War
While Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm invaded Austrian Bohemia through Trautenau, he sent General Karl Friedrich von Steinmetz to drive General Wilhelm Ramming out of Nachod. Von Steinmetz attacked Ramming again further west at Skalitz, capturing 4,000 prisoners and heavy guns, then secured a further victory the following day at Schweinschadel (28 June 1866).

Skardu ❙ 1948 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War
Opening the war in northern Kashmir, Pakistani regulars and Pathan tribesmen seized Gilgit and Major Ehsan Khan advanced up the Indus Valley to besiege Skardu, defended by Indian Colonel Sher Jang Thapa. After holding out for six months against overwhelming odds, Thapa was starved into surrender. Further south, the invaders failed to take Leh (12 February–14 August 1948).

Skeleton Cave ❙ 1872 ❙ Apache Indian Wars
On campaign against hostile Apache in the Tonto Basin of central Arizona, General George Crook sent Captains William Brown and James Burns against a hostile band under Chuntz at Skeleton Cave, on the Salt River west of the modern Roosevelt Dam. Of 100 Apache in the cave, 76 were killed, including many women and children, and Chuntz took refuge on Turret Butte (26 December 1872).

Skenesboro ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Fort Anne

Skoriatino ❙ 1436 ❙ Wars of Russian Succession
After being overthrown by his uncle Yuri Dimitrievich (who died soon afterwards), Grand Prince Vasili II of Moscow returned to oust his cousin Vasili Kosoi, who was defeated at the River Kotorosl (1435). In a second, decisive defeat at Skoriatino, near Rostov, Kosoi was captured and later blinded. Vasili ruled again until 1445, when he was defeated and captured by the Mongols at Suzdal.

Skull Cave ❙ 1872 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

See Skeleton Cave

Slaak ❙ 1631 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Frederick Henry of Orange learned that a 35-strong Spanish fleet under Count John of Nassau had set sail from Antwerp and he despatched just 12 ships to intercept the Spaniards. In a remarkable action on the Slaak near Tholen, outnumbered Dutch Admiral Marinus van Valckenisse attacked and took or sank the entire Spanish fleet, capturing a reported 4,000 prisoners (13 September 1631).

Slankamen ❙ 1691 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Despite Turkish defeats at Vienna, Harkany and Belgrade, Grand Vizier Fazil Mustafa Pasha took a major force to reconquer Transylvania, Bulgaria and Serbia and recaptured Belgrade. A new Imperial army under Louis of Baden marched down the Danube and, at Slankamen northwest of Belgrade, defeated and killed Mustafa, securing Transylvania for the Habsburgs (19 August 1691).

Slash Church ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Hanover Court House

Slim Buttes ❙ 1876 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

Pursuing the Sioux after defeat at Little Big Horn (26 June), General George Crook sent Captain Anson Mills against the Teton camp at Slim Buttes, just south of modern Reva in western South Dakota. Chief American Horse was defeated and died of wounds after being captured. The campaign to destroy the Sioux piecemeal continued in November at Crazy Woman Creek (9 September 1876).

Slim River ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

After British losses at Jitra and Kampar in western Malaya, General Sir Lewis Heath tried to hold positions at the Slim River. Attacking with tanks, General Takuro Matsui inflicted a decisive defeat with about 500 killed and 3,200 prisoners. The Japanese also captured Slim River Bridge and huge quantities of supplies. The shattered survivors continued the retreat into Johore (7 January 1942).

Slioch ❙ 1307 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

Robert the Bruce and a force of about 700 men were campaigning in northeast Scotland when they were intercepted at Slioch, just east of Huntly, by the English ally John Comyn Earl of Buchan. With Bruce seriously ill, his brother Edward repulsed two heavy assaults to enable them to reach nearby Strathbogie. Buchan was routed a few months later at Inverurie (25 & 31 December 1307).

Sliven ❙ 1829 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Advancing against the Turks after victory at Varna (October 1828), Russian General Count Hans von Diebitsch led his troops across the Balkan Mountains and defeated a major Turkish force west of Burgas at Sliven. Diebitsch received the honorific Zabalkansky to recognise his remarkable mountain crossing and the victory which opened the way to the capture of Adrianople (12 August 1829).

Slivnitza ❙ 1885 ❙ Serbo-Bulgarian War

King Milan IV of Serbia marched into newly independent Bulgaria in a dispute over eastern Rumelia, capturing many strongpoints and driving the Bulgarians back across the Dragoman Pass. Near Sofia at Slivnitza, Prince Alexander (Battenberg) of Bulgaria and General Stefan Stambolov halted the invaders, then drove them back into Serbia to defeat at Pirot (17–19 November 1885).

Slobodyszcze ❙ 1660 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

In a planned co-ordinated attack on Lvov, Russian commander Vasili P. Sheremetev was defeated at Liubar, while his Cossack ally Yuri Chmielnicki delayed. Chmielnicki was then attacked and defeated to the southeast at Slobodyszcze by Polish General Jerzy Lubomirski. The Cossack commander made a separate peace with the Poles, who then advanced on Sheremetev at Chudnov.

Slobodzeya ❙ 1811 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars
See Ruschuk

Slonihodrek ❙ 1655 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars
See Lvov

Sluys ❙ 1340 ❙ Hundred Years War

At the start of the Hundred Years War, Edward III of England took a large fleet, commanded by Robert de Morley, to attack Philip VI's ships near Sluys on the River Zwin. Trapped in confined waters, the French ships, reinforced by Genoese galleys, were destroyed with terrible slaughter. The dead included French Admiral Hugh Quieret, reputedly killed while trying to surrender (24 June 1340).

Sluys ❙ 1587 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

A few weeks after the great English raid on Cadiz, Alessandro Farnese Duke of Parma laid siege to the English and Dutch garrison in the port of Sluys. Robert Dudley Earl of Leicester failed in repeated attempts to relieve the port and was recalled after Sluys capitulated. Only Leicester's influence with Elizabeth I saved him from charges of incompetence (29 May–30 July 1587).

Sluys ❙ 1603 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

During the Dutch blockade of Sluys, Spanish galleys under Admiral Frederigo Spinola made a foray from the port and were attacked by Dutch ships under Vice-Admiral Joost de Moor. In calm conditions, the oared Spanish vessels caused heavy damage, though Spinola was killed by a cannonball. Threatened by Dutch reinforcements from Flushing, his ships withdrew to Sluys (26 May 1603).

Sluys ❙ 1604 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Prince Maurice of Orange was attempting to relieve the long Spanish siege of Ostend, when he took an army into Flanders against Sluys (modern Sluis). After driving off Don Louis de Velasco (May 1604), he besieged the garrison under Aurelio Spinola, nephew of the Spanish Netherlands commander. Sluys was finally starved into surrender, though too late to save Ostend (19 May–19 August 1604).

Smala ❙ 1843 ❙ French Conquest of Algeria

Campaigning to complete the conquest of western Algeria, France forced Arab warrior Abd-el-Kader into the mountains following defeat at Mascara (1835). New commander Marshal Thomas Bugeaud gradually drove the Arabs into the desert. At Smala, a column under Henri d'Aumale Duke of Orleans dispersed Kader's forces. He withdrew into Morocco and later fought at Isly (10 May 1843).

Smara ❙ 1976 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

When Morocco and Mauritania partitioned Western Sahara, Moroccan forces seized the northern city of Smara, east of El Ayoun, where they soon came under assault by Polisario guerrillas. Heavy fighting saw high yet hotly disputed losses on both sides, including Moroccan commander Colonel Driss Harti killed. Hundreds of Saharawis were able to flee to Algeria (6 October 1976).

Smederevo ❙ 1439 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars
See Semendria

Smerwick Massacre ❙ 1580 ❙ Geraldine Rebellion
See Fort del Or

Smithfield ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Union General Philip Sheridan again advanced into the Shenandoah Valley towards Winchester, part of his force under General

Wesley Merritt was attacked to the northeast at Smithfield, West Virginia. An inconclusive action cost Confederate General Jubal A. Early greater losses before Merritt fell back east towards Charlestown. Early also retired (29 August 1864).

Smolensk ❙ 1502 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War

A new attempt to seize Smolensk after failure to exploit victory at Mstislavl (November 1501) saw Duke Ivan III of Moscow send a large force under his son Dimitri. Failed assaults and the bloody action at Lake Smolino forced Dimitri to lift his siege, though Alexander of Poland soon sued for peace. While Alexander retained Smolensk, Ivan secured most of eastern Lithuania (August–October 1502).

Smolensk ❙ 1512–1514 ❙ 2nd Muscovite-Lithuanian War

After Russian failure at Smolensk in 1502, Basil III of Moscow renewed war in Lithuania, where his advance on Smolensk was repulsed by Polish-Lithuanian commander Konstantine Ostrozhsky (December 1512). Duke Basil was driven off again in September 1513 after a six-week siege of the city, but on a third attempt, the Muscovites seized Smolensk and held it, despite defeat at Orsha (June 1514).

Smolensk ❙ 1609–1611 ❙ Russian Time of Troubles

King Sigismund III of Poland invaded Russia to claim the throne and besieged the powerful city of Smolensk, defended by Mikhail Shein. A Russian-Swedish relief army was defeated at Klushino (4 July 1610) and Sigismund advanced to capture Moscow. However, the siege of Smolensk continued and the city was largely in ruins when it fell after almost two years (26 September 1609–13 June 1611).

Smolensk ❙ 1632–1634 ❙ Russo-Polish "War of Smolensk"

Determined to regain Smolensk, Tsar Michael sent General Mikhail Shein, who had defended the city 20 years earlier. After 11 months of siege, Shein was defeated by a relief force under Ladislav IV of Poland (September 1633). The Russians were surrounded and finally had to surrrender. Peace was restored and Shein was executed for failure (September 1632–25 February 1634).

Smolensk ❙ 1654 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

Tsar Alexius opened a new war against Poland, leading a huge force into Lithuania, supported by General Yakov K. Cherkassy and 20,000 Cossacks under Ivan Zolotarenko. He besieged Smolensk and after disaster at Szepiele (24 August) the Polish-Lithuanian garrison surrendered. A Polish counter-offensive in the south in January was checked at Okhmatov (2 July–23 September 1654).

Smolensk ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

As he advanced into Russia, Napoleon Bonaparte marched east from Vitebsk to meet Russians Prince Pyotr Bagration and General Mikhail Barclay de Tolly moving forward to defend Smolensk. A hard-fought battle outside the city saw the Russian army eventually repulsed. By the time Smolensk was taken after a costly assault, Barclay had fired the city and escaped (17 August 1812).

Smolensk ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Days after destroying the Russian pockets at Bialystok and Minsk, Marshal Fedor von Bock raced east to encircle Marshal Symeon Timoshenko at Smolensk. Over 300,000 men, 3,200 tanks and 3,100 guns were captured, though many Soviet divisions escaped. The over-stretched Germans halted, turning south towards Kiev, which fatally delayed their advance on Moscow (10 July–5 August 1941).

Smolensk ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

At the northern end of the Soviet offensive on the Dnieper, over a million Russians under Generals Andrei Yeremenko and Vasili Sokolovsky advanced along a 250-mile front towards Smolensk, held by Army Group Centre under Marshal Gunther von Kluge. Three German armies were destroyed and Smolensk fell before the line stabilised west of the city (7 August–25 September 1943).

Smoliantsy ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

French forces under Marshal Claude Victor on the retreat from Moscow were attacked west of Smolensk by Russian Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein near Smoliantsy (modern Smolyany). Victor managed to withdraw north after a sharp action, but he was defeated again a week later as he attempted to fall back on the Dvina at Vitebsk (1 November 1812).

Smyrna ❙ 1344 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

In response to raids on shipping by the Emir Omar of Aydin, a fleet involving Venice, Cyprus, the Papacy and the Knights Hospitallier of Rhodes attacked Smyrna (modern Izmir, Turkey). Omar was defeated at sea off his port and Smyrna was captured and held by the Knights of St John for 60 years until they were driven out by Tamerlane's Tatar conquest of Anatolia (October 1344).

Smyrna ❙ 1402 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol Tamerlane destroyed the Ottoman army at Angora and marched against the Christian stronghold of Smyrna (modern Izmir, Turkey), where the Knights of St John had resisted repeated Ottoman attack. The port city fell by storm after a two-week siege and the nearby Genoese Islands of Chios and Lesbos quickly submitted to the conqueror, who then returned to Samarkand.

Smyrna ❙ 1922 ❙ 2nd Greco-Turkish War

In the days after victory at Afyon, Turkish commander Mustafa Kemal pursued the Greeks to Smyrna (modern Izmir), where they had landed in May 1919 as agents for the World War I allies. Smyrna fell by assault, with Greece driven out of Turkey amid terrible massacres and destruction. Kemal became President of the new Turkish Republic, taking the name Ataturk (9–11 September 1922).

Snicker's Ferry ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate General Jubal A. Early was repulsed outside Washington, D.C. at Fort Stevens (12 July) and withdrew to the Shenandoah Valley, pursued by General Horatio G. Wright. At Snicker's Ferry near Berryville, Virginia, Confederate General Robert E. Rodes routed the Union vanguard of Colonel Joseph Thoburn. Early's force soon lost again further west at Stephenson's Depot (17–18 July 1864).

Snipe ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Kidney Ridge

Snowshoes ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

On a long-range winter patrol west of Lake George, New York, Major Robert Rogers ambushed a small Indian force led by Oliver Morel de la Durantaye, west of Bald Mountain. He was then surprised by French marines and Canadian militia under Jean-Baptiste de de Langy. In battle on snowshoes, "Rogers Rangers" were routed with 125 killed and fled to Fort Edwards (13 March 1758).

Snyder's Bluff ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As a diversion from the Union offensive south of Vicksburg, Mississippi, at Port Gibson, General William T. Sherman sent Captain K. Randolph Breese and General Francis P. Blair against Confederate batteries at Snyder's Bluff to the north, defended by General Louis Hébert. They withdrew after an effective demonstration and Vicksburg was soon besieged (29 April–1 May 1863).

Sobota ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

Charles X of Sweden and General Arvid Wittenberg advanced into Poland through Ujscie to meet the Polish Royal army at Sobota. A two-day running battle saw King John II Casimir driven off and three days later Charles X marched east to capture Warsaw. He then turned southwest again to join Wittenberg for a decisive action against the Poles two weeks later at Opoczno (23–24 August 1655).

Sobraon ❙ 1846 ❙ 1st British-Sikh War

With the Sikh invasion of British East Punjab repulsed at Mudki and Ferozeshah, the Sikhs were thrown back to decisive defeat on the Sutlej River at Aliwal. Two weeks later they were attacked by General Sir Hugh Gough in a strong position at Sobraon. Fighting with their backs to the river, Ranjur Singh's army was heavily defeated, bringing the war to an end (10 February 1846).

Socabaya ❙ 1836 ❙ Bolivian-Peruvian War

After invading Peru to win at Yanacocha (August 1835), President Andrés Santa Cruz of Bolivia advanced north towards Lima, where General Felipe Santiago Salaverry marched out to meet him at Socabaya, near Arequipa. Salaverry was routed and then executed and Santa Cruz forced a confederation with Peru, which was eventually overthrown in 1839 at Yungay (7 February 1836).

Soconusco ❙ 1498–1500 ❙ Aztec Wars of Conquest

At the greatest extent of Aztec conquest, Ahuitzotl personally led a force 800 miles southeast to Soconusco (near the modern Mexico-Guatemala border), where a bold series of actions secured the main towns of the region. When Ahuitzotl died a few years later, his nephew Motecuhzoma II faced rebellion in distant Soconusco (Xoconochco) before he was overwhelmed by the Spanish Conquest.

Soczawa ❙ 1676 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

At war with Turk and Tatar invaders of the Polish Ukraine, John III Sobieski was rejoined by the Lithuanians, who deserted him at Zloczow (August 1675). North of the Dniester at Soczawa (modern Sokhachevka, near Vinnitsa), he again routed Ibrahim Shetan. The Turks fell back on Kamieniec, their last fortress in Poland, before their final repulse later that year at Zurawno (May 1676).

Sofia ❙ 981 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Tsar Samuel

See Mount Haemus

Sogdiana ❙ 36 BC ❙ Wars of the Former Han

See Kangju

Sogdian Rock ❙ 327 BC ❙ Conquests of Alexander the Great

Alexander the Great beat the Scythians at the Jaxartes (329 BC), then advanced into Sogdiana (modern Uzbekistan), where he attacked the stronghold at Sogdian Rock in the Hissar Range, held by Ariamazes. When a small unit scaled the precipitous fortress, the garrison surrendered. Alexander married Roxane, daughter of Oxyartes of Sogdia, and soon advanced into India after taking Aornos.

Sohanpur ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

On a campaign north of the Gaghara, a mixed force under British Colonel Francis Rowcroft was reinforced by a second Gurkha regiment before meeting a much larger rebel army at Sohanpur, at the mouth of the Little Gandak. The rebels were very heavily defeated, effectively securing the Sarun District, and they withdrew northwest through further defeat at Gorakhpur (26 December 1857).

Sohr ❙ 1745 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

See Soor

So-i Ford ❙ 1852 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Suo'yi Ford

Soissons ❙ 486 ❙ Fall of the Western Roman Empire

At the head of his first major campaign, Clovis, King of the Franks, marched south to Soissons on the Aisne River and routed Syagrius, last Roman commander in Gaul. The decisive battle extended Frankish territory to the Loire and helped establish the Merovingian Dynasty. Syagrius fled to the Visigoths, who subsequently handed him over to Clovis for execution.

Soissons ❙ 719 ❙ Rise of Charles Martel

Charles Martel of Austrasia beat his rival Neustrians at Ambleve (716) and Vincy (717), but was not able to fully consolidate Frankish expansion until two years later when he defeated Raginfrid, Neustrian Mayor of the Palace, at Soissons. Following this victory, Charles assumed the title of Mayor under King Childeric II. Charles was King in all but name of the revitalized Frankish Empire.

Soissons ❙ 923 ❙ Franco-Norman Wars

Rivalry for the throne of France saw Robert (formerly Rollo) Marquess of Neustria (brother of the late King Odo) oppose the German-sponsored Charles III "the Simple," the illegitimate son of Louis II. Charles was routed in battle at Soissons, near the Aisne, though Robert I was killed in the fighting and his Norman son-in-law, Rudolf Duke of Burgundy, was crowned King (15 June 923).

Soissons ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

While Prussian General Gebhard von Blucher was held up northeast of Paris at the Ourcq, further north on the Aisne, Soissons was besieged by 45,000 men under General Friedrich von Bulow and Baron Ferdinand von Winzingerode. The French-Polish garrison of General Baron Jean Moreau was persuaded to surrender prematurely and Blucher crossed the Aisne (3 March 1814).

Soissons ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Grand Duke Friedrich Franz II of Mecklenburg marched south from Sedan to capture Toul (23 September), then took his Prussian army and siege train northwest against Soissons. The city had to surrender following three weeks of investment and a four-day bombardment. The Germans then moved their strategic railway terminus forward from Chateau Thierry (28 September–16 October 1870).

Sokoto ❙ 1903 ❙ British Conquest of Northern Nigeria

When British forces seized the great north Nigerian city of Kano (3 February), General George Kemball took command of the Royal West African Frontier Force and marched northwest, via Rawiya, on Sokoto. Confronted by a powerful Fulani army, his machine-guns and artillery inflicted terrible casualties. Sultan Attahiru had to abandon his capital and flee north towards Burmi (15 March 1903).

Solachon ❙ 586 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

After years of indecisive warfare, Byzantine Emperor Maurice sent his brother-in-law Philippicus into Mesopotamia against Persian commander Kardarigan and his colleague Mebodes. At Solachon, near Dara, the Persians were defeated and Rome campaigned east of the Tigris. The Roman recovery faltered when the eastern army mutinied in 588, but the Romans still won later that year at Martyropolis.

Soldier Spring ❙ 1868 ❙ Canadian River Expedition

A month after the massacre at the Washita, another army column under Major Andrew Evans attacked a Comanche-Kiowa camp about 30 miles further south at Soldier Spring, near the Wichita Mountains in the west of modern Oklahoma. The camp was destroyed and shortly afterwards a Comanche-Kiowa reservation was established in Indian Territory near Fort Sills (25 December 1868).

Sole Bay ❙ 1672 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Dutch Admiral Mihiel du Ruyter opened the war by attacking an Anglo-French fleet off Southwold in Suffolk. With French Admiral Jean d'Estrées forced out of the battle, de Ruyter concentrated on the English under James Duke of York. De Ruyter finally had to retreat, though only after heavy Allied losses, including Edward Montagu Earl of Sandwich drowned (7 June 1672).

Soledad ❙ 1839 ❙ Central American National Wars

Salvadoran General José Trinidad Cabañas invaded Honduras and seized Tegucicalpa (6 September), then faced newly appointed President José Francisco Zelaya and General Nicolas Espinoza just outside the capital at nearby Soledad. Zelaya's troops were heavily defeated and he sought aid from Nicaragua to help him overcome Cabañas in January 1840 at El Potrero (13 November 1839).

Solferino ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Castiglione

Solferino ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Following Austria's defeat at Magenta (4 June), Emperor Franz Josef took personal command against Victor Emmanuel II of Piedmont and his ally Napoleon III. In a bloody battle at Solferino, near Castiglione, Napoleon and Marshal Marie MacMahon routed General Franz von Schlick (who was saved only by General Ludwig von Benedek's rearguard). Austria then ceded Lombardy (24 June 1859).

Solicinium ❙ 368 ❙ Alemannic Invasion of Roman Gaul

Two years after his army inflicted a costly defeat on the rebellious Alemanni at Chalons, Emperor Valentinian personally led a renewed offensive across the Rhine. He won an even greater victory over the Alemanni at Solicinium, an uncertain site identified as possibly either Sulz am Neckar or Schwetzingen in Baden-Württemberg.

Sollum-Halfaya ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Under political pressure to relieve besieged Tobruk, British commander Sir Archibald Wavell sent General Sir Henry Beresford-Pierse on a counter-offensive between Sollum and Halfaya. A major armoured action saw the British heavily repulsed with the loss of 100 out of 180 tanks. Wavell was replaced and a new attempt succeeded six months later at Sidi Rezegh (15–17 June 1941).

Solomon Forks ❙ 1857 ❙ Cheyenne Indian War

In response to raids along the Smoky Hill Trail in central Kansas, Colonel Edwin Sumner and 300 cavalry met 300 Cheyenne in battle array on the Solomon Forks of the Kansas River. The Indians were dispersed by the reputed only sabre charge of the Indian Wars, though casualties were light on both sides. Next day Sumner destroyed the nearby Cheyenne village of 171 lodges (29 July 1857).

Solomon Islands ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Seven naval actions in the Solomons around embattled Guadalcanal are claimed to have turned the tide in the Pacific War. After American losses at Savo Island, Eastern Solomons and Cape Esperance, new Admiral William Halsey took the initiative at Santa Cruz, then won twice at Guadalcanal and at Tassafaronga to secure command of the sea (9 August–30 November 1942).

Solomon Islands ❙ 1943–1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Five months after bloody victory at Guadalcanal, Allied forces advanced west to secure the central Solomons, with the key fighting to secure New Georgia, Vella Lavella, the Treasury Islands and Bougainville. Action on land was supported at sea at Kula Gulf, Kolombangara, Vella Gulf, Vella Lavella, Empress Augusta Bay and Cape St George (July 1943–March 1944).

Solonitsa ❙ 1596 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

See Lubny

Solothurn ❙ 1318 ❙ Habsburg Wars of Succession

Despite his terrible defeat at Morgarten in 1315, Duke Leopold of Austria (brother of Emperor Frederick) returned to attack Swiss Burgundian towns, which united against the Habsburgs. Leopold and a large army besieged Solothurn, south of Basel on the Aare, but when severe flooding destroyed his camp and siege works, the Duke withdrew after ten weeks to avoid further loss.

Soltsy ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

While Marshal Wilhelm von Leeb advanced towards Leningrad, Panzer General Erich von Manstein's mobile units approaching Shirmsk on Lake Ilmen were surprised by General Vasilii Morozov around Soltsy. The Panzer Corps was driven back about 25 miles by the reputed first Soviet counter-attack, claimed to have created time to improve defences at Leningrad (14–17 July 1941).

Solway Moss ❙ 1542 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Royal Wars

James V of Scotland was encouraged by victory at Hadden Rig in August and sent 10,000 men under Oliver Sinclair of Pitcairns to invade Northumberland, where they were blocked near the Esk at Solway Moss by the smaller force of Sir Thomas Wharton. While casualties were light, many Scots were captured, including Sinclair. A few weeks later, James was dead of despair (25 November 1542).

Solygeia ❙ 425 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Weeks after victory at Pylos-Sphacteria in southwest Greece, Athenian commander Nicias attempted a similar landing in Corinth at Solygeia, at the head of the Saronic Gulf, where he was attacked by a Corinthian force before he could establish a strong position. Stubborn fighting won the Athenians a hollow victory, before Nicias withdrew northeast to Crommyon (September 425 BC).

Sombrero, Mexico ❙ 1817 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Spanish adventurer Francisco Javier Mina landed in Mexico, where he failed in an advance on Leon and his forces were besieged at Sombrero, north of Leon, by Royalist Marshal Pascual Liñan. After heavy bombardment, American Colonel Bradburn led an evacuation at night and Liñan murdered the wounded left behind. Mina was soon captured at Venadito and executed (30 July–19 August 1817).

Sombrero, Venezuela ❙ 1818 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Having eluded the Revolutionary army of Simón Bolívar following defeat at Calabozo, on the Guárico in central Venezuela, Spanish commander Pablo Morillo withdrew upstream and days later took a defensive position to the northeast at El Sombrero. Bolívar's pursuing force was driven off in a sharp action with 100 men lost and Morillo turned northwest towards Valencia (17 February 1818).

Somerset Court House ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When British General Charles Earl Cornwallis sent a large foraging party to capture flour from a store on the Millstone River, New Jersey, they were met at nearby Somerset Court House by 400 recruits under Colonel Philemon Dickinson. The untrained Americans fought unexpectedly well to drive off the British, capturing 40 wagons and 100 draft horses (20 January 1777).

Somerton ❙ 733 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

As he fought to expand the power of Mercia, King Aethelbald marched into Wessex and defeated King Aethelheard to secure Somerton, near the River Parrett in Somerset. The victory effectively ended the war with Wessex and made Aethelbald ruler of the kingdom beyond Selwood until his defeat by the West Saxons 20 years later at Burford.

Somme ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

The main Allied offensive in 1916 was the bloody campaign along the Somme, which cost about 420,000 British, 200,000 French and perhaps 500,000 German casualties before winter closed in. Principal actions were at Albert, Bazentin, Delville Wood, Pozières, Guillemont, Flers-Courcelette, Morval, Thiepval, Transloy and Ancre (1 July–18 November 1916).

Somme ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

When German commander Erich von Ludendorff launched a massive offensive on the Somme, General Julian Byng fell back, then held Arras against General Oscar von Below. Further south, Generals Georg von der Marwitz and Oscar von Hutier advanced 40 miles against General Hubert Gough before the offensive ended and was switched north to the Lys (21 March–5 April 1918).

Somnath ❙ 1026 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

On campaign from Afghanistan, the Muslim Mahmud of Ghazni secured most of the Punjab after successive victories near Peshawar (1001, 1006 and 1008) and later marched to the Gujarat coast against the Hindu Holy city of Somnath (modern Dwarka). The defence was smashed—with a reported 50,000 Indians killed—and Mahmud sacked and looted the city's famous temple (January 1026).

Somorrostro (1st) ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

Republican commander Marshal Francisco Serrano was determined to raise the siege of Bilbao by the Pretender Don Carlos VII and sent General Domingo Moriones with a reported 20,000 men. At nearby Somorrostro, despite a courageous assault by General Fernando Primo de Rivera, Moriones was driven back by General Nicolás Ollo and lost 1,200 men (24–25 February 1874).

Somorrostro (2nd) ❙ 1874 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

In a renewed attempt to raise the siege of Bilbao by Don Carlos VII, Republican commander Marshal Francisco Serrano himself arrived with 27,000 men and 70 cannon. However, the Carlist General Joaquín Elío, with just 17,000 men, once again drove off the attack at nearby Somorrostro. It was another six weeks before Serrano managed to relieve Bilbao (25 March 1874).

Somosierra ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Advancing south through the eastern Guadarrama Mountains towards Madrid, Napoleon Bonaparte was blocked by mixed Spanish units under General José San Juan in defensive positions at the Somosierra Pass. After repulsing a suicidal charge by Polish cavalry, the Spaniards fired just a few volleys then fled, leaving Bonaparte to enter Madrid without further fighting (30 November 1808).

Somosierra ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

Nationalist General Emilio Mola was determined to hold the Guadarrama Mountains north of Madrid and sent Colonel José Gistau (later Colonel García Escámez) to secure the key eastern pass of Somosierra. Near-suicidal attacks drove the Republicans out and the rebels held Somosierra—and also the western pass at Alto de Leon—until the end of the war (20–25 July 1936).

Soncino ❙ 1431 ❙ Venetian-Milanese Wars

Despite signing a treaty in 1428 to end the war with Florence and Venice, Milan soon resumed military raids, provoking an invasion by a Venetian-Florentine army under Francesco Bussone Count Carmagnola. Near the Po at Soncino, Carmagnola was disastrously defeated by Sforza of Milan. He lost again a few days later in a great naval battle on the Po near Cremona (6 June 1431).

Songhua ❙ 1114 ❙ Jurchen Invasion of Northern China

When Wanyan Aguda united the Jurchen against the Liao Dynasty in Manchuria, Emperor Tianzuo sent a large force under Xiao Si Xian, who was surprised and routed at the Songhua (Sungari) River. Aguda declared himself Emperor of a new Jin (Chin) Dynasty and finally seized Beijing. Tianzuo was eventually captured and in 1127 Aguda's son defeated the Northern Song at Kaifeng.

Songhua (1st) ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Communist General Lin Biao took the initiative in Manchuria, launching three offensives south across the Songhua (Sungari). All three advances secured initial success and threatened Changchun and Jilin, before eventually being driven back by Nationalist General Pan Yugun. The actions cost Lin very heavy losses, though he was soon reinforced and struck again (6 January–10 March 1947).

Songhua (2nd) ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Despite previous failure, Communist General Lin Biao in Manchuria was reinforced by General Lu Zhengcao and once again attacked across the Songhua (Sungari) with over 250,000 men. He isolated Changchun, Jilin and Siping (Szepingkau) and inflicted massive losses before new Nationalist commander General Sun Liren was reinforced and stabilised the front (4 May–10 July 1947).

Songhwan ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

With a puppet government installed in Seoul, Japanese General Yoshimasa Oshima marched north against Chinese commander Yeh-chi-chao at Asan, who took a defensive position northeast at Songhwan. Encouraged by naval success at Phung-tao, Oshima stormed Songhwan and captured Asan in Japan's first foreign battle for 300 years. Yeh fled north to Pyongyang (29 July 1894).

Songjiang ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

As Taiping commander Li Xiucheng marched east towards Shanghai, his General Lu Shunde captured Songjiang (Sungkiang) to the southwest (1 July), where he was attacked by foreign troops under American Colonel Frederick T. Ward. After an initial repulse, Ward captured Songjiang, supported by Imperial General Li Hengsong, then marched north against Qingpu (16 July 1860).

Song Ngan ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

When North Vietnamese General Nguyen Vang led 10,000 men across the DMZ into Quang Tri, Americans and South Vietnamese under General Lowell English launched a massive attack (Operation Hastings) around the Song Ngan Valley, northwest of Dong Ha. The Allies suffered costly initial losses before the invaders were dispersed with more than 800 killed (15 July–3 August 1966).

Songpan ❙ 641 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars

See Sungqu

Songshan ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

Chinese General Zhong Bin crossed the Salween in Yunnan and besieged the mountain fortress at Songshan, northeast of Longling. Major Keijiro Kanemitsu's 1,200-strong garrison resisted fiercely, despite the explosion of two massive mines. Only 20 Japanese survived when the "Gibraltar of the Burma Road" eventually fell at the cost of 7,600 Chinese lives (15 June–September 1944).

Son Tay ❙ 1883 ❙ Sino-French War

Following French defeat at Hanoi, General Alexandre Bouet campaigned west towards Son Tay and was repulsed by Chinese Black Flag leader Liu Yongfu (15 August & 1 September). Admiral Amédée Courbet then took command in Tonkin and a bloody action saw 400 French casualties and over 1,000 Chinese killed before Son Tay was finally taken by storm (14–16 December 1883).

Son Tay ❙ 1970 ❙ Vietnam War

A dramatic attempt to rescue American POWs saw US Rangers led by Colonel Arthur Simons fly by helicopter from Thailand to Son Tay prison, 25 miles north of Hanoi, under cover of diversionary air-raids. While they killed guards at the camp and troops at a military school where they landed accidentally, the prisoners had been moved and the Americans left empty-handed (21 November 1970).

Sontius ❙ 489 ❙ Goth Invasion of Italy

Theodoric the Ostrogoth was encouraged by the Eastern Roman Emperor Zeno to march across the Alps into Italy, where he attacked the German ruler Odoacer in a powerful position on the Sontius (modern Izonzo) River, near the ruins of the city of Aquileia. Odoacer suffered a sharp defeat and fell back through Verona to Ravenna (28 August 489).

Soochow ❙ 475–473 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

See Suzhou

Soochow ❙ 1366–1367 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

See Suzhou

Soochow ❙ 1863 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Suzhou

Soor ❙ 1745 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Despite defeat at Hohenfriedberg (4 June), Prince Charles of Lorraine pursued Frederick II of Prussia into Silesia and faced an unexpected Prussian attack at Soor, near Prausnitz, north of Breslau. A tactically brilliant action enabled Frederick to overwhelm the Austrians, inflicting over 8,000 casualties. Austria recovered for an advance on Berlin, halted in November at Hennersdorf (30 September 1745).

Soor ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

When Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm and General Adolf von Bonin invaded Austrian Bohemia, Baron Ludwig von Gablenz fell back from Trautenau and set a strong artillery line near Soor, west of Burkersdorf. While Prussian advance units under General Konstantin von Alvensleben suffered heavy losses, Gablenz had to withdraw. Königinhof fell next day (28 June 1866).

Sooty ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

See Gheria, Bengal

Sorauren ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," Allied forces attempting to prevent French Marshal Nicolas Soult relieving the siege of Pamplona fell back from Roncesvalles and days later took up position at Sorauren. In two separate engagements, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington destroyed Soult's offensive and drove his defeated army back to France (28 & 30 July 1813).

Sorpresa ❙ 1927 ❙ Chaco War

As Bolivia advanced fortified positions into the disputed Chaco Boreal towards Paraguay, a Paraguayan patrol was attacked near the small Bolivian fortress of Sorpresa, close to the Rio Pilcomayo, where Paraguayan Lieutenant Adolfo Rojas Silva was killed. Argentina then intervened to secure a temporary truce, broken in December 1928 by an incident at Vanguardia (26 February 1927).

Soto La Marina ❙ 1817 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

After landing on the east coast of Mexico (15 April), Spanish adventurer Francisco Javier Mina took Soto La Marina, in Tamaulipas, then marched inland to raise a peasant revolt, leaving Major José Sardá in command. Bombarded by a Royalist force under General Joaquin Aredondo, the small rebel garrison at Soto La Marina was forced to surrender. Many later died in captivity (11–15 June 1817).

Souchez ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Artois (1st)

Souk-Ahras ❙ 1958 ❙ Algerian War

As part of the Battle of the Frontier, along the sealed border between Tunisia and Algeria, the largest action of the war developed around Souk-Ahras when up to 900 ALN insurgents tried to breach the Morice Line. After six days of fierce fighting, the survivors retreated into Tunisia, leaving over 500 dead and 100 captured. France lost 38 killed and 35 wounded (28 April–3 May 1958).

Sound ❙ 1658 ❙ 1st Northern War

Dutch Admiral Jacob Opdam van Wassaener, intervening to aid Denmark against Charles X of Sweden, tried to prevent Sweden closing the waterway between the Kattegat and Baltic. The bloody Battle of The Sound saw Admiral Cornelius Witte de With killed and his ship sunk. However, Count Karl Gustav Wrangel was beaten, with five ships lost, and Copenhagen was relieved (29 October 1658).

Sourton Down ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

As Parliamentary forces resumed the offensive in the west after defeat in January at Braddock Down, James Chudleigh's Puritans lost to Sir Ralph Hopton at Launceston, but ambushed the Royalists crossing Sourton Down, near Okehampton, Devon. Chudleigh seized over 1,000 muskets and also captured Hopton's orders to advance into Somerset. This led to battle at Stratton (25 April 1643).

South Beveland ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Scheldt Estuary

South Foreland ❙ 1217 ❙ 1st English Barons' War

Supported by English Barons against King John, Crown Prince Louis of France landed in England and besieged Dover Castle, held by Hubert de Burgh. After forcing Louis into a costly blockade, de Burgh defeated a large French supply fleet under Eustace the Monk, off South Foreland near Sandwich. The Prince (later Louis VIII) abandoned the siege and the rebellion waned (24 August 1217).

South Georgia ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

A British carrier task force under Admiral John "Sandy" Woodward opened the campaign by attacking South Georgia, where an Argentine landing party had earlier precipitated the war. Advancing through heavy seas from Ascension, the British badly damaged an Argentine submarine and seized the island without loss. It was a minor military gain yet a significant political victory (24–25 April 1982).

South Mills ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Ambrose E. Burnside campaigned against the North Carolina coast, where he captured New Bern, then sent General Jesse L. Reno north to destroy the Dismal Swamp Canal and cut Confederate access to Albermarle Sound. Intercepted by Colonel Ambrose R. Wright, northwest of Camden near South Mills, Reno had to withdraw and abandoned his objective (19 April 1862).

South Mountain ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Crossing the Potomac into Maryland after victory at Bull Run, Confederate commander Robert E. Lee soon came under attack at South Mountain by General George B. McClellan's Union army advancing from the east. After beating the Confederates at key passes, including Crampton's Gap, McClellan hesitated, allowing Lee to concentrate further west at Antietam (14 September 1862).

Southwark ❙ 1450 ❙ Cade's Rebellion

See London Bridge

Southwold Bay ❙ 1672 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Sole Bay

Souville ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Despite failure northeast of Verdun at Fleury (1 July), General Konstantin Schmidt von Knobelsdorf attacked again from Vaux towards Souville. German troops managed to secure some outer fortifications before they were eventually driven off by stubborn French defence under General Charles Mangin. A third attack was launched days later further north through Fleury (11–15 July 1916).

Soyang ❙ 1951 ❙ Korean War

See No Name Line

Spalmadori ❙ 1695 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

When Venetian Captain-General Antonio Zeno captured Chios from the Turks in September 1694, Grand Admiral Amjazadé Hussein Pasha was sent to recover the island, off western Turkey. Two naval battles off the nearby Spalmadori Islands saw both sides suffer heavy losses, but Zeno was badly defeated and abandoned Chios. He was arrested for failure and died in prison (9 & 19 February 1695).

Spanish Armada ❙ 1588 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

In one of Europe's most decisive naval actions, the 124-ship Spanish Armada commanded by Admiral Alonso Perez Duke of Medina Sidonia was defeated in the English Channel by Thomas Lord Howard and Sir Francis Drake, with no English ships lost. Storms then completed the destruction of Spain's fleet and King Philip II's planned invasion of England was abandoned (21–30 July 1588).

Spanish Fork Canyon ❙ 1863 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

Determined to protect settlers and the overland mail, about 200 California cavalry under Colonel George S. Evans attacked the Ute at Spanish Fork Canyon, south of Provo in central Utah. Coming just months after the Shoshone were routed at Bear River, the Ute were defeated. Their Chiefs soon signed a treaty with Colonel Patrick Connor and Governor James Doty (15 April 1863).

Spanish Fort ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

On expedition east from New Orleans, Union General Edward R. S. Canby led an assault on Mobile Bay where, aided by General Frederick Steele, he besieged strategic Spanish Fort, Alabama, opposite Mobile. Defeated and cut off, garrison commander General Randall L. Gibson and most of his force escaped. Canby then marched north to complete the siege of Blakely (27 March–8 April 1865).

Spartolus ❙ 429 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Soon after taking Potidaea, Athens tried to extend control further north in Chalcidice and sent 2,000 hoplites and 200 cavalry under Xenophon, Hestiodorus and Phanomachus, to take over the city of Spartolus. However, when nearby Olynthus sent reinforcements, the Athenians were routed outside Spartolus, with their Generals and 430 men killed. The survivors withdrew to Potidaea (May 429 BC).

Speicher ❙ 1403 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

When the people of Appenzell in northeast Switzerland rose against their Habsburg Lord—Abbot Cuno of St Gall—they faced a large force of armoured cavalry and infantry raised from the Imperial cities of Swabia. Aided by men of Schwyz and Glarus, the Appenzellers routed the Germans at Speicher, near St Gall. Two years later, they beat an Austrian Imperial army at Stoss (15 May 1403).

Spercheios ❙ 996 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Tsar Samuel

Amid continuing war between Byzantium and Bulgaria, Tsar Samuel of Bulgaria invaded Greece, then found his way home blocked by the Byzantine General Nicephorus Uranus. The Byzantine army attacked Samuel's camp at the Spercheios River, near Thermopylae, crushing the invaders. A fresh Bulgarian offensive 20 years later was destroyed at Balathista.

Speyer ❙ 1703 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Marshal Count Camille de Tallard captured the Rhine city of Breisach (6 September), then advanced north into the Palatinate against Speyer, 12 miles from Ludwigshafen. In a disastrous defeat, Austrian commander Prince Frederick of Hesse-Cassel was surprised and captured. The French then retook Landau, 15 miles to the southwest, which had been lost a year earlier (13 November 1703).

Speyer ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

A week after the "Cannonade of Valmy" drove the Prussian invaders out of France, advance French units under General Adam Philippe Custine reached the Rhine and quickly captured the Austrian strongpoint at Speyer, south of Ludwigshaven. French forces managed to hold the town until the Prussian offensive in July 1794 (30 September 1792).

Sphakteria ❙ 425 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

See Pylos-Sphacteria

Sphakteria ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence

With Navarino holding out against Turkish-Egyptian siege, Hussein Bey Djertili, conqueror of Kasos, led 3,000 men against nearby Sphakteria, off Pylos Bay. The strategic island was taken at bayonet-point in a brilliant assault, with 350 Greeks killed and 200 captured, and Pylos fell three days later. Hussein Bey died the following year in the failed attack outside Missolonghi at Klissova (8 May 1825).

Spicheren ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

French forward units were advancing through Saarbrucken, when General Charles Auguste Frossard came under attack to the southwest near Forbach at Spicheren by Generals Karl Steinmetz and August von Goeben. Despite initial superiority in numbers, French hesitancy led to defeat. Frossard fell back towards Metz to join other forces beaten the same day at Wörth (6 August 1870).

Spin Baldak ❙ 1919 ❙ 3rd British-Afghan War

Amir Amanullah of Afghanistan crossed his eastern border into India near Bagh (11 May) and, in response, British General Richard Wapshare invaded southern Afghanistan, attacking the border town of Spin Baldak, southeast of Kandahar. The fortress fell after six hours of shelling, with about 350 Afghan casualties among the garrison of 600. Fighting in the south effectively ended (27 May 1919).

Spion Kop ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Five weeks after disaster at Colenso, British General Sir Redvers Buller made another attempt to relieve Ladysmith, besieged by Louis Botha. While General Sir Charles Warren achieved initial success attacking a Boer position on a ridge to the southwest at Spion Kop, it turned into disaster and Buller withdrew with over 1,000 casualties. He soon tried again at Vaal Kranz (23–24 January 1900).

Spirit Lake ❙ 1857 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

When the white trader Henry Lott killed a Sioux Chief and his family (1854), his kinsman Inkpadutah swore revenge and later attacked the small settlement of Spirit Lake in northwest Iowa. His band killed 38 settlers and carried off four women, of whom only two survived. Pursuing troops from Fort Ridgely failed to catch Inkpadutah and he died in exile in Canada in 1861 (8–12 March 1857).

Spithead ❙ 1545 ❙ French War of Henry VIII

After English forces had captured Boulogne, French Mareschal Claude d'Annebault took an invasion fleet against England. However, following an indecisive action against Admiral John Dudley Lord Lisle off Spithead (in which Mary Rose foundered with heavy loss of life), the French withdrew. Peace the following year saw France recognise the English conquest of Boulogne (18–19 July 1545).

Spitzbergen ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Determined to destroy the Norwegian weather station on the Arctic Island of Spitzbergen, the German battleships Tirpitz and Scharnhorst and nine destroyers under Admiral Erich Bey bombarded Barentsburg township, then landed and seized the garrison. It was noted as the only occasion Tirpitz fired on any enemy. Scharnhorst was sunk three months later off North Cape (8 September 1943).

Split Rock ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Valcour Island

Spokane Plain ❙ 1858 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars
With Indians in eastern Washington resisting removal to reservations, Colonel George Wright won at Four Lakes, then days later met the united tribes on nearby Spokane Plain. The Coer d'Alanes, Spokanes and Palouses were decisively defeated, though Kamiakin of the Yakima escaped. His nephew Qualchin was hanged and his brother Owhi was shot escaping, ending the war (5 September 1858).

Spotsylvania Court House ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
Union commander Ulysses S. Grant continued his offensive in Virginia, moving south from the action in the Wilderness to attack General Robert E. Lee's defensive position next day at Spotsylvania Court House. After some of the heaviest fighting of the war—with 18,000 Union and 12,000 Confederate casualties—Grant disengaged and continued south to the North Anna (8–21 May 1864).

Springfield, Massachusetts ❙ 1787 ❙ Shays' Rebellion
A rebellion in Massachusetts against taxes and debt saw former army officer Daniel Shays lead a force against the Federal armory at Springfield. Without waiting for reinforcements, militia General William Shepard attacked and dispersed Shays' men. Two days later Federal troops under General Benjamin Lincoln defeated a separate force under Luke Day, son of a wealthy Springfield family (25–27 January 1787).

Springfield, Missouri ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)
Determined to secure Missouri, Union commander John C. Frémont took a large force from St Louis against the southwest of the state. In a brilliant cavalry action outside Springfield, his vanguard under Major James Zagonyi routed Confederate militia led by Colonel James Frazier and captured the town. However, Frémont was soon dismissed for his previous failure at Lexington (25 October 1861).

Springfield, Missouri ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)
A month after a Confederate repulse in northwest Arkansas at Prairie Grove, General John S. Marmaduke led an expedition towards Springfield, across the border in Missouri, defended by a scratch Union force under General Egbert B. Brown. While Brown was badly wounded, the Union militia held firm against repeated attacks and Marmaduke withdrew east towards Hartville (8 January 1863).

Springfield, New Jersey ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution
British General Wilhelm Knyphausen led an offensive into New Jersey, advancing towards Springfield, where he was halted (7 June) by General Nathanael Greene. After receiving reinforcements, Knyphausen advanced again in force and burned much of Springfield. He was eventually repulsed by Greene and General William Maxwell and withdrew to Staten Island (23 June 1780).

Spring Hill ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
Confederate commander John B. Hood was marching through Tennessee towards Nashville when he met Union General John M. Schofield at Columbia. Supported by General Nathan B. Forrest's cavalry, Hood tried to outflank Schofield further north at Spring Hill. However, the attempt was driven off and the two armies continued north to the bloody action at Franklin (29 November 1864).

Springs of Cresson ❙ 1187 ❙ 3rd Crusade
See Cresson

Spurs ❙ 1302 ❙ Franco-Flemish Wars
See Courtrai

Spurs ❙ 1513 ❙ War of the Holy League
See Guinegate

Srebrenica ❙ 1993–1995 ❙ Bosnian War

As Serbian forces swept northeast Bosnia, perhaps 50,000 Muslim refugees crowded into Srebrenica, which became the first UN-declared "safe haven." As Bosnian General Radko Mladic advanced to take the besieged city, promised NATO air-strikes were cancelled and Dutch peacekeepers failed to prevent thousands of men and boys being taken away and killed (March 1993–11 July 1995).

Sremska Mitrovica ❙ 441 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Sirmium

Sremska Mitrovica ❙ 580–582 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

See Sirmium

Srinigar ❙ 1947 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

See Shalateng

Sripurambiyan ❙ 880 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Varaguna II won Pandya's throne at Madura (862), but near Kumbakonam at Sripurambiyan, he was defeated and killed by Prithvipati of West Ganga and Aditya of Chola, fighting for their overlord, Aparajita of Pallava. (Prithvipati was killed in the battle.) Pandya virtually disappeared, but Pallava was also eclipsed when Aditya overthrew his lord Aparajita in 893 and Imperial power passed to Chola.

Srirangam ❙ 1752 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

See Seringham

Srirangapatnam ❙ 1792 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

See Seringapatam

Srirangapatnam ❙ 1799 ❙ 4th British-Mysore War

See Seringapatam

Ssu-ming ❙ 1285 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Siming

Ssupingchieh ❙ 1946 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Siping

Ssu shui ❙ 621 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty

See Hulao

Stadt ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

During the siege of Mafeking, Boer commander Jacobus "Koos" Snyman authorised an assault by Cornet Sarel Eloff, who broke into an outlying position to the southwest, known as the Stadt (held mainly by Baralong auxiliaries) and captured Colonel Charles O. Hore. Major Alexander Godley led a sharp counter-attack and Eloff surrendered, with 60 casualties and 100 captured (12 May 1900).

Stadtlohn ❙ 1623 ❙ Thirty Years War (Palatinate War)

Christian of Brunswick attempted to revive the Protestant cause in Lower Saxony, but was attacked by a massive Catholic army under Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly. Withdrawing towards the Netherlands, Christian made a stand at Stadtlohn in Munster, where his army was destroyed. Frederick V, Palatine of the Rhine soon made peace with Emperor Ferdinand II (6 August 1623).

Staffarda ❙ 1690 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

As they advanced into Italian Savoy, the French army of Louis XIV led by General Nicolas Catinat met Victor Amadeus Duke of Savoy at Staffarda, south of Pinerolo near Turin. During a decisive one-sided engagement, Catinat inflicted heavy casualties and captured 10 of 11 Italian guns. Victory enabled the French to secure Savoy and they went on to capture much of Piedmont (18 August 1690).

Stainmore ❙ 954 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

In the confused struggle for Northumbria between Saxon and Viking forces following Brunanburh, a Saxon army defeated and killed Norwegian claimant Erik Bloodaxe in a decisive battle at Stainmore, near Edendale, Westmoreland. The rival Danish claimant Olaf Sihtricsson was driven to Ireland and Eadred of Wessex finally ended Norse rule of northern England.

Stalingrad ❙ 1942–1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Having reached Stalingrad (modern Volgagrad), General Friedrich von Paulus was halted by General Vasilii Chuikov and trapped by massive encircling counter-attacks. After a failed relief effort at Kotelnikovo, Paulus surrendered. One of history's bloodiest battles cost 800,000 Germans and over one million Russians killed, arguably deciding the war in Europe (24 August 1942–2 February 1943).

Stalluponen ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

The first major action in the east took place when German Corps commander Herman von Francois led an unauthorised attack on General Pavel Rennenkampf entering East Prussia. Francois checked the Russian army at Stalluponen (modern Nesterov) and took 3,000 prisoners. He then fell back west to Gumbinnen to support the main German counter-offensive (17 August 1914).

Stalowicz ❙ 1771 ❙ Polish Rebellion

After Polish defeat at Lanskroun (10 May), Hetman Michael Oginski of Lithuania took command against Russia and established a defensive position with 5,000 men at Stalowicz, in northeast Poland. In a brilliant night action, he was attacked in the rear and routed by General Alexander Suvorov. Oginski fled to Prussia and his Nationalist army virtually ceased to exist (23 September 1771).

Stamford Bridge ❙ 1066 ❙ Norwegian Invasion of England

Facing an invasion of Northumbria by Harald Hadrada of Norway, Harold II of England had to rush north after English defeat at Fulford (20 September). East of York at Stamford Bridge on the Derwent, Harold killed the Norwegian King and his own renegade brother Tostig. However, the costly victory fatally damaged Harold's strength against the Norman invasion at Hastings (25 September 1066).

Stamford Hill ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

See Stratton

Standard ❙ 1138 ❙ Anglo-Scottish Territorial Wars

David I of Scotland took advantage of a period of instability in England to cross the border and capture Clitheroe (10 June) before advancing towards Northallerton against an English army led by Archbishop Thurston of York. In the Battle of the Standard—named for relics of English Saints borne into the fray—King David suffered a terrible defeat and withdrew north (22 August 1138).

Stangebjerg ❙ 1028 ❙ Norwegian Wars of Succession

Threatened by Olaf II Haraldsson of Norway and Anund Jakob of Sweden, Knut II, King of Denmark and England, defeated their combined fleets at Helgeaa. Two years later, Knut inflicted an even more decisive naval defeat off Stangebjerg, in East Scania. Olaf then fled into exile in Kiev and Knut seized the throne of Norway. Olaf returned in 1030 and was killed at Stiklestad.

Stangebro ❙ 1598 ❙ Swedish War of Succession

After John III of Sweden died, war broke out between his Lutheran brother Duke Charles and Catholic son Sigismund III of Poland, who invaded Sweden. In fighting at Stangebro, near Linkoping, Sigismund was decisively defeated and withdrew. The Duke later became King Charles IX, upholding Lutheranism in Sweden, but he was beaten in Livonia at Kirkholm in 1605 (25 September 1598).

Stanilesti ❙ 1711 ❙ Russian Invasion of Moldavia

When Turkey declared war on Russia in support of Charles XII of Sweden, Tsar Peter I unwisely invaded Turkish Moldavia with 40,000 men and was surrounded on the Pruth near Stanilesti by 200,000 Turks under Grand Vizier

Baltaji Mehmet. After heavy casualties in three days' fighting, the Tsar was unexpectedly offered terms. He withdrew after agreeing to abandon Azov (9–12 July 1711).

Stanislau ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As the southern element of the Kerensky Offensive, General Lavr Kornilov attacked around Stanislau (modern Ivano-Frankovsk) against Austrian General Karl Tersztyánsky and broke through to seize Kalusz and Halisz. With German victory further north around Tarnopol, a counter-attack retook Stanislau, Czernowitz and all of Galicia, driving Kornilov back to the Zbrucz (6–24 July 1917).

Stanley ❙ 1982 ❙ Falklands War

After establishing a bridgehead on East Falkland at San Carlos (26 May), British forces advanced east across the island towards Stanley. Very heavy fighting west of the capital—including Mount Longdon and Mount Tumbledown—crushed Argentine resistance. General Mario Menendez in Stanley surrendered to General Jeremy Moore, effectively ending the 72-day war (14 June 1982).

Stanleyville ❙ 1964 ❙ Congolese Civil War

During rebellion in eastern Congo, leftists under Gaston Sumialot seized Stanleyville (modern Kisangani) and over 1,000 white hostages (4 August). Prime Minister Moise Tshombe's mercenary army advanced behind 600 Belgian paratroops flown in on American aircraft and Stanleyville was retaken, with about 150 hostages killed. The rebellion was then crushed (24–27 November 1964).

Staraya Ryazan ❙ 1237 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia

See Ryazan

Stara Zagora ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Soon after Russians crossed the Danube at Svistov, Turkish commander Suleiman Pasha found his way north through the Balkans blocked at the small town of Stara Zagora by Bulgarians led by General Nikolai Gregorivich Stoletov and Russian General Osip Gourko. Heroic defence by the small garrison delayed the Turks and enabled the Russians to fortify the Shipka Pass (31 July 1877).

Starlite ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War

See Chu Lai

Staten Island ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

General George Washington attacked the British in New York, sending General John Sullivan to land on Staten Island, where he burned facilities at Decker's Ferry then marched towards Richmond. However, General John Campbell had recently been reinforced by Commander General Sir Henry Clinton and the Americans were repulsed, losing a large number of prisoners (21–22 August 1777).

Staunton River Bridge ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While raiding southwest of Petersburg, Union Generals James Wilson and Augustus V. Kautz were blocked at Staunton River Bridge, outside Randolph, Virginia, by a scratch force under Captain Benjamin Farinholt. Wilson was driven off by the pursuing Confederate cavalry of General William H. F. Lee and withdrew east through Sappony Church (25 June 1864).

Stavropol ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

Defeated mid-year at Torgovaya and Ekaterinodar, and with General Ivan Sorokin executed after a failed coup, disorganised Red forces in the Kuban attempted to hold Stavropol against victorious White commander Anton Denikin. With the city surrounded, the Reds fought a bloody breakout, leaving behind 2,500 dead and 4,000 wounded. Stavropol quickly fell (4–15 November 1918).

Stavuchany ❙ 1739 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

Despite an earlier repulse at Bender (1738), Russian Marshal Count Burkhard Christoph von Münnich gathered fresh forces to advance into Moldavia. On the Dniester near Khotin at Stavuchany he routed a much larger Turkish army under Grand Vizier Al-Haji Mohammed and next day captured Khotin. However, Austria soon abandoned her ally and Russia had to make peace (17 August 1739).

Steenkirk ❙ 1692 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

William III of England and Holland, commanding the Allied army in Flanders, failed to drive off the French siege of Namur and manoeuvred for some months before attacking French Marshal Duke Francois Henri of Luxembourg, near the coast at Steenkirk. William was repulsed with heavy losses and 12 months later he was defeated again at Neerwinden (3 August 1692).

Steen Mountain ❙ 1878 ❙ Bannock Indian War

See Silver Creek, Oregon

Steenwijk ❙ 1580–1581 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Turning against William of Orange, Georges van Lalaing—Count Rennenberg and Stadtholder of Groningen—declared for Spain and took a force against Steenwijk, held by Johann van de Korpput and 19-year-old William Louis of Nassau. The siege was broken after four months and Rennenberg withdrew. He died a few months later after defeat at Kollum (18 October 1580–23 February 1581).

Steenwijk ❙ 1592 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Instead of relying on siege and starvation, Prince Maurice of Orange turned a powerful bombardment on the fortress of Steenwijk. Using his troops to dig siege positions under the direction of engineers Joost Mattheus and Jacob Kemp, Maurice fired over 29,000 rounds from 50 guns and the Spanish garrison of 1,000 under Antonio Coquel surrendered (28 May–3 June 1592).

Stefaniana ❙ 1344 ❙ Serbian Imperial Wars

While Stephan Dushan was expanding Serbian power into Macedonia, a Turkish naval force of the Emir of Smyrna was beaten at sea by the Venetians and came ashore near Salonika in northern Greece to return home by land. They were pursued by mailed Serbian cavalry led by Gregory Preljub and at nearby Stefaniana the 3,000 Turks turned and routed Preljub's horsemen (May 1344).

Steinau ❙ 1633 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

Imperial General Albrecht von Wallenstein was determined to extend his personal power and advanced against the Swedes in Silesia, where he attacked Steinau, on the Oder. He captured the city and about 6,000 prisoners, including veteran Count Matthias Thurn, but he controversially released Thurn without ransom. In February 1634 Wallenstein was murdered by his own officers (13 October 1633).

Steinkirk ❙ 1692 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

See Steenkirk

Stephenson's Depot ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Confederate General Jubal A. Early retreated into the Shenandoah Valley from Fort Stevens, near Washington, D.C., part of his force under General Stephen D. Ramseur was attacked at Stephenson's Depot, just north of Winchester, Virginia, by Union General William W. Averell. Ramseur was badly beaten and Early withdrew. But he soon struck back at Kernstown (20 July 1864).

Steppes ❙ 1391 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

See Kunduzcha

Steptoe Butte ❙ 1858 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars

See Pine Creek

Stiklestad ❙ 1030 ❙ Norwegian Wars of Succession

Driven into exile after losing at Stangebjerg in 1028, Olaf II Haraldsson tried to regain the throne of Norway from Knut II of Denmark. While Knut was campaigning in England, Olaf landed near Trondheim, supported by Anund Jakob of Sweden. However, he was defeated and killed at Stiklestad by Norwegian and Danish forces. Olaf was later canonised as Patron Saint of Norway (29 July 1030).

Stillfried ❙ 1278 ❙ Bohemian Wars

See Marchfeld

Stillman's Run ❙ 1832 ❙ Black Hawk Indian War

See Rock River

Stillwater ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Saratoga, New York

Stilo ❙ 982 ❙ Later German Imperial Wars

See Cotrone

Stirling ❙ 1297 ❙ William Wallace Revolt

Edward I of England declared himself King of Scotland after victory at Dunbar (April 1296), then faced rebellion by William Wallace and sent an army under John de Warenne Earl of Surrey. Crossing Stirling Bridge over the Forth near Cambuskenneth, Surrey's vanguard was routed. Wallace swept across southeastern Scotland before meeting defeat in 1298 at Falkirk (11 September 1297).

Stirling ❙ 1304 ❙ William Wallace Revolt

Facing a new offensive by Edward I, launched at Happrew in March, Scottish rebel leaders (except Sir William Wallace) submitted and Sir William Oliphant held out in Stirling. But the powerful fortress was forced to surrender after three months of siege under personal direction of the King. The capture and execution of Wallace a year later checked the rebellion (22 April–24 July 1304).

Stirling ❙ 1313–1314 ❙ Rise of Robert the Bruce

As Scotland secured her border areas following victory at Loudon Hill in 1307, Edward Bruce besieged the powerful English fortress of Stirling, then unwisely permitted Governor Sir Philip Mowbray a truce, which allowed Edward II to send a massive relief army. However, the English were heavily defeated at nearby Bannockburn. Stirling surrendered next day (25 June 1314).

Stirling ❙ 1745–1746 ❙ Jacobite Rebellion (The Forty-Five)

Charles Stuart—Bonnie Prince Charlie—was driven back to Scotland after a failed invasion of England and used French artillery to besiege Stirling, defended by General William Blakeney. An English relief attempt was defeated at Falkirk, though the siege was lifted when the Duke William of Cumberland arrived. He beat the Highlanders in April at Culloden (December 1745–1 February 1746).

Stirling's Plantation ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Two months after defeating a Union force in western Louisiana near Donaldsonville at Cox's Plantation, Confederate General Thomas Green was reinforced and attacked General Napoleon J. T. Dana further south at Stirling's Plantation, near Fordoche on the Atchafayala. Green secured a sharp victory before escaping, but the defeat had little strategic impact on the Union (29 September 1863).

Stochod ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

In the second phase of the Brusilov Offensive after failure at Baranovitchi, Russian General Aleksei Evert attacked along the Stochod towards Kovel, with General Aleksei Kaledin further south. Austrian General Karl Tersztyánsky and the German Georg von der Marwitz stopped the Russians east of Kovel. The offensive also petered out at Brzezany (6 July–3 August 1916).

Stockach ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Responding to an Austrian advance into Germany, French General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan crossed the Rhine and, after defeat at Ostrach, met Archduke Charles south of Danube at Stockach, near the head of Lake Constance. A bloody and decisive battle cost the Austrians greater casualties, yet they broke up the French offensive and drove Jourdan back to the Rhine (25 March 1799).

Stockach ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

During a major French offensive across the Rhine northwest of Lake Constance, while General Jean Victor Moreau was defeating Austrian General Paul Kray in the Black Forest at Engen, his right wing under General Claude-Jacques Lecourbe pursued the Austrian rearguard east to Stockach. The Austrians were defeated the same day at heavy cost in prisoners and stores (3 May 1800).

Stoke ❙ 1487 ❙ Simnel's Rebellion

At the end of the War of the Roses, Yorkist forces supported Lambert Simnel, claiming to be Edward Earl of Warwick, son of the murdered Duke of Clarence. Aided in battle by John de la Pole Earl of Lincoln and Francis Lord Lovell, Simnel was routed at Stoke by Henry VII. Lincoln was killed, Lovell disappeared and the pretender was captured and disgraced, ending the rising (16 June 1487).

Stollhofen ❙ 1707 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Marshal Claude Villars moved onto the offensive after French disaster in the Netherlands at Ramillies (May 1706) and advanced against the defensive line from Stollhofen to the Rhine north of Strasbourg, defended by new Imperial commander Margrave Charles-Ernest of Bayreuth. Villars seized the fortifications by a brilliant night attack, then overran much of southwest Germany (22 May 1707).

Stone Houses ❙ 1837 ❙ Kichai Indian War

In pursuit of Kichai Indians raiding along the Colorado River in Texas, a detachment of 18 Texas Tangers under Lieutenant A. B. van Benthuysen met about 150 Indians outside Windthorst, east of modern Archer City. In bloody action near a rock formation known as the Stone Houses, ten of the Rangers died before the survivors managed to escape to the Sabine River (10 November 1837).

Stones River ❙ 1862–1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Confederate General Braxton Bragg recovered from defeat at Perryville and advanced to Murfreesboro, Tennessee, against General William S. Rosecrans, marching southeast from Nashville. Heavy fighting outside Murfreesboro at Stones River cost Rosecrans more men, but Bragg had to withdraw south. In June Bragg lost again at Hoover's Gap (31 December 1862–2 January 1863).

Stoney Creek ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

Withdrawing west along Lake Ontario after being driven out of Fort George on the Niagara, British General John Vincent was belatedly pursued by the inexperienced American Generals William Winder and John Chandler. Leading a surprise counter-attack at Stoney Creek, Colonel John Harvey routed and captured Winder and Chandler. Vincent then advanced back to the Niagara (6 June 1813).

Stoney Creek Depot ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Sappony Church

Stonington ❙ 1637 ❙ Pequot Indian War

See Mystic

Stonington ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

Sent to New Brunswick to enforce local allegiance, Admiral Sir Thomas Hardy secured Moose Island (11 July) then sailed south to bombard Stonington, Connecticut, east of Long Island Sound, held by Captain Jeremiah Holmes. After a barrage of shells and Congreve rockets, Hardy withdrew with minor damage from shore batteries. The British later attacked Hampden, Maine (10–12 August 1814).

Stono Ferry ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

The approach of American General Benjamin Lincoln forced General Augustine Prevost to abandon his attack on Charleston, South Carolina, and the British commander left a rearguard under Colonel John Maitland at nearby Stono Ferry. Attacking the strongly defended position, Lincoln was repulsed with heavy losses before Maitland withdrew west towards Savannah (20 June 1779).

Stony Lake ❙ 1863 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

General Henry Hastings Sibley, advancing into North Dakota in pursuit of Santee and Teton Sioux under Inkpaduta, defeated the Indians at Big Mound and Dead Buffalo Lake, then after two days came under attack at Stony Lake, in modern Burleigh County. The largest of the actions saw the Indians driven off and they were defeated again six weeks later at Whitestone Hill (28 July 1863).

Stony Point ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

When Colonel Henry Johnson captured Stony Point on the Hudson near West Point (31 May), American General Anthony Wayne counterattacked and the British garrison surrendered after heavy fighting and about 100 casualties. Threatened by reinforcements under General Sir Henry Clinton, the Americans withdrew two days later. They attacked again next month at Paulus Hook (16 July 1779).

Storkyro ❙ 1714 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

General Karl Gustav Armfelt took over the defence of Swedish Finland from the incompetent General Georg Lybecker and was repulsed by the Russians at Tammerfors (6 October 1713) before making a courageous stand near Vasa at Storkyro (modern Isokyro). However, Armfelt's inexperienced and outnumbered force was destroyed and by year's end Finland had fallen (13 March 1714).

Stormberg ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Supporting a broad British offensive, General Sir William Gatacre moved against a Boer advance from Queenstown and was ambushed near Stormberg by Commandant Jan Hendrik Olivier. In the first disaster of "Black Week," Gatacre lost about 700 casualties and over 600 men captured. The second failure occurred next day to the northwest at Magersfontein (10 December 1899).

Stoss ❙ 1405 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

After defeat at Speicher in northeast Switzerland (May 1403), the Habsburg Abbot Cuno of St Gall sought aid from Duke Frederick IV of Austria to suppress rebellion in Appenzell. Near Stoss, south of Lake Constance, rebels under Rudolf of Werdenberg destroyed the advancing Imperial army from the heights above. Frederick withdrew and Appenzell joined the Swiss League (17 June 1405).

Stow ❙ 1646 ❙ British Civil Wars

The final battle of the First Civil War after Royalist defeat at Naseby (June 1645) saw a 1,500-strong Welsh force under Sir Jacob Astley attacked at Stow-on-the Wold, west of Oxford, by Parliamentary forces under Sir Thomas Morgan and Sir William Brereton. Astley was crushed and soon afterwards King Charles I surrendered to imprisonment and eventual execution (21 March 1646).

Stracathro ❙ 1130 ❙ Scottish Dynastic War

King David I of Scotland was absent in England when his Constable Edward, son of Siward Beorn, faced a rebellion by Angus MacHeth of Moray and his brother Malcolm. Angus was defeated and killed at Stracathro, on the North Esk near Brechin, along with a reported 4,000 Moraymen. Four years later Malcolm MacHeth was betrayed and imprisoned.

Strachowa ❙ 1423 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Strachuv

Strachuv ❙ 1423 ❙ Hussite Wars

As a doctrinal civil war broke out among the Hussites of Bohemia, the Taborite leader Jan Zizka ousted Jetrich of Miletinek, Governor of Hradec Králové, whose brother Divis Borek marched from Kromeriz to lead the men of Prague and the Utraquist faction. While the Praguers were routed just southwest of Hradec Králové at Strachuv Dvur, they were soon avenged at Tynec (4 August 1423).

Straits of Tiran ❙ 1956 ❙ Arab-Israeli Sinai War

When Egypt blocked the Straits of Tiran, Israel launched a pre-emptive war in the Sinai at Abu Ageila, then Colonel Avraham Yoffe drove south along the Gulf of Aqaba towards Sharm el-Sheik, held by Colonel Raif Mahfouz Zaki. Joined by Colonel Ariel Sharon from Mitla Pass, Yoffe took the fortress to secure the strategic strait and a ceasefire began next day (2–5 November 1956).

Stralsund ❙ 1184 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion

Despite victory in 1168 at Arkona, Waldemar I of Denmark faced continued attacks by Wendish pirates and Duke Boguslaw of Pomerania led a large fleet to regain the island of Rügen, held by Danish vassal Prince Jaromir. Battle in fog off nearby Stralsund saw a brilliant victory for Waldemar's counselor Bishop Absalon, which effectively ended Pomeranian seapower.

Stralsund ❙ 1628 ❙ Thirty Years War (Saxon-Danish War)

Catholic forces pursuing Christian IV of Denmark to the Baltic after his loss at Lutter am Barenberg (1626) seized Stade, Rostock and Rügen and General Hans von Arnim besieged Stralsund. Imperial commander Albrecht von Wallenstein soon reinforced the siege, but Stralsund held out. Wallenstein eventually withdrew and beat King Christian a month later near Wolgast (13 May–5 August 1628).

Stralsund ❙ 1714–1715 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Five years after his disastrous defeat at Poltava Charles XII of Sweden returned from exile in Turkey and tried to defend the port of Stralsund, in Swedish Pomerania, against siege by Danish and German forces. Heavily repulsed from an attempt to recapture nearby Rügen Island, Charles escaped by boat. Shortly afterwards the ruined city surrendered (November 1714–22 December 1715).

Stralsund ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

Sent against the Swedish Baltic port of Stralsund, defended by General Jean Henri Essen Governor of Pomerania, French Marshal Édouard Mortier secured the siege, then left to attack Kolberg. Following a powerful German sortie in early April, Mortier returned and reimposed the siege. An armistice was agreed and in September Stralsund was handed to France (30 January–29 April 1807).

Stralsund ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

In a Prussian rising against French rule, Major Ferdinand von Schill's Hussars fought their way north from Berlin through Mecklenberg and seized the Baltic city of Stralsund, where they were attacked by Dutch and Westphalian troops. Von Schill died in a vicious street battle and his men were imprisoned, while his officers were tried and shot on Napoleon Bonaparte's orders (31 May 1809).

Strasbourg ❙ 357 ❙ Alemannic Invasion of Roman Gaul

See Argentoratum

Strasbourg ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

As the French withdrew in disorder after defeat at Wörth, Prussian General Karl August von Werder was sent south to recapture Strasbourg, seized by Louis XIV in 1681. Commander Jean Jacques Uhrich held out against siege through heavy bombardment before surrendering almost 18,000 men. Peace in 1871 saw the city finally restored to Germany (13 August–28 September 1870).

Strathbogie ❙ 1058 ❙ Scottish War of Succession
See Essie

Strathfleet ❙ 1453 ❙ MacDonald Rebellion
Determined to renew the rebellion checked at Inverlochy (1431), John MacDonald Lord of the Isles took 500 men into Sutherland, where he was beaten with terrible losses at Strathfleet, north of Dornoch, by John Earl of Sutherland. MacDonald came to terms with the King and relinquished his Earldom, but in 1480 he was defeated at the Battle of Bloody Bay by his own illegitimate son Angus Og.

Stratton ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars
Henry Grey Earl of Stamford was resolved to prevent Royalist General Sir Ralph Hopton entering Somerset and marched into Cornwall to occupy defensive works (later called Stamford Hill) at Stratton, near Bude. While Hopton was heavily repulsed, a failed counter-attack by James Chudleigh led to a Parliamentary surrender, yielding 1,700 prisoners and massive stores (16 May 1643).

Strela ❙ 1184 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion
See Stralsund

Striegau ❙ 1745 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession
See Hohenfriedberg

Stromboli ❙ 1676 ❙ 3rd Dutch War
When Sicilians rebelled against Spanish rule, France sent troops to garrison Messina and a supply convoy under the Marquis Abraham Duquesne was met near the Lipari Islands off Stromboli by a Dutch fleet under Michiel de Ruyter. Although the outcome was indecisive, de Ruyter's ships inflicted greater damage. The French lost four ships and failed to renew battle next day (8 January 1676).

Stronghold ❙ 1873 ❙ Modoc Indian War
See Lava Beds

Strymon ❙ 1185 ❙ 2nd Byzantine-Sicilian War
Leading a fresh offensive against the Byzantine Empire, William II "The Good" of Sicily captured Dyrrhachium and Thessalonica, then advanced on Constantinople, where he was ambushed and defeated to the west at the Strymon by Alexius Branas for Emperor Isaac II. Two months later, Branas beat the Norman fleet off Greece at Demetritsa, halting the Norman offensive (7 September 1185).

Strypa ❙ 1915–1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)
The first major Russian offensive since the routs of 1915 saw Generals Dmitry Shcherbachev and Platon Lechitskii advance on the Bessarabian front near the Strypa. After initial success against Austro-Hungarian commander General Karl Pflanzer-Batlin, the offensive stalled with perhaps 50,000 casualties. The massive Brusilov Offensive followed in June (24 December 1915–10 January 1916).

Stuhm ❙ 1629 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War
See Sztum

Stura ❙ 1822 ❙ Greek War of Independence
In search of glory in eastern Greece, Elias Mavromichales (son of Greek leader Petros) and the Montenegrin Vassos attacked Stura, the magazine and grain-store for Karystos, in southeast Euboea. When Omer Bey arrived with reinforcements, young Mavromichales was defeated and killed. Omer Bey secured his supplies before withdrawing to Karystos (24 January 1822).

Styr ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)
Near the start of the second phase of the Brusilov Offensive, Russian General Leonid Lesh attacked along the Styr north of Lutsk, smashing a salient near Kolki and advancing through Manevici towards Kovel. Austro-German commander

Alexander Linsingen ordered his army group to withdraw, then sent reinforcements to help a rally on the Stochod halt the Russians (4–7 July 1916).

Styrsudden ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Kronstadt Bay

Suan ❙ 1761 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

A third abortive advance into Bengal saw Mughal Emperor Shah Alam II and his French General Jean Law try to besiege Patna, defended by Major John Carnac and the troops of Nawab Mir Jafar of Bengal. Just west of Bihar City at Suan, the Imperial army was routed and Law was overpowered and captured. The Emperor was later allowed to retire to Oudh (15 January 1761).

Subachoque ❙ 1861 ❙ Colombian Civil Wars

Twelve months after being checked at Manizales, rebel General Tomás Cipriano de Mosquera resumed the war against the government of Mariano Ospina and marched towards Bogotá. Just to the northwest at Subachoque, he met and decisively defeated the government force of General Joaquin Paris. In July, Mosquera won again at Bogotá itself and resumed the Presidency (25 April 1861).

Sucat ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

American commander Elwell S. Otis faced fresh insurgent activity in southern Luzon and sent General Henry W. Lawton, supported by Generals Lloyd Wheaton and Samuel Ovenshine. Met at Sucat by Generals Artemio Ricarte and Mariano Noriel, the Americans suffered a humilating defeat and had to withdraw. However, Lawton attacked again three days later at the Zapote (10 June 1899).

Sucro ❙ 75 BC ❙ Sertorian War

On the offensive against rebel Quintus Sertorius in Spain, Roman commander Gnaeus Pompey won at the Turia then soon advanced on Sertorius at the Sucro (modern Jucar). Pompey's left wing under Lucius Afranius met some success in a premature attack before Pompey was wounded and badly defeated. However, with Quintus Metellus Pius approaching, Sertorius withdrew next day.

Suddasain ❙ 1848 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

See Sadusam

Sudomer ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

Hussite leader Jan Zizka marching south from Prague towards his fortified position at Tabor was attacked by Catholic Royalists at Sudomer (modern Sudomerice). Despite costly Taborite losses—including Lord Benek of Skala killed—the Barons were heavily defeated. Within months Zizka had won again at Porici and against King Sigismund himself at Vitkov Hill (25 March 1420).

Suenske Sound ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Svenskund

Suessa ❙ 339 BC ❙ Latin War

Determined to resist the Roman conquest of central Italy, the Legions of Latium took the field with Capuan allies against an army led by the Consuls Manlius Torquatus and Decius Mus. The Latins were repulsed with heavy losses near the foot of Rocca Monfina, at Suessa, although Decius died on the battlefield. The war was virtually over and Latium was absorbed under Roman control.

Suez Canal ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Advancing on the Suez Canal in hope of triggering a Muslim rising in Egypt, Turkish commander Ahmed Djemal Pasha led 25,000 men across the Sinai. Met at the canal around Ismailia by mainly Indian troops under General Alexander Wilson, Djemal was repulsed with over 1,000 men lost and returned to Beersheba. Turkey's next major advance was checked at Romani (3 February 1915).

Suez Canal (1st) ❙ 1973 ❙ Arab-Israeli Yom Kippur War

After massive bombardment, Egyptian General Sa'ad el Din Shazli launched a brilliant surprise assault across the Suez Canal towards the Bar-Lev defensive line, inflicting terrible losses in men, tanks and aircraft. Israel suffered further costly losses in a disastrous counter-attack by Generals Ariel Sharon and Avraham Adan and Egypt soon captured the Bar-Lev Line (6–8 October 1973).

Suez Canal (2nd) ❙ 1973 ❙ Arab-Israeli Yom Kippur War

From bridgeheads east of the Suez Canal, Egyptian General Sa'ad el Din Shazli launched a huge offensive east against Israeli forces under General Shmuel Gonen. One of history's largest armoured actions saw about 2,000 tanks in combat. However, the Egyptian effort was dispersed along a 100-mile front and they were fought to a standstill, with up to 260 tanks lost (14 October 1973).

Suez Canal (3rd) ❙ 1973 ❙ Arab-Israeli Yom Kippur War

Israeli Generals Ariel Sharon and Avraham Adan blunted Egypt's last advance into the Sinai, then assumed the offensive against Arab bridgeheads east of the Suez Canal. After severe fighting at Chinese Farm, Israeli forces surrounded key Egyptian units and stormed across the canal to threaten major cities on the West Bank. Egypt quickly accepted a ceasefire (15–22 October 1973).

Sufetula ❙ 647 ❙ Muslim Conquest of North Africa

Marching west from Egypt with a substantial army, General Abdullah ibn Saad besieged Tripoli, then faced a relief force from Carthage under Gregory, Byzantine Governor of North Africa. A prolonged battle at Sufetula (modern Sbeitla) saw Gregory defeated and killed (reputedly by Abdullah, son of the great warrior Zubayr). General Abdullah returned to Alexandria with massive booty.

Suffolk ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate General James Longstreet resumed the offensive in southern Virginia, besieging the Union garrison at Suffolk under General John J. Peach. General Samuel G. French occupied nearby Fort Huger but was driven out by a Union counter-attack. After Confederate failure in North Carolina at Washington (20 April), Longstreet was recalled to Fredericksburg (11 April–4 May 1863).

Sufiyan ❙ 1605 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

After Shah Abbas of Persia had advanced into Turkish Azerbaijan and recovered key cities including Tabriz, Erivan and Kars, he marched north again to meet a large-scale counter-offensive by teenage Sultan Ahmed I. At Sufiyan, northeast of Lake Urmiya, the Turkish army under Cighalzade Sinan Pasha was destroyed. Eventual peace yielded much land to Persia (9 September 1605).

Sugar Loaf Rock ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

See Trichinopoly (3rd)

Suipacha ❙ 1810 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

The first Argentine Patriot victory over Spain saw General Antonio González Balcarce and Juan José Castelli recover from loss at Cotagaita (27 October) to rout a Spanish force at Suipacha, near Tupiza in the southwest of modern Bolivia. Royalist Generals Vicente Nieto and José de Cordoba and Intendente Paulo Sanz were captured and shot, but the Patriots soon lost at Huaqui (7 November 1810).

Suiyang ❙ 757 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

The rebel An Lushan captured Luoyang and Chang'an, then sent a large force under Yin Ziji into Henan, where Zhang Xun determined to hold Suiyang (near modern Shangqiu). After an epic 122-day siege, with relief just three days away, the starving survivors surrendered and Zhang Xun was executed. Meanwhile, the Tang counter-offensive had begun at Xiangji (February–24 November 757).

Sulechow ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

See Kay

Suleimaniya ❙ 1987 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Despite failure in the south around Basra, Iran renewed its effort in Iraqi Kurdistan with a broad offensive around Suleimaniya. Along with its Kurdish allies, Iran threatened Mawat in the north, took the strategic heights near Suleimaniya itself and the city of Arabit to the south. Iraq responded with chemical attacks on Kurdish villages and the atrocity at Halabja in March 1988 (April–June 1987).

Sullivan's Island ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Fort Sullivan

Sultanpur ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Badshahganj

Sulusaray ❙ 692 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

See Sebastopolis

Sumbilla ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," British General Sir Lowry Cole pursued the defeated French after Sorauren and on the Bidassoa at Sumbilla two days later, he caught up with French units under General Bertrand Clausel. A sharp action forced Clausel's men to withdraw and continue their retreat towards France (1 August 1813).

Summa ❙ 1940 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

See Mannerheim Line

Summit Point ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

When Union General Philip Sheridan moved south from the Potomac into the Shenandoah near Charlestown, he was attacked to the southwest at Summit Point, West Virginia, by converging Confederate Generals Jubal A. Early and Richard H. Anderson. Although fighting was inconclusive, Sheridan suffered more casualties and withdrew north to Harper's Ferry (21 August 1864).

Summit Springs ❙ 1869 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

The southern Cheyenne attempted to march from northern Texas to join their tribal brethren in Wyoming and were intercepted in northeast Colorado at Summit Springs by cavalry under Major Eugene Carr. A surprise attack on the Indian camp saw more than 50 killed (including Chief Tall Bull) and another 177 captured, effectively destroying the southern Cheyenne (11 July 1869).

Sumter ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

See Fort Sumter

Sunchon ❙ 1598 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

As the Japanese withdrew to a few key fortresses in southern Korea, the great commander Konishi Yukinaga was blockaded at Sunchon by a Korean-Chinese fleet under Chen Lin and troops led by Liu Ting. After failing to bribe his besiegers, a Japanese victory at Sachon allowed Konishi to break the blockade. However, he was soon defeated at sea off Noryang (19 October–6 December 1598).

Sunda Strait ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

The day after disaster in the Java Sea, the Allied cruisers Perth and Houston attacked Japanese transports in the Sunda Strait, between Java and Sumatra. However, they were sunk by Admiral Takeo Kurita. Late that night, the damaged cruiser Exeter and two destroyers were also sunk by Kurita. Only four US destroyers escaped from Java, which fell a week later (28 February–1 March 1942).

Sundays ❙ 1802 ❙ 3rd Cape Frontier War

A renewed offensive along the Sundays River in eastern Cape Province after failure in February at Roodewal saw commandant Tjaart van der Walt join Hendrik Janse van Rensberg. In two months they killed 200 Xhosa and recovered 13,000 cattle, but when van der Walt was killed at Baviaanskloof the war soon ended. The Xhosa later agreed not to cross the Zuurveld (June–August 1802).

Sungari ❙ 1114 ❙ Jurchen Invasion of Northern China

See Songhua

Sungari ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Songhua

Sung-chou ❙ 641 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars

See Sungqu

Sungkiang ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Songjiang

Sungqu ❙ 641 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars

The great Tibetan leader Srong-brtsan-sgam-po united his country into a strong confederation, then took a huge army against Imperial China and besieged Sungqu (modern Songpan) in northwestern Sichuan. Tang Emperor Taizong sent a massive force which defeated and drove off the invaders. However, he then made peace, sealed by giving his niece in marriage to the Tibetan King.

Sungshan ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

See Songshan

Sunomata ❙ 1181 ❙ Gempei War

New commander Taira Munemori recovered from a rout at Fujigawa (November 1180) to march east from Kyoto against Minamoto Yukiie, who was advancing to support his victorious nephew Yoritomo. Attacking across the Sunomata, near modern Nagoya, Yukiie suffered terrible defeat, losing perhaps 400 dead. Two years later, he joined the Minamoto victory at Shinowara (25 April 1181).

Suntel Hill ❙ 782 ❙ Wars of Charlemagne

Saxon rebels under Chief Widikund rose against Frankish authority and defeated an army sent by Charlemagne, King of the Franks, at Suntel Hill, near modern Hanover in Lower Saxony. The defeat provoked a terrible slaughter of Saxon prisoners by the Franks, which ensured continuing support for the rebellion.

Suoi Tre ❙ 1967 ❙ Vietnam War

After earlier falling back before an Allied sweep in the Iron Triangle, northwest of Saigon, Viet Cong and North Vietnamese stood firm against a new US and South Vietnamese offensive further north. Heaviest fighting was at Suoi Tre, where the Communists counter-attacked in force. Operation Junction City ended when the Communists withdrew into Cambodia (22 February–14 May 1967).

Suomussalmi ❙ 1939 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

On the offensive in central Finland, two Russian divisions converged on Suomussalmi and General Andrei Zelentsov took the village. He then came under sustained attack by Finnish Generals Wiljo Tuompo and Hjalmar Siilasvuo. The Russian 163rd Division was completely destroyed, with Zelentsov killed and the Finns turned against a second Russian force on the Raate Road (7–28 December 1939).

Suo'yi Ford ❙ 1852 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Marching north through Guangxi, the Taiping army was ambushed just north of Quanzhou at the strategic Suo'yi Ford by a small Imperial force under Zhiang Zhongyuan. Heavy fighting saw a large number of rebels burned in boats or drowned, but Zhiang had too few troops for decisive victory and the battered Taiping entered Hunan. A few months later, they attacked Changsha (10 June 1852).

Supa ❙ 1596 ❙ Mughal-Ahmadnagar Wars

When Mughal forces withdrew from the siege of Ahmadnagar, the Bahadur Nizam Shah unwisely sent his army under Soheil Khan in pursuit into Berar. Mughal allies Raja Ali Khan of Kandeish and the Hindu Raja Ram Chundur were defeated on the Godaveri at Supa. However, the next day Soheil's Deccan army was beaten by the outnumbered Mughal Khan Khanan (27–28 December 1596).

Sur ❙ 1820 ❙ Anglo-Arab Wars

After Britain captured Ras al-Khaimah in the Persian Gulf (December 1819), Captain Thomas Perronet Thompson joined Sultan Saiyid Said of Muscat in a rash expedition against the Banu Bu Ali in Oman. The Allies were heavily repulsed near Sur, though the defeat was avenged early the next year at Balad Bani Bu Ali. Thompson was tried and reprimanded for his rash attack (9 November 1820).

Surabaya ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

See Java Sea

Surabaya ❙ 1945 ❙ Indonesian War of Independence

British-Indian forces supporting Dutch reoccupation of Indonesia after Japanese surrender landed in Jakarta and advanced on Surabaya. When General Aubertin Mallaby was killed while negotiating with Nationalists, a counterattack under General Robert Mansergh took Surabaya in the bloodiest battle of the war. The last British troops left Indonesia a year later (10–19 November 1945).

Surat ❙ 1664 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Maratha warlord Shivaji followed an audacious raid on Poona (April 1663) by advancing against the key Mughal port of Surat, north of Bombay. When Governor Inayat-ulla Khan tried to assassinate him, Shivaji subjected the city to two days of destruction before withdrawing to meet an approaching Mughal army at Purandar. He returned in 1670 to sack the city again (8–9 January 1664).

Surat ❙ 1670 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

On a second raid against the wealthy Mughal port of Surat, north of Bombay, the great Maratha Shivaji learned it had only a weak garrison after the death of its Governor and attacked with a force of 15,000 horsemen. With three days of pillage, Shivaji completed the destruction he had started six years earlier, then withdrew to meet an approaching Mughal army at Dindori (3–6 October 1670).

Surigao Strait ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While one Japanese naval force was being checked in the central Philippines' Sibuyan Sea, further south Admirals Shoji Nishimura and Kiyohide Shima joined to break through the Surigao Strait into Leyte Gulf. In the last classic battleship line-action, American Admiral Jesse Oldendorf sank two Japanese battleships, a cruiser and three destroyers and halted Japan's advance (24–25 October 1944).

Surinam ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

To punish the occupation of Holland by Revolutionary France, a British force under Admiral Lord Hugh Seymour (Commander in Chief in Jamaica) and General Sir Thomas Trigge was sent to capture the Dutch colony of Surinam on the northeastern coast of South America. The colony fell with little resistance and was returned to the Dutch in 1802 (August 1800).

Surinam ❙ 1804 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

In recognition of the renewed French occupation of Holland, Britain once again sent a force to occupy the Dutch South American colony of Surinam, which had been returned in 1802. Commodore Samuel Hood (1722–1814) and General Sir Charles Green landed at the Surinam River and just three days of fighting saw the colony fall. It was held until the end of the war (25–28 April 1804).

Surveyors' Fight ❙ 1838 ❙ Kickapoo Indian Wars

See Battle Creek, Texas

Susangerd ❙ 1980 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

As Iraqi forces entered Khuzestan, they took undefended Susangerd (28 September) but left no garrison and it was retaken by Iran. After being repulsed at Dezful and Ahwaz in October, Iraq returned to launch a massive assault on the city yet failed, despite huge superiority in men and armour. Iran held the strategic salient at Susangerd and later launched its own offensive (13–21 November 1980).

Susangerd ❙ 1981 ❙ Iraq-Iran War

Having halted Iraqi invaders at Ahwaz and Susangerd in late 1980, Iran launched a poorly co-ordinated armoured counter-offensive south from Susangerd to relieve besieged Abadan. Advancing deep into Iraq's positions, the Iranians were attacked on three sides and withdrew after losing over 100 tanks. Iraq also suffered heavy losses though it was able to recover or replace its tanks (6–8 January 1981).

Sutherland Station ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union General Nelson A. Miles marched north towards the Appomattox River, west of Petersburg, Virginia, where he attacked and defeated Confederate forces under Generals Henry Heth and Cadmus Wilcox on the Southside Railroad at Sutherland Station. The Union victory cut the last rail supply route to besieged Petersburg, which was evacuated later that night (2 April 1865).

Suthul ❙ 109 BC ❙ Jugurthine War

When King Jugurtha of Numidia attacked Roman interests in North Africa, General Aulus Albinus took a large army against his fortress at Suthul, near Calama (modern Guelma) in northeastern Algeria. Aulus suffered a humiliating defeat and his army of 40,000 was reputedly forced to "pass under the yoke" before being allowed to withdraw. Rome was avenged a year later at the Muthul.

Sutia ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Shamsabad

Suvla Bay ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Gallipoli)

Determined to break the Gallipoli deadlock, British General Sir Frederick Stopford was sent north with 20,000 troops to Suvla Bay. However, his force failed to advance quickly enough and reinforced Turkish units met and contained the fresh landing. Stopford was dismissed and, after subsequent failure at Scimitar Hill, Suvla was evacuated 18–20 December (6–10 August 1915).

Suwayda ❙ 1925 ❙ Druze Rebellion

Druze Sultan al-Atrash rose against France's Mandate in Syria and routed a column at Kafr, then besieged the southeastern town of Suwayda. A relief column was destroyed at Mazraa, but new French commander General Maurice Gamelin broke through the siege. Desperately short of supplies, the French destroyed much of the town and withdrew to Damascus (21 July–24 September 1925).

Suwayda ❙ 1926 ❙ Druze Rebellion

On the offensive against Druze rebellion in southern Syria, French General Charles Andréa marched from Azra with Legionnaires and Tunisians to retake the key town of Suwayda, abandoned to rebels the previous September. Suwayda fell by assault with costly losses on both sides. Following a failed rising in Damascus, Druze Sultan al-Atrash soon fled to Jordan (25 April 1926).

Suzdal ❙ 1445 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

When Mongol Khan Ulug-Mahmed raided into Russia, Prince Vasili II of Moscow marched out and attacked the Khan at Suzdal, where Vasili was defeated and captured. After being ransomed and released, he was overthrown and blinded by his cousin Shemiaka (to avenge the blinding of his brother Kosoi by Vasili after Skoriatino). Shemiaka was eventually poisoned and Vasili restored.

Suzhou ❙ 475–473 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

In the struggle between Wu and Yeu for the fertile Yangzi Delta, King Goujian of Yeu defeated neighbouring Wu at the Lizhe (478 BC), then gathered a large army and invaded Wu to invest the capital at Suzhou (Soochow). After a three-year siege, the city fell and King Fuchai hanged himself. Wu was then incorporated into Yeu, which was in turn overwhelmed by Chu 140 years later.

Suzhou ❙ 1366–1367 ❙ Rise of the Ming Dynasty

Having defeated the Han at Poyang Lake, Ming commander Zhu Yuanzhang took a large army into Wu, where he besieged and took Huzhou and Hangzhou. Ming General Xu Da then besieged the city of Suzhou, held by Wu leader Zhang Shicheng. When Suzhou finally fell, Zhu had conquered all his main rivals and established the Ming Dynasty, which ruled until 1644 (27 December 1366–1 October 1367).

Suzhou ❙ 1863 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

On campaign west from Shanghai, Imperial commander Li Hongzhang besieged Suzhou and seized surrounding towns. Facing defeat, Taiping General Li Xuicheng withdrew, but Tan Shaoguang refused to surrender and was killed by a Taiping peace faction. Li Hongzhang seized the city, killing the traitors and their followers, then advanced on Changzhou (22 August–6 December 1863).

Sveaborg ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Shortly after the Russian invasion of Swedish Finland, Russian Count Jan van Suchtelen besieged the fortress of Sveaborg, outside Helsinki harbour. But the Swedish army under General Wilhelm Klingspor had already retreated north. After minimal fighting, commandant Admiral Karl Kronstedt shamefully surrendered the most powerful bastion in all Finland (3 May 1808).

Sveaborg ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

In a sidelight to war against Russia in the Crimea, Anglo-French forces in the Baltic under Admirals Sir Richard Dundas and Charles Penaud unsuccessfully blockaded Kronstadt, then bombarded the fortress of Sveaborg, off Helsinki harbour. After causing some damage and 56 casualties, the Allies withdrew. The focus of their attention then returned to the Black Sea (9–11 August 1855).

Svendborg ❙ 1535 ❙ Danish Counts' War

See Bornholm

Svenskund ❙ 1789 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

On the same day that the Swedish army under Gustav III was defeated at Fredriksham, on the Gulf of Finland east of Helsinki, Swedish Admiral Karl Ehrensward met Russian forces under Prince Charles Nassau-Siegen nearby on the Svenskund (Russian Rochensalm). The Swedish flotilla withdrew after heavy losses and Ehrensward lost again a week later off Hogfors (24 August 1789).

Svenskund ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

After inflicting heavy losses on the Swedish fleet escaping from Vyborg Bay, Russian Prince Charles Nassau-Siegen rashly attacked the Swedish ships on the nearby Svenskund, commanded by King Gustav III and Colonel Carl Cronstedt. A one-sided disaster cost the Russians more than 50 ships and massive casualties. However, Sweden quickly made peace without any gain (9–10 July 1790).

Sverdlovsk ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

See Ekaterinburg

Svetigrad ❙ 1448 ❙ Albanian-Turkish Wars

Ottoman Sultan Murad II invaded Albania to besiege Svetigrad (Kodjadjik), then advanced against Krujë. Albanian commander George Kastriote Skanderbeg broke off his siege of Venetian Danj, but before he could relieve Svetigrad, the Turks cut off its water and forced the city to surrender. The Turks were then defeated at Dibra before victory in October at Kossovo (June–August 1448).

Svistov ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Shortly after war was declared, Russian Grand Duke Nicholas advanced into northern Bulgaria and launched a surprise attack across the Danube at Svistov, opposite Zimnicea. The Turkish fortress fell to General Mikhail Skobelev and the Russians turned upstream towards Nicopolis before marching south against the key stronghold at Plevna (26–27 June 1877).

Svolde ❙ 1000 ❙ Scandinavian National Wars

Olaf I Tryggvason seized Norway's throne in 995 and was sailing to claim land in Pomerania when he was attacked southeast of Rügen near Svolde by Sweyn Forkbeard of Denmark, Norwegian Prince Eric Jarl and Olaf Skutkonung of Sweden. A semi-legendary naval battle saw Tryggvason defeated and apparently drowned. Norway was then divided between Sweden and Denmark (9 September 1000).

Swalde ❙ 1000 ❙ Scandinavian National Wars

See Svolde

Swally Roads ❙ 1612 ❙ Anglo-Portuguese Colonial Wars

At the mouth of the Tapti River, off Swally north of Bombay, the British galleon Red Dragon (Captain Thomas Best) and the pinnace Osiande, drove off four Portuguese galleons, marking the real beginning of Britain in India. A Portuguese attack on another British squadron in the Swally Roads was repulsed three years later (20 January 1615) by Captain Nicholas Dowton (29 November 1612).

Swansea ❙ 1675 ❙ King Philip's War

In bloody resistance against white settlement, Chief Metacomet of the Wampanoag—known by the colonists as King Philip—attacked the small town of Swansea, in southeast Massachusetts, south of Plymouth. The town was abandoned after about ten settlers were killed and it was burned by the Indians, triggering a bitter war in Massachusetts and Rhode Island (24 June 1675).

Swiecin ❙ 1462 ❙ Thirteen Years War

See Puck

Swift Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Campaigning north of Confederate Petersburg, Virginia, General Benjamin Butler destroyed rail track at Port Walthall Junction, then fought an inconclusive action against General Pierre G. T. Beauregard just to the west at Swift Creek. Instead of crossing the Appomattox to outflank the Confederates, Butler withdrew. Days later he advanced again towards Drewry's Bluff (9 May 1864).

Sword Beach ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See D-Day

Sybota ❙ 433 BC ❙ Corinthian-Corcyrean War

Two years after victory off Leucimne, Corcyra (modern Corfu) faced a new offensive by Corinth and a large action was fought at sea south of Corcyra off Sybota. The Corinthian fleet inflicted heavy losses but withdrew when a small Athenian squadron arrived to support Corcyra, allowing both sides to claim victory. Another Athenian check at Potidaea triggered the Second Peloponnesian War.

Sycamore Creek ❙ 1832 ❙ Black Hawk Indian War

See Rock River

Syllaeum ❙ 677 ❙ Early Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Despite defeat on land at Amorium (669), Caliph Mu'awiya established a presence in the Sea of Marmara at Cyzicus and began a blockade of Constantinople (672). However, Arab ships taking troops to reinforce the siege were heavily defeated at Syllaeum, including the first reported use of "Greek Fire." Defeat at sea forced withdrawal of the siege and eased the Arab threat to Eastern Europe.

Syme ❙ 411 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

With Sparta's navy campaigning along the coast of Asia Minor at Chios and Miletus, Spartan commander Astyochos was sent to defend Knidos and attacked Athenian Admiral Charminos off Syme, northwest of Rhodes. In Sparta's first naval victory of the renewed war, Charminos was defeated, with six ships lost. Athens won later that year at Cynossema (January 411 BC).

Syni Vody ❙ 1362 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

At the height of Lithuanian power, Grand Duke Algirdas (Olgierd) marched east against the Golden Horde of the Mongols on the Syniukha in the Ukraine. In the so-called Battle of Blue Water at Syni Vody (possibly near Torgovitsa east of Uman), Mongol expansion was finally checked and Algirdas then seized Kiev. In 1380 Mongols on the Don were destroyed at Kulikovo.

Syracuse ❙ 415 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Leading a massive expedition—reputedly comprising 260 ships and 27,000 men—Athenian General Nicias sailed for Sicily to attack the city-state of Syracuse. Nicias advanced against the fortified position at Olympieum, just west of the city, and defeated the Syracusan army in the field. However, he decided not to risk a siege of the city itself and withdrew up the coast to Catana.

Syracuse ❙ 414–413 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Athenian commander Nicias beat Syracusan forces outside the city and later led a fresh advance from Catana to besiege Syracuse, prompting Sparta to send reinforcements under Gylippus. A new Athenian force sent under Demosthenes tried to encircle Syracuse by occupying the Heights of Epipolae, but they were defeated in a confused night battle (May 414–September 413 BC).

Syracuse ❙ 396 BC ❙ 1st Dionysian War

Ten years after campaigning against the Greeks in Sicily to capture Acragas, Carthaginian General Himilco returned to recapture the island city of Motya from Dionysius the Elder, Tyrant of Syracuse, then marched against Syracuse itself. With his troops weakened by plague, Himilco could not resist a counter-attack by Dionysius. He was utterly defeated and later committed suicide.

Syracuse ❙ 311–307 BC ❙ Agathoclean War

Beaten by Carthaginians at the Himera River (June 311 BC), Agathocles of Syracuse withdrew under siege to his capital in eastern Sicily. Leading a counter-invasion against Carthage, Agathocles left his brother Antander in command. Carthaginian commander Hamilcar was later killed outside Syracuse. However, with defeat in Africa and rebellion in Sicily, Agathocles returned and made peace.

Syracuse ❙ 213–212 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Syracuse declared for Carthage and Rome sent Marcus Claudius Marcellus to Sicily, where he seized Leontini but failed to take Syracuse by storm. A two-year siege captured outer defences and, when fever struck the Syracusan army, killing its commander Hippocrates, Marcellus gained the rest of city through treachery. His troops led a destructive rampage, including killing the great mathematician Archimedes.

Syracuse ❙ 827–828 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

At the start of the Muslim conquest of Byzantine Sicily, Asad ibn al-Furat landed from North Africa with 10,000 men to capture Mazara, then marched east against Syracuse. During a yearlong siege, a great pestilence killed thousands of Arabs, including Asad. Threatened by reinforcements arriving from Constantinople, the survivors burned their ships and withdrew overland west to Mazara.

Syracuse ❙ 877–878 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Fifty years after an initial repulse at Syracuse, the Arab invaders of Sicily had seized most of the island, including Palermo and Messina. Djafar ibn Muhammad al-Tamini then led a large force to seize the great eastern city. Following a long siege, with no aid from the Emperor, Syracuse was starved into surrender. The fall of Taormina in 902 secured Muslim control of Sicily (August 877–21 May 878).

Syracuse ❙ 1085 ❙ Norman Conquest of Southern Italy

Norman victory in the north at Palermo in 1072 secured most of Sicily, though the Muslim champion Benavert (Ibn Abbad) continued war in the east of the island, attacking Catania and Calabria. Determined to crush resistance, Count Roger I of Sicily besieged Syracuse and Benavert was killed in battle for the port. The fall of Noti in 1091 completed the 30-year conquest of the island (25 May 1085).

Syracuse ❙ 1676 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Augusta, Sicily

Syracuse Harbour ❙ 413 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War

Having failed to blockade Syracuse by land, Athenians under Nicias and Demosthenes tried to break out of Great Harbour, where their fleet was stationed. But a decisive action against the combined Corinthian and Syracusan fleets saw the Athenian ships overwhelmed. Nicias and Demosthenes tried to retire overland but they were routed at the Assinarus and both were executed (September 413 BC).

Syr Darya ❙ 329 BC ❙ Conquests of Alexander the Great

See Jaxartes

Syr Darya ❙ 1389 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

While the Turko-Mongol Tamerlane campaigned in Persia, his rebellious former protégé Toktamish, Mongol Khan of the Golden Horde, crossed the Oxus to threaten Samarkand in Uzbeskistan. Pursued north to the Syr Darya River, Toktamish's rearguard suffered a terrible defeat at the hands of Tamerlane. The great conqueror beat him again three years later at Kunduzcha and finally at the Terek in 1395.

Syria ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Middle East)

With a pro-British government restored in Iraq, General Henry Wilson and Free French commander Paul Legentilhomme took a large force into Vichy Syria and Lebanon. There was sharp action before Damascus fell (21 June), but fighting continued at Palmyra before Vichy General Henri Dentz surrendered. Most of his troops returned home rather than join the Allies (8 June–14 July 1941).

Syriam ❙ 1613 ❙ Burmese Dynastic Wars

King Anaukpetlun resolved to restore control in Lower Burma and besieged the key port of Syriam, held since the fall of Pegu in 1599 by Portuguese adventurer Felipe de Brito, who had alienated his former Mon allies by looting and enforced conversions. With de Brito defeated, then executed by impalement, the Portuguese garrison was expelled and Anaukpetlun consolidated his kingdom.

Szalankemen ❙ 1691 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Slankamen

Szczara ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

Russian forces routed northeast of Warsaw on the Nieman retreated south and east under Generals Dimitri Shuvaev and Avgust Kork. They were attacked days later on the Szczara by Polish General Franciszek Krajowski and Byelorussian Cossack commander Stanislau Balakhovich. The Red Army suffered further terrible losses and within days Russia sued for peace (27–28 September 1920).

Szczekociny ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

In renewed Polish insurrection, the Russian garrison of Warsaw was bloodily expelled and Frederick William III of Prussia took his army into Poland. Commander Tadeusz Kosciuszko met the Prussians at Rawka village, near Szczekociny north of Cracow, where he was utterly crushed and retired to defend Warsaw. Although Cracow fell, Warsaw held out until the Prussians withdrew (6 June 1794).

Szentgotthard ❙ 1664 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See St Gotthard

Szentkiraly ❙ 1451 ❙ Hungarian Civil War

During a struggle for power in Hungary, Regent Janos Hunyadi took a force to besiege the northern fortress of Szentkiraly, near Lucenec in southern Slovakia, headquarters of General Jan Jiskraz of Brandysa. Jiskraz arrived and heavily defeated Hunyadi, though the Regent eventually neutralised his opponent. A truce was arranged the following year (10 August–7 September 1451).

Szepiele ❙ 1654 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

While Tsar Alexius besieged Smolensk, Prince Aleksei Trubetskoi's Southern Army captured Roslavl (June) and Msistlavl (July), then attacked Lithuanian Prince Janusz Radziwill at Szepiele, northwest of Minsk in Belarus. The Lithuanians and their Polish allies were heavily defeated and Smolensk soon fell before Trubetskoi was recalled to help meet a Swedish invasion (24 August 1654).

Szepingkau ❙ 1946 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Siping

Szigetvar ❙ 1566 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

When Turks under the elderly Sultan Suleiman I and Grand Vizier Sokollu Mehmet invaded Hungary, their advance in the southwest was blocked by the stubborn fortress at Szigetvar, held by Count Miklos Zrinyi. Szigetvar fell when Zrinyi and his entire garrison died in an heroic last charge. However, the Sultan had died two days earlier and his army withdrew (5 August–8 September 1566).

Sztum ❙ 1629 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

After failing to prevent Imperial General George von Arnim reinforcing Polish commander Stanislas Koniecpolski, Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden withdrew his outnumbered army through Marienwerder and was routed by Polish cavalry at nearby Sztum. The King narrowly escaped before withdrawing nine miles north to Marienburg. He soon made peace with Poland (27 June 1629).

Szylow ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Europe

See Cracow

T

Tabora ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

In support of the British offensive in German East Africa towards Morogoro, Belgian commander Charles Tombeur advanced from the Congo and attacked German General Kurt Wahle in a well-entrenched position at the strategic railway city of Tabora. After large-scale fighting, Wahle and Governor Heinrich Schnee withdrew south through Iringa (19 September 1916).

Tabriz ❙ 1585 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

At the head of a massive army, Grand Vizier Osman Pasha invaded Azerbaijan against Persian Prince Hamza Mirza. Despite previous Turkish defeat near Khoi (1584) Osman captured Tabriz, which remained 20 years in Turkish hands. However, Osman died soon afterwards, and Cighalzada Sinan Pasha led a costly retreat to Erzurum. Hamza was assassinated the following year (23 September 1585).

Tabriz ❙ 1603 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

Shah Abbas of Persia regained Herat and the Khorasan from the Uzbeks, then determined to march into the south Caucasus to recover territory lost to the Turks. After a long siege he recaptured Tabriz, then over the following year retook Erivan, Shirwan and Kars. Two years later a Turkish counter-offensive towards Tabriz was defeated at Sufiyan (21 October 1603).

Tabriz ❙ 1724–1725 ❙ Turko-Persian War

When Turkish forces had captured Erivan, Kopruluzadeh Abdallah Pasha marched into Azerbaijan against the heavily defended city of Tabriz. A Persian army was beaten at Tabriz, but after the defeat of a massive Turkish supply convoy the invaders withdrew. The following year they returned with an even larger force and Tabriz finally fell. Both sides were said to have lost at least 20,000 men.

Tacámbaro (1st) ❙ 1865 ❙ Mexican-French War

Colonel Charles-Marie de Potier attempted to block Mexican General Nicolás de Regules advancing towards Morelia and sent Belgian Major Constant Tydgadt to hold Tacámbaro, east of Uruapan. The massively outnumbered Belgians were routed, with Tydgadt fatally wounded, and 200 survivors surrendered. De Potier later pursued and defeated de Regules (11 & 23 April 1865).

Tacámbaro (2nd) ❙ 1865 ❙ Mexican-French War

Determined to avenge defeat months earlier, Imperial commander Baron Alfred von de Smissen, supported by Zouaves under Colonel Justin Clinchant and Mexicans led by Colonel Ramón Méndez, lured Republican General José María Arteaga into action near Tacámbaro. Arteaga was decisively defeated with heavy losses and he soon lost again at Santa Ana Amatlan (11 July 1865).

Tacaña ❙ 1871 ❙ Central American National Wars

Fifteen months after a false start at Palencia, Liberal Revolution began in Guatemala against President Vicente Cerna and a handful of rebels crossing from Mexico were attacked in the mountains at Tacaña by Captain Antonio Búcaro. Comparing themselves to the Spartans at Thermopylae, they beat the government force. Cerna was soon overthrown at San Lucas Sacatepéquez (2 April 1871).

Tacauri ❙ 1811 ❙ Paraguayan War of Independence

Near the start of her war against Spain, Argentina sent General Manuel Belgrano to incorporate Paraguay. Defeated by militia Colonel Manuel Atanasio Cavañas at Cerro Porteño (15 January), Belgrano met him again in the far south of the country at Tacauri. Cavañas secured another decisive victory, followed by armistice and eventual Paraguayan independence from Argentina (9 March 1811).

Tachau ❙ 1427 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Tachov

Tachov ❙ 1427 ❙ Hussite Wars

Despite Imperial defeat at Aussig (1426), a huge Catholic force under English Cardinal Henry Beaufort marched into Hussite Bohemia against Taborite leader Prokob the Bald, fresh from victory at Zwettl. The German Crusade reached Tachov (German Tachau), west of Pilsen, but fled in disorder before Prokob and the Praguers. There was no fresh crusade until Domazlice (4–11 August 1427).

Tacines ❙ 1814 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

Four months after capturing Popayán with victory at Calibio, Colombian General Antonio Nariño and Colonel José María Cabal marched south against the Spanish invaders at Pasto. Blocked at Tacines by Marshal Melchor Aymerich, Nariño defeated the Royalists. But when he attempted to seize Pasto, his army was driven off in confusion and the survivors struggled back to Popayán (9 May 1814).

Tacna ❙ 1880 ❙ War of the Pacific

After landing on the Peruvian coast, 10,000 Chileans under General Manuel Baquedano won at Los Angeles (22 March) then met the Peruvian-Bolivian allies led by General Narciso Campero at Alto de la Alianza, outside Tacna. Following costly fighting, with 2,000 Chilean and 3,000 Peruvian casualties, the Peruvians withdrew to make a stand against the invaders at Arica (26 May 1880).

Tacuarembó ❙ 1820 ❙ Brazilian Occupation of Uruguay

General José Gervasio Artigas tried to establish his authority in the north of modern Uruguay, where he came under attack by Portuguese forces from Brazil. His army under General Andrés Latorre was destroyed by Jose de Castlelo Branco Conde da Figueira in battle at the Tacuarembó Chico, leading to Brazilian occupation of the country. Artigas died in exile in Paraguay (22 January 1820).

Tacubaya ❙ 1859 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

The Liberal army under Santos Degollado, marching towards Mexico City, was attacked at nearby Tacubaya by Reactionary Generals Leonardo Márquez and Tomás Mejía. Degollado suffered a terrible defeat, with massive losses in men and arms and was pursued through Chapultepec. Márquez slaughtered the wounded and prisoners, becoming known as the Tiger of Tacubaya (11 April 1859).

Tadcaster ❙ 1642 ❙ British Civil Wars

With Leeds captured, Parliamentary forces under Ferdinando Lord Fairfax and his son Sir Thomas advanced to Tadcaster, near York, where they were attacked by William Cavendish Earl of Newcastle. While the Royalists were driven off, Fairfax withdrew to Selby due to lack of ammunition. Earl Newcastle's Cavaliers occupied Tadcaster the next day (6 December 1642).

Taddert ❙ 1907 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

Moroccan Chief Madoni el Glaoui had Casablanca under siege when General Antoine Drude led 2,000 foot and 300 cavalry against his camp eight miles away at Taddert. A slow textbook attack forced the Moroccans to withdraw but Drude failed to secure decisive victory. Although he was soon replaced, the French failed again in January 1908 at Settat and Wadi M'Koun (12 September 1907).

Taegu ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

See Naktong Bulge

Taejon ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

Storming south from Seoul, North Korean forces smashed through American defences at the Kum, then advanced to outflank the city of Taejon, held by General William Dean. Newly arrived anti-tank rockets helped slow the Communist advance, but the outnumbered Americans finally had to abandon Taejon. Dean was captured in the withdrawal towards the Pusan Perimeter (19–20 July 1950).

Tafalla ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Tiebas

Tafileh ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

In a rare set-piece battle during the Arab Revolt, Prince Feisal's brother Zeid seized Tafileh, a market town south of the Dead Sea, and prepared it against Turkish counter-attack. The ensuing action saw a 900-strong Turkish force routed, with a reported 400 killed and 200 captured. Major T. E. Lawrence was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel for planning the victory (16 & 23 January 1918).

Taghit ❙ 1903 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

On a fresh offensive in western Algeria near the Moroccan border, tribes united under Mulai Amar marched south from Béchar against Taghit, held by Captain Adolphe Susbielle. Checked by cannon and rifle fire with about 200 killed, the Moroccans eventually withdrew as reinforcements arrived. A week later they destroyed a supply column at El Moungar (17–26 August 1903).

Taginae ❙ 552 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

Emperor Justinian launched a decisive offensive to recover Italy from the Ostrogoths, sending General Narses with a large army to defeat Totila. In a mountain valley in the Apennines at Taginae, near modern Gubbio, north of Perugia, the outnumbered Goths were routed, with Totila among the dead. A final battle in 553 on Mount Lactarius, south of Naples, ended the power of the Ostrogoths.

Tagliacozzo ❙ 1268 ❙ Angevin Conquest of the Two Sicilies

Two years after Manfred of the Two Sicilies was killed at Benevento, his 16-year-old nephew, Emperor Conradin, invaded southern Italy to reclaim the Kingdom from Charles I of Anjou. Near the Salto River at Tagliacozzo, Conradin and his commander, Duke Frederick of Austria, were routed. Charles had them both executed, ending the Hohenstaufen Dynasty (23 August 1268).

Tagliamento ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

In a delaying action intended to halt Napoleon Bonaparte's advance into northeast Italy after his capture of Mantua, Archduke Charles of Austria spread his troops behind the Tagliamento River, from Latisana in the south to Gemona in the north. However, the French advance smashed through his centre near Codroipo and the Austrians withdrew east through Palmanova (16 March 1797).

Tagliamento ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

With Napoleon Bonaparte campaigning in Austria, Marshal André Masséna fought Archduke Charles in northern Italy at Caldiero, then attacked the Austrians at Tagliamento, where Masséna's Germans were forced back in a hard-fought action. However, when French reinforcements threatened to cut him off, Charles retired at night and later withdrew across the Alps (12 November 1805).

Taguanes ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

Advancing from San Carlos towards Caracas, Revolutionary leader Simón Bolívar set out to intercept 1,200 of General Juan Domingo Monteverde's troops withdrawing towards Puerto Cabello under Colonel Julián Izquierdo. Bolívar defeated and killed Izquierdo in a night cavalry attack at Taguanes, southwest of Valencia, then marched in triumph into Valencia and Caracas (31 July 1813).

Tagus ❙ 220 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Carthaginian General Hannibal Barca campaigning in central Spain was cut off at the Tagus by an estimated 100,000 local tribesmen from the Tagus north to the Durius (modern Duero). Crossing the Tagus at night by a secret ford, Hannibal attacked the barbarians and inflicted a terrible defeat with massive slaughter. Soon afterwards he triggered war against Rome by attacking the city of Saguntum.

Tahir ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Attempting to prevent Russian General Arzas Artemevich Tergukasov reinforcing the siege of Kars, Ahmed Mukhtar, Turkish commander in the Caucasus, ordered Mehmet Pasha to defend the village of Tahir in the Eleskirt Valley. Mehmet was heavily repulsed and killed and, after a costly failed counter-attack by Ahmed Mukhtar, the Turks withdew towards Erzurum (16 & 21 June 1877).

Tahkahokuty ❙ 1864 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

See Killdeer Mountain

Tahuda ❙ 683 ❙ Muslim Conquest of North Africa

See Biskra

Taierzhuang ❙ 1938 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

As Japanese forces converged on Xuzhou, Chinese commander Chiang Kai-shek sent Li Zongren northeast towards Taierzhuang, in southern Shandong on the railway from Jinan. A much-heralded victory saw two Japanese divisions besieged and virtually destroyed before heavy Japanese reinforcements arrived. Xuzhou was later abandoned (31 March–7 April 1938).

Taif ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

After the relatively easy capture of Yanbu for the Arab Revolt, Prince Abdullah took 5,000 men against Taif, southeast of Mecca, where a 3,000-strong garrison held out in the fort. Shelling by Egyptian and captured Turkish guns caused heavy damage, but Abdullah did not attack. With no hope of aid the Turks surrendered, yielding large quantities of guns and stores (16 July–22 September 1916).

Taif ❙ 1924 ❙ Saudi-Hashemite Wars

When Sharif Hussein in Jeddah presumptuously proclaimed himself Caliph, Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Nejd sent 3,000 Ikhwan warriors under Khalid ibn Lu'ay and Sultan ibn Bijad against Taif, defended by Hussein's son Ali. The much larger Hashemite army eventually abandoned Taif and Aziz captured Mecca to the north (13 October). The following year he took Medina (1–5 September 1924).

Taillebourg ❙ 1242 ❙ Anglo-French Wars

In support of local barons against Louis IX of France, led by Hugh de Lusignan Comte de la Marche, Henry III of England landed his army on the Bay of Biscay to regain Angevin land lost by his father, King John. Henry was defeated at Taillebourg, near the Charente River, southeast of Rochefort. A further defeat at Saintes next day forced him back to English-held Gascony (21 July 1242).

Taipingshan ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

A continued Japanese offensive in southern Manchuria saw Generals Motoharu Yamaji and Maresuke Nogi advance from Kaiping against Chinese commander Song Qing at Taipingshan, southwest of beleaguered Haicheng. The Chinese were driven out of their entrenchments with costly losses to heavy artillery fire and withdrew northwest towards Yingkou (21–31 February 1895).

Taiyuan ❙ 577 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

Concluding the long struggle for northern China, Emperor Wu of Northern Zhou (Western Wei) seized Pingyang, and advanced up the Fen River to Taiyuan against Emperor Gao Wei of Northern Qi (Eastern Wei). Outside Taiyuan, Wu defeated the army of Qi then took the city by storm. Gao Wei fled and was later killed. Wu then unified northern China under what soon became the Sui Dynasty.

Taiyuan ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Driving southwest from Beijing, Japan's Guandong Army shrugged off a costly flank attack at Pingsingguan (25 September) and advanced on Taiyuan. Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist forces attempted a forward defence, but after prolonged fighting to the north and east, the walled city fell by storm with heavy loss of life. The Chinese then withdrew west (September–8 November 1937).

Taiyuan ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Two months after the fall of Beijing, Communist Generals Nie Rongzhen and Xu Xiangqian in northern China renewed the attack on Taiyuan in Shanxi, under siege since July 1948. Local warlord Yan Xishan flew to Nanjing, supposedly to seek help, but did not return. His starving garrison under General Hosaku Imamura was overwhelmed in a bloody final assault (March–24 April 1949).

Takamatsu ❙ 1582 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Campaigning against the Mori in the west, Oda Nobunaga sent Toyotomi Hideyoshi, who took Kozuki and besieged Takamatsu (outside modern Okayama), held for the Mori by Shimizu Muneharu. Hideyoshi diverted the Ashimori River to flood the fortress and Muneharu committed seppuku. Hideyoshi then marched to Yamazaki against the retainer who had killed Nobunaga (June 1582).

Takashima ❙ 1281 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Hakata Bay

Takashiro ❙ 1587 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

Japanese ruler Toyotomi Hideyoshi intervened in northern Kyushu to repulse Satsuma forces, sending his half-brother Hashiba Hidenaga through Toshimitsu to besiege Takashiro in Hyuga, held by Yamada Shinsuke Arinoba. The fortress fell when a Satsuma relief force under Shimazu Iehisa was heavily repulsed. Hidenaga then marched south to join his brother attacking Kagoshima (24 May 1587).

Takkolam ❙ 949 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Parantaka of Chola annexed Tondaimandalam, where the Banas and Viadumbas appealed to Krishna III of Rashtrakuta. With his brother-in-law, Butuga II of Western Ganga, Krishna won a decisive battle at Takkolam, near Arakkonam. The Cholas were routed, with Crown Prince Rajaditya killed. Chola lost Tondaimandalam and also Madura, but remained a major power in southern India.

Takoon ❙ 1823 ❙ Cape Frontier Wars

The warrior-Queen Ma-Ntatisi and her son Sikonyela led a force of perhaps 40,000 Mantatees towards the Orange River to threaten Griquatown, west of Kimberley. Met at Takoon, near Lattakoo, by about 100 men under Griqua leaders Andries Waterboer and Adam Kok, the Mantatees were defeated with heavy losses, saving the northern border of the young Cape Colony (June 1823).

Taku Forts ❙ 1858 ❙ 2nd Opium War

See Dagu Forts

Taku Forts ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Opium War

See Dagu Forts

Taku Forts ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd Opium War
See Dagu Forts

Taku Forts ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion
See Dagu Forts

Talakad ❙ 1116 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars
The Hoysala King Vishnuvardhana determined to recover Gangavadi (modern Mysore State), which had been seized by the Chola. At Talakad, east of Mysore, his General Gangaraja won a brutal battle and Vishnuvardhana started the great temple of Belur to celebrate victory over the Chola Dynasty. But despite prolonged warfare he was never able to overthrow the hegemony of the Chalukya.

Talana Hill ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
When Boers invaded Natal and shelled General Sir William Penn Symons at Dundee, he attacked Lucas Meyer on nearby Talana Hill and drove the Boers off in a bloody action. The British suffered about 500 casualties, including Symons killed. With Dundee still under fire from Mpati Hill, General James Yule withdrew southwest through Rietfontein to Ladysmith (20 October 1899).

Talas ❙ 751 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars
As Tang Imperial forces advanced west into Transoxania, they were confronted in modern Kyrgyzstan by a Turkish-Arab Muslim force under Ziyad ibn-Salih. At the Talas River, northeast of Tashkent, in the only major battle between Chinese and Arab armies, Tang General Gao Xianzhi was defeated, halting Chinese expansion and securing Central Asia for Islam's sphere of influence.

Talavera de la Reina ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)
British General Sir Arthur Wellesley advanced along the Tagus from Portugal to support Spanish troops under General Gregorio Cuesta and reached Talavera de la Reina, southwest of Madrid, where the Allies beat a large French army led by King Joseph Napoleon and Marshal Claude Victor. Threatened in the north by Marshal Nicolas Soult, Wellesley eventually fell back to Portugal (28 July 1809).

Talavera de la Reina ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War
With Badajoz secured in August, the Nationalist army advanced on Madrid, and government forces tried to defend Talavera de la Reina, the last major city southwest of the capital. Heavy fighting saw rebel Colonel Carlos Asenio surround and seize the city. Further Nationalist forces then repulsed a Republican counter-attack before the advance continued through Chapinería (2–3 September 1936).

Talcahuano ❙ 1818 ❙ Chilean War of Independence
Attempting to reinforce Spanish-ruled Chile after defeat at the Maipú (5 April), Cadiz sent the frigate María Isabel and 11 transports with 2,000 troops and supplies, which were attacked at Talcahuano, just north of Concepción, by Chilean squadron commander Manuel Blanco Encalada. A decisive action saw all but one of the transports taken and the captured frigate entered Chilean service (26 October 1818).

Talegaon ❙ 1779 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War
See Wargaom

Taleh ❙ 1920 ❙ Wars of the Mad Mullah
Determined to finally crush Muhammad Abdullah Hassan of Somaliland, a major British force captured northern Dervish forts including Baran and Galiabur, then pursued the Mullah south and bombed him at Taleh (Taleex). The stronghold was captured by Captain Alan Gibbs of the Camel Corps. The Mullah escaped but soon died of influenza and the war ended (9 February 1920).

Tali-Ihantala ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)
See Ihantala

Talikota ❙ 1565 ❙ Wars of the Deccan Sultanates

Despite rivalry between the Deccan Sultanates, Ali Adil Shah of Bijapur, Husain Nizam Shah of Ahmadnagar, Ali Barid Shah of Bidar and Ibrahim Qutb Shah of Golconda temporarily united against Rama Raya of Vijayanagar. After a massive battle on the Krishna near Talikota, Rama Raya was executed and his capital was destroyed, effectively ending the 200-year Hindu Empire (23 January 1565).

Ta-ling-ho ❙ 1631 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

See Dalinghe

Talladega ❙ 1813 ❙ Creek Indian War

At war with the Creek following a massacre at Fort Mims, American General Andrew Jackson struck back at Littafatchee and Tallaseehatchee, then took over 2,000 men against Indians at Talladega, east of Birmingham, Alabama. More than 500 Creek were killed for minimal American losses, followed by another massacre at Hillabee, then a much bigger action at Horseshoe Bend (9 November 1813).

Tallaseehatchee ❙ 1813 ❙ Creek Indian War

Two months after disaster at Fort Mims, General Andrew Jackson destroyed Littafatchee, then sent 1,000 Tennessee militia under General John Coffee against the Creek at Tallaseehatchee, in modern Calhoun County, Alabama. A dawn attack saw the troops kill 186 men and capture 84 women and children for just five Americans killed. The General claimed no man escaped alive (3 November 1813).

Tallinn ❙ 1219 ❙ Danish Wars of Expansion

See Reval

Tallinn ❙ 1343 ❙ Wars of the Teutonic Knights

See Reval

Tallinn ❙ 1570–1571 ❙ Livonian War

See Reval

Tallinn ❙ 1790 ❙ 2nd Russo-Swedish War

See Reval

Tallinn ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

When German forces withdrew from Estonia after World War I, the Red Army invaded (22 November 1918), seizing much of the country and threatening Tallinn. A bold counter-attack near the capital saw General Johan Laidoner defeat the Russians and within two months he had driven them out of Estonia. In June he turned to defeat a German threat from Latvia at Cesis (7 January 1919).

Talmay ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Gray

Talneer ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

Moving to take possession of Talneer, ceded by Maratha Chieftain Mulhar Rao Holkar of Indore, British forces came under fire from the largely Arab mercenary garrison, which declined to surrender. British General Thomas Hislop stormed the fortress, on the Tapti southwest of Indore, then hanged the Maratha Governor and put the garrison of 300 to the sword (27 February 1818).

Tamai ❙ 1884 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

Generals Sir Gerald Graham and Sir Redvers Buller routed a Mahdist force at El Teb to relieve Tokar, then marched inland from the Red Sea port of Suakin against Dervish commander Osman Digna at Tamai. The Mahdists "broke a British square" in bloody fighting but were eventually driven off with great slaughter. However, Graham's force was withdrawn to Cairo (13 March 1884).

Tamames ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Lorenzo Duke del Parque marching north towards Salamanca reached Tamames, northeast of Ciudad Rodrigo, where he soundly defeated General Jean-Gabriel Marchand, commanding for Marshal Michel Ney. While the poorly managed French fled, abandoning Salamanca, Parque withdrew from the city two weeks later in the face of a counter-offensive (18 October 1809).

Tamaron ❙ 1037 ❙ Spanish Territorial Wars

In the Spanish territorial war following the death of Sancho the Great of Navarre, his son Ferdinand I of Castile marched against his brother-in-law, the 19-year-old King Bermudo III of Leon. Bermudo was defeated and killed at Tamaron, on the Carrion River east of Leon, and the crown of Leon was absorbed into the Kingdom of Castile (4 September 1037).

Tamatave ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

See Foule Point

Tamatave ❙ 1845 ❙ French Conquest of Madagascar

When new Queen Ranavalona I of Madagascar began to threaten Christians and foreigners, two French warships and one British bombarded Tamatave. While a joint landing party then seized an outer battery, the main fortress proved too strong and they had to withdraw with over 80 casualties. Madagascar was isolated from Europe until new King Radama II readmitted foreigners (15 June 1845).

Tamatave ❙ 1883 ❙ French Conquest of Madagascar

On a renewed offensive against Madagascar, French Admiral Pierre-Joseph Pierre occupied Majunga (May) then sailed to the east coast, where he bombarded and captured Tamatave. Pierre died soon afterwards. Following two years of further intermittent fighting, France signed a Treaty of Protectorate to secure Diego Suarez and territory in northern Madagascar (June 1883).

Tammerfors ❙ 1714 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Storkyro

Tammerfors ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

See Tampere

Tampa ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

A bold action against Tampa, on the west coast of Florida, saw a Union gunboat under Captain Andrew J. Drake demand the surrender of the town. Drake opened fire when Captain John W. Pearson of the local Osceola Rangers refused to yield, but after two days of unsuccessful intermittent shelling, the Union force had little choice except to withdraw (3 June–1 July 1862).

Tampere ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

White commander Carl Gustav Mannerheim led a massive offensive in southwest Finland, launching a converging attack on Tampere, defended by Hugo Salmela. Heavy bombardment saw the city taken by storm at the cost of 600 Whites killed. However, the decisive action also saw the Reds lose 2,000 killed and 11,000 captured, with further losses at Helsinki and Vyborg (3–5 April 1918).

Tampico ❙ 1829 ❙ Spanish Invasion of Mexico

Five years after creation of the Mexican Republic, 3,000 Spanish troops from Havana under General Isidro Barradas seized Tampico. Sailing north from Veracruz with 2,500 men, General Antonio de Santa Anna routed the invaders on the nearby Panuco and the Spanish expedition to recover Mexico surrendered. Santa Anna was proclaimed hero of Tampico (29 July–11 September 1829).

Tampico ❙ 1839 ❙ Mexican Federalist War

When Federalists rose against Mexican President Anastasio Bustamente, General José Urrea fled north from defeat at Acajete (3 May) to join General Ignacio Escalada under siege at Tampico by Centralist General Mariano Arista. Heavily outnumbered, Escalada was forced to capitulate. The loss of the Gulf coast port was a major blow to the Federalist cause (26 May–4 June 1839).

Tamsui ❙ 1884 ❙ Sino-French War
See Tanshui

Tanagra ❙ 457 BC ❙ 1st Peloponnesian War
Facing the threat of a military alliance between Sparta and Thebes, Athenian commander Myronides marched into Boeotia and met a combined force at Tanagra, east of Thebes. After heavy losses on both sides, Athens was defeated when Thessalian cavalry deserted. Despite the victory, Sparta was not able to prevent Athens seizing control of Thebes just two months later at Oenophyta.

Tanagra ❙ 426 BC ❙ Great Peloponnesian War
After a failed expedition against Melos with 60 ships, Athenian commander Nicias landed in Boeotia with 2,000 Hoplites and advanced on Tanagra to support the field army under Hipponicus and Eurymedon marching north from Athens. The main Boeotian army escaped the trap, but at Tanagra the Athenians defeated the Tanagrans (along with some Thebans) then returned to Athens.

Tananarive ❙ 1895 ❙ French Conquest of Madagascar
General Jacques Duchesne, advancing into Madagascar through Tsarasoatra and Andriba, suffered terrible losses from malaria, and led a selected party forward against the capital Tananarive. Queen Ranavalona III surrendered after a brief bombardment, and was later exiled. Securing the whole country had cost France more than 6,000 lives, all but a handful lost to disease (30 September 1895).

Tanga ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)
A disastrous expedition to German East Africa began when 8,000 Anglo-Indian troops under Colonel Arthur Aitken landed near Tanga (in modern Tanzania). Colonel Paul von Lettow-Vorbeck and about 1,000 men routed the British in a confused action, during which swarms of bees attacked both sides. Aitken withdrew with over 800 casualties and was dismissed (4 November 1914).

Tanghangpo ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea
Korean Admiral Yi Sun-shin assaulted the main Japanese fleet in the islands off southern Korea, inflicted costly losses at Sachon and Tangpo, before attacking 26 Japanese ships off Tanghangpo Bay, west of Pusan. Lured into pursuit, the Japanese commander was defeated and killed, and Yi's triple victory was complete, costing a total of 72 Japanese ships destroyed (13 July 1592).

Tangier ❙ 1437 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in North Africa
Twenty-two years after Portugal captured Ceuta, on the African side of the Strait of Gibraltar, King Duarte I sent his brothers Henry and Ferdinand against nearby Tangier. The siege was disastrously defeated by Governor Salat ben Salat, who accepted Portuguese surrender in return for Ceuta. Ferdinand was held for ransom and died in captivity when Ceuta was not handed over (September–October 1437).

Tangier ❙ 1471 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in North Africa
See Arsilah

Tangpo ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea
As the main Japanese fleet arrived west of Pusan, Korean Admiral Yi Sun-shin inflicted a costly defeat off Sachon. Three days later he attacked 21 Japanese ships at Tangpo, off the Hansan Strait. During a decisive action in narrow waters, Admiral Kurushima Michiyuki was defeated and killed. Yi then sailed north to complete his triple victory at Tanghangpo (11 July 1592).

Tangumdae ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea
See Chongju

Tanizahua ❙ 1821 ❙ Ecuadorian War of Independence

Determined to avenge defeat at Huachi in late 1820, Patriot Colonel José Garcia marched southwest on Royalist Guaranda, west of Riobambo. A few miles away at Tanizahua, he was ambushed and routed by Royalists under Francisco Xavier Benavides, losing over 500 killed or captured. Garcia was executed, but within a year the Patriots were avenged at Yaguachi and Huachi (3 January 1821).

Tanjore ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

French Governor General Comte Thomas Lally captured British Fort St. David, on India's southeast coast, then marched inland to besiege Tanjore (modern Thanjavur). However, he lacked sufficient ammunition for his guns. When Admiral Ann-Antoine d'Aché was repulsed in battle off Negapatam (3 August), Lally abandoned the siege and returned to the coast (18 July–10 August 1758).

Tannenberg ❙ 1410 ❙ Later Wars of the Teutonic Knights

On a massive offensive against the Teutonic Order, Ladislav II of Poland and Grand Duke Witold of Lithuania met the German knights in a decisive and bloody action between Tannenberg and Grunwald in East Prussia. Grand Master Ulrich von Jungingen was killed, along with half his army, but the Order's capital at Marienburg held out against siege until the allies withdrew (15 July 1410).

Tannenberg ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Marching into eastern Pussia through Orlau-Frankenau, Russian General Aleksander Samsonov advanced on Paul von Hindenburg near Tannenberg (Grunwald, Poland). Samsonov committed suicide after losing 125,000 men and 400 guns to a double envelopment. Hindenburg then turned north to destroy another Russian army at the Masurian Lakes (26–31 August 1914).

Tanshui ❙ 1884 ❙ Sino-French War

While French forces blockaded Chilung in northern Taiwan to support the war against China in Vietnam, Admiral Sébastien Lespès sailed against the port of Tanshui (Tamsui), 20 miles west, where the river mouth was well protected by a barrage of sunken ships. Lespès landed 600 men but had to withdraw after heavy fighting. The French then established a naval blockade (2 October 1884).

Tanta ❙ 1768 ❙ Mamluk Wars

Mamluk leader Ali Bey returned from exile in Upper Egypt to secure Cairo from his rivals Khalil Bey and Husayn Bey Kashkash (October 1767), then sent General Abu'l-Dhahab northwest to besiege the rebels at Tanta. Khalil and Kashkash were eventually defeated and killed—reportedly while trying to surrender—and Ali Bey continued to assert independence from the Ottomans (May 1768).

Tan-Tan ❙ 1979 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

With Algerian aid, Polisario guerillas from Western Sahara opened a new offensive into southern Morocco, where they overwhelmed the garrison to fight their way into the strategic coastal town of Tan-Tan. The rebels destroyed military installations and the power station before withdrawing. Moroccan field commander Colonel Abdelaziz Bennani was dismissed (28 January 1979).

Taormina ❙ 902 ❙ Byzantine-Muslim Wars

In order to complete the Muslim seizure of Sicily, largely secured with the fall of Syracuse in 878, Sultan Ibrahim II abdicated in favour of his son Abdallah to take personal control of operations on the island. The city of Taormina, on the east coast at the foot of Mount Etna, was the main last Byzantine stronghold, and its fall effectively concluded the 80-year conquest of Sicily (1 August 902).

Taos ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

See Pueblo de Taos

Tapae ❙ 86 ❙ Domitian's Dacian War

Decebalus of Dacia invaded Roman Moesia (roughly Bulgaria), where he killed Governor Oppius Sabinius. Emperor Domitian then sent a large force under his Prefect of the Praetorian Guards, Cornelius Fuscus, who used a bridge of boats to cross the Danube into Dacia itself. In a disastrous defeat near the Dacian capital at Tapae, Fuscus was killed along with up to two entire Legions.

Tapae ❙ 88 ❙ Domitian's Dacian War

Two years after a Roman disaster in Dacia at Tapae, Emperor Domitian sent a fresh army against Decebalus of Dacia, who was threatening Roman Moesia. Veteran Roman commander Tettius Julianus led his Legions across the Danube and routed Decebalus at Tapae, on the plain of Caransebes in modern Romania. However, Rome was threatened by other enemies and agreed to make peace.

Tapae ❙ 101 ❙ 1st Dacian War

Fifteen years after his previous defeat, Decebalus of Dacia renewed war against Rome, and Emperor Trajan crossed the Danube to secure Tibiscum. He then met the Dacian army near Tapae, in modern Romania. After very heavy fighting both sides withdrew to winter quarters. However, peace talks failed and the following year Trajan attacked again for victory near the capital Sarmizegethusa.

Tappan Zee ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In a demonstration of British naval power, a small flotilla under Captain Hyde Parker in the frigate Phoenix broke through American defences on the Hudson and sailed upriver to the Tappan Zee, north of Irvington. Colonel Benjamin Tupper failed in an assault on the flotilla (3 August) and, after another unsuccessful attack, Parker ran the gauntlet back down the Hudson (12 July–18 August 1781).

Tapti ❙ 1428 ❙ Malwa-Bahmani Wars

See Kherla

Tara ❙ 980 ❙ Later Viking Raids on Britain

Following expulsion from Northumbria after Stainmore (954), Olaf Sihtricsson returned to Ireland and led the Danes of Dublin in a long campaign against the native Kings. A decisive battle at Tara, near the Boyne, saw Olaf's heir Reginald defeated and killed by Malachy II. Olaf went into exile, ending the Norse Kingdom of Dublin (apart from a Danish rising in 1014 at Clontarf).

Tara ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

At the start of the rebellion in Ireland, about 4,000 rebels gathered at the historic meeting place on Tara Hill, in County Meath, were attacked by 400 Fencibles led by Captain Blanche, supported by a six pounder. The rebels were driven out of their position with about 350 dead, against reported Loyalist losses of just 13 killed and 28 wounded (26 May 1798).

Tarain ❙ 1191 ❙ Later Muslim Conquest of Northern India

See Taraori

Tarain ❙ 1216 ❙ Wars of the Delhi Sultanate

See Taraori

Tarakan ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Following heavy bombardment, Australians under General George Wootten landed on Tarakan Island, off northeast Borneo, with its vital airfield and oilfields. The garrison of about 2,000 Japanese fought a bitter defence before being finally driven out with flamethrowers and napalm. The battle cost 240 Australians, and about ten Americans killed and up to 1,600 Japanese dead (1 May–14 June 1945).

Taranto ❙ 1501–1502 ❙ Italian War of Louis XII

After France and Spain had agreed to divide up Naples, Louis XII of France re-invaded northern Italy and Spanish General Gonsalvo de Cordoba besieged Taranto, held by Ferdinand, son of Ferdinand II of Naples. Taranto was captured when Cordoba took ships overland to attack the city from a lake in the rear and Spain and France resumed their war (August 1501–March 1502).

Taranto ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (War at Sea)

A brilliant coup which presaged Pearl Harbour saw Swordfish torpedo bi-planes from the British aircraft carrier Illustrious (Admiral Arthur Lyster) attack the Italian fleet at anchor in Taranto. At the cost of just two aircraft shot down, the British sank three battleships and a heavy cruiser. Within six months, all losses except one battleship had been refloated and repaired (11 November 1940).

Taraori ❙ 1191 ❙ Later Muslim Conquest of Northern India

Muhammad of Ghor led a major expedition from the Punjab to the Upper Ganges, where his Muslim-Afghan force met a Hindu army under Raja Prithvaraja of Delhi. At Taraori, near Thanesar on the Saraswati River, north of Ahmadabad, Muhammad was wounded and heavily defeated. He returned a year later and was avenged by victory in another battle near the same location.

Taraori ❙ 1192 ❙ Later Muslim Conquest of Northern India

On a second expedition from the Punjab to the Upper Ganges, the Muslim-Afghan forces of Muhammad of Ghor returned to Taraori, near Thanesar on the Saraswati River north of Ahmadabad. Reversing the previous year's defeat, the Muslim archers defeated Hindu commander Raja Prithvaraja of Delhi, who was captured and executed. Muhammad then took Delhi and the rest of northern India.

Taraori ❙ 1216 ❙ Wars of the Delhi Sultanate

Driven out of Ghazni by Ala-ud-Din Muhammad of Ghor, the Afghan Tajuddin Yildoz marched into India and seized Lahore from Qabacha Nasiruddin, Governor of Sind, then faced an army under Sultan Iltutmish of Delhi. At Taraori, north of Ahmadabad, Yildoz was heavily defeated and taken prisoner by Iltutmish. He was then sent to Badaun and put to death (25 January 1216).

Tarapacá ❙ 1879 ❙ War of the Pacific

A week after Chilean forces captured Iquique near San Francisco, 2,000 men under Colonel Luis Arteaga advancing inland against Tarapacá were intercepted at night by a much larger Peruvian army led by General Juan Buendía. Arteaga had unwisely divided his force and suffered a disastrous defeat, losing almost 700 casualties before being forced to withdraw to Tamarugal (27 November 1879).

Tarascan Frontier ❙ 1478 ❙ Aztec Wars of Conquest

As the Aztec Empire expanded, Emperor Axayacatl then took a reported 24,000 men west against the rival Tarascans, based around Lake Pátzucuaro in Michoacán. In a series of battles along the Tarascan frontier, Axayacatl found himself badly outnumbered and lost perhaps 20,000 men before returning to Tenochtitlan. It was one of the worst defeats of an Aztec army before the Spanish Conquest.

Tarawa ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Admiral Henry Hill and General Julian Smith attacked Tarawa, in the Gilbert Islands, where the largest island Betio was fiercely defended by 4,800 Japanese under Admiral Shibasaki Keiji. The Americans took the atoll, killing the entire garrison, though losses of 1,000 killed and 2,000 wounded made it one of the bloodiest actions for its size in American history (20–24 November 1943).

Tarbes ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Withdrawing weeks after defeat north of the Pyrenees at Orthez, French Marshal Nicolas Soult faced Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington advancing from Aire, reinforced by Sir William Beresford from Bordeaux and fresh Spanish troops under General Manuel Freire. Soult fought a desperate rearguard action at Tarbes, on the Upper Adour, then escaped towards Toulouse (20 March 1814).

Targu Jiu ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

Despite defeat in southern Transylvania at Hermannstadt (29 September), Romanians held the key Carpathian passes and General Erich von Falkenhayn sent his Germans west against the Vulcan Pass. While an initial attack was repulsed, a second reinforced assault broke through to Targu Jiu and the Germans advanced through Craiova towards Bucharest (23–27 October & 11–15 November 1916).

Tarifa ❙ 1340 ❙ Later Christian Reconquest of Spain

See Rio Salado

Tarifa ❙ 1811–1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

In an unwise mid-winter campaign, French Marshal Nicolas Soult sent General Jean Francois Leval against the fortress of Tarifa, west of Gibraltar, defended by British Colonel John Skerrett and Spanish General Francisco Copons. Bogged down by mud, and facing disease and inadequate ammunition, Leval withdrew after losing over 500 men (20 December 1811–4 January 1812).

Tarnopol ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

With Russia's Kerensky Offensive halted southeast of Lemberg (Lvov) around Brzezany, Austro-German forces under effective command of General Max Hofmann launched a massive counter-offensive towards General Ivan Erdeli around Tarnopol. The strategic railway city fell in two days, fatally exposing Russia's left flank, and the entire Eastern Front collapsed (19–21 July 1917).

Tarnopol ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

After driving the Germans out of Kamenets Podolsk, southeast of Lvov, the First Ukrainians of Marshal Georgi Zhukov advanced north to besiege German forces in the key city of Tarnopol. Many men were lost in an attempted breakout and commander General Egon von Neidorff was killed in very heavy fighting before the city fell. Lvov was taken three months later (23 March–15 April 1944).

Tarnow ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Gorlice-Tarnow

Tarontin ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

In advance of the French retreat from Moscow, Napoleon Bonaparte sent Marshal Joachim Murat probing towards the southwest, where he met Prince Mikhail Kutuzov at Tarontin, just west of Vinkovo. Murat's cavalry was ambushed by Russian artillery, and suffered heavy casualties, but Murat remained in the area until French defeats at Vinkovo and Maloyaroslavetz (6 October 1812).

Tarq ❙ 1002 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

Mahmud of Ghazni marched into the Seistan region on the Eastern Iran border, where he attacked Khalaf ibn Ahmad, who was facing a rebellion of nobles after murdering his son. Besieged at the fortress of Tarq, Khalaf suffered a terrible defeat and surrendered. Mahmud left General Habib Qinji in command but had to return a year later to Uk to complete his conquest (November 1002).

Tarq ❙ 1051 ❙ Seljuk Wars of Expansion

Determined to counter Seljuk expansion into eastern Iran, Ghaznavid General Toghril (Qiwan al Daula) besieged Tarq. A Seljuk relief force under Bighu and Abu l'Fadl was repulsed and commander Hilal Daraqi died defending Tarq. However, Toghril could not capture the fortress and withdrew. In 1052 he briefly usurped the throne of Ghazni, but was assassinated (10 November–23 December 1051).

Tarqui ❙ 1829 ❙ Peruvian-Colombian War

When President José de Lamar of Peru invaded Ecuador to annexe Guayaquil, the country was defended by outnumbered Colombian Marshal Antonio José de Sucre. Following a costly Peruvian defeat south of Cuenca at Tarqui, near Giron, de Lamar withdrew. After signing peace he was overthrown by Agustín Gamarra. Sucre was assassinated the following year (28 February 1829).

Tarracina ❙ 314 BC ❙ 2nd Samnite War

On an offensive south of Rome, Samnite forces attacked the powerful coastal fortress of Tarracina (modern Terracina), midway between Rome and Naples near Caudium. Very heavy fighting saw the Samnites repulsed in a courageous defence by Caius Sulpicius Longus, supported by Peotelius, and the strategic citadel was saved.

Tarraco ❙ 218 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Despite Carthaginian invasion of Italy for victory at the Ticinus and Trebbia, General Publius Scipio led two Legions on a counter-offensive into Spain. Marching south to Tarraco (modern Tarragona) Scipio defeated Carthaginian commander Hanno and his local auxiliaries. Hanno and local Chief Andobales were captured and Rome secured northeast Spain as far as the Ebro River.

Tarraco ❙ 422 ❙ Roman-Vandal Wars

Campaigning in eastern Spain, the Vandal King Gunderic defeated the Suevi, then met Roman commander Flavius Castinus near Tarraco (modern Tarragona). Following desertion by their Visigoth allies, the Roman army suffered a devastating defeat and the Vandals became masters of Spain. After Gunderic's death a few years later his brother Gaiseric built a kingdom in North Africa.

Tarragona ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

General Louis Suchet left Marshal Jacques Macdonald besieging Figueras and invested the strategic Catalan seaport of Tarragona, defended by Spanish General Juan Contreras. The fall of the city effectively secured French control of the entire Catalan seacoast. Suchet was created a Marshal in recognition as he moved on to the siege of Valencia (4 May–28 June 1811).

Tarragona ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Ordered into action to divert Marshal Louis Suchet in Valencia, General Sir John Murray led an incompetent amphibious landing in Catalonia to besiege French-held Tarragona. Despite strong support from Spanish General Francisco Copon, when Murray was threatened by Suchet he withdrew to Alicante, abandoning his guns and stores. He was later court-martialled (3–12 June 1813).

Tarrant's Tavern ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British commander Charles Earl Cornwallis advanced into North Carolina from victory at Cowan's Ford, then the same day sent Tory cavalry Colonel Banastre Tarleton ten miles ahead against rebels at Tarrant's Tavern. Repaying his recent terrible defeat at Cowpens, Tarleton dispersed the rebel militia and the British continued north towards Guildford Courthouse (1 February 1781).

Tarshiha ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

Days after Arabs attacked Manara, Jewish commander Moshe Carmel led a converging offensive against the Lebanese enclave inside Galilee. Heavy fighting saw success in the east at Safad, but a Jewish column, with Druze support, was repulsed with costly losses in the west at Tarshiha. After heavy bombing the town fell by assault, followed by a ceasefire in the north (28–30 October 1948).

Tarsus ❙ 965 ❙ Later Byzantine-Muslim Wars

Determined to drive the Muslims from Asia Minor, Emperor Nicephorus II Phocas captured Adana (964) then marched east to besiege the key fortress of Tarsus in Cilicia, held for Sayf ad-Dawla, Emir of Aleppo. The city fell and became Christian once again after Muslim residents abandoned the defence and fled into Syria, where Nicephorus soon captured Antioch and Aleppo (16 August 965).

Tarsus ❙ 1097 ❙ 1st Crusade

Detaching themselves from the main Crusader advance towards Antioch, Syria, Tancred (cousin of Bohemund of Taranto) and Baldwin (brother of Godfrey of Bouillon) took a small force and drove south to the coast of Cilicia. They captured the city of Tarsus after hard fighting, then quarrelled over its possession and Baldwin departed to establish his own Principality at Edessa (September 1097).

Tarvis ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte smashed the Austrians in northern Italy, then despatched General André Masséna to cut off their withdrawal through the Carnic Alps at Tarvis. Although Masséna reached the pass first he was repulsed by an Austrian advance force under General Adam Bajalich. However, Masséna routed the Austrians in the decisive battle next day at Malborghetto (22 March 1797).

Ta-shih-ch'iao ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Dashiqiao

Tashkent ❙ 1365 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

On campaign against the Mongol Emirs Tamerlane and Husayn, Khan Ilyas Khoja of Mughalistan marched west to the Syr Darya River and the armies met near Tashkent in Uzbekistan. After a violent storm turned the battlefield into mud, Tamerlane and his brother-in-law Husayn fled, leaving a reported 10,000 dead. Ilyas Khoja then advanced to a failed siege of Samarkand.

Tashkent ❙ 1865 ❙ Russian Conquest of Central Asia

At the start of a new offensive into Central Asia, 2,000 Russians under Colonel Mikhail Chernyaev marched on the key city of Tashkent in the Khanate of Bokhara. The city fell after a sharp action and later became capital of the new territory of Russian Turkestan. Within ten years the Russians had captured Bokhara itself and seized the Khanates of Khiva and Khokand (17 May 1865).

Tashkessan ❙ 1878 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Covering the Turkish withdrawal down the Maritsa Valley from Plovdiv to Adrianople, just 2,000 men under Valentine Baker (a disgraced British officer in Turkish service) made a stand at Tashkessan, near Kharmanli. The gallant rearguard held off Russian General Ossip Gourko for ten hours, allowing Shakir Pasha to withdraw, but Baker lost half of his men (1 January 1878).

Tash Kupri ❙ 1885 ❙ Russo-Afghan War

See Penjdeh

Tassafaronga ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Admiral Raizo Tanaka used destroyers as transports in a final attempt to reinforce Guadalcanal where he was met after midnight by a cruiser squadron under Admiral Carleton Wright. Tanaka's torpedoes sank one American cruiser and badly damaged three others for the loss of one Japanese destroyer. However, his landing was repulsed (30 November–1 December 1942).

Tatarahama ❙ 1336 ❙ Ashikaga Rebellion

Driven out of Honshu after defeat at Kyoto in February, rebel Samurai leader Ashikaga Takauji gathered support for his opposition to Emperor Go-Daigo, then attacked the Imperialist Kikuchi clan under Kikuchi Taketoshi at Tatarahama, near Hakata. The Ashikaga allies secured a decisive victory and Takauji returned to Honshu in July for his greatest battle at the Minatogawa (14 April 1336).

Tatayiba ❙ 1867 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Campaigning from besieged Humaitá in southwest Paraguay, General Bernadino Caballero's Paraguayans were ambushed about three miles away at Tatayiba by a large Brazilian force under Marshal Luíz Alves de Lima Marquis de Caxias. Caballero was badly beaten and driven back, losing about 500 men on a desperate fighting withdrawal to the protection of the fortress (21 October 1867).

Tatishchevo ❙ 1774 ❙ Pugachev Rebellion

Cossack rebel Emelyan Pugachev had besieged the Ural city of Orenburg for six months when General Pyotr Mikhailovich Golitsyn arrived with a relief army of 6,500 men and 25 guns to attack the larger rebel force defending nearby Tatishchevo. When the undisciplined rebels were destroyed, with 2,500 killed and 4,000 more captured, Pugachev fled and the siege collapsed (22 March 1774).

Ta-Tung Mountains ❙ 1852 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Dadong Mountains

Tauberbischofsheim ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Following Prussian victory at Aschaffenburg, General Erwin von Manteuffel led the advance southeast towards the Tauber, where General Karl von Wrangel attacked Tauberbischofsheim, held by Würtembergers under General Oskar Hardegg. Driven off by artillery fire, Hardegg withdrew northeast through Gerchsheim to Würzburg. Meanwhile, other Prussians advanced through Werbach (24 July 1866).

Tauffes ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General Jean-Joseph Dessoles advancing towards Switzerland met Austrian General Johann Loudon, who was trying to prevent him joining Claude-Jacques Lecourbe's Rhine army. In the Italian Alps near the Swiss border at Tauffes, Dessoles routed the Austrians, inflicting almost 6,000 casualties and 4,000 prisoners. He entered Glurns next day before joining Lecourbe (25 March 1799).

Taunton ❙ 1645 ❙ British Civil Wars

Fresh from defending Lyme, Parliamentary Colonel Robert Blake captured Taunton in Somerset (8 July 1644) and later faced a siege by George Lord Goring. A small reinforcement under Colonel Ralph Weldon broke in (May) and Blake held out until the Royalists withdrew to meet an approaching force under Sir Thomas Fairfax and were defeated at Langport (11 March–4 July 1645).

Tauris ❙ 47 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Despite Pompey's great defeat at Pharsalus (48 BC), Pompeian Admiral Marcus Octavius besieged the Adriatic city of Epidauris (modern Cavtat near Dubrovnik) held by Quintus Cornificus. With a much smaller fleet, Caesarian Admiral Publius Vatinius boldly attacked Octavius near Tauris (modern Scedro). Octavius was defeated and driven out of the Adriatic and Epidauris was relieved.

Tauromenium ❙ 133 BC ❙ 1st Servile War

After local failure to suppress a large-scale slave rebellion in Sicily—led by Eunus the Syrian and a Cilician named Cleon—Rome despatched veteran Publius Rupilius, who besieged the coastal city of Tauromenium (modern Taormina). After desperate resistance, the starving city fell by treachery. Prisoners were tortured to death and Rupilius turned to attack the main rebel stronghold at Enna.

Tauromenium ❙ 36 BC ❙ Wars of the Second Triumvirate

Two days after an indecisive clash with Agrippa at sea off Mylae, Sextus Pompeius (Pompey the Younger) slipped through the Straits of Messina and ambushed the remainder of Octavian's fleet off the Sicilian east coast city of Tauromenium (modern Taormina). While Sextus destroyed more than 50 rival ships, his victory was reversed two weeks later at Naulochus (15 August 36 BC).

Taus ❙ 1431 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Domazlice

Taveta ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

See Salaita

Tawurgah ❙ 761 ❙ Berber Rebellion

Continuing the rebellion against Arab rule, the Berber Abu al-Khattab extended control over Tripolitania, Tunisia and eastern Algeria, then defeated Arab armies at Surt (759) and Maghamadas (760). But at Tawurgah, east of Tripoli, Arab General Ibn al Ash'ath decisively defeated and killed al-Khattab and about 12,000 of his followers. Arab rule was then gradually restored (June 761).

Tayasal ❙ 1697 ❙ Spanish-Itzá War

See Nojpeten

Tayeizan ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

See Ueno

Tay Ket ❙ 1285 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Siming

Taylor's Bridge ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See North Anna

Ta-yüan ❙ 102 BC ❙ Wars of the Former Han

See Dayuan

Tblisi ❙ 1795 ❙ Persian-Georgian War

See Tiflis

Tcherkovna ❙ 1829 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

See Kulevcha

Tchermen ❙ 1371 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

See Maritza

Tchernaya ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

See Chernaya

Tchernigov ❙ 1078 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

See Nezhatina Niva

Tchernigov ❙ 1094 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

See Chernigov

Tchesme ❙ 1770 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

See Chesme

Tczew ❙ 1627 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden supported his siege of Danzig in Polish Prussia by capturing nearby Kasemark, then attacking Polish commander Stanislas Koniecpolski south of Danzig at Tczew (German Dirschau). In a two-day battle the Swedish cavalry were at first brilliantly successful, before Gustavus was wounded and withdrew. Two years later he was defeated at Sztum (7–8 August 1627).

Te Ahuahu, Bay of Islands ❙ 1845 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

After the costly action at Puketutu, in New Zealand's far north, Hone Heke withdrew to nearby Te Ahuahu, which was seized during his absence by the pro-government Chief Te Taonui, who was then joined by Tamati Waka Nene. Heke attempted to recover the position but he was heavily repulsed and wounded in a fierce action, then withdrew to join Kaiwiti at Ohaewai (12 June 1845).

Te Ahuahu, Taranaki ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Sent south from New Plymouth to destroy crops of the religio-military Hauhau leader Te Ua Hamene, Captain Thomas W. J. Lloyd, with soldiers and military settlers, was attacked by Te Ua at Te Ahuahu, near Oakura. The British suffered seven killed and 12 wounded before reaching Oakura. The unfortunate Lloyd's severed head was dried and became a Hauhau religious icon (6 April 1864).

Te-an ❙ 1206–1207 ❙ Jin-Song Wars

See De'an

Teanum ❙ 90 BC ❙ Roman Social War

The Marsi and Samnites of central Italy fighting Rome over citizenship defeated and killed Rutilius Lupus on the Tolenus, then confronted his co-Consul Lucius Julius Caesar further south in the Volturno Valley near Teanum. Caesar, who was attempting to relieve the siege of Aesernia, was badly beaten by Marius Egnatius but was soon reinforced and won further down the valley near Acerrae.

Te Arei ❙ 1861 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

On campaign against Wiremu Kingi's Ngatiawa on the Waitara, northeast of New Plymouth after Mahoetai, General Thomas Pratt captured the fortified sites at Matarikoriko (28 December) and Huirangi (23 January) before attacking the powerful camp at Te Arei. After British sapping and costly fighting the Maoris surrendered to end the war, but Kingi escaped (2 February–18 March 1861).

Tearless Battle ❙ 368 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

See Midea

Tebaga Gap ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Mareth Line

Tebicauri ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

With the fall of Humaitá, in southwest Paraguay, Brazilian commander Jose Joaquim de Andrade Neves marched northeast against Paraguayans on the Rio Tebicauri under Colonel Gorgônio Rojas, earlier defeated at Nhembucu. Rojas was defeated and captured in heavy fighting, with 170 Paraguayans killed. Andrade Neves continued advancing north and was killed at Ita Ybate (28 August 1868).

Tébourba ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

British General Kenneth Anderson advancing into Tunisia from Algiers reached as far as Tébourba, 20 miles west of Tunis, where his forces stalled under sustained counter-attack by newly arrived German tanks. Very heavy fighting forced the British to withdraw southwest along the Medjerda Valley, where a new advance in December failed at Longstop Hill (27 November–4 December 1942).

Tecoac ❙ 1876 ❙ Diaz Revolt in Mexico

Ending a confused war, Porfirio Diaz recovered from defeat at Icamole, and met Federal General Ignacio Alatorre at Tecoac, north of Huamantla. While Diaz was initially repulsed, General Manuel Gonzalez arrived to help secure a decisive victory, taking over 3,000 prisoners. President Sebastián Lerdo de Tejada fled into exile and Diaz dominated Mexico until 1911 (16 November 1876).

Tegea ❙ 473 BC ❙ Arcadian War

After supporting Sparta against Persia at Plataea (479 BC), the cities of Arcadia (in the central Peloponnese) began to resist their former ally and the main city-state Tegea joined with Argos. In battle at Tegea, Sparta achieved a narrow victory but could not repress the Arcadian cities, most of which united to meet the Spartans again in 417 BC at Dipaea (uncertain date c 473 BC).

Tegucicalpa ❙ 1839 ❙ Central American National Wars

After repulsing Honduran-Nicaraguan invaders at Espiritu Santo in April, Salvadoran General José Trinidad Cabañas invaded Honduras and took Comayagua (28 August) then marched on Tegucicalpa, where he defeated forces of President José Maria Bustillo to seize the capital. In November at nearby Soledad he routed a counter-attack by new President José Francisco Zelaya (6 September 1839).

Tegucicalpa ❙ 1894 ❙ Central American National Wars

When President José Santos Zelaya of Nicaragua intervened in Honduras to support Liberal rebel Policarpo Bonilla, Honduran President Domingo Vásquez was defeated at Choluteca and fell back under siege to his capital Tegucicalpa. Some sharp fighting forced Vásquez to capitulate and he went into exile. Bonilla became President and in return he helped support Zelaya (22 February 1894).

Tegucicalpa ❙ 1924 ❙ Honduran Civil War

Following an indecisive election, Tiburcio Carías raised rebellion against President Rafael López Gutiérrez, supported by Vicente Tosta and Gregoria Ferrera who advanced on Tegucicalpa. President López Gutiérrez was killed early in the siege, which caused terrible losses. The United States then intervened and Carías ally Miguel Paz Baraona later became President (9 March–28 April 1924).

Tegyra ❙ 375 BC ❙ Wars of the Greek City-States

When the Theban army assumed the offensive against Spartans occupying Boeotia, they were repulsed at Orchamenus, then met a much larger Spartan force further northeast at Tegyra, north of Lake Copais. In a bold action, the Theban "Sacred Band" under Pelopidas inflicted heavy casualties to secure a significant victory. Theban prestige was greatly increased, crowned in 371 BC by victory at Leuctra.

Te Kohia ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Waitara

Tel Afar ❙ 1920 ❙ Iraqi Revolt

Just weeks after Britain secured a mandate in Iraq, Arab insurgents advanced towards Mosul, north of Baghdad, and attacked the nearby small British post at Tel Afar. The first act of the revolt saw the garrison destroyed, along with an incoming armoured car column. A force under Colonel George Sarel retook the post four days later, helping slow fighting in the north (5 June 1920).

Telamon ❙ 225 BC ❙ Gallic Wars in Italy

Responding to Roman expansion, Insubrian Gauls from north Italy campaigned to the south with victories at Faesulae and Clusium. Later in the year at Telamon (modern Talamone), they were trapped between Lucius Aemelius Papus advancing from Arminium and Gaius Atilius Regulus marching south from Pisa. A decisive action saw the Gallic army virtually destroyed, but Regulus was killed.

Tel Azaziat ❙ 1967 ❙ Arab-Israeli Six Day War

See Golan Heights

Tel-Danith ❙ 1115 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

In the last Great Seljuk invasion of northern Syria, Sultan Mohammed sent Bursuq ibn Bursuq of Hamadan towards Aleppo with a large army. After capturing Hama, Bursuq advanced down the Orontes and was surprised at Tel-Danith, southwest of Aleppo, by Crusaders under Roger, Prince of Antioch. The Seljuk army was destroyed and the invasion dispersed (14 September 1115).

Tel el Aqqaqir ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

See Kidney Ridge

Tel el Ful ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Just two weeks after Jerusalem fell to Sir Edmund Allenby, Turkish forces under General Erich von Falkenhayn regrouped and counter-attacked north of the city around Beitunia Ridge and on the Nablus Road at Tel el Ful. Heavy fighting saw the night assault driven off with about 1,500 casualties on either side and the Turks fell back on Jericho for the winter (26–27 December 1917).

Tel-el-Kebir ❙ 1882 ❙ Arabi's Egyptian Rebellion

Generals Sir Garnet Wolseley and Sir Gerald Graham advanced west into Egypt against rebel war Minister Arabi Pasha, pushing on through Kassassin to Tel-el-Kebir, northeast of Cairo. The Egyptian army was driven out at bayonet-point by a surprise dawn attack, losing all its guns. The rebellion was crushed and the victor was created Baron Wolseley of Cairo (12 September 1882).

Tel-el-Mahuta ❙ 1882 ❙ Arabi's Egyptian Rebellion

See Tel-el-Maskhuta

Tel-el-Maskhuta ❙ 1882 ❙ Arabi's Egyptian Rebellion

When War Minister Arabi Pasha attempted to assert Egyptian sovereignty, a British force under General Sir Garnet Wolseley landed at the canal and Egyptian forces tried to block them at Tel-el-Maskhuta (modern Abu Suweir), west of Ismailia. Advance units led by General Sir Gerald Graham swept the Egyptians aside and Wolseley continued through Kassassin to Tel-el-Kebir (24 August 1882).

Tel el Sheria ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

See Sheria

Tel-el-Zataar ❙ 1976 ❙ Lebanon Civil War

As civil war began in Lebanon, Syria feared growing Palestinian influence and sent over 20,000 men and 500 tanks to support Christian militias. While the Palestinian refugee camp at Jisr al-Basha fell within a week, severe fighting developed for the larger camp at Tel-el-Zataar. After a five-week siege it fell by storm with perhaps 3,000 guerrillas killed and the conflict died down (22 June–12 August 1976).

Tel Faher ❙ 1967 ❙ Arab-Israeli Six Day War

See Golan Heights

Telissu ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Delisi

Tellaru ❙ 830 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

As the Kingdoms of southern India struggled for supremacy, Nandivarman II of Pallava stood firm against the tide of aggression by Pandya. In a decisive battle at Tellaru, near modern Wandiwash in northern Arcot, Nandivarman secured a bloody victory over Srimara of Pandya. The great dynastic rivalry continued until Srimara was killed by Pallava forces in 860 at Arisil (disputed date c 830).

Tembien (1st) ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

With Ethiopians halted at Dembeguina, Marshal Pietro Badoglio launched an offensive west into the Tembien. The heaviest fighting was against Ras Seyoum near Warieu Pass, where General Filippo Diamanti suffered costly losses before the garrison was relieved. Ras Seyoum eventually had to withdraw and Badoglio attacked south towards Amba Aradam (20–24 January 1936).

Tembien (2nd) ❙ 1936 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

Following victory south of Makale at Amba Aradam, Marshal Pietro Badoglio sent his 2nd Corps west into the Tembien against Ras Kassa and Ras Seyoum. Following hard fighting around the strategic Warieu Pass, about 200,000 Ethiopians escaped south towards Maychew, leaving perhaps 8,000 dead and wounded. Badoglio then turned against Ras Imru at Shire (27–29 February 1936).

Temesvár ❙ 1514 ❙ Transylvanian Peasant War

When Bishop Tomas Bakócz of Esztergom preached a peasant crusade against the Turks, it became a popular uprising under Gyorgy Dózsa, who attacked the nobility in Hungary and Transylvania. While besieging Temesvár (modern Timisaora in western Romania) the peasant army was destroyed by John Zapolya, Governor of Transylvania. Dózsa was later brutally tortured to death (15 July 1514).

Temesvár ❙ 1552 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

On a fresh offensive in the central Balkans, Turkish forces under Kara Ahmed laid siege to the key Hungarian city of Temesvár (modern Timisaora in Romania), heroically defended by Stephan Losonczy. The city fell after a month-long siege and Kara Ahmed joined with the Pasha of Buda to capture Szolnok before their campaign stalled in September at the fortress of Eger (27 July 1552).

Temesvár ❙ 1716 ❙ Austro-Turkish War

After inflicting a terrible defeat on Turkey on the Danube at Peterwardein, Austrian Field Marshal Prince Eugène of Savoy took advantage of the resulting disorder to besiege Temesvár (Timisoara), the last remaining Ottoman fortress in Hungary. It was captured after six weeks and the following year, Eugène marched into the Balkans against Belgrade (1 September–14 October 1716).

Temesvár ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

With Austria driven out of Hungary by Revolutionary forces, Russia intervened. After victory at Segesvár, Generals Ivan Paskievich and Julius von Haynau marched to relieve the three-month Hungarian siege of Temesvár (Timisoara, Romania). Hungarian General Henry Dembinksi was routed, losing 6,000 prisoners, and two days later General Artur Gorgey surrendered the army (9 August 1849).

Temple Bar ❙ 1554 ❙ Wyatt's Rebellion

When Sir Thomas Wyatt led a rebellion triggered by Queen Mary's plan to marry the Catholic Philip II of Spain, his forces were defeated at Wrotham Heath in Kent before Wyatt led perhaps 3,000 men from Rochester into London. After skirmishing and a failed assault on Ludgate, the rebels were cornered and defeated at Temple Bar. Wyatt and about 100 rebels were executed (8 February 1554).

Tempsford ❙ 918 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

Edward the Elder of Wessex defeated the Danes of Northumbria at Tettenhall (910) and Wednesfield (911), then joined his widowed sister Aethelflaed of Mercia against the Danes of the East Midlands and East Anglia. At Tempsford, near Bedford, Edward defeated and killed Guthrum II, securing East Anglia for Wessex. When Aethelflaed died, Edward added Mercia to his kingdom.

Tenaru ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

When Americans landed on Guadalcanal and secured the vital airfield, about 800 elite troops led by Colonel Kiyono Ichiki prematurely attacked in the east at the Tenaru (Ilu) River against Marines under Colonel Edwin Pollock. Only 130 Japanese survived the suicidal assault and Ichiki later committed seppuku. The next major Japanese attack was in September at Bloody Ridge (21–22 August 1942).

Tenchbrai ❙ 1106 ❙ Norman Dynastic Wars

See Tinchebrai

Tendra ❙ 1790 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

After an indecisive action east of Crimea at Yenikale, Russian Admiral Fedor Fedrorovich Ushakov and Turkish Vice-Admiral Said Bey met west of the Crimea off Tendra. The Turks were driven off and next day Ushakov attempted to seize two damaged vessels, including the Turkish flagship. However, the flagship blew up after surrendering, killing her crew (27–28 August 1790).

Tenedos ❙ 85 BC ❙ 1st Mithridatic War

With Pontic forces defeated in Greece at Orchomenus and in Asia Minor at Miletopolis, Roman commander Lucius Licinius Lucullus raised support in Cyprus and Rhodes and off Tenedos, guarding the Dardanelles, he decisively beat the Pontic fleet under Admiral Neoptolemus. Victory at sea opened the way for Lucius Sulla to invade Asia Minor and Mithridates VI of Pontus sued for peace.

Tenerife, Canary Islands ❙ 1657 ❙ Anglo-Spanish Wars

See Santa Cruz de Tenerife

Tenerife, Canary Islands ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Santa Cruz de Tenerife

Tenerife, Colombia ❙ 1820 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

With Colombian independence assured by victory at Boyacá, Patriot infantry led by Colonel José María Córdoba and seven ships under Hermógenes Maza attacked Spanish forces still holding Tenerife, on the Magdalena just north of Plato. Nine out of 11 Spanish ships were captured or destroyed in a brilliant action and the Royalists withdrew northwest to Cartagena (27 June 1820).

Tengchong ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (China)

As Chinese crossed the Salween in Yunnan, the northern force under General Hou Kuizhang advanced on the walled city of Tengchong, on the road to Myitkyina. After heavy American air attack and prolonged siege, Tengchong finally fell to massive assault and hand to hand fighting. The Chinese then moved south to support the attack on Longling (26 July–14 September 1944).

Te Ngutu-o-te-manu ❙ 1868 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Campaigning against the religio-military Hauhau in southern Taranaki, Colonel Thomas McDonnell was repulsed at Te Ngutu by the warrior Titokowaru. A second attack saw McDonnell repulsed with 50 casualties, including the famous Forest Ranger Gustavus von Tempsky killed. Titokowaru later defeated another force sent against him at Moturoa (21 August & 7 September 1868).

Tenochtitlan ❙ 1520 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Mexico

After reaching the Aztec capital of Tenochtitlan (modern Mexico City) in November 1519, Conquistador Hernán Cortés held Emperor Motecuhzoma a virtual hostage and pillaged his wealth. But resistance by the Emperor's cousin Cuauhtemoc—the Noche Triste—began after Motecuhzoma was killed. Cortés was expelled with over 600 dead but turned on his pursuers at Otumba (30 June 1520).

Tenochtitlan ❙ 1521 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Mexico

Heavily reinforced after being bloodily expelled from the Aztec capital of Tenochtitlan, Spanish Conquistador Hernán Cortés besieged and stormed the city, on an island in a lake. Cortés then destroyed much of Tenochtitlan and rebuilt it as Mexico City. The last Aztec Emperor Cuauhtemoc was captured later that year and was killed in 1522 en route to Honduras (26 May–13 August 1521).

Te Porere ❙ 1869 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

As the hunt continued for the Hauhau rebel Te Kooti after his raid on Mohaka in April, he was attacked in a fortified position at Te Porere, in New Zealand's central North Island near Tongariro, by Captain William McDonnell and Maoris under Major Kepa Te Rangihiwinui. Sharp fighting cost the British four dead, but 37 Hauhau were killed and Te Kooti withdrew towards Rotorua (3 October 1869).

Te Ranga ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

In a renewed threat to Tauranga after his moral victory at Gate Pa, Rawiri Puhirake started to dig in at Te Ranga, just four miles away. Determined to avenge the previous loss, Colonel Henry Greer took a large force and, in heavy fighting with three Victoria Crosses won, Rawiri and over 70 Maoris were killed. The local chiefs soon surrendered, ending fighting in the Bay of Plenty (21 June 1864).

Terceira ❙ 1582 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese War

Two years after Spain seized the Portuguese throne at Alcántara, French ships under Filippo Strozzi sailed to the Azores to support a Portuguese rebellion in favour of Don Antonio de Crato against Phillip II of Spain. Off the island of Terceira, Spanish Admiral Alvaro de Bazán Marquess of Santa Cruz defeated the French and occupied the islands. Santa Cruz won again next year off Sao Miguel.

Terceira ❙ 1583 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese War

See Sao Miguel

Terek ❙ 1263 ❙ Mongol Dynastic Wars

Battle in Azerbaijan near Kuba between Il-Khan Hulegu of Iran and Berke Khan of the Golden Horde—grandsons of Genghis Khan—saw Berke beaten, then rashly pursued further north to the Terek by Hulegu's son Abaqa. Although Abaqa was heavily defeated on the frozen river, Berke continued withdrawing. Hulegu secured his Khanate by crushing King Davit V of Georgia (13 January 1263).

Terek ❙ 1395 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

The Turko-Mongol Tamerlane beat Toktamish, Khan of the Golden Horde, at the Syr Darya (1389) and Kunduzcha (1391), then attacked his former protégé in the northern Caucausus at the Terek, west of the Caspian. Toktamish suffered a decisive defeat and fled to the Ukraine while Tamerlane sacked his capital at Sarai and placed a puppet ruler over the once mighty Golden Horde (April 1395).

Tergoes ❙ 1572 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

See Goes

Terjan ❙ 1472 ❙ Ottoman-Turkoman War

When Uzun Hassan of the White Sheep Turkomans advanced from Azerbaijan into Anatolia and destroyed Tokat, Ottoman Sultan Mehmed II took a large army east towards Erzurum, where his right wing under Hassan Murad Pasha impulsively attacked at Terjan (Tercan). The Imperial favourite was ambushed and killed and Mehmed withdrew. He soon destroyed Uzun Hassan at Erzincan.

Termoli ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

British General Sir Bernard Montgomery raced north along Italy's Adriatic coast to seize Foggia, then advanced on strong defences at Termoli, just north of the Biferno. A commando assault (Brigadier John Durnford-Slater) took the port from the sea, but the British had to repulse a brutal German counter-attack. Montgomery next attacked towards the Sangro (3–7 October 1943).

Terschelling ❙ 1666 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

See Vlie

Tertry ❙ 687 ❙ Frankish Civil Wars

In a civil war, which effectively began the establishment of France, Pepin II of Austrasia invaded Neustria and defeated Thierry III and his Mayor, Berthar, at Tertry on the River Somme near Péronne. Thierry was taken prisoner and Berthar was killed by his own supporters. The battle ended the power of the Merovingian royal house and marked the beginning of what became the Carolingian Dynasty.

Teruel ❙ 1937–1938 ❙ Spanish Civil War

Despite a failed Republican offensive west of Madrid towards Brunete, Generals Leopoldo Menéndez and Hernández Sarabía marched east and seized Teruel from Colonel Rey d'Harcourt. Nationalist Generals José Varela and Antonio Aranda besieged then took the city, while the Republicans withdrew with crippling losses in men and equipment (15 December 1937–20 February 1938).

Teschen ❙ 1919 ❙ Polish-Czech War

Disputing the post-war border between Poland and Czechoslovakia, Czech Colonel Josef Snejdarek marched into coal-rich Teschen in eastern Silesia and drove out a weak Polish force. An armistice signed by Polish General Franciczek Latinik ended the seven-day war and Czechoslovakia secured Teschen. It was seized again by Poland in 1938 but returned in 1945 (23–30 January 1919).

Tescua ❙ 1841 ❙ Colombian War of Supreme Commanders

On campaign against rebels in the north, General Tomás Cipriano de Mosquera for the government, supported by Colonel Joaquín Barriga, won at Aratoca in January then attacked General Francisco Carmona at Tescua, in Norte de Santander. A major success against the rebels saw Carmona decisively defeated, with final government victory in September in the north at Ocaña (1 April 1841).

Testry ❙ 687 ❙ Frankish Civil Wars
See Tertry

Tet Offensive ❙ 1968 ❙ Vietnam War
After diversionary attacks such as Khe Sanh, Con Thien, Dak To and Loc Ninh, Communist forces launched the Tet Offensive against over 100 towns and cities, including bloody fighting in Hue, Saigon and Dong Ha. The surprise offensive was finally defeated with decisive losses, though its shocking impact helped weaken America's will to continue the war (30 January–29 February 1968).

Tétouan ❙ 1860 ❙ Spanish-Moroccan War
See Tetuán

Tettenhall ❙ 910 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain
As a result of the Danes of Northumbria attacking King Aethelred of Saxon Mercia, his brother-in-law Edward of Wessex (son of Alfred the Great) marched into modern Staffordshire and routed the Danes near modern Wolverhampton at Tettenhall. The victory extended Wessex to the Humber and is regarded as beginning the Saxon reconquest of Danish England (6 August 910).

Tetuán ❙ 1860 ❙ Spanish-Moroccan War
When Moroccan forces raided Spanish possessions in North Africa, Marshal Leopoldo O'Donnell invaded against the newly throned Sultan Sidi Muhammed. Advancing south from Castillejos, the Spanish won a decisive victory near Tetuán, east of Tangier, then seized the city. O'Donnell was created Duke of Tetuán and won again in March at the Guad-el-Ras (4 February 1860).

Teugen ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)
See Hausen

Teutoburgwald ❙ 9 AD ❙ Rome's Germanic Wars
Consul Publius Quintilius Varus was fighting the Germanic tribes east of the Rhine and took three legions into the Teutoburg Forest, traditionally outside Detmold, but probably near Osnabruck. Ambushed and routed by Arminius of the Cherusci, Varus committed suicide to avoid capture, and the surviving troops and camp-followers were all slaughtered. It was Rome's greatest defeat in Europe.

Tewkesbury ❙ 1471 ❙ Wars of the Roses
Arriving too late to prevent Lancastrian defeat at Barnet, Margaret of Anjou and Prince Edward landed at Weymouth to rally their cause. However, north of Gloucester at Tewkesbury, their army under Edmund Beaufort Duke of Somerset was decisively defeated by Edward IV. Somerset and the young Prince were killed and Henry VI's death in captivity secured Edward's throne (4 May 1471).

Texel ❙ 1653 ❙ 1st Dutch War
See Scheveningen

Texel ❙ 1673 ❙ 3rd Dutch War
Renewing the invasion repulsed at Schooneveld in June, the Anglo-French fleet of Prince Rupert and Admiral Jean d'Estrées met the smaller Dutch fleet off Texel. As in battle at Sole Bay (June 1672), Admiral Mihiel de Ruyter isolated the French and attacked the English ships, inflicting heavy casualties. While no ships were lost, de Ruyter had effectively defeated the invasion (21 August 1673).

Texel ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
In the course of brilliant mid-winter invasion of Holland, French General Charles Pichegru surprised part of the Dutch fleet frozen at anchor near the island of Texel. In an extraordinary assault across the frozen Zuyder Zee with cavalry and horse-artillery, Lieutenant Colonel Louis-Joseph La Hure captured the 14 ships and Holland became a French satellite (22–23 January 1795).

Texel ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Irish Rising)
See Camperdown

Textri ❙ 687 ❙ Frankish Civil Wars
See Tertry

Tezin ❙ 1841 ❙ 1st British-Afghan War

Sent east from Kabul to force the passes and secure communication with Peshawar, General Sir Robert Sale stormed the Khurd Kabul (12 October), then heavily defeated an Afghan force on the Heights of Tezin. After forcing the Pass at Jagdalak and taking the fortress of Mamu Khel from Mir Afzal Khan, he reached Jalalabad and held it for six months (22 October 1841).

Tezin ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st British-Afghan War

General Sir George Pollock's Army of Retribution marched into Afghanistan to avenge the murder of British soldiers and civilians from Kabul in January. They captured Jagdalak (8 September) then advanced through the Khyber against Akbar Khan and about 16,000 Afghans at Tezin, near Khurd Kabul. The Afghans were routed and Pollock entered Kabul two days later (13 September 1842).

Thabraca ❙ 398 ❙ Gildo's Rebellion

See Theveste

Thakhek ❙ 1946 ❙ French Indo-China War

As French forces retook northern Laos from Nationalist Chinese who had accepted Japan's surrender, the Lao Issara (Free Lao) movement under Prince Souphanouvong determined to resist at Thakhek. Attacking behind air-strikes, the French stormed the town with perhaps 1,000 civilians and soldiers killed. Souphanouvong was badly injured and went into exile in Thailand (17–21 March 1946).

Thal ❙ 1919 ❙ 3rd British-Afghan War

In his attack on British India, Amir Amanullah of Afghanistan sent General Nadir Khan and a large mixed force into the Kurram Valley against Thal, held by about 800 militia. The Afghans shelled Thal with 20 Krupp guns, but were dispersed by a relief force under General Reginald Dyer, whose actions at Amritsar had provoked outrage. A truce quickly followed (28 May–1 June 1919).

Thala ❙ 107 BC ❙ Jugurthine War

Caecilius Metellus defeated King Jugurtha of Numida at the Muthul (108 BC) then led a bold expedition across the desert against the stronghold and treasury at Thala, in modern Tunisia. Attempting to ambush the Romans, Jugurtha and his General Bomilcar were badly beaten. Jugurtha fled to his father-in-law, Bocchus of Mauretania, and they were defeated the following year near Cirta.

Thalner ❙ 1818 ❙ 3rd British-Maratha War

See Talneer

Thames ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

American General William Harrison invaded Upper Canada after British withdrawal from Detroit, pursuing General Henry Proctor up the Thames through Chatham to Moraviantown. Dispirited and lacking ammunition, Proctor's British-Indian force was routed with heavy casualties, including the great Tecumseh killed. Harrison did not pursue further and returned to Detroit (5 October 1813).

Thana ❙ 1738 ❙ Portuguese-Maratha War

During the epic Maratha siege of the Portuguese island fortress of Bassein, near Bombay, the Portuguese garrison made a last heroic attempt to recapture the strategic fortification at nearby Thana, which had fallen a year earlier (26 March 1737). Although Portuguese commander Pedro de Mello was killed in the failed assault, Bassein held out for a further 12 months (27 February 1738).

Thana ❙ 1774 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

Attacking the former Portuguese island colony of Salsette, north of Bombay, a large British force under General Robert Gordon besieged the fortress town of Thana, held by Maratha Anand Rao Ram Bivalkar. With a Maratha relief force approaching from Poona, Colonel William Cockburn led a decisive assault to capture the fort and with it the island (12–28 December 1774).

Thaneswar ❙ 1011 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

On campaign against the Hindus of Northern India, the Afghan ruler Mahmud of Ghazni marched against the temple city of Thaneswar and found his way blocked at the nearby Sutlej by Raja Ram of Dera. Despite suffering the greater losses, Mahmud drove off Raja Ram, then seized and sacked Thaneswar. He withdrew before the Raja of Delhi could send troops to protect his city.

Thanet ❙ 851 ❙ Viking Raids on Britain

Following decisive defeat at Aclea, Danish invaders withdrew to the island of Thanet in the Thames Estuary, where they faced a powerful attack from the men of Kent and Sussex led by Ealchere of Wessex (victor of Sandwich) and Ealdorman Huda. Both Saxon leaders were killed in a decisive defeat and the Danish position on Thanet marked the start of enduring Viking settlement in the south.

Thang Long ❙ 1258 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

Kubilai Khan secured southwest China then ordered General Uriangkatai into Vietnam, where he seized and razed the capital Thang Long (later Hanoi). However, Vietnamese King Tran Thai Tong led a counter-offensive, and in battle at nearby Dong Bo Dau, the Mongols were badly defeated and withdrew. A renewed Mongol invasion thirty years later was destroyed at Bach Dang (17 January 1258).

Thang Long ❙ 1789 ❙ Vietnamese Civil War

When Nguyen Hue led a rebellion against Vietnam's declining Le Dynasty, the weak King Chien Tong called for Chinese aid and 200,000 Qing (Ching) troops invaded and occupied Thang Long (later Hanoi). Proclaiming himself Emperor Quang Trung, Nguyen marched north with a massive force and attacked at Lunar New Year. The Qing army was routed and fled and Quang made peace with China.

Thang Long ❙ 1802 ❙ Vietnamese Civil War

After the Tay Son defeated a Chinese army to secure Vietnam, civil war soon ensued and Prince Nguyen Anh, with French military aid, began to reconquer the country. Ending three years of war, he finally attacked Thang Long (later Hanoi) and overthrew the remnant Tay Son forces. He made himself Emperor Gia Long, reviving the Nguyen Dynasty, and moved the capital to Hué (July 1802).

Thapsus ❙ 46 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Julius Caesar was reinforced after defeating the Pompeians in Tunisia at Ruspina in January and marched on Metellus Scipio at Thapsus, near modern Teboulba. Attacking before Scipio could be supported by King Juba of Numidia, Caesar won a decisive victory. Juba and Scipio were later killed, while Gnaeus Pompey and Titus Labienus fled to Spain and defeat at Munda (6 February 46 BC).

Thasos ❙ 465–463 BC ❙ Wars of the Delian League

Alarmed at growing Athenian power, the rich Aegean island of Thasos, just off the coast of Thrace, rose in revolt and seceded from the Delian League. Returning from victory at Eurymedon, Cimon of Athens defeated the Thasian navy, then blockaded the island by land and sea. Thasos yielded after two years, and was forced to demolish its walls and surrender its once-powerful fleet.

Thebes ❙ 335 BC ❙ Conquests of Alexander the Great

With Alexander the Great falsely reported killed in the Balkans, the central Greek city of Thebes rose against its Macedonian masters. Returning by forced march, Alexander overcame fierce resistance to storm the city then let his auxiliaries loose on an orgy of slaughter. As punishment and an example to others, Alexander ordered Thebes demolished and the citizens enslaved (September 335 BC).

Thedonisi Island ❙ 1788 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War

Despite defeat off the Liman, on the Dnieper, Turkish Admiral Hassan el Ghasi attacked Russian commander Charles Nassau-Siegen, now reinforced by Admiral Mark Voynovich.

After initial Turkish success, a counter-attack by Commodore Fyodor Ushakov's vanguard routed the Kapudan Pasha, who withdrew his fleet. Besieged Ochakov fell to land assault five months later (3 July 1788).

Thermopylae ❙ 480 BC ❙ Greco-Persian Wars

Determined to avenge the rout at Marathon in 490 BC, King Xerxes of Persia sent a fresh land invasion of Greece. An heroic action saw Spartan King Leonides and about 5,000 men attempt to hold the defile at Thermopylae but they were outflanked. The King and his 300-strong rearguard were all killed. Xerxes then occupied Athens, but soon withdrew after naval defeat off Salamis (August 480 BC).

Thermopylae ❙ 191 BC ❙ Roman-Syrian War

When Rome drove Macedonia out of Greece at Cynoscephalae (197 BC) Antiochus III of Syria invaded Greece to support Aetolia and captured Thessaly. Intervening again, Rome sent an army under Marcus Porcius Cato and Marcus Acilius Glabrio, which routed Antiochus at Thermopylae. He abandoned his adventure in Greece and left for Asia Minor, where he was beaten next year at Magnesia.

Thermopylae ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Campaigning in the north, Athanasios Diakos and the Bishop of Salona-Essaias captured Levadia (25 April). But in heavy fighting near Thermopylae at the Bridge of Alamana they failed to halt a Turkish force under Omer Vrioni. Diakos and the Bishop were defeated and executed and Vrioni captured and burned Levadia. He then advanced on Athens to relieve the Acropolis (5 May 1821).

Therouanne ❙ 1513 ❙ War of the Holy League

See Guinegate

Thessalonica ❙ 586 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

Following sweeping Avar raids along the Danube Valley to the Black Sea, Slav tribes moved across Thrace towards Constantinople and south into the Greek peninsula, where they threatened Thessalonica, second city of the Balkans. Their attempted surprise was reputedly revealed by the city's patron saint, Demetrius, who drove the assailants from the ramparts (September 586).

Thessalonica ❙ 615 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

With Byzantium occupied by war with Persia, Avars and Slavs recaptured Roman land south of the Danubian border and a large Slav force advanced on Thessalonica, attempting to capture the city by attack from the sea. Saint Demetrius was again credited with securing the salvation of his citizens, when the Slav assault ended in chaotic failure with their leader Chatzon taken prisoner.

Thessalonica ❙ 618 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

In yet another attack on Thessalonica, Slav forces were this time supported by the mighty Avars who supplied their awesome siege machines. The city held out for 33 days, with Archbishop John touring the ramparts to raise morale. Divine intervention by Saint Demetrius reputedly persuaded the Avars to withdraw. Their failure at Constantinople in 626 led to the rapid decline of Avar power.

Thessalonica ❙ 1043 ❙ Later Byzantine Military Rebellions

See Ostrovo

Thessalonica ❙ 1224 ❙ Latin-Epirote War

In support of Byzantine Nicaea against the Latin Emperors in Constantinople, Theodore Ducas of Epirus invaded the vassal Kingdom of Thessaly, in north and central Greece, held by Demetrius of Montferrat. Thessalonica was captured following a long siege, ending 20 years of Latin rule. The ambitious Theodore was proclaimed Emperor but was soon overthrown at Klokotnitsa.

Thessalonica ❙ 1264 ❙ 3rd Latin-Byzantine Imperial War

Following the Byzantine restoration in Constantinople, Emperor Michael VIII determined to beat Michael II of Epirus, who had been part of the alliance against him at Pelagonia (1259). After an army under Alexius Strategopoulos was repulsed, a fresh force led by the Emperor's brother John Paleologus secured decisive victory at Thessalonica and Michael II recognised Byzantine suzerainty.

Thessalonica ❙ 1430 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

See Salonika

Thessalonica ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War

See Jannitsa

Thessalonica ❙ 1915–1918 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

See Salonika

Thessaly ❙ 353 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War

When Thessalians invited Philip of Macedon to help them against Pherae, he first defeated Phayllus of Phocis then faced Phayllus' brother, Onomarchus. At an unknown site in Thessaly, Onomarchus lured the Macedonians into a valley and routed them with artillery on surrounding hills. Philip was fortunate to escape, though he returned the next year to defeat the Phocians at Pagasae.

Thetford ❙ 870 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

See Hoxne

Theveste ❙ 398 ❙ Gildo's Rebellion

When Roman General Gildo, son of King Nubel of Mauretania, rose against Western Emperor Honorius, his brother Mascezel fled to Italy, where Stilicho gave him 5,000 veterans. Landing in Numidia, Mascezel marched inland, and near Theveste (modern Tebessa, Algeria) routed his brother when most of his army deserted. Gildo fled to Thabraca on the coast, where he was captured and committed suicide.

Thielt ❙ 1128 ❙ War of Flemish Succession

Amid war for succession in Flanders, William Clito, appointed by his father Duke Robert of Normandy, attacked his rival Theodoric of Alsace (Dietrich von Elsass) at Thielt, northeast of modern Roeselare. A decisive action saw Theodoric's forces badly defeated and William became Count of Flanders. A month later William was killed during a siege further west at Alost (21 June 1128).

Thiepval ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Recovering from losses around Flers-Courcelette during the Battle of the Somme, General Sir Henry Rawlinson attacked east from Pozières towards Morval and north towards Thiepval, which was quickly captured. The British then advanced onto Thiepval Ridge. While much of the strategic ridge was captured, it remained the scene of fighting for some time (26–28 September 1916).

Thionville ❙ 1639 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Advancing into the Spanish Netherlands, French forces under Isaac Manassès Marquis de Feuquière besieged Thionville (German Diedenhofen) on the Moselle northwest of Metz, where they were heavily defeated by General Ottavio Piccolomini. The captured Feuquière died of wounds in captivity after failed ransom negotiations while Piccolomini was created Duke of Amalfi (28 June 1639).

Thionville ❙ 1643 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Just weeks after destroying Spain's famous infantry at Rocroi, 22-year-old Louis II Duke d'Enghien took his French army southeast against Thionville (German Diedenhofen) on the Moselle northwest of Metz. The city fell after heroic resistance and d'Enghien quickly went on to capture Sierck before advancing as far as Luxemburg itself (14 June–10 August 1643).

Thionville ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Campaigning to the north after the fall of Metz, General Edwin von Manteuffel sent the German 7th Division under General Heinrich Adolf von Zastrow against the stubborn fortress of Thionville, which had already been bombarded and partly invested. The fortress capitulated in flames after four days of heavy fighting, yielding a reported 2,000 prisoners (20–24 November 1870).

Thirty ❙ 1351 ❙ Hundred Years War

Amid skirmishes between English and French in Brittany, Jean de Beaumanoir Governor of Josselin challenged Captain John Bramborough at Ploermel to meet with thirty knights each at Mi-Voie, midway between the castles, and fight to the death. The "Battle of the Thirty" saw Bramborough among nine Englishmen killed and his wounded survivors conceded the combat (27 March 1351).

Thompson's Station ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Leading a disastrous Union offensive from Nashville, Tennessee, Colonel John Coburn marched south through Franklin and was attacked at nearby Thompson's Station by Confederate forces under General Earl Van Dorn. Underestimating the Confederate strength, Coburn was utterly routed and had to surrender, along with most of his officers and about 1,200 men (5 March 1863).

Thonotosassa ❙ 1836 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

Following American defeat at the Withlacoochee, Colonels William Chisholm and William Foster were sent to decommission Fort Alabama, on the Hillsborough, just outside Tampa. Attacked by Seminole at nearby Thonotosassa Creek, they suffered five dead and 25 wounded before driving the Indians off with a bayonet charge. The site was later rebuilt and renamed Fort Foster (27 April 1836).

Thorn ❙ 1703 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Charles XII of Sweden defeated a large Saxon army at Pultusk (21 April) and marched north against the powerful fortress of Thorn (modern Torun) on the Vistula, held by adherents of Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. Thorn fell after a long siege—which reputedly cost Charles fewer than 50 men—effectively completing his control of Poland (May–22 September 1703).

Thornton's Ambush ❙ 1846 ❙ American-Mexican War

As General Zachary Taylor advanced towards the Rio Grande to open the war, General Anastasio Torrejón serving under General Mariano Arista crossed the river and ambushed an American patrol northwest of modern Brownsville. After losing 20 men, Captain Seth Thornton was captured along with 70 survivors. However, Arista was soon repulsed at nearby Fort Texas (25 April 1846).

Thoroughfare Gap ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate commander Robert E. Lee crossed the Bull Run Mountains towards the Union army north of Manassas, where part of his force under General James Longstreet stormed Thoroughfare Gap, west of Haymarket, Virginia. In a minor but vital skirmish, Union General James B. Ricketts failed to hold the strategic pass, opening Lee's access to vital battlefield at Bull Run (28 August 1862).

Thouars ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

In the wake of early rebel success for the counter-revolution in western France, Republican forces determined to defend Thouars on the River Thouet in the east. Bitter fighting forced Colonel Pierre Quentineau to surrender the town to Royalist leader Henri de la Rochejaquelein, yielding the Vendéeans an enormous booty of cannon, muskets, and 5,000 prisoners (5 May 1793).

Three Emperors ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)
See Austerlitz

Three Hundred ❙ 547 BC ❙ Spartan-Argive Wars
See Champions

Three Kings ❙ 1578 ❙ Portuguese-Moroccan War
See Alcazarquivir

Three Peaks ❙ 1880 ❙ Apache Indian Wars
See Tres Castillos

Three Rivers ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution
See Trois Rivières

Throg's Neck ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British General William Howe attempted to by-pass General George Washington's defence of New York City at Harlem Heights, on Manhattan Island, by landing a force at Throg's Neck, north of Long Island Sound. Howe was delayed by a courageous defence from American riflemen under Colonel Edward Hands, but he was soon reinforced and advanced on Pell's Point (12 October 1776).

Thuan-An ❙ 1883 ❙ French Conquest of Indo-China
See Hue

Thukela ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War
See Tugela

Thukela Heights ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
See Tugela Heights

Thymbria ❙ 546 BC ❙ Persian-Lydian War

Facing a massive invasion by Cyrus II the Great of Persia after defeat at Pteria, King Croesus of Lydia drew up his army on the Plain of Thymbria, outside his capital at Sardis, in the west of modern Turkey. Despite the resistance of experienced troops sent by his ally, Amasis of Egypt, Croesus was utterly defeated and his army fled to siege behind the walls of the Lydian capital.

Thyrea ❙ 547 BC ❙ Spartan-Argive Wars
See Champions

Tiagar ❙ 1790 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

Tipu Sultan of Mysore renewed war against Britain in southern India and marched north from Trichinopoly to attack the fortress of Tiagar, 30 miles south of Trinomalee, defended by a stub-born garrison under Captain William Flint. Tipu gave up after heavy losses in failed assaults and crossed the river to sack the defenceless town of Trinomalee (December 1790).

Tianjin (1st) ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

When foreign ships seized the Dagu Forts at the mouth of the Bei He, anti-foreign Boxers besieged the well-defended international settlement upstream at Tianjin (Tientsin). After a weeklong attack, 2,000 British, American and Russian troops arrived from Dagu to break the Chinese lines. The Boxers withdrew three days later after a lucky Allied shell destroyed their arsenal (17–27 June 1900).

Tianjin (2nd) ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

Reinforced in the foreign settlement at Tianjin (Tientsin), a 5,000-strong multi-national force attacked anti-foreign Boxers in the native city. Following heavy bombardment, Tianjin was taken by storm with 800 Allied casualties, mainly Japanese, and perhaps 5,000 Boxers. Imperial Viceroy Yu Lu killed himself in disgrace and a fresh relief force soon set out for besieged Beijing (13–14 July 1900).

Tianjin ❙ 1925 ❙ Guo Songling's Revolt

Manchurian warlord Zhang Zuolin secured northern China at Shanhaiguan (October 1924), then drove former ally Feng Yuxiang out of Beijing before facing a rebellion by General Guo Songling, aided by Feng. Southeast of Beijing at Tianjin (Tientsin) Feng's army under Zhang Zhizhang beat Manchurian General Li Jinglin, but Guo was quickly routed at Xinmintun (9–23 December 1925).

Tianjin ❙ 1926 ❙ Guo Songling's Revolt

Facing revolt by his General Guo Songling and rival warlord Feng Yuxiang, the Manchurian Zhang Zuolin killed Guo at Xinmintun (December 1925), then sent Li Jinglin and Chang Zongchang to recover Tianjin (Tientsin) southeast of Beijing. Heavy fighting forced Feng's ally Lu Zhonglin to abandon the city, and within weeks Zhang had recovered Beijing (February–21 March 1926).

Tianjin ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Beijing

Tianjin ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Just weeks after the Liaoshen offensive in Manchuria, Communist General Lin Biao joined General Nie Rongzhen in northern China for the huge Beijing-Tianjin offensive. A furious assault saw the besieged city of Tianjin taken by storm, with 130,000 Nationalist troops routed and General Chen Changjie captured. The ring then closed around Beijing (14–15 January 1949).

Tianzhuangtai ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Yingkou

Tiberias ❙ 1187 ❙ 3rd Crusade

See Hattin

Tiberias ❙ 1948 ❙ Israeli War of Independence

Before the expiry of the UN mandate in Palestine, Zionist forces launched a "pre-war" to optimise their position at independence. The first major town to fall to the Jews was Tiberias in eastern Galilee, which was attacked and seized by a Haganah brigade. The Arab population fled to Transjordan and Jewish commander Ygal Allon turned north against Safad (18 April 1948).

Tibi ❙ 1848 ❙ 2nd British-Sikh War

See Sadusam

Ticinum ❙ 271 ❙ Roman-Alemannic Wars

See Pavia

Ticinum ❙ 569–572 ❙ Lombard Invasion of Italy

See Pavia

Ticinus ❙ 218 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Carthaginian Hannibal Barca crossed the Alps from Gaul to surprise a Roman army under Scipio the Elder at the junction of the Ticinus and Po Rivers. Attempting to pull back across the Ticinus after a cavalry skirmish, the outnumbered Romans suffered heavy casualties, and Scipio was seriously wounded. Hannibal won another decisive victory in December at the Trebbia (November 218 BC).

Ticonderoga ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

See Fort Ticonderoga

Ticonderoga ❙ 1775 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Fort Ticonderoga

Tiebas ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Using British-supplied siege guns, Spanish guerrilla General Francisco Espoz y Mina besieged Tafalla, just 30 miles from Pamplona in the western Pyrenees. A large French relief force marching south towards Tafalla under General Louis Abbé, Governor of Navarre, was defeated at Tiebas (10 February). Tafalla itself surrendered next day (9–11 February 1813).

Tientsin ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

See Tianjin

Tientsin ❙ 1925 ❙ Guo Songling's Revolt

See Tianjin

Tientsin ❙ 1926 ❙ Guo Songling's Revolt

See Tianjin

Tientsin ❙ 1937 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Beijing

Tientsin ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Tianjin

Tierra Blanca ❙ 1913 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Francisco (Pancho) Villa was repulsed at Chihuahua but days later circled north to capture Ciudad Juárez before marching south again. Thirty miles north of Chihuahua, on the sandy plains of the Tierra Blanca, he decisively defeated a large Federal army. Chihuahua was then evacuated and Generals Pascual Orozco and José Inez Salazar withdrew northeast to Ojinaga (23–25 November 1913).

Tieshan ❙ 630 ❙ Tang Imperial Wars

See Iron Mountain, China

Tiflis ❙ 1795 ❙ Persian-Georgian War

Determined to expand his northern lands, Aga Mohammad Khan of Persia seized Shusha (9 August) then led 40,000 men against Christian Tiflis (modern Tblisi). Heraclius (Erekle) of Georgia unwisely met the invaders outside Tiflis and his heavily outnumbered army was destroyed. Aga Mohammad then sacked and enslaved Tiflis but was assassinated two years later (10 September 1795).

Tigra ❙ 1858 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Jaunpur

Tigranocerta ❙ 69 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War

Roman Lucius Licinius Lucullus secured Pontus at Cabira (72 BC) then invaded Armenia in pursuit of Mithridates VI of Pontus who had fled to his son-in-law Tigranes. Lucullus besieged Tigranocerta on the Tigris, then met a relief army under Tigranes. Though massively outnumbered, Lucullus achieved a brilliant victory and won again the following year at Artaxata (6 October 69 BC).

Tigris River ❙ 363 ❙ Later Roman-Persian Wars

See Ctesiphon

Tikal ❙ 562 ❙ "Star" Wars

During the classic period of warfare between the cities of the Mayan lowlands, with battles planned by the position of the stars, the great capital Tikal (in modern Guatemala) was attacked by Caracol to the southeast, aided by Calakmul to the north. King Wak Chan K'awiil of Tikal was defeated and killed and the kingdom was eclipsed for over a century until Calakmul in 695.

Tikrit ❙ 2003 ❙ 2nd Gulf War

As coalition forces converged on Baghdad, American troops further north closed in and, from 5 April, virtually besieged Tikrit, birthplace and power base of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. After the fall of Baghdad, Saddam's last stronghold was taken by storm to effectively conclude the initial phase of the war. On 1 May US President George W. Bush declared an end to "major combat" (13–14 April 2003).

Tila Pass ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

See Tirad Pass

Tillis Farm ❙ 1856 ❙ 3rd Seminole Indian War

When Seminole forces attacked the farm of Willoughby Tillis, on the Peace River south of Barlow (14 June) Florida militia were sent in response from nearby Fort Meade. Although five soldiers were killed in fierce fighting, the Indians also suffered costly casualties, including Chief Oscen Tustenuggee killed. This was effectively the last substantial action of the war (16 June 1856).

Tillyangus ❙ 1571 ❙ Huntly Rebellion

Renewing Catholic rebellion following abdication by Mary Queen of Scots, Sir Adam Gordon, brother of George Earl of Huntly, used a family quarrel to march against the Forbes clan at Tillyangus in Aberdeenshire. The outnumbered Forbes were defeated, with about 120 killed (including "Black Arthur," son of the 7th Lord). The feud soon continued at Craibstane (10 October 1571).

Timbuktu ❙ 1468 ❙ Wars of the Songhai Empire

When Sonni Ali took control of the state of Songhai, on the middle reaches of the Niger River, he led an aggressive campaign of expansion, driving the Tuareg from the strategic city of Timbuktu, which they had occupied since 1433. Sonni drove north and built a great West African Empire, but soon after his death (1492) his son was deposed at Anfao.

Timimoun ❙ 1901 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

While General Armand Servière marched south from Timimoun, the west Algerian town was attacked by 1,500 Moroccan Berbers. Major René Reibell and 160 Legionnaires fought a bold defence then routed the Berbers at a nearby oasis, using dynamite in place of cannon. The Moroccans withdrew with over 150 killed and were intercepted by Servière at Charouine (18 February 1901).

Timisoara ❙ 1514 ❙ Transylvanian Peasant War

See Temesvár

Timisoara ❙ 1552 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Temesvár

Timisoara ❙ 1716 ❙ Austro-Turkish War

See Temesvár

Timisoara ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Temesvár

Tinaja de las Palmas ❙ 1880 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

As Apache Chief Victorio re-entered Texas he was met at Tinaja de las Palmas, a water-hole in the Quitman Canyon south of modern Sierra Blanca, by Buffalo Soldiers under Colonel Benjamin Grierson. With just 24 men against perhaps 150 Indians, Grierson's black troopers held off the Apache until relief arrived. Victorio was repulsed again days later at Rattlesnake Springs (30 July 1880).

Tinaquillo ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

See Taguanes

Tinchebrai ❙ 1106 ❙ Norman Dynastic Wars

Henry I succeeded his father William the Conqueror to the throne of England, but soon faced rebellion at home by his brother, Duke Robert of Normandy. Crossing the channel, Henry defeated Robert near Tinchebrai, a castle north of Domfront held by the dissident Count Robert of Mortain. Henry then held his brother prisoner for life and reunited Normandy and England (28 September 1106).

Tindouf ❙ 1963 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

While claiming the Western Sahara, Morocco invaded the nearby mineral-rich Tindouf region in newly independent Algeria. Moroccan troops nearly took Tindouf town itself before being repulsed in sharp fighting. Algerian air-strikes on northern Morocco further helped end the brief border war which cost perhaps 300 killed on both aides. Fighting resumed 12 years later at Amgala (October 1963).

Tinghai ❙ 1840 ❙ 1st Opium War

See Dinghai

Tingsiqiao ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Campaigning towards Wuchang, Nationalist commander Chiang Kai-shek took Pingjiang, then drove north and seized Tingsiqiao (Tingszekiao). Northern General Wu Beifu sent a massive counter-offensive under Maqi and the city changed hands several times in brutal fighting before he withdrew. Wu himself was defeated next day further east at Hesheng (26–29 August 1926).

Tingszekiao ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Tingsiqiao

Tingzu ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

General Chiang Kai-shek opened the Nationalist offensive against the warlords of northern China by advancing northeast from Changsha through Pingjiang. He then sent Zhang Fakui racing for the key Tingzu bridge southeast of Wuchang. Threatened by a bold circling movement, warlord General Wu Beifu was beaten and withdrew north to Hesheng (26 August 1926).

Tinian ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Two weeks after bloody fighting secured Saipan, in the northern Mariana Islands, American Generals Harry Schmidt and Thomas Watson landed on nearby Tinian, held by about 9,500 Japanese under Admiral Kakuji Kakuda and Colonel Keishi Ogata. While the island's vital airfields were secured in about a week, it took three months to mop up the last resistance (24 July–1 August 1944).

Tintwa Inyoni ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Rietfontein

Tippecanoe ❙ 1811 ❙ Tecumseh's Confederacy

When the Shawnee Chief Tecumseh organised a confederacy against white expansion, General William Henry Harrison led 1,000 men to Tippecanoe Creek near Lafayette, Indiana. Attacked by Tecumseh's brother Tenskwatawa, Harrison secured an indecisive victory and destroyed nearby "Prophetstown." Tecumseh later supported the British in the War of 1812 (7 November 1811).

Tipperary ❙ 1922 ❙ Irish Civil War

A week after government forces captured rebel Waterford, other government units further west under commander Jerry Ryan advanced from Thurley towards Republican troops at Tipperary. Following heavy action just to the east at the town of Golden, Tipperary fell next day and the Republican survivors retired to help defend Carrick-on-Suir, east of Clonmel (29–30 July 1922).

Tippermuir ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

Following the debacle on Marston Moor (2 July) Charles I sent James Graham Marquis of Montrose to Scotland to lead Scots and Irish Royalists against non-conformist Covenanters under David Wemyss Earl of Elcho. At Tippermuir, near Perth, Elcho's much larger force was routed with over 2,000 killed. Within weeks Montrose went on to capture Perth and Aberdeen (1 September 1644).

Tirad Pass ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

Pursuing Revolutionary President Emilio Aguinaldo along the west coast of Luzon, American Major Peyton C. March and 900 men attacked his rearguard of just 60 men under 24-year-old General Gregorio del Pilar on Mount Tirad, southeast of Vigan near Candon. All but seven of the rearguard were killed, including the "Boy-General," but Aguinaldo was able to escape to the north (2 December 1899).

Tiran ❙ 1956 ❙ Arab-Israeli Sinai War

See Straits of Tiran

Tirano ❙ 1620 ❙ Swiss-Milanese Wars

Urged on by Spanish Milan, Italian Catholics in the Valtellina Valley on the Upper Adda rose against Switzerland and Bern and Zurich sent forces to protect local Protestants. At Tirano the Cantons were heavily defeated by Spanish regulars and it was almost 20 years before the valley—providing access between Habsburg Austria and Milan—was returned to Swiss sovereignty.

Tirapegui ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Recovering from a repulse at Zubiri, northeast of Pamplona, Spanish Carlists resumed their assault on the French Foreign Legion garrison at nearby Larrasoaña. During an indecisive five-hour action on the overlooking heights of Tirapegui, Legion Colonel Joseph Bernelle inflicted costly losses on a greatly superior Carlist force but eventually had to withdraw into Larrasoaña (25 April 1836).

Tirawari ❙ 1191 ❙ Later Muslim Conquest of Northern India
See Taraori

Tirawari ❙ 1216 ❙ Wars of the Delhi Sultanate
See Taraori

Tirgovist ❙ 1595 ❙ Wallachian-Turkish War

Ottoman Grand Vizier Sinan Pasha advancing into Romania against Prince Michael the Brave of Wallachia was defeated at Calugareni (23 August). He gathered fresh forces to attack Bucharest, then marched northwest and captured Tirgovist. After a brief siege Sinan was driven out by Prince Michael, who pursued the Turks to the Danube and inflicted a costly defeat at Giurgiu (October 1595).

Tirlement ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

As German troops swept into Belgium and attacked Liège, further west General Alexander von Kluck advanced on Brussels. East of the capital near Tirlement (Tienen) a hastily-assembled Belgian force tried to block the invaders but was overwhelmed. Brussels was occupied without resistance next day and King Albert and his survivors withdrew north towards Antwerp (18–19 August 1914).

Tiruchirapalli ❙ 1740 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars
See Trichinopoly

Tiruchirapalli ❙ 1751–1752 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War
See Trichinopoly

Tiruchirapalli ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (India)
See Trichinopoly

Tiruvadi ❙ 1677 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

Campaigning in southeast India, Maratha King Shivaji left part of his army to besiege Vellore and pursued Pathan General Sher Khan Lodi to Tiruvadi, west of Cuddalore, where he unwisely challenged the Marathas in the field. Sher Khan Lodi was heavily defeated and made terms (5 July), paying a massive ransom and granting Shivaji all his territory in Bijapur (26 June 1677).

Tiruvadi ❙ 1750 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

French Colonel Louis d'Auteil advanced inland from Pondicherry to establish a position on the Poonaiyar at Tiruvadi, where he defeated a force under Captain John Cope and Muhammad Ali, the British-supported Nawab of Arcot. When Cope withdrew d'Auteil again attacked and routed Muhammad Ali, who fled after losing more than 1,000 men (30 July & 1 September 1750).

Tiruvadi ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

Attacking British communications in southeast India, French Colonel Maissin and 2,000 Marathas under Morari Rao besieged Tiruvadi on the Poonaiyar. Reinforcements under Major Stringer Lawrence were repulsed (12 April) and after Lawrence was sent to Trichinopoly, a bold sortie from Tiruvadi was completely destroyed. The British garrison then surrendered (14 January–5 May 1753).

Tishomingo Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
See Brice's Cross Roads

Tisza ❙ 601 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars
See Viminacium

Tisza (1st) ❙ 1919 ❙ Hungarian-Romanian War

Determined to prevent Bolshevik Hungary recapturing Transylvania, Romanian forces began a broad offensive east of the Tisza and the key cities of Debrecen and Gyula fell (23–24 April) after heavy Hungarian losses. Hungarian Colonel Károly Kratochvil's division surrendered at Nyírbátor and surviving forces withdrew across the Tisza, stabilising the eastern front (16–26 April 1919).

Tisza (2nd) ❙ 1919 ❙ Hungarian-Romanian War

Hungary's Communist leader Béla Kun withdrew from Slovakia after defeat at Nove Zamky, then launched a fresh offensive in the east across the Tisza. His Red Army captured Szolnok, but a week later Kun faced a powerful Romanian counter-attack along the Tisza. The Hungarian army was repulsed along a broad front and the Romanians advanced on Budapest (2–27 July 1919).

Tit ❙ 1902 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa

On a reprisal raid south from In Salah against the Taureg of southeast Algeria, Lieutenant Gaston Cottonest and 130 men, mainly Arab, came under attack at Tit, northwest of Tamanrasset. The Taureg were eventually repulsed with 93 killed for just 13 casualties in the outnumbered patrol. Taureg power was badly damaged and in 1905 Moussa ag Amastane sued for peace (7 May 1902).

Tizin ❙ 1105 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

See Artah

Tizzi Azza ❙ 1922 ❙ Spanish-Rif War

Despite Spanish disaster in Morocco at Anual (July 1921) General Ricardo Burguete ordered a new advance from Melilla against the Riffian rebel Abd el Krim. Attacked south of Anual at Tizzi Azza, the Spanish Legion lost almost 2,000 casualties in heavy fighting and the offensive was halted. However, further rebel attacks were repulsed in December and the following June (1–2 November 1922).

Tizzi Azza ❙ 1923 ❙ Spanish-Rif War

Determined the repel the Spanish offensive in Morocco, Rif leader Abd el Krim launched a renewed assault against the Legion outpost at Tizzi Azza, southwest of Melilla. His army was driven off with heavy losses, although Spanish commander Colonel Rafael Valenzuela was killed leading a charge. Peace talks failed and at the end of 1924 the Rif destroyed a Spanish army at Chaouen (5 June 1923).

Tjiledug ❙ 1752 ❙ Later Dutch Wars in the East Indies

In support of Ratu Sjarifa of Bantam, in northwest Java, Dutch forces under Colonel Willem von Ossenberch attacked the rebel Kjahi Tapa, who had met with considerable early success and threatened Batavia itself. The Dutch secured a decisive victory at Tjiledug, southeast of Cheribon, then entered Bantam, effectively ending the independence of the Sultanate (13 July 1752).

Toba-Fushimi ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

See Fushimi

Tobago ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

While campaigning against French territory in the West Indies, a British squadron under Admiral Sir John Laforey arrived at Tobago from Bridgetown, Barbados. A 500-strong landing force stormed the town's fort and took the island in less than a day with minimal casualties. Tobago changed hands again several times during the course of the war (14 April 1793).

Tobitschau ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Crown Prince Karl Wilhelm of Prussia advanced towards Vienna after victory at Königgratz (3 July) and attacked Tobitschau, just east of modern Prostejov in eastern Bohemia, held by Austrian General Lothar Rothkirch. After very courageous resistance and an attempted counter-attack, the Austrians were forced to withdraw north to Olmütz, losing 500 casualties and 500 prisoners (16 July 1866).

Tobol ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

Defeated in the Urals at Zlatoust, Ekaterinburg and Chelyabinsk, White commander Admiral Aleksandr Kolchak withdrew to the Tobol, where he made a bold stand against the advancing Red Army of General Mikhail Tukhachevski. Despite initial success, Kolchak was crushed in a renewed offensive and fled east towards Omsk, abandoning the city of Petropavlosk (August–October 1919).

Tobruk (1st) ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

After taking Bardia in Libya, General Richard O'Connor raced west to attack Tobruk. Following intense air and naval bombardment, British forces stormed the strategic port, capturing huge quantities of stores and 25,000 prisoners, including General Petassi Manella. O'Connor then crossed the desert via Mechili to intercept the retreating Italians at Beda Fomm (6–22 January 1941).

Tobruk (2nd) ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Axis General Erwin Rommel advanced into Cyrenaica from El Agheila and took Benghazi and Derna, then faced stubborn British resistance at the strategic port of Tobruk. After some costly failed assaults, Rommel turned to drive off a relief force at Sollum-Halfaya and Tobruk remained under blockade until after the Allied counter-offensive at Sidi Rezegh (10 April–8 December 1941).

Tobruk ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Having destroyed the defensive line at Gazala, German commander Erwin Rommel attacked the garrison left behind at Tobruk, where the defensive perimeter had deteriorated badly. When Axis forces attacked behind a massive artillery and aerial bombardment, South African General Hendrik Klopper surrendered 33,000 men and Rommel raced east towards El Alamein (18–21 June 1942).

Tocuyito ❙ 1899 ❙ Venezuelan Civil Wars

Renewing resistance to President Ignacio Andrade, begun at Mata Carmelera, Cipriano Castro's "Revolution of Liberal Restoration" secured much of the country. In a final effort General Diego Bautista Ferrer gathered 5,500 men at Valencia, but at nearby Tocuyito he was routed with over 1,000 casualties. The army then started peace talks and Castro became President (14 September 1899).

Tofrek ❙ 1885 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

General Sir Gerald Graham tried to open the road from the Red Sea west to the Nile, beating the Dervishes at Hashin before sending General Sir John McNeill VC south to establish a stockade at Tofrek. Surprised by a large Dervish force, McNeill lost almost 300 casualties before his opponents were repulsed with perhaps 2,000 killed. Whitehall then ordered Graham to withdraw (22 March 1885).

Togbao ❙ 1899 ❙ French Conquest of Chad

See Niellim

Tohopeka ❙ 1814 ❙ Creek Indian War

See Horseshoe Bend

Tohyang-san ❙ 1593 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

See Haengju

Tokar ❙ 1883 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

In an effort to relieve the Mahdist siege of Tokar in eastern Sudan, Governor Suleiman Pasha Niyazi sent a force under Mahmud Tahir inland from the Red Sea port of Trinkitat. Advancing towards Tokar, they were routed by a Dervish force led by Abdullah ibn Hamed—with Lynedoch Moncrieff, British consul at Suakin killed—and the survivors fled back to Suakin (4 November 1883).

Tokar ❙ 1891 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

Determined to capture Tokar, in eastern Sudan, Colonel Sir Charles Holled-Smith, Governor of Suakin, advanced inland from Trinkitat against Mahdist commander Osman Digna's camp at nearby Afatit. Osman surprised the outnumbered Anglo-Egyptian force but was eventually defeated. Holled-Smith secured Tokar and Osman withdrew to the Atbara (19 February 1891).

Tokay ❙ 1527 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Following his victory at Mohacs (August 1526) Sultan Suleiman I withdrew from Hungary leaving the Transylvanian John Zapolya to rule in his name. Ferdinand of Habsburg recovered most of the country, then in the northeast at Tokay decisively defeated Zapolya. In order to aid his vassal, Suleiman then launched a fresh invasion, culminating in the siege of Vienna (26 September 1527).

Tokyo ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

See Ueno

Tolbiacum ❙ 496 ❙ Frankish-Alemannic War

See Zulpich

Toledo, Paraguay ❙ 1933 ❙ Chaco War

While trying to distract Bolivia's attack on Nanawa in the Chaco Boreal, Paraguayan Colonel Juan Ayala attacked the Bolivians at Corrales, south of Mariscal Estigarribia, but was himself besieged at nearby Toledo. After a prolonged and bloody assault, the mutinous Bolivians were driven off with 2,000 casualties, including 700 killed, and fled towards Camacho (16 February–11 March 1933).

Toledo, Spain ❙ 1084–1085 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

Alfonso VI of Castile took advantage of disunity among the rulers of Islamic Spain to seize the tributary city of Toledo, which fell after a prolonged siege. He then made it his capital, extending the Christian border to the Tagus. However, the Muslims sought military aid from the Almoravids of Morocco and in October 1086 Alfonso was badly defeated at Zallaka (1084–6 May 1085).

Toledo, Spain ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

See Alcazar

Tolentino ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

Prematurely declaring war after Napoleon Bonaparte's return from Elbe, King Joachim I of Naples (Marshal Murat) led a Neapolitan army against Austria and was routed by General Vincenz Bianchi at Ferrara, then again in central Italy near Macerata at Tolentino, losing all his guns. The Austrians could now move against Bonaparte and Murat returned to France in disgrace (3 May 1815).

Tolenus ❙ 90 BC ❙ Roman Social War

With the Marsi of central Italy fighting Rome after a failed bid for citizenship, Consul Rutilius Lupus marched against them on the Tolenus, north of Carsioli. Attacked by a large force under Vettius Scato, Lupus was defeated and killed, with perhaps 8,000 men lost. Roman commander Gaius Marius quickly counter-attacked downstream and Scato withdrew with costly losses (11 June 90 BC).

Tolhuis ❙ 1672 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

Louis XIV of France and Louis II de Bourbon Prince of Condé invaded Holland with a massive army and advanced down the Rhine. In a sharp action against Field Marshal Paul Wirtz they forced the river on the Dutch border at Tolhuis (modern Lobith) then seized Nijmegen and much of the central Dutch Republic. However, they could not manage to capture Amsterdam (12 June 1672).

Tololing ❙ 1999 ❙ Kargil War

When Pakistani regulars and Mujahaden fighters occupied strategic heights in Indian Kashmir, India counter-attacked in force, with heaviest fighting for 16,000 foot Tololing, overlooking Das and the Srinigar-Leh highway. After initial costly failure, large-scale artillery was introduced and the position was taken by brutal assault. Nearby heights fell and the Pakistanis withdrew (22 May–13 June 1999).

Tolomé ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

Rebelling in support of Gómez Pedraza against President Anatasio Bustamente, General Antonio de Santa Anna, Governor of Veracruz, met an advancing government army under Generals José Maria Calderón and José Antonio Facio northwest of Veracruz at Tolomé. Santa Anna's outnumbered force suffered a decisive defeat and fell back under siege to Veracruz (5 March 1832).

Tolosa, Andalucía ❙ 1212 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

See Las Navas de Tolosa

Tolosa, Basque Country ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Five days after the great Allied victory at Vitoria, a mixed British-Portuguese-Spanish army advancing into northern Spain under General Sir Thomas Graham encountered French General Maximilien Foy attempting to hold the crossroads city of Tolosa, southwest of San Sebastián. Despite confused and indecisive fighting, Foy held off the attack and was able to retreat into France (26 June 1813).

Tolosa, France ❙ 439 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Toulouse

Tolosa, France ❙ 458 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Toulouse

Tolosa, France ❙ 721 ❙ Goth Muslim Invasion of France

See Toulouse

Toluca ❙ 1860 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Reversing the government defeat at Calderón (10 November) President Miguel Miramón and General Miguel Negrete marched west from Mexico City and surprised a Liberal force under Generals Felipe Berriozábal and Santos Degollado at Toluca. While Miramón secured a sharp victory, it was only a brief reprieve and his army was crushed two weeks later at Calpulalpam (8 December 1860).

Tolvajärvi ❙ 1939 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

While Russia's main invasion of Finland assaulted the Mannerheim Line, General Nikolai Beljajev advanced with 20,000 men further north around Tolvajärvi. General Woldemar Hägglund and Colonel Paavo Talvela drove the Russians off in very heavy fighting and inflicted terrible losses. The invaders meantime suffered even worse casualties around Suomussalmi (1–23 December 1939).

Tom's Brook ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Union commander Philip Sheridan withdrew along Virginia's Shenandoah Valley after victory at Fisher's Hill (22 September) he sent General Albert T. Torbert against pursuing Confederate Generals Thomas L. Rosser and Lunsford L. Lomax. At Tom's Brook, five miles south of Strasburg, Torbert's cavalry won a sharp victory and the rebels fled south towards Woodstock (9 October 1864).

Tonamiyama ❙ 1183 ❙ Gempei War

See Kurikara

Tondibi ❙ 1591 ❙ Moroccan-Songhai War

With the West African Songhai Empire threatening his southern border, Ahmad al-Mansur of Morocco sent 4,000 cavalry and musketeers across the Sahara under Spanish mercenary Judar Pasha. At Tondibi, northwest of Lake Chad, the primitively armed troops of Songhai suffered a terrible defeat. Judar went on to sack Gao and Timbuktu, after which Songhai never fully recovered (12 March 1591).

Tongguan ❙ 756 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

See Chang'an

Tongguan ❙ 1645 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

Manchu forces helped Ming General Wu Sangui beat rebel Li Zicheng at Shanhaiguan before taking Beijing for themselves. Manchu Prince Dodo and General Wu later pursued the rebels into Shaanxi where bloody fighting at Tongguan Pass, east of Xi'an, cost Li's army very heavy losses, including commander Ma Shiyao captured. Li himself was killed later that year (7–8 February 1645).

Tongnae ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

At the start of Toyotomi Hideyoshi's invasion of Korea, Konishi Yukinaga and So Yoshitomo secured Pusan, then advanced inland against the powerful fortress at Tongnae, courageously defended by 20,000 men under Song Sang-hyun. However, the fortress was stormed, with about 5,000 killed including Song. Japanese forces then advanced through Sangju and Chongju to Seoul (24 May 1592).

Tongos ❙ 1882 ❙ War of the Pacific

A few days after Chilean forces destroyed the Peruvian hamlet of Nahiumpuqio, southeast of Huancayo, and massacred the people, they were attacked just to the east at Tongos by Huancavelica guerrillas under Domingo Huaripata and Custodio Damián. The Chileans suffered heavy losses and, as an act of revenge, the heads of the slain were displayed on pikes at nearby Izcuchaca (28 March 1882).

Tongres ❙ 57 BC ❙ Rome's Later Gallic Wars

See Aduatuca

Tongue ❙ 1865 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

General Patrick Connor and a force of 250 soldiers and 80 Pawnee Scouts marched out of Fort Laramie against the Arapaho in northern Wyoming and attacked Black Bear at the upper Tongue on the Wyoming-Montana border near modern Ranchester. With their camp overrun and burned, the Arapaho were forced to withdraw, losing 64 warriors and several hundred ponies (29 August 1865).

Tonning ❙ 1713 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Encouraged by Swedish disaster at Poltava in 1709, Frederick IV of Denmark and Augustus II Elector of Saxony invaded Swedish territory in northern Germany. Rallying after defeat at Gadebusch (December 1712) the Allies attacked Swedish General Magnus Stenbock at Tonning in Holstein. Stenbock was defeated and forced to capitulate, leaving the Allies to besiege Stralsund (16 May 1713).

Toppenish ❙ 1855 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars

Resisting land-hungry miners, Yakima warriors in southern Washington State under Kamiakin killed an Indian Agent then met troops under Major Granville Haller at the Toppenish, near Fort Simcoe. Haller was at first successful, but when Indian reinforcements arrived, he slipped away at night with eight killed and seven wounded. Kamiakin lost weeks later at Union Gap (6–8 October 1855).

Tora Bora ❙ 2001 ❙ Afghanistan War

With the fall of the Taliban regime at Kandahar, Afghan militia, supported by British and American Special Forces, closed in on perhaps 1,000 Al Qaeda fighters in the Tora Bora Mountains, south of Jalalabad. After heavy ground attack and unprecedented aerial bombing, the besieged survivors fled their devastated cave complex, leaving many killed and wounded (December 2001).

Torata ❙ 1823 ❙ Peruvian War of Independence

On a fresh advance in Peru, Patriot forces led by General Rudecindo Alvarado captured Moquegua then attacked Royalists under Gerónimo Valdez to the northeast at Torata. Leading a rash frontal assault, Alvarado was routed by Spanish cavalry under General José Canterac. With his ammunition exhausted, Alvarado was forced to withdraw, leaving about 400 casualties (19 January 1823).

Torbat-i-Jam ❙ 1528 ❙ Persian-Uzbek Wars

The Uzbek Ubaid Khan defeated Persia and its Mongol allies in 1512 at Kul-i-Malik and Ghujduwan, then entered western Afghanistan to besiege Herat. But he had to withdraw after an Uzbek loss at Damghan. Between Herat and Meshed at Torbat-i-Jam, Ubaid was intercepted by Persian Shah Tahmasp and, after heavy losses on both sides, he was wounded and left the field (26 September 1528).

Torbat-i-Jam ❙ 1751 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

Amid political confusion following the death of Nadir Shah of Persia, Mir Alum Khan of Seistan seized government from Nadir's 14-year-old grandson Shah Rukh and marched southeast from Meshed to recapture Herat. En route at Torbat-i-Jam he was routed by Timur Shah, son of Afghan ruler Ahmad Shah Durrani. Ahmad then captured Meshed and restored Shah Rukh under his suzerainty.

Torch ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

With Axis forces retreating across Libya after defeat at El Alamein, over 100,000 Anglo-American troops under General Dwight D. Eisenhower invaded Vichy Northwest Africa in the amphibious operation codenamed Torch. After landings at Algiers, Oran and Casablanca, some heavy fighting secured a ceasefire and the Allies advanced into Tunisia (8–17 November 1942).

Torches ❙ 1583 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

See Vilasa

Tordesillas ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

While withdrawing from his failed siege of Burgos (21 October) Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington lost at Venta del Pozo and Villa Muriel before his rearguard tried to hold a position on the Duoro at Tordesillas, southwest of Valladolid. However, they were beaten by French advance units under General Maximilien Foy and Wellington continued his retreat towards Portugal (29 October 1812).

Torfou ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Vendée War)

Days after defeating Royalist rebel leader Francois-Athanase Charette south of the Loire at Montaigu, Republican General Jean-Baptiste Kléber pursued him to nearby Torfou and was routed in a brilliant rebel counter-attack. Kléber skillfully disengaged and withdrew northwest pursued by Charles Bonchamp towards Pallet, while Charette returned west to recapture Montaigu (19 September 1793).

Torgau ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Frederick II of Prussia was marching towards Berlin after cutting his way out of Liegnitz (15 August) when he turned to attack Austrian Marshal Leopold von Daun south of the capital at Torgau. The Austrians were driven across the Elbe in a disorganised action which continued into the night. It was Frederick's bloodiest victory and both sides withdrew to winter quarters (3 November 1760).

Torgovaya ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

On the offensive in the Kuban, White commander Anton Denikin marched against Red General Boris Dumenko at Torgovaya. The respected White General Sergei Markov was killed leading his troops at the capture of nearby Shablievskaya Station, but Torgovaya was taken by storm. Denikin himself then advanced on a Red Brigade at Belaya Glina (25 June 1918).

Torgovaya ❙ 1920 ❙ Russian Civil War

As General Symeon Budenny invaded the Kuban east of Rostov, White General Aleksandr Pavlov led a counter-offensive to Torgovaya, which fell after he routed General Boris Dumenko's Red cavalry. After hard fighting in bitter cold along the Egorlyk, including the largest cavalry action of the war, Pavlov abandoned his guns and fell back on Novorossisk (14 February–2 March 1920).

Torinomi ❙ 1057 ❙ Earlier Nine Years War

When the Abe Clan of Mutsu Province in northeast Japan rose against the Imperial Court, Imperial Governor Minamoto Yoriyoshi attacked the rebels at the Torinomi Stockade, north of modern Hiraizumi in Iwate. Clan leader Abe Yoritoki was defeated and killed, but his son Sadato recovered to check the Imperial forces the following year at Kawasaki.

Torna ❙ 1704 ❙ Mughal-Maratha Wars

Emperor Aurangzeb captured the Maratha fortress of Raigargh southwest of Poona then quickly sent Muhammad Amin Khan and Tarbiyat Khan against nearby Torna. After a brief siege the Mughals stormed Torna by escalade and forced the garrison to surrender. The victory completed capture of the principal Maratha forts, although most were soon recaptured (23 February–10 March 1704).

Tornavento ❙ 1636 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

As a French-Savoyard army under Duke Victor Amadeus and Marshal Charles de Crequi campaigned in northern Italy, they were attacked on the Ticino, west of Milan at Tornavento, by Spanish Governor Diego Felipe de Guzmán Marquis de Leganés. The Spaniards were forced to retreat after fierce fighting and suffered another loss the following year at Monte Baldo (23 June 1636).

Toro ❙ 1476 ❙ Portuguese-Castilian Wars

Following the death of Henry IV of Castile, many nobles supported his daughter Joanna against his sister Isabella, who married Ferdinand of Aragon and had herself declared Queen of Castile. Joanna's uncle Alfonso V of Portugal (who had married her by proxy) invaded Spain and was defeated at Toro, east of Zamora. Portugal made peace and Joanna retired to a convent.

Toronto ❙ 1837 ❙ Canadian Rebellion

With French-Canadian rebellion crushed at St Denis, Upper Canada Governor Francis Head faced an advance on Toronto by insurgents under William McKenzie seeking a provisional government independent of Britain. A volley by Sheriff William Jarvis repulsed the rebels and they were dispersed two days later at nearby Montgomery's Tavern. McKenzie fled to the United States (5 December 1837).

Torrence's Tavern ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Tarrant's Tavern

Torréon ❙ 1913 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Entering Mexico from Texas, Francisco (Pancho) Villa created the División del Norte and attacked Torréon, which fell by storm after a 24-hour action, yielding vast supplies of arms, ammunition and railway rolling-stock. After executing the Federal officers, Villa left a small garrison and marched on Chihuahua, though Torréon was soon retaken by government forces (1 October 1913).

Torréon ❙ 1914 ❙ Mexican Revolution

After taking Chihuahua in December 1913, Francisco (Pancho) Villa led a large force against Torréon in central Mexico. The city, which he had won and lost the previous year, was now defended by veteran Federal General José Refugio Velasco. Villa lost heavy casualties in some of the hardest fighting of the revolution before the Federals escaped in a sudden dust-storm (26 March–3 April 1914).

Torres Vedras ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

British General Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington fell back from his bloody victory at Bussaco in central Portugal (27 September) and occupied the powerful defensive lines of Torres Vedras outside Lisbon. French Marshal André Masséna probed the sophisticated complex of defences but could make no impact and after a month the French started back to Spain (10 October–14 November 1810).

Torrington ❙ 1646 ❙ British Civil Wars

Bringing an end to the war in the west, Parliamentary commander Sir Thomas Fairfax captured Dartmouth (18 January) then pursued Sir Ralph Hopton into North Devon. Hopton's Cornish infantry were heavily defeated at Torrington, near Barnstaple, and he later signed a separate surrender a week before the Royalist cause was finally crushed in March at Stow (16 February 1646).

Tortona ❙ 1155 ❙ Frederick's 1st Expedition to Italy

Emperor Frederick Barbarossa marched into northern Italy with a large army and attempted to weaken Milan by ravaging her allies such as Asti and Chiari. He then besieged the unfortunate city of Tortona, east of Alessandria, which held out for two months against a bloody siege until forced by lack of water to surrender. Tortona was then burned to the ground (February–April 1195).

Tortosa ❙ 1148 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

A renewed Christian offensive in eastern Spain saw Ramon Berenguer IV of Aragon launch a major attack against Tortosa at the mouth of the Ebro, aided by Count William of Montpellier, Genoese troops and European Crusaders fresh from capturing Lisbon. The city fell after a six-month siege, completing Christian control of the whole Ebro basin (July–December 1148).

Tortosa ❙ 1810–1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Six months after the siege and capture of Lérida, Marshal Louis Suchet marched into Catalonia to besiege Tortosa on the Ebro, defended by General Miguel Lili e Idiáquez Conde de Alacha. Tortosa was subjected to extreme shelling and, with the capture of the bastion of San Pedro, Alacha surrendered the city. Suchet then advanced to the siege of Tarragona (19 December 1810–2 February 1811).

Torun ❙ 1703 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Thorn

Tory Island ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Irish Rising)

See Donegal Bay

Toshimitsu ❙ 1587 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

The Shimazu brothers Yoshihiro and Iehisa led a Satsuma invasion of northeast Kyushu to besiege Toshimitsu and threaten Funai (modern Oita) where Otomo Yoshimune sought aid from Toyotomi Hideyoshi. He sent Sengoku Hidehisa and Chosokabe Motochika from Shikoku, who were routed near Toshimitsu at the Hetsugigawa, but the Satsuma withdrew to Takashiro (January 1587).

Toski ❙ 1889 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

Flushed with victory over Abyssinia at Gallabat (9 March) about 8,000 Mahdists under Emir Wad el-Najumi invaded Egypt, where they were met at Toski, north of Wadi Halfa, by an Egyptian army led by the Sirdar Sir Francis Grenfell, supported by cavalry under Colonel Herbert Kitchener. Najumi was killed in a complete rout with most of his army killed or captured (3 August 1889).

Tot-dong ❙ 1426 ❙ Sino-Vietnamese War

Besieged at Dong-do (later Hanoi) by Vietnamese commander Le Loi and General Nguyen Trai, Ming Chinese General Wang Tong rashly attempted a counter-offensive, against the advice of Commissioner Chen Qia. At nearby Tot-dong the Chinese were routed, with Chen Qia fatally wounded. After further defeat at Chi Lang (1427) China withdrew from Vietnam (5–6 December 1426).

Totopotomoy Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Union commander Ulysses S. Grant was advancing south from the North Anna across the Pamunkey towards Richmond, Virginia, when he was blocked northeast of the Confederate capital at Totopotomoy Creek by General Robert E. Lee. After inconclusive manoeuvring and about 1,000 men lost on either side, both armies moved further south to meet again at Cold Harbour (28–30 May 1864).

Toul ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Advancing west from Strasbourg, German forces attacked Toul, commanding the vital rail line to Paris. After failure to take it by assault, the fortress was besieged. When Friedrich Franz II of Mecklenburg arrived from Sedan with reinforcements and siege guns, Toul was forced to capitulate. The Grand Duke then marched northwest against Soissons (17 August–23 September 1870).

Toulon ❙ 1707 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

With the French driven out of Italy after Turin (September 1706) Prince Eugène and Victor

Amadeus II of Savoy marched west towards Toulon, defended by Marshal Count René de Tessé. Despite a naval blockade by Sir Clowdesley Shovell, and eight French ships scuttled, the siege and assault failed and the Allies withdrew. Shovell drowned in a shipwreck on the way home (15 July–10 August 1707).

Toulon ❙ 1744 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Admirals Claude-Élisée La Bruyère and José Navarro led their ships out of Toulon and were intercepted by British Admirals Thomas Matthews and Richard Lestock. In a badly handled action the French and Spanish ships inflicted the greater damage and broke the English blockade. Matthews was court-martialled and cashiered while Lestock was controversially acquitted (21 February 1744).

Toulon ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Supporting Royalists in Toulon, British Admiral Sir Alexander Hood and Admiral Juan de Langara of Spain seized the port and landed a force under Sir Henry Phipps. After General Jacques Dugommier besieged Toulon and Colonel Napoleon Bonaparte captured strategic forts, the Allies evacuated, taking or destroying much of the French fleet (27 August–19 December 1793).

Toulon ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

When Allied forces invaded southern France along the Riviera, Free French commander Jean de Lattre de Tassigny ordered General Edgar de Larminant west along the coast against the key port of Toulon. The strong German garrison resisted in bloody street-by-street fighting, but with the French closing in on Marseilles to the west, 17,000 men finally surrendered (20–28 August 1944).

Toulouse ❙ 439 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

Over-confident after the siege of Narbonne (437) Roman General Litorius led his largely Hun army against the Goth capital at Tolosa (modern Toulouse). In the war's decisive battle, the Goth King Theodoric attacked the Roman camp, causing heavy casualties, including Litorius captured and executed. However, Goth losses were also heavy and Theodoric made peace with Governor Avitus.

Toulouse ❙ 458 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

The Western Emperor Majorian led an epic mid-winter expedition over the Alps, taking a large army from Italy into Gaul to restore Roman authority after chaos at the end of Avitus' reign. He defeated the Visigoth Theodoric II near his capital at Toulouse, then secured his co-operation against the Suevi in Spain. However, fighting later resumed and Theodoric's army was finally routed at Orleans in 463.

Toulouse ❙ 721 ❙ Muslim Invasion of France

Having conquered Spain, Muslim Arabs crossed the Pyrenees into Aquitaine where Sama ibn Malik, the Arab Viceroy of Spain, besieged Toulouse. Attacked by a relief army under Eudo Duke of Aquitaine, Sama was heavily defeated and killed. The victory marked the first major setback to the Arab invasion of Western Europe. Eudo also helped repulse a second expedition ten years later at Tours.

Toulouse ❙ 1218 ❙ Anglo-French Wars

After Simon de Montfort's defeat of the Albigensians at Muret, the Anglo-Norman knight was granted land belonging to Raymond IV of Toulouse, who had supported the heretics. Raymond reoccupied Toulouse in 1217, where he was besieged by de Montfort. Simon was killed in the fighting and his son Amaury later conceded the disputed land to King Louis VIII (25 June 1218).

Toulouse ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

With the Royalist cause gaining renewed support in southwestern France, a large Royalist force, with English and Spanish support, advanced on Republican Toulouse. Heavy fighting outside the city and on the nearby Pech David Hill saw the rebels badly defeated with perhaps 400 killed and 800 captured. The survivors were then crushed to the southwest at Montréjeau (7–9 August 1799).

Toulouse ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Nicolas Soult was withdrawing after defeat at Orthez (27 February) when he turned to defend the French city of Toulouse against Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington. Soult threw back a costly attack by Spanish General Manuel Freire but was driven out by General Sir William Beresford. Only after the battle did the combatants learn Napoleon Bonaparte had already abdicated (10 April 1814).

Toumorong ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

North Vietnamese regulars opened a monsoon season offensive into the central Highlands of Kontum, advancing around the isolated mountain outpost at Toumorong. Aided by massive bombing, US airborne forces counter-attacked (Operation Hawthorne) to raise the siege and virtually annihilate an enemy regiment. The action was claimed as some of the hardest fighting of the war (5–7 June 1966).

Toungoo ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

While Japanese forces occupied Rangoon, General Hiroshi Takeuchi drove north towards Mandalay and met Chinese coming down the Burma Road, who tried to halt the invaders at Toungoo. Despite courageous defence by General Tai Anlan's 200th Brigade, the Chinese were driven off towards Lashio with heavy losses. Further west, the British lost Prome (26–30 March 1942).

Tourane ❙ 1858 ❙ French Conquest of Indo-China

See Danang

Tourcoing ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Invading from Belgium, the Austrian-British-Hanoverian army of Friedrich Josias Prince of Saxe-Coburg met the French at Tourcoing, northeast of Lille, led by Generals Charles Pichegru and Joseph Souham. After the Allied army divided into columns, the centre advanced and was cut to pieces. Prince Friedrich was forced to withdraw and the French went on to take Charleroi (18 May 1794).

Tournai ❙ 1214 ❙ Anglo-French Wars

See Bouvines

Tournai ❙ 1340 ❙ Hundred Years War

Following his great naval victory at Sluys (24 June) Edward III of England landed in Flanders and marched to support the siege of Tournai, held by Gaston II Count of Foix against Jacob van Artevelde and his Flemish artisan army. The siege cost both sides heavy losses and when Philip VI of France approached with a large force the rival kings made a brief truce (29 July–24 September 1340).

Tournai ❙ 1581 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Repulsed from an attack on Cambrai, Spanish Viceroy Alexander Farnese, later Duke of Parma, turned against Tournai, courageously defended in the absence of her husband by Marie van Lalaing, Princess of Espinoy. She negotiated an honourable capitulation after a two-month siege and the citizens were levied a ransom to save the city from sack (1 October–29 November 1581).

Tournai ❙ 1709 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Following failed peace talks after the fall of Lille, John Churchill Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugène of Savoy marched east to besiege Tournai, defended by Louis de Hautefort, Marquis de Surville. French Marshal Claude Villars was unable to relieve the fortress and, after it was forced to surrender, the Allies marched southeast against Villars at Mons (28 June–3 September 1709).

Tournai ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

French General Charles Pichegru failed to follow up his victory at Tourcoing in Belgium, permitting the Austrian-British-Hanoverian Allies to reform on the Scheldte. In an indecisive battle five days later at Tournai, east of Lille, despite success around Pont-à-Chin, both sides disengaged with heavy casualties and the Allies were forced to continue withdrawing north (22 May 1794).

Tours ❙ 732 ❙ Muslim Invasion of France

The Arab governor Abd-ar-Rahman invaded France from Spain to win at Bordeaux before being confronted near the Vienne, between Tours and Poitiers, by Eudo Duke of Aquitaine and a Frankish army under Charles Martel. An historic victory which halted the tide of Islam in western Europe saw Abd-ar-Rahman killed. Charles was given the name Martel—The Hammer (October 732).

Towcester ❙ 61 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

See Boudicca

Towton ❙ 1461 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Despite victory at St Albans, Henry VI and Margaret of Anjou returned to Lancashire, pursued by Edward Duke of York and Richard Neville Earl of Warwick. After defeat at Ferrybridge, the Lancastrians were routed next day at Towton, near Tadcaster, in the bloodiest battle of the war. Henry and Queen Margaret fled to Scotland and York took the throne as Edward IV (29 March 1461).

Toyotomi Castle ❙ 1614–1615 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

See Osaka Castle

Trading Post ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Marais des Cygnes

Trafalgar ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

One of Britain's most important naval victories saw Admiral Lord Horatio Nelson lead his fleet to intercept and destroy the French-Spanish fleet under Admiral Pierre Villeneuve off Cape Trafalgar, west of Gibraltar. Without any ships lost, the British sank or captured 18 rival vessels and inflicted about 14,000 casualties. However, Nelson was fatally wounded by a French sniper (21 October 1805).

Trajan's Gate ❙ 986 ❙ Byzantine Wars of Tsar Samuel

After marching into Bulgaria against the newly established Tsar Samuel, the Byzantine Emperor Basil II failed in a poorly managed siege of Sardica (modern Sofia) and was attacked as he withdrew southeast through Trajan's Gate, a mountain pass beyond Ikhtiman. The Imperial army was heavily defeated, losing valuable baggage, and Basil was lucky to escape with his life (17 August 986).

Tra-khe ❙ 605 ❙ Sino-Vietnamese Wars

Sent to restore Chinese authority in rebellious Vietnam, General Liu Fang secured Annam in the north with victory at Giao-chao, then marched south into Champa, where he defeated King Sambhuvarman's army and looted his capital at Tra-khe (near modern Danang). The King agreed to maintain tribute to China but on the way home Liu Fang died in an epidemic which struck his army.

Traktir Bridge ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War

See Chernaya

Trancheron ❙ 1648 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

French Marshals Charles de la Porte Duke de la Meilleraie and Cesar de Choiseul du Plessis-Praslin captured Piombino and Porto Longone, then concluded war in northern Italy by advancing against the Spanish army entrenched at Trancheron, between Cremona and the Oglio. Luis Benavides Marquis de Caracéna was heavily defeated, then shut up in the ruins of Cremona (30 June 1648).

Transloy Ridges ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Days after success on the Somme at Morval and Thiepval, British General Sir Henry

Rawlinson attacked on a broad front along the Albert-Bapaume Road. The Battle of the Transloy Ridges saw Eaucourt and Le Sars captured, lost to German counter-attack, then taken again. The French took Sailly before the action ground to a halt in terrible cold and mud (1–18 October 1916).

Tranter's Creek ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As part of his expedition against the Carolina coast, Union General Ambrose E. Burnside sent Colonel Francis A. Osborn from Washington, on the Pamlico River in North Carolina, west along the Grenville Road towards Pactolus. In action at nearby Tranter's Creek, Osborne defeated and killed Confederate Colonel George B. Singletary, then returned to Washington (5 June 1862).

Trapani ❙ 249 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

See Drepanum

Trapani ❙ 1266 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

Venetian Admiral Jacopo Dandolo resolved to avenge losses at Saseno (1264) and pursued Genoa's fleet to Trapani, in western Sicily, where Admiral Lanfranco Borborino unwisely decided to chain and defend his ships rather than meet the Venetians at sea. Dandolo captured all 27 Genoese galleys, reinforcing Venetian naval supremacy. Borborino was tried for cowardice (23 June 1266).

Trasimeno ❙ 217 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

See Lake Trasimene

Trautenau ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

While Prussian Prince Friedrich Karl invaded Austrian Bohemia through Liebenau and Podol, Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm and General Adolf von Bonin invaded towards Trautenau (modern Trutnov) northeast of Königgratz. Although the invaders were initially driven back, Austrians under Baron Ludwig von Gablenz suffered far greater losses and fell back through Soor (27 June 1866).

Travancore ❙ 1789 ❙ 3rd British-Mysore War

Tipu Sultan of Mysore was dissatisfied with the peace of 1784 and sought French aid to renew war. The trigger was a dispute over Cochin in which Tipu attacked the British protectorate of Travancore. He was driven off with costly losses and France provided no real help in the ensuing war. When it ended at Seringapatam (February 1792) Tipu lost half his kingdom (29 December 1789).

Treasury Islands ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

New Zealanders under Brigadier Robert Row helped secure Vella Lavella (5 October) then moved west to the Treasury Islands for their first opposed landing since Gallipoli 1915. While Stirling fell quickly, sharp fighting on Mono caused the New Zealanders 40 killed and 140 wounded, as well as 40 American casualties. All but eight of the 200 Japanese garrison died (27 October–1 November 1943).

Trebbia ❙ 218 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Driven back from defeat at the Ticinus by Hannibal's Carthaginians, a Roman army took up position on the Trebbia River, near Placentia (modern Piacenza). Reinforced by Gauls from the Po Valley, Hannibal enticed Consul Sempronius Longus to attack in a snowstorm. A total rout saw the Romans destroyed, with many drowned trying to escape across the icy river (December 218 BC).

Trebbia ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Marching north through the Apennines to reinforce General Jean Victor Moreau, General Jacques Macdonald found himself facing a massive Austrian-Russian army under General Alexander Suvorov, who was determined to keep the two French forces apart. A hard-fought battle on the Trebbia, saw Macdonald heavily defeated with massive losses in casualties and prisoners (17–19 June 1799).

Trebizond ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Caucasus Front)

While Russian forces stormed across the Caucasus through Erzurum, General V. P. Lyakhov led a subsidiary advance along the Black Sea through Rize (7 March). Aided by naval bombardment from Admiral Andrei Ebergard, the Russians stormed the supply port at Trebizond, driving out the Turks and Germans. Lyakhov then turned south to aid the attack on Bayburt (17–18 April 1916).

Trembowla ❙ 1657 ❙ Transylvanian-Polish War

Prince George Rákóczi II of Transylvania captured Warsaw in an attempt to seize the Polish throne (23 July) but was then abandoned by his Swedish and Cossack allies and his humiliating retreat was intercepted in the Ukraine by Crimean Tatars. At Trembowla (modern Terebovlya) southeast of Ternopol he suffered a crushing defeat, with his commander Janos Kemény captured (31 July 1657).

Trembowla ❙ 1675 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

After Turkish and Tatar forces invaded the Polish Ukraine, Trembowla (modern Terebovlya), southeast of Ternopol, held out—according to legend—when the Polish commander's wife threatened to kill herself if her husband surrendered. Following his victory further west at Zloczow (24 August) John Sobieski III of Poland relieved the fortress, whose defence became a byword for heroism.

Trench ❙ 627 ❙ Campaigns of the Prophet Mohammed

See Medina

Trenchin ❙ 1708 ❙ Rákóczi Rebellion

Recovering from defeat at Zsibó in 1705, Prince Ferenc II Rákóczi of Transylvania continued rebellion against Austria and attempted to advance into Bohemia. Near the Moravian border at Trenchin, on the Vah River, Rákóczi's superior force was utterly destroyed by Field Marshal Siegbert Heister. However, the rebellion dragged on until 1711 when Rákóczi fled to Poland (4 August 1708).

Trent ❙ 679 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

In the final great battle between Mercia and Northumbria, Aethelred of Mercia marched against Ecgfrith of Northumbria, who had defeated his brother Wulfhere at Biedenheafde (674) and seized the disputed Kingdom of Lindsey. Ecgfrith was heavily defeated near the River Trent and Lindsey was recovered. In 685 the Northumbrian King was killed fighting the Picts at Dunnichen Moss.

Trentino Offensive ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

See Asiago

Trenton ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

American General George Washington retreated through New Jersey after defeat at White Plains (28 October) then resolved to regain the initiative and crossed the Delaware in a snowstorm to attack Trenton. Washington routed the Hessian garrison, which lost almost 1,000 captured and 20 dead (including Colonel Johann Rall). He soon won again at Princeton (26 December 1776).

Trepa ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As French Marshal Nicolas Soult invaded Portugal, Spanish General Pedro La Romana withdrew along the northern border towards Puebla de Sanabria. At Trepa, east of Verin near Osono, his rearguard under General Nicolas Mahy was attacked by General Jean-Baptiste Franceschi, who killed 300 and took over 600 prisoners. However, La Romana's main army got away (6 March 1809).

Trepani ❙ 1266 ❙ Venetian-Genoese Wars

See Trapani

Tre Ponti ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

On campaign in northern Italy, Giuseppe Garibaldi won at Varese and San Fermo before the Italian army command sent him on an almost suicidal mission against the Austrians at Lonato. Garibaldi's advance units under General Stefan Turr were heavily repulsed southeast of Brescia at Tre Ponti, near Castenedolo, but Austrian defeat at Solferino soon ended the war (15 June 1859).

Tres Castillos ❙ 1880 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

The Apache Chief Victorio was driven back into northern Mexico from Rattlesnake Springs and reached the Chihuahua desert, where he was attacked at Tres Castillos by 350 Mexicans and Tarahumara Indians under Colonel Joaquin Terrazas. Victorio and about 80 Apache were killed, and 68 men, women and children captured, but the veteran Nana escaped to join Geronimo (15 October 1880).

Treschina ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Brest-Litovsk

Trevilian Station ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Union commander Ulysses S. Grant withdrew from Cold Harbour towards Petersburg, he sent General Philip Sheridan raiding into the Confederate rear. In a bloody cavalry action about 50 miles northwest of Richmond at Trevilian Station, Virginia, Sheridan was repulsed by Confederate General Wade Hampton. He then withdrew through St Mary's Church to the James (11–12 June 1864).

Treviño ❙ 1875 ❙ 2nd Carlist War

The Spanish Republican commander General Jenardo de Quesada was advancing on the key city of Vitoria, in Navarre, when he sent General Juan Tello to attack the Carlist lines just to the southwest at Treviño. The newly appointed Carlist leader General José Pérula was heavily defeated and withdrew. Soon afterwards Quesada entered Vitoria in triumph (7 July 1875).

Triangle Hill ❙ 1952 ❙ Korean War

With peace talks stalled, American General James van Fleet launched a limited offensive north of Kumho against Triangle Hill (plus nearby Jane Russell Hill and Pike's Peak). However, United Nations and South Korean troops were halted by unexpectedly strong Communist resistance. The failed offensive cost perhaps 9,000 Allied and 19,000 Chinese casualties (14 October–5 November 1952).

Tricameron ❙ 533 ❙ Vandal War in Africa

Fleeing from the fall of Carthage, Vandal King Gelimer took up position 20 miles away at Tricameron, where he was reinforced by his brother Tzazo, returned from the conquest of Sardinia. But the combined Vandal force was routed by the Roman cavalry of General Belisarius, with Gelimer captured and Tzazo killed, effectively ending the Vandal occupation of North Africa (December 533).

Trichinopoly ❙ 1740–1741 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

Maratha General Raghuji Bhonsle invaded southeast India to kill Nawab Dost Ali Khan of Arcot at Damalcherry (May 1740) then besieged the Nawab's son-in-law Chanda Sahib at Trichinopoly (Tiruchirapalli). When Chanda Sahib's brother Bada Sahib was killed trying to relieve the siege, Chanda was starved into surrender and the Marathas secured Arcot (December 1740–14 March 1741).

Trichinopoly ❙ 1743 ❙ Later Mughal-Maratha Wars

Determined to intervene in a disputed succession in the Carnatic, Nizam-ul-Mulk of Hyderabad set out with a very large force against the Marathas and, after capturing Arcot, laid siege to Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli). After five months, Maratha Murari Rao Ghorpade agreed to evacuate the Carnatic and the Nizam appointed Anwar-ud-Din as Nawab (March–21 August 1743).

Trichinopoly ❙ 1751–1752 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

Driven south from defeat at Volkondah (20 July) British and Indian troops under Captain Rudolph Gingens and Muhammad Ali of Arcot were besieged at Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli) by Nawab Chanda Sahib and Colonel Jacques Law. Trichinopoly was eventually relieved by British Major Stringer Lawrence, who then beat the besiegers at nearby Seringham (July 1751–10 April 1752).

Trichinopoly (1st) ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

French Governor General Joseph Dupleix resolved to retake Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli) in southeast India and sent Colonel Astruc to besiege Captain John Dalton's garrison. However, at nearby Golden Rock, reinforcements under Major Stringer Lawrence saw field guns and infantry defeat French-led native cavalry. Astruc was replaced in command (7 July 1753).

Trichinopoly (2nd) ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

After a previous failed attempt to retake Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli) in southeast India, French Governor General Joseph Dupleix sent Colonel Brenier against Major Stringer Lawrence, who had received 5,000 Tanjorean reinforcements. Advancing to Weyconda, west of the fortress, Brenier was heavily defeated by Lawrence and was removed from command (18 August 1753).

Trichinopoly (3rd) ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

In a third attempt to retake Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli) in southeast India, French Colonel Astruc was restored to command and led a powerful assault from the south near Sugar Loaf Rock. He was again heavily defeated and was taken prisoner by the garrison under Major Stringer Lawrence. The French eventually withdrew in August 1754 and the war ended (2 October 1753).

Trichinopoly ❙ 1757 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

When France resumed war in southeast India, Colonel Louis d'Auteil took 4,000 men against Trichinopoly (modern Tiruchirapalli) defended by British Captain Joseph Smith with a handful of Europeans and fewer than 2,000 Sepoys. With a small relief column under Captain John Caillaud approaching, d'Auteil withdrew to Pondicherry and he lost his command (14–25 May 1757).

Triesen ❙ 1499 ❙ Swabian War

At the beginning of their final struggle for freedom, the Swiss cantons marched against the Habsburg cities of the Swabian League and entered the Vorarlberg, where they routed a Swabian army at Triesen, in modern Lichtenstein. The Swiss then went on to burn Vaduz and ten days later defeated a major German force at Hard (9 February 1499).

Trifanum ❙ 339 BC ❙ Latin War

See Suessa

Trikalur ❙ 1782 ❙ 2nd British-Mysore War

Colonel Thomas Humberston was campaigning on the Malabar coast of southwest India when he advanced inland against Mysorean General Mukhdum Ali, brother-in-law of Haidar Ali of Mysore. Despite massive numerical superiority, Mukhdum Ali was heavily defeated and killed at Trikalur. The Marathas were eventually repulsed in November at the Paniani (3 April 1782).

Trikorpha ❙ 1825 ❙ Greek War of Independence

When the Egyptian-Turkish army of Ibrahim Pasha was checked at Lerna, Greek General Theodoros Kolokotronis attempted to advance on Tripolitza, securing the nearby heights at Trikorpha. Personally leading an attack, Ibrahim defeated the Greeks, who lost about 200 killed. After further Greek losses in heavy skirmishing, Ibrahim eventually withdrew towards Missolonghi (6 July 1825).

Trimmu Ghat ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

While British forces besieged rebel-held Delhi, General John Nicholson was sent in pursuit of Sialkot mutineers. Advancing through Gurdaspur, he intercepted the rebels crossing the Ravi nine miles away at Trimmu Ghat. Despite heavy losses to grape and shrapnel, the mutineers remained on a mid-river island, where they were attacked again four days later and destroyed (12 and 16 July 1857).

Trincomalee ❙ 1639 ❙ Later Portuguese Colonial Wars in Asia

A year after the Portuguese were disastrously defeated at Gannoruwa, Dutch forces joined with the Kingdom of Kandy in central Ceylon and captured the east coast Portuguese trading city of Trincomalee. The Dutch handed Trincomalee and Batticaloa to the Kandyans, but later captured and kept Galle and Negombo. They eventually seized the entire country in 1656 after the fall of Colombo.

Trincomalee ❙ 1759 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

See Pondicherry

Trincomalee ❙ 1782 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In the fourth of five indecisive naval actions off the east coast of India, British Admiral Edward Hughes appeared off Trincomalee in Ceylon just after it had fallen to French Admiral Pierre André Suffren. Following a poorly managed engagement, with the French flagship heavily damaged, Hughes withdrew and the fleets met again nine months later off Cuddalore (3 September 1782).

Trincomalee ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

After Napoleon Bonaparte's forces occupied the Netherlands, British forces under Admiral Peter Rainier, Commander in Chief of the East India Station, and Colonel James Stuart (1741–1815) of the Madras Army invaded Dutch Ceylon (modern Sri Lanka) and captured Trincomalee. They then moved around the coast by sea to attack the capital, Colombo (25 August 1795).

Trincomalee ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Indian Ocean)

When Admiral Chuichi Nagumo attacked Colombo in Ceylon (modern Sri Lanka) Admiral Sir James Somerville cleared the other key naval base at Trincomalee. Carrier planes damaged the docks and the British lost 11 fighters plus five bombers sent against the attacking fleet. Japanese aircraft then pursued the scattered British ships, sinking the old carrier Hermes and four other vessels (9 April 1942).

Trinidad, Mexico ❙ 1915 ❙ Mexican Revolution

Francisco (Pancho) Villa turned on his former ally President Venustiano Carranza and suffered a terrible defeat at Celaya in central Mexico (15 April) then withdrew northwest to Trinidad, where General Álvaro Obregón began a broad battle of attrition. Attempting to attack the Constitutionalists' rear at Leon, Villa was routed and continued falling back on Aguascalientes (29 April–5 June 1915).

Trinidad, West Indies ❙ 1797 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Advancing against the West Indian island of Trinidad, British Admiral Sir Henry Harvey and General Sir Ralph Abercromby defeated the Spanish garrison and Abercromby's Spanish-speaking Aide, Colonel Thomas Picton, was left in command as Governor. At the peace of 1801, partly at the request of the Spanish residents, the island remained a British possession (16–17 February 1797).

Trinkitat ❙ 1884 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

See El Teb

Trinomalee ❙ 1767 ❙ 1st British-Mysore War

Driven back by Haidar Ali of Mysore following defeat at Chengam Colonel Joseph Smith met the Maharaja and Nizam Ali of Hyderabad at Trinomalee (modern Tiruvannamalai), inland from Pondicherry. Smith secured a decisive victory against massive odds with fewer than 100 casualties. The Nizam made peace and Haidar Ali marched against Ambur (26 September 1767).

Triple Offensive ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

German commander Erich von Ludendorf was determined to crush Russia's armies on the eastern front and launched his massive Triple Offensive, in the north through Kovno towards Vilna and Dvinsk, in the centre through Warsaw and in south through Brest-Litovsk. The "Great Retreat" cost the Russians two million casualties before the front stabilised (29 June–26 September 1915).

Tripole ❙ 1093 ❙ Russian Dynastic Wars

Facing invasion by Kipchak Turk (Cuman) horsemen of the northern Steppe, Grand Prince Sviatopolk of Kiev and his cousins Vladimir and Rostislav—sons of former Grand Prince Vsevolod—met their enemy at Tripole (modern Tripolye) near Kiev. The Russians were routed, with Rostislav killed, and Sviatopolk sued for peace, later marrying a daughter of the Kipchak Khan (23 May 1093).

Tripoli, Lebanon ❙ 1102 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

Marching south from Tortosa (modern Tartus) Raymond of Saint-Gilles Count of Toulouse advanced on the key fortress of Tripoli, held by Emir Fakhr al-Mulk, supported by troops from Homs and Damascus. Battle outside the city saw the larger Muslim army defeated with terrible losses. However, Raymond had insufficient men to attack Tripoli itself and he eventually withdrew.

Tripoli, Lebanon ❙ 1109 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

King Baldwin I of Jerusalem raised a large army for a major Crusader offensive against the powerful port of Tripoli, supported by Bertrand of Toulouse and Tancred of Antioch. Fatimid Egyptian Governor Sharaf ad-Daulah surrendered after weeks of heavy assault, and Bertrand (illegitimate son of the great Crusader Raymond of Toulouse) became Governor of Tripoli (6 March–12 July 1109).

Tripoli, Lebanon ❙ 1289 ❙ Later Crusader-Muslim Wars

Years of campaigning against Crusaders culminated when Mamluk Sultan Qalawun finally gathered his Egyptian-Syrian army for a decisive assault against the powerful fortress of Tripoli. After a massive bombardment the Muslims stormed the city and massacred the population. Tripoli was then razed to the ground and the Mamluks soon turned against at Acre (25 March–27 April 1289).

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 647 ❙ Muslim Conquest of North Africa

See Sufetula

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 1510 ❙ Spanish Colonial Wars in North Africa

Continuing his offensive in North Africa after capturing Bougie, Spanish commander Pedro Navarro took his fleet from Sicily against Tripoli (modern Tarabulus, Libya). After capturing the city, Navarro reportedly destroyed many of its buildings and killed or enslaved much of the population. In 1524, Spain gave Tripoli to the Knights of St John, who lost it in 1551 to Ottoman forces (26 July 1510).

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 1551 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

Expanding Ottoman territory in North Africa, Kapudan Sinan Pasha and the Corsair Turghud Re'is (Dragut) attacked strategic Tripoli, held with difficulty by the Knights of St John from their base in Malta. Tripoli was taken, but the two victors fell out, contributing to their failed attack on the main objective, Malta. In 1560 Turghud was more successful against Djerba, off Tripoli (15 August 1551).

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 1728 ❙ Franco-Barbary Wars

Determined to exact reparation from the Barbary pirates, French Admiral Nicola de

Grandpré took six ships of the line and three bomb ketches against Peshwa Ahmad Karamanli of Tripoli. After inflicting a massive bombardment, shortage of water and ammunition forced Grandpré to withdraw. A French blockade the following January persuaded the Peshwa to accept terms (20–26 July 1728).

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 1803 ❙ Tripolitan War

During America's war against North African piracy, the frigate Philadelphia (Captain William Bainbridge) ran aground in Tripoli harbour trying to preserve her blockade. Attacked by Algerine gunboats, Bainbridge and 307 crew surrendered, though their captured ship was destroyed in a later raid. The crew were finally released when war ended in 1805 after the fall of Derna (31 October 1803).

Tripoli, Libya (1st) ❙ 1804 ❙ Tripolitan War

In a brilliant raid on Tripoli during the war against North African piracy, American Lieutenant Stephen Decatur and 74 volunteers disguised as Arabs entered port on a captured Tripolitan ketch, renamed Intrepid, and burned the captured American ship Philadelphia to deny her to the pirates. Decatur escaped without a man lost, but Intrepid was later sunk on a second raid (16 February 1804).

Tripoli, Libya (2nd) ❙ 1804 ❙ Tripolitan War

Following weeks of bombardment by American Admiral Edward Preble, Lieutenants Stephen Decatur and Richard Somers entered Tripoli harbour in shallow-draft gunboats and seized three pirate craft (3 August). But in a subsequent failed assault, Somers and his crew were killed when the fireship Intrepid blew up prematurely. The Americans then resumed a passive blockade (1 September 1804).

Tripoli, Libya ❙ 1911 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

At the start of Italy's invasion of Libya, Tripoli refused to surrender to Admiral Luigi Faravelli and his fleet shelled the outlying fortresses (3 October). A landing party under Captain Umberto Cagni then seized the city and held it until the main force arrived five days later. While Tobruk and Derna in Cyrenaica quickly fell, the Italians faced stronger resistance at Benghazi (5 October 1911).

Tripolis ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

See Tripolitza

Tripolitza ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

After taking Monemvasia and Navarino, Demitrius Ipsilantis and Theodoros Kolokotrones besieged Tripolitza in central Peloponnesia, holding out despite Turkish defeat at Valtesti. When the Albanian garrison negotiated to withdraw, the starving city had to surrender and the ensuing destruction saw 8,000 citizens massacred. The Turks were avenged in June 1822 at Chios (May–8 October 1821).

Trippstadt ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

The day after French success southeast of Kaiserslautern at Platzberg, Generals Claude Michaud and Alexandre Taponier attacked the Prussian camp to the south at Trippstadt. A brutal 19-hour action saw Michaud capture large quantities of guns, munitions and stores and kill 4,500 Prussians at the cost of 2,000 French dead. Three days later the French took Kaiserslautern (14 July 1794).

Tristan de Cunha ❙ 1815 ❙ War of 1812

A remarkable action in the South Atlantic off Tristan de Cunha saw the British sloop Penguin (Commander James Dickinson) encounter the American sloop Hornet (Captain James Biddle). Despite heavy damage Dickinson was killed attempting to ram Hornet and Penguin was captured. However, peace had already been signed and this was the last action of the war (23 March 1815).

Trnovo ❙ 1218 ❙ Bulgarian Imperial Wars

With Tsar Boril of Bulgaria weakened by warfare, his cousin Ivan Asen raised rebellion in the north. Assisted by Russian troops he laid siege to the capital Trnovo (modern Veliko Tarnovo) then took the city by storm. When Boril was captured his eyes were put out and his cousin seized the throne as Ivan II, leading the Second Bulgarian Empire to its greatest triumphs.

Trocadera ❙ 1823 ❙ Franco-Spanish War

French under Louis Duke of Angouleme intervened in the Spanish Liberal revolution to support Ferdinand VII and invaded to seize Madrid. Driven back to Cadiz, rebel General Rafael del Riego was badly defeated at the Trocadera Forts, outside the city. When Cadiz fell to the French a month later (23 September), Ferdinand was restored to power and del Riego was executed (31 August 1823).

Troia ❙ 1462 ❙ Aragon's Conquest of Naples

Twenty years after René of Anjou was driven out of Italy following defeat at Naples by Alfonso V of Aragon, the Barons of Naples rose in revolt against Alfonso's son Ferdinand and sought aid from René's son, Jean of Lorraine. At Troia, southwest of Foggia, the Barons suffered a bloody defeat and Jean returned to Provence, curbing French claims on Naples (18 August 1462).

Troina ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

American General George Patton secured Palermo in western Sicily then turned his forces east along the coast and inland through Nicosia towards the mountain town of Troina, west of Mount Etna. It took five days of intense and costly combat before General Terry Allen secured Troina and General Eberhart Rodt fell back through Cerami towards Messina (31 July–4 August 1943).

Trois Rivières ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Recovering from a failed attack on Quebec (1 January) American forces in Montreal under Generals John Sullivan and William Thompson attempted a fresh advance down the St Lawrence. But British General John Burgoyne, recently arrived from England, defeated Thompson at Trois Rivières. Sullivan then abandoned the invasion of Canada and retreated to Lake Champlain (8 June 1776).

Troisville ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Beaumont-en-Cambresis

Trompettersdrift ❙ 1793 ❙ 2nd Cape Frontier War

When Xhosa under Ndlambe again entered the Zuurveld in eastern Cape Province, they were met by a Dutch commando under Landdrost Honoratus C. D. Maynier, who won a series of actions along the Fish River, including a notable victory at Trompettersdrift where 40 Xhosa were killed. However, Maynier could not force the Xhosa to withdraw and he accepted peace on 8 October 1793.

Trondheim ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Andalsnes

Trouillas ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Responding to an invasion of France by a Spanish army under Don Antonio Ricardos, Governor of Catalonia, French General Lucien Dagobert attempted to march on the Spanish at Pontiella. At Trouillas, south of Perpignan, Dagobert was repulsed with over 3,000 casualties. However, Ricardos thought the French were about to be reinforced and he withdrew to Boulou (21 September 1793).

Troy ❙ 1184 BC ❙ Trojan War

The Trojan Prince Paris led a raid on Greece and in response Greek leader Agamemnon landed an army on Asia Minor to seize the city of Troy. At the end of a semi-legendary ten-year siege the city fell by storm, or perhaps by the mythic stratagem of the "Wooden Horse." King Priam was killed and Troy was destroyed, effectively ending the Trojan State (trad date 1184 BC).

Troyes ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

As Napoleon Bonaparte campaigned east of Paris against the Allies, General Gebhard von Blucher moved forward to occupy Merv (22 February) while Prince Karl Philipp Schwarzenberg left General Karl von Wrede to defend Troyes. After driving off two heavy attacks, von Wrede withdrew and Bonaparte occupied Troyes, while Schwarzenberg fell back on Arcis (23–24 February 1814).

Truckee ❙ 1860 ❙ Pyramid Lake Indian War

When Paiute in western Nevada attacked a pony express station where two Indian girls were abducted and raped, over 100 miners and other volunteers set out under Major William M. Ormsby. But Ormsby was ambushed by Paiute under Numaga on the Truckee, just south of Pyramid Lake, and suffered about 46 killed. The Indians were soon pursued to Pinnacle Mountain (May 1860).

Trujillo ❙ 1860 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

The American William Walker was driven out of Nicaragua by the Central American allies at Rivas (May 1857) and he toured the United States before attempting a comeback in Honduras. His small Filibuster force landed and seized the fortress at Trujillo but no allies rallied to him. Walker eventually surrendered to the British Navy, which handed him to Honduras for execution (6 August 1860).

Truk ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

To cover the invasion of Eniwetok, American Admiral Marc Mitscher led a massive carrier and battleship strike against Truk, the Japanese "Gibraltar of the Pacific." While Japan's capital ships had been withdrawn following early reconnaissance, the raid sank 150,000 tons of Japanese shipping—including two cruisers and four destroyers—and destroyed about 270 aircraft (16–17 February 1944).

Trzcianka ❙ 1629 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

See Sztum

Ts'ai-chou ❙ 817 ❙ Later Tang Imperial Wars

See Caizhou

Ts'ai-shih ❙ 1161 ❙ Jin-Song Wars

See Caishi

Ts'ao-ho-kou ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Caohekou

Tsarasoatra ❙ 1895 ❙ French Conquest of Madagascar

When Madagascar's Hova government refused to recognise French suzerainty, General Jacques Duchesne landed a large force at Majunga and marched southeast towards the central plateau. General Rainianjalahy and 5,000 well-entrenched troops attempted to block the French at Tsarasoatra but they were driven out with heavy losses and Duchesne continued towards Andriba (29 June 1895).

Tsaritsyn ❙ 1774 ❙ Pugachev Rebellion

Cossack rebel Emelyan Pugachev recovered from costly defeats at Tatishchevo and Kazan to advance down the Volga towards Tsaritsyn (modern Volgograd) but was driven off by heavy artillery fire. Four days later his rebel force was destroyed by Colonel Ivan Michelson, aided by Don Cossacks and the city garrison. Pugachev fled and was subsequently captured and executed (21–25 August 1774).

Tsaritsyn ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

As part of White commander Anton Denikin's offensive from the Kuban, General Pyotr Wrangel advanced through Velikoknyazheskaya on Tsaritsyn (later Stalingrad and Volgograd) which resisted attack in late 1918. Although Wrangel's assault was driven off by General Aleksandr Yegorov, a second attempt took the city by storm and the offensive continued (12–13 & 29 June 1919).

Tseng Jong ❙ 1962 ❙ Sino-Indian War

At the start of armed border confrontation in disputed northeast India (Arunachal Pradesh), an ill-advised Indian patrol of just 50 men advanced towards the invading Chinese on the Thag La Ridge. Near the village of Tseng Jong the Indians were routed by a battalion-size Chinese force. Both sides lost about 30 casualties and the Rajputs fell back to the Namka Chu River (10 October 1962).

Tshaneni ❙ 1884 ❙ Zulu Civil War

When Zulu King Cetshwayo died after escaping the defeat at Ondini, his 16-year-old son Dinuzulu promised the Boers land to support his uSuthu against Zibebhu of the Mandlakazi. At Tshaneni, 6,000 uSuthu and 200 Boers destroyed the Mandlakazi and Zibebhu fled. When British annexed Zululand two years later Dinuzulu started a rebellion at Ceza and utterly routed Zibebhu at Ivuna (5 June 1884).

Tsinan ❙ 1928 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Jinan

Tsinan ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Jinan

Tsingpu ❙ 1860 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Qingpu

Tsingtao ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Far East)

See Qingdao

Tsitsihar ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

See Qiqihar

Tsorona ❙ 1999 ❙ Ethiopian-Eritrean War

Two weeks after breaking through Eritrean defences around Badme, over-confident Ethiopian forces attempted a frontal assault against entrenched positions to the southwest around Tsorona, near Zelambessa. Reportedly advancing behind human waves sent over minefields, the Ethiopians suffered terrible losses and had to pull back, though fighting continued for months (16–18 March 1999).

Tsung-chou ❙ 771 BC ❙ Wars of the Western Zhou

See Zongzhou

Tsushima ❙ 1905 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

In one of history's most decisive naval battles, Russia's Baltic fleet under Admiral Zinovi Rozhdestvenski steamed 17,000 miles to the Far East and arrived after the land war was effectively over. In Tsushima Strait, between Japan and Korea, Japanese Admiral Heihachiro Togo utterly annihilated the Russian fleet—including all eight battleships destroyed—and the war ended (27–28 May 1905).

Tubberneering ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

Sent south from Gorey to reinforce Loyalist General William Loftus at Ballycanew, Colonel Lambert Walpole (Aide to the Viceroy Earl Camden) impulsively took a shortcut through the hills and was ambushed in the pass at Tubberneering by rebels under Father John Murphy. Colonel Walpole fell in the first volley and the survivors fled to Gorey, which fell to the rebels the same day (4 June 1798).

Tucannon ❙ 1848 ❙ Cayuse Indian War

Advancing into southeast Washington State against Cayuse who had murdered Dr Whitman, Colonel Cornelius Gilliam reached an Indian camp on the Tucannon and started rounding up cattle. Heavily attacked by Cayuse allies, the Palouse, Gilliam fought a running two-day withdrawal. However, soon afterwards he was accidentally killed and the war was virtually over (14–15 March 1848).

Tucapel ❙ 1553 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Chile

After invading Chile in 1541 and founding Santiago, Pedro de Valdivia returned as Governor and tried to extend Spanish influence south of the Bio Bio River where he met fierce resistance by Araucanians under Chief Caupolicán.

The warrior Lautaro attacked and defeated Valdivia at Tucapel and Valdivia was executed a month later. Lautaro soon won again at Marigüeñu (26 December 1553).

Tucumán ❙ 1812 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Sent to command the Patriot army in Upper Peru after its terrible defeat at Huaqui (June 1811) General Manuel Belgrano withdrew through Río Piedras, then determined, against government orders, to hold Argentina's northwestern provinces. At Tucumán Belgrano won an unexpected victory, which bought time as defeated Spanish General Pío Tristán withdrew north to Salta (24 September 1812).

Tudela (1st) ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

At the start of Bonaparte's campaign in Spain, Spanish General José Palafox sent his brother Luis Marquis of Lazan along the Ebro from Saragossa to meet the advancing army of General Charles Lefebvre-Desnouettes. Lazan's recruits were routed at Tudela and, after sacking the town, the French advanced to further victories at Mallen and Alagon before besieging Saragossa (8 June 1808).

Tudela (2nd) ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Within days of victory in northern Spain at Gamonal, Espinosa and Reynosa, Napoleon Bonaparte turned against the Spanish Army of the Centre under Generals Francisco Castanos and José Palafox. Smashing his way overextended Spanish lines on the Ebro at Tudela, French Marshal Jean Lannes inflicted heavy casualties and opened the way to Saragossa (23 November 1808).

Tug Argan ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Soon after Italy joined the war, General Guglielmo Nasi entered British Somaliland, where newly arrived General Alfred Godwin-Austin attempted to hold the strategic mountain pass at Tug Argan. Heavy fighting saw the massively outnumbered defenders forced to retreat and the British then abandoned the capital Berbera and evacuated by sea to Aden (11–16 August 1940).

Tugela ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War

Days after Boer defeat at Italeni, a handful of whites and 800 Zulus were ambushed near the mouth of the Tugela by Nongalaza, leading the Zulu army of Mpande, brother of King Dingane. The whites suffered terrible losses, including leaders John Cane, Robert Biggar and John Stubbs killed, and Mpande then sacked Durban. The Boers were avenged in December at Blood River (17 April 1838).

Tugela ❙ 1856 ❙ Zulu Wars of Succession

See Ndondakusuka

Tugela Heights ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

In a final attempt to relieve Ladysmith, after failure at Colenso, Spion Kop and Vaal Kranz, British General Sir Redvers Buller led a determined assault on the Heights of Tugela to the south. After hard fighting—which climaxed with a British attack on Pieter's Hill and cost about 2,200 British and 230 Boer casualties—Louis Botha withdrew and Ladysmith was relieved (14–28 February 1900).

Tukaroi ❙ 1575 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

Mughal Emperor Akbar completed the conquest of Gujarat at Ahmadabad (1572) then marched east against Daud Khan, the rebellious young Afghan ruler of Bengal. After Akbar returned to Delhi his commander Munim Khan defeated Daud at Tukaroi, near Mughulmari, then accepted a lenient peace. Daud rebelled again and had to be defeated a year later at Rajmahal (3 March 1575).

Tukra ❙ 1575 ❙ Mughal Conquest of Northern India

See Tukaroi

Tulagi (1st) ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As a Japanese invasion headed for Port Moresby in Papua, Admiral Kiyohide Shima took a secondary force to set up a seaplane base on Tulagi, in the Solomons. Attacked next day by aircraft from Admiral Frank Fletcher's carrier Yorktown, the Japanese lost a destroyer and three smaller ships sunk. The Americans then turned to meet the main force days later in the Coral Sea (3–4 May 1942).

Tulagi (2nd) ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

In support of the major offensive in the Solomons against Guadalcanal, American Marines under General William Rupertus landed on Tulagi, just 25 miles to the north, where Japanese forces resisted fiercely around the seaplane base on the nearby islets of Tanambogo and Gavutu. Tulagi was then secured and became a naval base to support the fighting around Guadalcanal (7–9 August 1942).

Tulcán ❙ 1862 ❙ Ecuador-Colombia War

When President Gabriel García Moreno of Ecuador declared war on Colombia over a border dispute, he marched to the border with a largely untrained army and was cut off near Tulcán by Colombian General Julio Arboledo. García Moreno was defeated and captured, then sued for peace. War resumed late in 1863 and Ecuador was routed at Cuaspud (31 July 1862).

Tumen River ❙ 1938 ❙ Russo-Japanese Border Wars

See Changfukeng

Tumu ❙ 1449 ❙ Ming Imperial Wars

When Oirat Mongols under Esen Khan expanded into northwestern China, Imperial eunuch Wang Zhen rashly persuaded Emperor Zhengtong to advance against the invaders. After reaching Dadong, the panicked Ming army withdrew and was surrounded then routed at Tumu Fortress, near Huailai, with Wang killed. The Emperor himself was captured but later released and restored (8 September 1449).

Tumunui ❙ 1870 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Waikorowhiti

Tumusla ❙ 1825 ❙ Bolivian War of Independence

Despite defeat for Spanish Royalists at Ayacucho in late 1824, General Pedro Antonio Olañeta and a remaining force of Royalists held out in Upper Peru where Simon Bolívar sent Colombian Marshal Antonio José de Sucre. Outside the mountain city of Potosí at Tumusla, Olañeta was defeated and killed. Bolivia was declared an independent Republic with Sucre as President (1 April 1825).

Tunga ❙ 1787 ❙ Mughal-Maratha War of Ismail Beg

See Lalsot

Tung-kuan ❙ 756 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

See Chang'an

Tunis ❙ 255 BC ❙ 1st Punic War

The Carthaginians were heavily defeated by a Roman army at Adys, near Carthage, then invited Spartan General Xanthippus to reorganise their army. In return battle the following year against Atilius Regulus outside the walls of Carthage, not far from Tunis, the revitalised Carthaginians defeated and captured Regulus. The demoralised survivors were rescued by ship and Rome was driven from Africa.

Tunis ❙ 238 BC ❙ Truceless War

When former mercenaries rose in revolt against Carthage they suffered a terrible loss at the Saw and Carthaginian Generals Hannibal and Hamilcar Barca besieged their main camp at Tunis (Tunes). However, rebel leader Mathos led a bold counter-offensive, and Hannibal was captured and executed. Defeat forced Hamilcar to withdraw, but Mathos himself was soon finally beaten at Leptis.

Tunis ❙ 1533 ❙ Turkish Imperial Wars

Sailing from Constantinople with 80 galleys and 8,000 troops, Turkish Admiral Khair-ed-din Barbarossa appeared before Tunis where Mulei

Hassan attempted a brief defence, then fled. The Turks put the city to the sack and later defeated Mulei Hassan at Kairouan to secure Tunisia. However, the Tunisian King was restored after two years by Emperor Charles V (18 August 1533).

Tunis ❙ 1535 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Responding to Muslim attacks on Christian shipping, Emperor Charles V led Admiral Andrea Doria and Count Max of Eberstein against the naval base of Tunis, where he defeated Turkish Admiral Khair-ed-din Barbarossa. Charles released over 2,000 Christian slaves and restored King Mulei Hassan, but war at home deferred his advance against Algiers (20 June–21 July 1535).

Tunis ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (North Africa)

See Bizerte-Tunis

Tunisia ❙ 1942–1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Squeezed between Allied armies advancing from Libya after El Alamein and from Algeria after Torch, Axis forces in Tunisia were reinforced from Sicily and took the offensive at Tébourba, Kasserine and Médenine. The Allies struck back at Mareth Line, El Guettar and Bizerte-Tunis, and the Axis finally surrendered 250,000 men to end the campaign (November 1942–13 May 1943).

Tupelo ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Confederate General Nathan B. Forrest raided Union railways in Mississippi where he defeated a pursuing force at Brice's Cross Roads then sent General Stephen D. Lee against another pursuing force under General Andrew J Smith. A heavy defeat further south at Tupelo cost Lee over 1,000 men, yet Forrest was able to regroup and a month later he attacked Memphis (14–15 July 1864).

Tupium ❙ 1869 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

During fighting in the Cordillera Province, east of the Paraguay River, Brazilian Brigadier José Antônio Correia da Câmara attacked a Paraguayan detachment under Colonel Manuel Galeano at Tupium, on the Rio Aguarai-Guacu. The Paraguayans were heavily defeated with 500 men lost. A further 300, mainly young boys, were captured at the nearby fortress of Santa Cruz (30 May 1869).

Turabah ❙ 1919 ❙ Saudi-Hashemite Wars

With World War I over, Sharif Hussein sent his son Abd Allah and 5,000 men east from Mecca to seize the city of Turabah and threaten the Nejd. Emir Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Riyadh sent 1,100 Ikhwan warriors under Ibn Bijad, who attacked Turabah at dawn. The Hashemite army was destroyed, but Aziz turned against the Rashid at Hail before advancing on Mecca (26 May 1919).

Turbigo ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Intervening to support King Victor Emmanuel II of Piedmont against Austria, French Marshal Marie MacMahon advanced through Novara and seized the bridge on the Ticino at Turbigo. An inadequate Austrian blocking force under Marshal Franz Freiherr von Cordon was swept aside and MacMahon marched southeast to join Napoleon III for victory next day at Magenta (3 June 1859).

Turckheim ❙ 1675 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

French Marshal Henri de Turenne advanced along the Rhine in mid-1674 to beat Imperial forces at Sinsheim and Enzheim before driving into Alsace against a large army under Frederick William Elector of Brandenburg and the Austrian Count Raimondo Montecuccoli. The Allies were defeated at Turckheim, near Colmar, and the Elector withdrew into Brandenburg (5 January 1675).

Turfan ❙ 1877 ❙ Xinjiang Rebellion

See Turpan

Turia ❙ 75 BC ❙ Sertorian War

Recovering from disaster at Lauron (76 BC) Rome's commander in Spain, Gnaeus Pompey, resumed the offensive against rebel Quintus Sertorius and advanced south to the Turia (modern Guadalaviar) to meet Gaius Herrenius and Marcus Perpenna. The Sertorian lieutenants were routed, losing perhaps 10,000 killed (including Herrenius) and Pompey pursued Perpenna south to the Sucro.

Turin ❙ 312 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

Emperor Constantine advanced from Gaul into Italy against rival Emperor Maxentius and met his first substantial opposing force west of Turin. While Constantine's army initially fell back before a heavy cavalry attack, his infantry prevailed and the Maxentian army was driven back to Turin, which prepared for a siege but then surrendered. Constantine then marched on to victory at Verona.

Turin ❙ 1640 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

After beating Diego Felipe de Guzmán Marquis of Leganés at Casale (29 April), French commander Henri Comte d'Harcourt advanced on Turin to besiege Thomas of Savoy, who had invested the French garrison in the citadel. Harcourt was in turn besieged by a reinforced Spanish army under Leganés, but Harcourt eventually secured a bloody victory and took the city (July–17 September 1640).

Turin ❙ 1706 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

With Imperial forces driven out of central Lombardy at Calcinato (19 April) Philippe II Duke d'Orleans and Marshal Ferdinand de Marsin besieged Turin, held by Victor Amadeus II, who escaped to join Prince Eugène of Savoy with a relief force. In a brilliant attack Eugène killed Marshal Marsin and destroyed his besieging army, driving the French out of Italy (26 May–7 September 1706).

Turin ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Following the fall of Milan after Cassano (27 April) Russian General Alexander Suvorov's advance guard under Baron Philip von Vukassovitch led a surprise attack on Turin, driving General Jean Victor Moreau into the city's citadel, abandoning a reported 300 guns and 60,000 muskets. Moreau later withdrew over the mountains towards Genoa and the citadel fell on 20 June (27 May 1799).

Turna Dag ❙ 1515 ❙ Turko-Persian War in Anatolia

Ottoman Sultan Selim I secured eastern Anatolia with victory over Shah Ismail I of Persia at Chaldiran (August 1514) then took a force against the Persian vassal Ala al-Dawlah of the Principality of Dulgadir. At Turna Dag, Selim defeated and killed Ala al-Dawlah in a decisive victory, which secured Cilicia and left the Sultan free to turn against the Mamluks in 1516 at Marj-Dabik (13 June 1515).

Turnau ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

See Liebenau

Turnham Green ❙ 1642 ❙ British Civil Wars

The advance on London by King Charles I was delayed at Brentford and next day he faced Parliamentary commander Robert Devereux Earl of Essex and 24,000 London Militia in battle order on Turnham Green near Putney. A daylong confrontation saw only scattered shots fired and the "battle" ended when the outnumbered Royalists withdrew and London was saved (13 November 1642).

Turnhout ❙ 1597 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Facing continued success by Prince Maurice of Orange, Spanish Viceroy Count Ernst von Mansfeld sent Count Jean de Rie of Varas to invade Holland. Overtaken at Turnhout, northeast of Antwerp, the Spaniards were destroyed by Dutch cavalry under Maurice himself, losing thousands killed (including Count Jean) and hundreds taken prisoner for minimal Dutch loss (24 January 1597).

Turnhout ❙ 1789 ❙ Brabantine Rebellion

Jean-Francois Vonck led a rising against Austria in the Netherlands to declare Belgian Brabant independent after which Colonel Jean-

Andre van de Meersch routed an Austrian force at Turnhout, northeast of Antwerp. While the Belgians went on to capture Flanders, Austrian authority was quickly restored, though Brabant was soon conquered by Revolutionary France (24 October 1789).

Turpan ❙ 1877 ❙ Xinjiang Rebellion

When Yakub Beg of Khokand established the Muslim Khanate of Kashgari in western China, a massive Imperial army under Qing General Zuo Zongtang recaptured Ürümqi then attacked the rebel in his capital to the southeast at Turpan. Turpan was seized after heavy fighting and Yakub Beg committed suicide, ending the rising. China then established the Province of Xinjiang (16 May 1877).

Turret Butte ❙ 1873 ❙ Apache Indian Wars

Pursuing hostile Apache after victory at Skeleton Cave, General George Crook sent Major George Randall against Chuntz and Delshay at Turret Butte, west of the Verde River, near modern Cordes Junction, Arizona. Randall led a brilliant night ascent of the inaccessible position to surprise and rout the Indian camp. Most Apache soon surrendered and ended the war (27 March 1873).

Turtukai (1st) ❙ 1773 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

While Russians threatened Ruschuk on the Danube, further downstream near Oltenitsa General Alexander Suvorov attacked Bim Pasha's garrison at Turtukai (modern Tutrakan). Suvorov destroyed the fortress and killed 1,500 in a brilliant assault before retiring with 15 guns and 50 boats. The Turks later reoccupied the position and Suvorov had to take it again (10 May 1773).

Turtukai (2nd) ❙ 1773 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

General Alexander Suvorov destroyed the Turkish Danube fort at Turtukai (modern Tutrakan), then attacked again a month later to divert from an offensive by General Pyotr Rumyantsev downstream at Silistria. A bloody night-time assault saw Turtukai commander Sari Mehmet Pasha defeated and killed. But the attack at Silistria failed and Suvorov had to withdraw (17 June 1773).

Turtukai ❙ 1774 ❙ Catherine the Great's 1st Turkish War

In a fresh Russian offensive on the Danube, while the main army marched against the Turks at Kozludzha and Silistria, General Ivan Saltikov took 10,000 men towards Ruschuk and met a superior Turkish force at Turtukai (modern Tutrakan). On the same day Suvorov won at Kozludzha, Saltikov defeated Assan Bey to once again secure victory at Turtukai and peace soon followed (9 June 1774).

Tushki ❙ 1889 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

See Toski

Tutora ❙ 1620 ❙ Polish-Turkish Wars

See Cecora

Tutrakan ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

When Romanians marched north into Transylvania, General August von Mackensen attacked in the south with a mixed German-Bulgarian-Turkish force. The powerful Danube fortress at Tutrakan (formerly Turtukai) boasted that it would be "Romania's Verdun" but fell after a brief siege. Mackensen took Silistria two days later then continued east towards Constanta (4–6 September 1916).

Tuttlingen ❙ 1643 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

On the day Jean-Baptiste Guébriant died from wounds after taking Rottweil in Swabia, the Weimar army under his successor Josias von Rantzau was attacked a few miles to the southeast at Tuttlingen by Imperial Generals Franz von Mercy and Johann von Werth. Von Rantzau was defeated and captured, after which Rottweil was lost and the Germans withdrew into Alsace (24 November 1643).

Tuyen-Quang ❙ 1885 ❙ Sino-French War

Following victory in northern Vietnam (Tonkin) at Bac Ninh, the French secured

Tuyen-Quang northwest of Hanoi (1 June 1884) where a 400-strong garrison was later besieged by perhaps 20,000 Chinese troops. By the time General Oscar de Négrier's relief force finally defeated the besiegers at nearby Hoa-Moc, the heroic garrison had lost 23 killed and 126 wounded (23 January–3 March 1885).

Tuy Hoa ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

Determined to protect the rice crop in coastal Phu Yen, American, South Vietnamese and Korean forces began a large search and destroy mission (Operation Van Buren) against Viet Cong and North Vietnamese regulars in the Tuy Hoa Valley. Severe fighting saw the Allies secure the area then move north to join the larger offensive on the Plain of Bon Son (19 January–21 February 1966).

Tuyutí ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Three weeks after victory at Estero Bellaco, Argentine, Brazilian and Uruguayan forces under General Bartolomé Mitre entered southwest Paraguay against President Francisco Solano López at Paso de Patria south of Tuyutí, between the Parana and Paraguay. While suicidal attacks by López inflicted 8,500 Allied casualties, he lost over 20,000 men and had to fall back north on Humaitá (24 May 1866).

Tuyutí ❙ 1867 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Attempting to relieve Humaitá in southwest Paraguay, President Francisco Solano López of Paraguay sent General Vicente Barrios and 8,000 men against the Allied siege base at nearby Tuyutí. Brazilian General Manuel Marques de Sousa was driven out and the camp was looted, but Argentine Colonel Manuel Hornos counter-attacked and Barrios withdrew with heavy losses (3 November 1867).

Tweebosch ❙ 1902 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Jacobus de la Rey resumed his offensive in the western Transvaal, destroying a British column at Yzer Spruit (24 February) then attacking 1,200 men and four guns under General Lord Paul Methuen at Tweebosch, southwest of Lichtenburg. The column was virtually destroyed in Britain's worst defeat for two years and Methuen became the only British General captured in the war (7 March 1902).

Tweefontein ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

See Boshof

Tweefontein ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As Britain built blockhouses to entrap Boer commandos, General Christiaan de Wet led 700 Boers against the blockhouse line under construction near Tweefontein, 25 miles east of General Sir Leslie Rundle's headquarters at Bethlehem. Attacking on Christmas Day at nearby Groenkop, de Wet surprised and routed a force of Yeomanry, killing Major George A. Williams (25 December 1901).

Two Palms ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

Following months of relative inactivity in Cyrenaica, about 6,000 Turks and Arabs outside Benghazi attacked through the oasis at Two Palms. Recovering from surprise, Italian Generals Ottavio Briccola and Giovanni Ameglia counter-attacked and the attackers were driven out by a brutal bayonet charge. The costly action effectively ended fighting around Benghazi (12 March 1912).

Twt Hill ❙ 1463 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Edward IV secured the English crown at Towton (March 1461) and later sent William Earl of Herbert against Lancastrian forces holding out in Wales. After capturing Pembroke Castle, Herbert met Jasper Tudor Earl of Pembroke and Henry Holland Duke of Exeter near Canaervon at a location called Twt Hill. The Welsh were beaten and remaining Lancastrian strongholds quickly fell (16 October 1463).

Tynec ❙ 1423 ❙ Hussite Wars

In doctrinal war among Bohemian Hussites, Jan Zizka secured victory for the Taborite faction at Strachuv but was soon besieged at Caslav by Praguers and Lord Hasek of Waldstein, who intercepted a relief force from Hradec Králové under Zizka's ally Matthew Lupák. On the Elbe at Tynec, upstream of Kolin, Lupák was defeated and killed, though the siege of Caslav was raised (22 August 1423).

Tyre ❙ 332 BC ❙ Conquests of Alexander the Great

On his way to conquer Egypt after victory at Issus (333 BC) Alexander the Great attacked the city of Tyre, half a mile off the Phoenician coast. In one of the most complex sieges of ancient times, Alexander built a causeway to the island fortress. Smashing through formidable walls by land and sea, he fell on Tyre and slaughtered the population, then marched on to Gaza (January–August 332 BC).

Tyre ❙ 315–314 BC ❙ Wars of the Diadochi

In war between the successors of Alexander the Great, Antigonus secured Persia at Gabiene, then invaded Syria against Ptolemy, who left a strong garrison at Tyre before withdrawing to Egypt. The powerful city held out against siege for 13 months before falling to Antigonus. He then sailed west to campaign in Asia Minor, leaving his son Demetrius Poliorcetes to govern Syria from Gaza.

Tyre ❙ 1110–1111 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

King Baldwin I of Jerusalem captured most major cities in Palestine then attacked the key port of Tyre, where the Fatimid Egyptian garrison resisted assault by huge stones and battering rams and destroyed Crusader siege towers with incendiaries. A large Turkish relief army under Toghtekin arrived from Damascus and helped drive off the siege after four months (29 November 1110–10 April 1111).

Tyre ❙ 1124 ❙ Crusader-Muslim Wars

After Crusader failure to seize the port of Tyre in 1111, Gormond, Patriarch of Jerusalem, renewed the attack on this remaining Muslim stronghold. Blockaded by Venetian ships and facing continuous assault by land the Tyrian garrison held out against the siege until two relief attempts from Damascus were driven back. The city was then forced to surrender (15 February–7 July 1124).

Tyre ❙ 1187 ❙ 3rd Crusade

Following Crusader disaster at Hattin (4 July) Kurdish-Muslim conqueror Saladin retook most major cities of the Holy Land, including Jerusalem. However, he was thwarted by the fortress port of Tyre to which many Crusader nobles had escaped. Led by Conrad of Montferrat, the garrison drove off an attack in July and a two-month siege in November–December, saving both the city and the kingdom.

Tyrnavos ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

See Mati

Tzarevlatz ❙ 1712 ❙ Ottoman Invasions of Montenegro

See Podgoritza

Tzeki ❙ 1862 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

American adventurer Frederick T. Ward helped save Shanghai from Taiping attack in 1860 then created the "Ever Victorious Army" of western-armed and led Chinese irregulars. When Huang Chengzhong and Fan Ruceng seized Tzeki (modern Cicheng) just northwest of Ningbo, the EVA drove the Taiping out, though Ward was fatally wounded in the assault (18–21 September 1862).

Tzirallum ❙ 313 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

In war between Emperors, Constantine in Rome made peace with Valerius Licinius, who could then turn his efforts in the east against his rival Galerius Maximinus Daia. Maximinus had crossed the Bosphorus into Europe, but was heavily defeated at Tzirallum, south of Adrianople in modern Bulgaria. Licinius then pursued Maximinus into Asia Minor, where he apparently took poison (30 April 313).

Tzurulum ❙ 313 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

See Tzirallum

U

Ualual ❙ 1935 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War
See Walwal

Uckerath ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As French General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan withdrew down the east bank of the Rhine after defeat at Wetzlar, days later General Jean-Baptiste Kléber's outnumbered force made a stand against Austrian General Paul Kray east of Bonn at Uckerath. After heavy losses on both sides, Kléber drove the Austrians off, but Kray also claimed victory because the French continued their retreat (19 June 1796).

Uclés ❙ 1108 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

In a renewed Muslim offensive towards Toledo, a huge army under Tamin ibn Yusuf, brother of the Emir Ali ibn Yusuf, attacked Uclés, 80 miles to the east. While the town fell on 27 May, the citadel held out and a relief army from Leon was destroyed outside the city two days later. Among the dead was Sancho Alfonsez, natural son and heir to King Alfonso VI of Leon (29 May 1108).

Uclés ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Recovering after defeat at Tudela (November 1808), units of the Spanish Army of the Centre under General Francisco Venegas advanced on Madrid. In a one-sided rout southeast of the capital at Uclés, French Marshal Claude Victor destroyed the Spanish force and captured many prisoners and guns. The survivors fled and Victor turned to the invasion of Portugal (13 January 1809).

Udayagiri ❙ 1513–1514 ❙ Vijayanagar-Gajapati War

Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar secured his northern borders then sent forces east to besiege the powerful hill fortress of Udayagiri, in modern Nellore, held by Tirumala Rautaraya for his nephew King Pratapudra Gajapati of Orissa. After many failed assaults, Krishnadeva took command to defeat a relief army under Pratapudra and seized the fortress by storm (January 1513–9 June 1514).

Udaynala ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

British Major Thomas Adams defeated Mir Kasim, deposed Nawab of Bengal, near Gheria (2 August), then took his mixed force against a strongly defended gorge on the Ganges at Udaynala, just downstream of Rajmahal. Turning the Bengali position, Adams took it by storm, inflicting heavy losses in killed or drowned, then captured Monghyr and advanced towards Patna (5 September 1763).

Udgir ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

At the height of Maratha power in northern India, Sadashiv Bhao, cousin of Peshwa Balaji Baji Rao, marched east against Nizam Salabat Jang of Hyderabad. In a crushing victory at Udgir, northwest of Hyderabad, the Nizam's army was utterly defeated, but the Marathas were forced to turn north against an Afghan force, which had just defeated them in Punjab at Barari Ghat (3 February 1760).

Ueno ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

After the defeat of former Tokugawa Shogun Yoshinobu at Fushimi, Prince Arisugawa Taruhito's Imperial army occupied Edo (soon to be renamed Tokyo), yet faced continued resistance by pro-Shogunate Shogitai rebels holding out in the city's Ueno temple district. Imperial General Omura Masujiro decisively routed the rebels, who fled north towards Goryokaku (4 July 1868).

Ufa ❙ 1773–1774 ❙ Pugachev Rebellion

In support of the Cossack leader Emelyan Pugachev, his able lieutenant Zarubin Chika led 12,000 rebels against the Russian city of Ufa, on the Belaya. The bloody attack was driven off and Chika settled down to a siege. But after five months, he was routed by a large relief force under Colonel Ivan Michelson. Chika was captured and the siege ended (November 1773–24 March 1774).

Ufa ❙ 1918 ❙ Russian Civil War

While White forces advanced into the Urals and stormed the key city of Perm, Red troops to the south crossed the Volga and seized Ufa, which had fallen to the Czech Legion (23 June). White commander Admiral Aleksandr Kolchak sent General Mikhail Khanzhin south to try and retake Ufa, but he was driven off and the city held firm until Kolchak's Spring Offensive (31 December 1918).

Ufa (1st) ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

When spring arrived in the Urals, White commander Admiral Aleksandr Kolchak in Perm sent General Mikhail Khanzhin and 140,000 men into southern Russia, where Ufa was reportedly defended by fewer than 10,000 Red soldiers. Although the city fell by storm after cruel Red losses, the retreating Red Army soon regrouped and launched a brilliant counter-offensive (13 March 1919).

Ufa (2nd) ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

With Red forces defeated in the Urals at Perm and Ufa, commander Mikhail Tukhachevski launched a bold counter-offensive and General Mikhail Frunze advanced through Buguruslan and Bugulma towards the key city of Ufa, which fell after heavy fighting. With the capture of Perm, the Red offensive continued east through Zlatoust, Ekaterinburg and Chelyabinsk (9 June 1919).

Ugbine ❙ 1897 ❙ British Conquest of Nigeria

When Lieutenant James Phillips of Britain's Niger protectorate led an impulsive move against King Oba of Benin, his force of ten British officers and 200 Africans was ambushed southwest of Benin City at Ugbine by Oba's son-in-law Chief Ologbosheri. Phillips and eight officers were killed along with many of their troops. A punitive expedition the following month razed Benin (4 January 1897).

Ugra ❙ 1480 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

Mongol leader Ahmed Khan was checked at Aleksin (1472), but advanced on Moscow and was confronted at the Ugra by massive Russian forces under Ivan Ivanonich (son of the Tsar). An initial assault was repulsed and, with his capital at Sarai attacked by Russian allies, Ahmed withdrew and was later assassinated. The "stand" is said to have ended Mongol rule (8 October–11 November 1480).

Uhud ❙ 625 ❙ Campaigns of the Prophet Mohammed

See Ohud

Uiju ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

See Yalu

Uji ❙ 1184 ❙ Gempei War

Minamoto Yoshinaka seized Kyoto after victory at Shinowara (June 1183), then attacked former Emperor Go-Shirakawa at Hojuji, provoking his cousin Yoritomo to send his brothers against the rebel. Minamoto Yoshitsune routed Yoshinaka east of Kyoto at Uji, while Noriyori crossed the Uji at nearby Seta. The brothers thus secured Kyoto and pursued Yoshinaka to Awazu (February 1184).

Ujigawa ❙ 1180 ❙ Gempei War

At the start of the war against Japan's ruling Taira clan, Prince Mochihito (son of retired Emperor Go-Shirakawa) joined with Minamoto Yorimasa in an attempted coup in Kyoto. Battle east of the capital at Ujigawa saw Taira Kiyomori rout the rebels, with Mochihito killed and Yorimasa permitted to commit seppuku. Minamoto forces soon lost again at Ishibashiyama (20 June 1180).

Ujjain ❙ 1801 ❙ Maratha Territorial Wars

Determined to avenge the murder of a kinsman, Jaswant Rao Holkar of Indore invaded the territory of Daulat Rao Sindhia of Gwalior and was held off at Satwas by Major John Brownrigg. However, Holkar then routed Sindhia's army under Colonel George Hessing at Ujjain and put the city to the sack. In October, Holkar was in turn defeated by Sindhia further south at Indore (2 July 1801).

Ujscie ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

At the start of Sweden's invasion of Poland, General Arvid Wittenberg advanced on a large force of irregulars near Ujscie, north of Poznan, under Krystof Opalinksi of Poznan. After minor skirmishing, the local Polish leadership disgracefully surrendered their army and the rich western province. Charles X soon defeated the Polish Royal army to the southeast at Sobota (15 July 1655).

Uk ❙ 1003 ❙ Eastern Muslim Dynastic Wars

Returning to the Seistan region of eastern Iran after previous victory at Tarq, Mahmud of Ghazni attacked rebellious nobles near the eastern border at Uk (modern Ark). Supported by his son Nasr and General Altuntash, Mahmud destroyed a powerful sortie, then took the fortress by storm and killed most of the garrison. He then appointed Nasr as Governor of Seistan (15 October 1003).

Ukmerge ❙ 1435 ❙ Later Wars of the Teutonic Knights

See Wilkomierz

Ulan Butong ❙ 1690 ❙ Chinese-Mongol Wars

When Galdan of the Zunghar Mongols expanded east and threatened to establish a Russian alliance on China's northern border, the Kangxi Emperor led a large Qing army north, but illness forced his return before the principal battle at Ulan Butong. After indecisive action, Qing General Arni allowed Galdan to withdraw, but the Emperor later returned to the offensive at Jaomodo (3 September 1690).

Ulla ❙ 1564 ❙ Livonian War

See Chashniki

Ullais ❙ 633 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

Muslim conqueror Khalid ibn al-Walid advancing into Persian-ruled Mesopotamia through victory at Hafir, Mazar and Walaja, met non-Muslim Arab tribes under Abdul Aswad and Persian commander Jaban at Ullais, near modern Samawah, northwest of Basra. After inflicting a massive defeat, Khalid reportedly beheaded all his prisoners (the "River of Blood") then captured Hira (May 633).

Ulm ❙ 1376 ❙ War of the Swabian League

Southern German cities of the Swabian League joined together to oppose the efforts of German King Charles IV to secure the succession of his son Wenceslas and Charles took his army against the key city of Ulm on the Danube. The King was forced to withdraw after a six-week siege and the Imperial forces were defeated again a year later at Reutlingen.

Ulm ❙ 1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

See Höchstädt

Ulm ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte's Grand Army crossed the Rhine in massive force and swung south to the Danube to cut off the Austrian invasion of Bavaria, encircling General Karl Mack von Leiberich at Ulm, southeast of Stuttgart. When breakouts failed at Gunzburg and Elchingen, Mack surrendered 30,000 men and 65 guns. He was court-martialled and imprisoned (20 October 1805).

Ulsan ❙ 1598 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

Pursuing the Japanese south from Chiksan, Chinese commander Yang Hao besieged Ulsan, northeast of Pusan, held by Kato Kiyomasa. A massive Chinese-Korean assault nearly took the fortress by storm before the starving Japanese were finally relieved by Hachisuka Iemasa and Kuroda Yoshitaka. The Chinese withdrew and in October attacked further west at Sachon (January–February 1598).

Ulsan ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Four days after Russian defeat in the Yellow Sea, three Russian cruisers under Admiral Nikolai (von) Essen met Admiral Hikonojo Kamimura and four cruisers in the Japan Sea off Ulsan. Attacking out of the rising sun, Kamimura sank the cruiser Rurik, while Rossiya and Gromoboi were driven back to Vladivostok with heavy damage and casualties, giving Japan command of the sea (14 August 1904).

Ulu Muar ❙ 1445 ❙ Thai-Malacca War

When Sultan Muzaffar Shah of Melaka (modern Malacca) refused to pay allegiance to the Thai kingdom of Ayutthaya, a large Thai army marched overland under Awi Chakra. The Thais were met and routed at Ulu Muar, where great leadership was shown by Tun Perak of Klang. Tun Perak was appointed Bendahara (Chief Minister) and in 1456 he led a brilliant victory over the Thais at Batu Pahat.

Ulundi ❙ 1879 ❙ Anglo-Zulu War

Following British victory at Khambula in March, commander Lord Frederick Chelmsford took the offensive against King Cetshwayo and advanced on the royal Kraal at Ulundi, north of the White Mfolozi River. A decisive action cost the British 100 men for about 1,500 Zulus killed, effectively eclipsing Zulu power. Cetshwayo was captured and Zululand became part of Natal (4 July 1879).

Umachiri ❙ 1815 ❙ Peruvian War of Independence

Indian Chief Mateo Pumacahua led a rising at Cuzco and seized Arequipa in late 1814 after victory at Apacheta. But he withdrew before the advance of Spanish General Juan Ramirez de Orosco, who pursued him to Umachiri, just west of Ayaviri. Pumacahua's ill-armed multitude was routed, with over 1,000 Indians killed, and the 77-year-old Chief was hanged, crushing his rebellion (11 March 1815).

Uman ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As German forces advanced into the Ukraine, Panzer General Ewald von Kliest joined with the Seventeenth Army to isolate 20 Russian divisions under General Ivan Tyulenev south of Kiev at Uman. Severe fighting saw some Russians break out, but the pocket was crushed, yielding 100,000 prisoners, 300 tanks and 100 guns. The Germans then turned to reduce Kiev (16 July–8 August 1941).

Uman ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With the Korsun Pocket west of the Dnieper crushed, Marshal Ivan Konev sent a massive fresh offensive west from Zvenigorodka towards Uman and from Kirovograd towards Novoukrainka against German Army Group South. Marshal Erich von Manstein committed and lost his last reserves of men and tanks and was dismissed when the Germans fell back towards Romania (4–10 March 1944).

Um Diwaykarat ❙ 1899 ❙ British-Sudan Wars

In the final act of the war against the Khalifa Abdullah-al-Taaishi after his decisive defeat at Omdurman, a British force under Sir Reginald Wingate tracked him down more than a year later 250 miles to the south on the upper reaches of the White Nile at Um Diwaykarat, near modern Kosti. The remnant of his Dervish army was defeated and the Khalifa was killed (24 November 1899).

Umm-at-Tubal ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

Anglo-Indian General Charles Townshend retreated south along the Tigris from Ctesiphon (25 November) and rested for two days at Aziziyah before facing a persistent Turkish dawn attack downriver at Umm-at-Tubal. The bloody rearguard action cost 700 Turkish and 500 British casualties before Townshend reached Kut-al-Amara, where he unwisely remained under siege (1 December 1915).

Umm Qasr ❙ 2003 ❙ 2nd Gulf War

At the start of the war, British marines established a bridgehead on the Al Faw Peninsula, then joined American forces advancing on Umm Qasr, Iraq's only deep water port, which fell after tanks and helicopters overcame stiff resistance. The first humanitarian aid ship arrived three days later, while British forces contained Basra and the Americans moved north towards Nasiriya (21–25 March 2003).

Umm Urdhumah ❙ 1929 ❙ Ikhwan Rebellion

Despite defeat at Sabila, the Ikhwan brotherhood of central Arabia fought on against Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Nejd, who sent Abd al-Azizi Ibn Musa'id to defend the oasis of Umm Urdhumah against Azaiyiz, son of Faisal al-Dawish. Driven off with terrible losses, the rebels died of thirst in the desert. Al-Dawish later surrendered and Aziz created the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (August 1929).

Umrani ❙ 1673 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

Bahlol Khan of Bijapur took a large force to recover Panhala fortress near Kolhapur (which had fallen on 6 March) and the Maratha warlord Shivaji sent Pratap Rao Gujar to intercept him at Umrani, 35 miles west of Bijapur. After a day-long battle, with heavy losses on both sides, Bahlol Khan's Afghans held firm and Pratap Rao unwisely permitted him to withdraw (April 1673).

Umuahia ❙ 1969 ❙ Biafran War

While Biafran rebel forces launched a surprise counter-offensive towards Owerri, further east Nigerian Colonel Ibrahim Haruna followed air attacks with an assault on Umuahia, which had become Biafran capital after the fall of Enugu. Umuahia fell after heavy fighting, but the Federal success was overshadowed by the rebel capture of Owerri three days later (January–22 April 1969).

Unao ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

See Unnao

Unayzah ❙ 1904 ❙ Saudi-Rashidi Wars

Determined to aid the Rashid of central Arabia against Emir Abd al-Aziz (Ibn Saud) of Riyadh, Turkey sent 2,400 men who met the Saudi army at Unayzah, between Hail and Riyadh. Abd al-Aziz suffered heavy losses to Turkish artillery before withdrawing, but Unayzah tribesmen killed many Turks when they stopped to loot. Abd al-Aziz later struck back at Bukairiya in July (15 June 1904).

Undwanala ❙ 1763 ❙ Bengal War

See Udaynala

Union Gap ❙ 1855 ❙ Yakima Indian Wars

Resisting white expansion in southern Washington State, Yakima Chief Kamiakin defeated a small force at the Toppenish (8 October) then faced 350 regulars under Major Gabriel Rains and 400 Oregon volunteers led by Colonel James Willis Nesmith. At Union Gap, just south of modern Yakima, Kamiakin was decisively defeated but struck back six months later at the Satus (30 October 1855).

Union Mill ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Kettle Run

United States vs _Macedonian_ ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

See Madeira

Unnao ❙ 1857 ❙ Indian Mutiny

General Sir Henry Havelock relieved Cawnpore (16 July), then marched east across the Ganges towards besieged Lucknow and met the rebels eight miles away in a strong defensive position at Unnao. A bold assault by Havelock's heavily outnumbered, but better armed, force drove the rebels out with more than 300 killed. He then marched to further action the same day at Bashiratganj (29 July 1857).

Unsan ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

After securing Pyongyang, the Allies lunged forward towards the Yalu. North of Unsan, invading Chinese forces checked South Korean General Sun Yup Paik then opened an offensive against Paik and American General Frank Milburn. Threatened with encirclement, the Allies were repulsed with very heavy losses and fell back towards the Chongchon (1–6 November 1950).

Unstrut ❙ 1075 ❙ German Civil Wars

Facing large-scale revolt by Saxon nobles in 1073, German Emperor Henry IV was initially forced into a humiliating peace. However, he eventually raised a large new army for the decisive battle on the Unstrut River near Langensalza. In a classic clash of mounted knights, there were heavy losses on both sides before Henry triumphed and reasserted Imperial authority in Saxony (9 June 1075).

Upperville ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Confederate commander Robert E. Lee invaded the north, General Alfred Pleasonton assaulted his flank at Middleburg, southwest of Leesburg, Virginia, then attacked Generals Wade Hampton and Beverly Robertson at nearby Upperville. The Confederates fell back, but General James "Jeb" Stuart defended Ashby's Gap as Lee crossed the Potomac towards Gettysburg (21 June 1863).

Upsala ❙ 1160 ❙ Swedish Wars of Succession

Swedish King Eric Jedvardsson established Christianity in Sweden, then faced rebellion by non-Christian nobles who sought aid from the King of Denmark, who sent his son Prince Magnus. The Danish army under Magnus defeated and killed Eric near Upsala, though they were eventually repulsed. Eric was later canonised as Patron Saint of Sweden (18 May 1160).

Urbigas ❙ 456 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Orbigo

Uri ❙ 1947 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

Supported by Pakistan, Muslim tribesmen invaded Indian Kashmir, storming the border town of Muzzafarabad before advancing on the key city of Uri. Kashmir Chief of Staff Brigadier Rajinder Singh rushed in with reinforcements but was killed leading a stubborn defence. When Uri fell, the tribesmen advanced to take Baramula and the road was open to Srinigar (23–24 October 1947).

Urica ❙ 1814 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence

With a Venezuelan rebel army destroyed at Aragua de Barcelona, Spanish forces under José Tomás Boves and Tomás Morales met and defeated another Patriot force under General José Félix Ribas in the northeast at Urica, near Cumaná. Boves was fatally wounded but Morales, avenging defeat at La Victoria, pursued and captured Ribas, who was later executed (5 December 1814).

Urmiya ❙ 1757 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

Mohammad Hasan Khan of Qajar routed Azad Khan Afghan of Azerbaijan in winter at Lahijan (10 February) then captured Tabriz and marched west to besiege Urmiya (modern Orumiyeh), held for Azad by Yusef Khan. Azad approached to relieve the siege and was routed when his allies changed sides. Urmiya quickly surrendered and Mohammad Hasan went on to retake Isfahan (July 1757).

Urmiya ❙ 1762–1763 ❙ Persian Wars of Succession

In the concluding struggle for control of Persia, Regent Karim Khan Zand defeated his rival Fath Ali Afshar at Qara Chaman (June 1762) then besieged him at Urmiya (modern Orumiyeh), west of Lake Urmiya. Terrible winter conditions forced Fath Ali to surrender, finally securing western Persia for Karim. Fath Ali was pardoned, but later executed (24 July 1762–20 February 1763).

Uruguayana ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Early in his offensive war, Paraguayan Dictator Francisco Solano López was defeated on the Uruguay at Yatay and Colonel Antonio de la Cruz Estigarribia was besieged across the river at Uruguayana, in modern Brazil's southwest. About 6,000 men were forced to surrender to Brazilian General Manuel Marques de Sousa and the invaders withdrew to Humaitá (18 September 1865).

Ürümqi ❙ 1876 ❙ Xinjiang Rebellion

When Yakub Beg of Khokand marched into western China and established the Muslim Khanate of Kashgari, the Qing Emperor, distracted by the Taiping Rebellion, eventually sent General Zuo Zongtang to restore order. At the head of a massive army, Zuo defeated the rebels to seize Ürümqi. In May 1877 he defeated Yakub Beg again to the southeast at Turpan (17 August 1876).

Urzu ❙ 1880 ❙ 2nd British-Afghan War

While marching from Kandahar in southern Afghanistan to support General Sir Frederick Roberts in Kabul, General Sir Donald Stewart beat a force of Afghan Ghilzais near Ghazni at Ahmad Khel (19 April). After reaching Ghazni, he and General Sir Charles Palliser attacked the Afghans just to the southeast at Urzu, inflicting further heavy losses before continuing to Kabul (23 April 1880).

Usagre ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Nicolas Soult was withdrawing after failing to relieve Badajoz and halted at Llerena to send General Marie Latour-Mauberge's cavalry northwest to repulse the Allied advance. In one of the campaign's major cavalry victories, General Sir William Lumley—leading British, Spanish and Portuguese cavalry—ambushed and routed the French fording a river at Usagre (25 May 1811).

Ushant ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

In the first naval action since France joined the war, the British Channel Fleet under Admiral Augustus Keppel met Admiral Louis Comte d'Orvilliers west of Ushant, off Brittany, where the fleets simply exchanged broadsides then withdrew. While Keppel blamed his rear division under Admiral Hugh Palliser for failing to support him, both were court-martialled though acquitted (27 July 1778).

Ushant ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Departing Brest for the West Indies, a French convoy escorted by Admiral Luc-Urbain Comte de Guichen was intercepted in the Bay of Biscay, southwest of Ushant, by a much smaller British force under Admiral Richard Kempenfelt. With the escort to leeward, Kempenfelt attacked the merchantmen, seizing 15. He took a further five as the stragglers fled to Brest (12 December 1781).

Ushant ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See First of June

Ushant ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

British Admiral William Cornwallis was cruising off Ushant with just eight ships when he met the thirty-strong French fleet of Admiral Louis-Thomas Villaret de Joyeuse. Although Cornwallis suffered some damage, clever manoeuvring enabled him to escape without loss. Cornwallis was thanked by both British Houses of Parliament, while Villaret was accused of excessive timidity (17 June 1795).

Ussuri River ❙ 1938 ❙ Russo-Japanese Border Wars

See Changfukeng

Usti nad Labem ❙ 1426 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Aussig

Utah Beach ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Normandy

Utica (1st) ❙ 240 BC ❙ Truceless War

During peace between the First and Second Punic Wars, mercenaries of Carthage rose in revolt and besieged cities, including Utica, in modern Tunisia. Hanno took a large force from Carthage, with a reputed 100 elephants, and relieved the siege. However, he failed to secure victory and was overwhelmed by a rebel counter-attack. The Carthaginians had to withdraw but soon struck back at the Bagradas.

Utica (2nd) ❙ 240 BC ❙ Truceless War

See Bagradas

Utica (1st) ❙ 203 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

While Roman General Publius Scipio the Younger was besieging the Carthaginian city of Utica, in modern Tunisia, Gaius Laelius and deposed Numidian Prince Masinissa launched a surprise night-time attack on the nearby camp of Syphax, King of Numidia. With the Numidian camp set on fire amid massive destruction, the main Carthaginian army of Hasdrubal Gisco was forced to withdraw.

Utica (2nd) ❙ 203 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

After Carthage and her Numidian allies had been defeated on land in Tunisia at the Bagradas and near Utica, Carthage soon sent a fleet to attack the Romans besieging Utica. Avoiding a full naval action at sea, Roman General Publius Scipio the Younger (later Africanus) drew his unprepared fleet close to shore. Although six Roman vessels were lost, the Carthaginians were driven off.

Utica ❙ 49 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Julius Caesar was occupied against Pompeian forces at Ilerda in Spain and sent Gaius Curio to North Africa, where he advanced on Publius Atius Varus at Utica, in modern Tunisia. Rashly choosing to fight outside the city, Varus was badly beaten and withdrew under siege. However, after Curio was defeated by Pompeian ally Juba of Numidia at the Bagradas, the siege of Utica was abandoned.

Utoy Creek ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Determined to cut supplies to the Confederate army in Atlanta, Georgia, after a previous attempt at Ezra Church, Union commander William T. Sherman sent General John M. Schofield further west towards Utoy Creek. A prolonged action saw Schofield repulsed by Generals William B. Bate and William J. Hardee, but he then established a new entrenched position (5–7 August 1864).

Utus ❙ 447 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

With Constantinople hit by an earthquake, Attila the Hun led a large new invasion, supported by Ardaric of the Gepids and Goths under Valamer. Emperor Theodosius sent an army under the German Arnegisclus, who was defeated and killed at the Utus (Vid), south of the Danube. Attila then sacked Marcianopolis, but he too had suffered heavy losses and withdrew to the Hungarian plain.

Ututlán ❙ 1524 ❙ Spanish Conquest of Guatemala

Conquistador Pedro de Alvarado invaded Guatemala and killed King Tecún Umán of Quiché at Quetzaltenango, then marched northeast towards his fortified capital at Ututlán (Gumarcaj) near modern Santa Cruz del Quiché. After an initial repulse, Alvarado and his Cakchiquel Indian allies returned to besiege then burn the city, securing the kingdom in a matter of months (April 1524).

V

Vaagso ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

While a diversionary force attacked Lofoten, 600 British commandos and Norwegians under Brigadier Charles Haydon attacked Vaagso and nearby Malloy, off Norway's coast near Trondheim. While German facilities and nine ships were destroyed, the raiders lost 19 killed, including Norwegian Major Martin Linge. The attack made Germany divert troops to defend Norway (27 December 1941).

Vaalgras ❙ 1905 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

Continuing guerrilla war in the south of German Southwest Africa after defeat at Naris, 80-year-old Nama leader Hendrik Witbooi was pursued by new German commander Lothar von Trotha. Attacking a German convoy at Vaalgras, near Keetmanshoop, Witbooi was fatally wounded and the Nama began to surrender. The war effectively ended the next year at Van Rooisvlei (29 October 1905).

Vaal Kranz ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

In a third attempt to relieve besieged Ladysmith, after failure at Colenso and Spion Kop, General Sir Redvers Buller again crossed the Tugela and seized Vaal Kranz to the southwest. However, Boers under Louis Botha counterattacked and Buller eventually withdrew, losing about 350 killed and 300 wounded. Days later he succeeded in a renewed assault at Tugela Heights (5–7 February 1900).

Vác ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Waitzen

Vaila ❙ 1509 ❙ War of the League of Cambrai

See Agnadello

Vajreshwari ❙ 1780 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Doogaur

Valcour Island ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

With America's invasion of Canada repulsed at Quebec and Trois Rivières, General Benedict Arnold built a makeshift fleet to halt Britain's counter-offensive along Lake Champlain. Near Valcour Island, then off Split Rock, the British fleet of General Sir Guy Carleton won decisive victory. However, the delay convinced Carleton to end his advance and return to Canada (11–13 October 1776).

Val-de-Junquera ❙ 920 ❙ Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

Two years after King Ordono II of Leon beat Abd-ar-Rahman III at San Esteban de Gormaz, a fresh Muslim army was sent under General al-Nasir. Ordono and King Sancho I of Navarre were routed at Val-de-Junquera (modern Antzuola), near San Sebastian, with survivors killed at nearby Muez. Ordono blamed defeat on defection by four Counts of Castile and had them executed (25 July 920).

Valdevez ❙ 1140 ❙ Portuguese-Castilian Wars

See Arcos de Valdevez

Valdivia ❙ 1820 ❙ Chilean War of Independence

Chilean Admiral Lord Thomas Cochrane was repulsed in Peru at Callao (September 1819) then led a tiny force in a surprise attack on Valdivia, in southern Chile, the best-fortified port in Spanish South America. After the town suffered terrible damage by bombardment, the Royalists were defeated and fled, losing Spain its last major possession on the South Chilean mainland (3–4 February 1820).

Valdres ❙ 1940 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

While German invaders advanced northwest from Oslo towards Trondheim, Norwegian troops fought a bitter defence in the southwestern Valdres district, west of Bergen, around Bagn. Although Major Halfdan Haneborg-Hansen tied up considerable German forces, failure of the Allied advance from Andalsnes left the outnumbered Norwegians no choice but to capitulate (14 April–2 May 1940).

Valea Alba ❙ 1476 ❙ Moldavian-Turkish War

Stephen the Great of Moldavia defeated the Turks at Rakhova (January 1475), then faced a renewed Ottoman invasion. In battle in the Valea Alba, near the Danube at Rasbeoni, east of Baltatesti, the Turks won, despite massive losses, and proceeded to ravage Wallachia. After they withdrew, Stephen restored his cousin Vlad the Impaler, but his prestige was greatly diminished (17 July 1476).

Valencia, Alcántara ❙ 1705 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

In a fresh offensive from Portugal into Spain, an Anglo-Dutch and Portuguese army under Henri de Massue Earl of Ruvigny and Baron Nicolas Fagel besieged French-held Valencia d'Alcántara, which was taken by storm after artillery beached the walls. Although the garrison of 700 capitulated, the town was sacked before the Allies marched southeast to seize Albuquerque (3–8 May 1705).

Valencia, Alcántara ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

With Spain threatening Portugal in support of France, Britain sent reinforcements to aid the Portuguese. In a pre-emptive attack on the Spanish border town of Valencia d'Alcántara, General John Burgoyne surprised the invasion supply base, capturing a large quantity of arms and ammunition. Two months later he defeated the Spanish again at Vila Velha (27 August 1762).

Valencia, Valencia ❙ 1093–1094 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

When Ibn Jahhuf overthrew and murdered Qadir of Valencia, Rodrigo Diaz de Bivar—El Cid—an ally of Qadir, took the east coast Muslim city by storm and Jahhuf was put to death. El Cid then held Valencia as independent ruler until his death in 1099. His widow Ximena initially defended Valencia, then burned the city before abandoning it to the Muslims (July 1093–15 June 1094).

Valencia, Valencia ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Marshal Bon Adrien Moncey was sent to suppress Spanish insurrection in Catalonia and met initial success at the Cabrillas. However, he was heroically repulsed at the walls of Valencia by raw levies under Antonio Osorio Count of Cervellon. When two bloody assaults cost more than 1,000 men, Moncey realised he could not succeed without siege guns and withdrew to Madrid (27–28 June 1808).

Valencia, Valencia ❙ 1811–1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Two months after victory at Sagunto, French Marshal Louis Suchet drove defeated Spanish General Joachim Blake south into siege at Valencia. Facing a terrible bombardment, Blake's disheartened force surrendered and the captured city yielded Suchet a massive prize of prisoners, guns and stores. Suchet was later created Duke of Albufera (26 December 1811–9 January 1812).

Valencia, Valencia ▌ 1938 ▌ Spanish Civil War

Nationalist forces campaigned down Spain's eastern coast through Castellón de la Plana and advanced on Valencia. But strong resistance from well-prepared defences, and losses suffered during the four-month Aragon offensive, meant they could not take the city. The Republicans soon counter-attacked towards the Ebro and Valencia was not taken until the closing days of the war (July 1938).

Valencia, Venezuela (1st) ▌ 1814 ▌ Venezuelan War of Independence

While Patriot leader Simón Bolívar defended San Mateo, he ordered Colonel Rafael Urdaneta and just 280 men to hold Valencia against 4,000 Royalists under Spanish Colonels José Ceballos and Sebastián de le Cazada. When Bolívar himself arrived with reinforcements, the Royalist siege force withdrew. In June Bolívar was defeated further east at La Puerta (13 March–3 April 1814).

Valencia, Venezuela (2nd) ▌ 1814 ▌ Venezuelan War of Independence

Following his crushing victory at La Puerta, Spanish leader José Tomás Boves marched west to renew the siege of Valencia, defended by a massively outnumbered Patriot force under General Juan de Escalona. When Escalona capitulated in return for safe conduct, Boves treacherously killed many of the garrison. Boves himself was mortally wounded six months later at Urica (19 June–9 July 1814).

Valencia, Venezuela ▌ 1818 ▌ Venezuelan War of Independence

See Semen

Valenciennes ▌ 1006–1007 ▌ Revolt of Baldwin of Flanders

Count Baldwin IV of Flanders responded to Imperial expansion by capturing Ghent. He then secured Valenciennes, provoking war with his overlord, Robert of Burgundy, and King Henry II of Germany, who jointly failed to dislodge him. The King then made a fresh assault alone and forced Baldwin to surrender Valenciennes. He later pardoned the Count and granted him both cities.

Valenciennes ▌ 1566–1567 ▌ Netherlands War of Independence

As a prelude to full war, Governor Philip de Noircarmes of Hainault led Spanish forces against rebellious Calvinists in Valenciennes. The siege continued while Regent Margaret of Parma negotiated with William of Orange, until a 36-hour bombardment forced its surrender. This was followed by collapse of the rebellion and start of the Eighty Years Netherlands War (December 1566–March 1567).

Valenciennes ▌ 1656 ▌ Franco-Spanish War

Amid renewed fighting in northern France, Spanish-held Valenciennes, southeast of Lilles, was besieged by French Marshal Henri de Turenne. A relief army under the great French soldier Louis II de Bourbon Prince of Condé (in Spanish service), aided by Don John of Austria, arrived just as the city was about to surrender. They routed Turenne and drove off the siege (18 May–16 July 1656).

Valenciennes ▌ 1793 ▌ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

After Marquis August Dampierre was killed at Condé-sur-l'Escaut (8 May) the demoralised French Army of the North was given to General Adam Philippe Custine, who was beaten at Famars, near Valenciennes, southeast of Lille, by Friedrich Josias Prince of Saxe-Coburg (21–23 May). Custine was guillotined and Valenciennes fell to the Duke of York after a two-month siege (23 May–28 July 1793).

Val-ès-Dunes ▌ 1047 ▌ Rise of William of Normandy

Amid continuing dynastic struggles in France, Duke William of Normandy (later William the Conqueror) was supported by Henry I of France against rebellious nobles, led by Guy Lord of Vernon and Brienne. The nobles were routed at Val-ès-Dunes, near Caen, but Henry eventually turned against the ambitious William. In 1054 the King suffered a terrible defeat at Mortemer (June 1047).

Valetta ❙ 1798–1800 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Following Napoleon Bonaparte's capture of Malta in June 1798 (en route to invade Egypt) British Admiral Sir Alexander Ball was despatched in October to recover the island. Landing with a small force of marines, supported by Maltese militia, Ball quickly drove General Claude-Henri Vaubois back to siege in Valetta, which finally succumbed to starvation (September 1798–5 September 1800).

Val Gudina ❙ 1709 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

Portuguese commander Fernando Mascarenhas Marquis de Fronteira determined on a final offensive to prevent French forces under Alexandre Marquis de Bay destroying the harvest in the south. English leader Henri de Massue Earl of Ruvigny had urged caution, and at Val Gudina, on the Caia northwest of Badajoz, he and Fronteira were beaten back to the Guadiana (17 May 1709).

Valievo ❙ 1737 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

See Valjevo

Valjevo ❙ 1737 ❙ Austro-Russian-Turkish War

Austrian Marshal Count Friedrich von Seckendorff supported Russia against Turkey in the Balkans, advancing from Nish into Bosnia, where a Turkish counter-attack had repulsed Austrians at Banyaluka (4 August). Seckendorff suffered a major defeat at Valjevo, southwest of Belgrade. A further loss a year later at Kroszka persuaded Austria to abandon her ally and make a separate peace.

Valjouan ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)

See Mortmant

Valladolid ❙ 1813 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Despite the death of Miguel Hidalgo after Calderón, Mexican rebellion continued under José María Morelos, who captured a number of cities. After his defeat at Cuautla (May 1812), Morelos rashly attacked Valladolid and was badly beaten by Royalists Ciriaco de Llano and Agustin de Iturbide. The rising lost momentum and Morelos was eventually captured and executed (23 December 1813).

Valls ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Advancing from Tarragona to attack General Laurent Gouvion Saint-Cyr around Barcelona, General Teodoro Reding's Spanish force fought a confused campaign of manoeuvre before the two armies met near Valls, north of Tarragona, where the Spaniards were crushed and lost their guns. With Reding mortally wounded, the survivors fell back on Tarragona (25 February 1809).

Valls ❙ 1811 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Pla

Valmaseda ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Spanish General Joachim Blake, withdrawing west from Bilbao, was impetuously pursued from Pancorbo by Marshal Claude Victor. At Valmaseda, French General Eugène Villatte unexpectedly faced Blake and massive Spanish reinforcements sent by General Pedro La Romana. He was heavily repulsed before Victor came up and drove Blake towards defeat at Espinosa (5 November 1808).

Valmont ❙ 1416 ❙ Hundred Years War

On campaign northeast from Harfleur, Thomas Beaufort Earl of Dorset and 1,000 men were blocked by about 4,000 Gascons under Bernard of Armagnac Constable of France, east of Fécamp at Valmont. Fighting off an attack, Dorset slipped away in the night and next day, near Etretat, defeated part of Armagnac's army under Marshal Louis de Loigny and made it back to Harfleur (March 1416).

Valmy ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

After capturing Longwy and Verdun, Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand Duke of Brunswick advanced slowly towards Paris. At Valmy, northeast of Chalons, his Prussians and Austrians faced French veterans under Generals Charles-Francois Dumouriez and Francois Kellerman and were repulsed by accurate artillery fire. Brunswick withdrew to the Rhine, abandoning his prizes (20 September 1792).

Valparaiso ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

At the end of a successful cruise off the Pacific coast of South America, the American frigate Essex (Captain David Porter) was blockaded in neutral Valparaiso, Chile, by the British frigate Phoebe (Captain James Hillyar) and sloop Cherub (Commander Tudor Tucker). Attempting to break out to sea, Essex was badly damaged with heavy casualties and surrendered (28 March 1814).

Valparaiso ❙ 1866 ❙ Peruvian-Spanish War

When Chile supported Peru in war with Spain, Imperial Commodore Casto Mendez-Nuñez blockaded Chilean ports and, with British and American squadrons insisting on neutrality, he attacked virtually unprotected Valparaiso harbour. A massive bombardment destroyed shore facilities and over 30 merchant ships. The Spanish fleet then sailed against Callao in Peru (31 March 1866).

Valpovo ❙ 1537 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

While Sultan Suleiman besieged Corfu, a large Imperial army advanced into Croatia. After being driven off from a siege at Osijek it was destroyed by a Turkish force on the Drava near Valpovo. A reported 20,000 Austrians and Hungarians were killed, including Generals Ludwig Lodron and Paul Bakicz, while commander Johann Katzianer fled and was later murdered (2 December 1537).

Valtesti ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Ottoman General Kurshid Pasha met rising nationalism in Greece by reinforcing Tripolitza, then led 5,000 men against about 3,000 Greeks in a strong defensive position to the southwest at Valtesti. The Turks were repulsed in heavy fighting, losing 400 killed and large quantities of military supplies in the pursuit. The Greeks lost 150 killed in their first major victory of the war (24 May 1821).

Valtierra ❙ 1110 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

At a time of consistent Muslim success against the Christians of northeastern Spain, King Alfonso I of Aragon—El Batallador, the fighter—secured a welcome victory at Valtierra, north of Tudela. While the battle itself was not particularly significant, it was strategically important in costing the life of the important Muslim ruler al-Mustain of Saragossa (January 1110).

Valutino ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

Two days after capturing Smolensk, Napoleon Bonaparte's advance units under Marshal Michel Ney attempted to trap the Russian rearguard led by General Mikhail Barclay de Tolly further east between Valutino-Gora and Lubina. Although both sides suffered heavy losses, hesitation by Marshal Andoche Junot allowed Barclay to escape and continue his withdrawal (19 August 1812).

Valverde ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate General Henry Hopkins Sibley, with Colonel Thomas J. Green, campaigned into New Mexico, where he advanced towards Fort

Craig and was met just to the north at Valverde by a mixed force under Colonel Edward R. S. Canby. Despite costly losses in a bloody action, Sibley forced the larger Union force to retire and pushed on north to capture Santa Fe (21 February 1862).

Van Buren ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War
See Tuy Hoa

Vanguardia ❙ 1928 ❙ Chaco War
As tension continued in the disputed Chaco Boreal following the incident at Sorpresa in early 1927, Paraguayan Major Rafael Franco led an unauthorised attack on the fortress at Vanguardia, north of Bahia Negra, held by Bolivian Colonel Victorino Gutiérrez. Franco was dismissed and Paraguay was forced to accept a humiliating truce until hostilities broke out four years later (5 December 1928).

Vaniyambadi ❙ 1767 ❙ 1st British-Mysore War
Colonel Joseph Smith repulsed Haidar Ali of Mysore at Ambur, then chased him to Vaniyambadi, on the Palar, southwest of Vellore, where Haidar Ali turned on his pursuers. During an indecisive action, his son Tipu Sultan's cavalry attacked the rearguard of the British force, which was forced to pull back with heavy losses. However, Haidar Ali also had to withdraw (December 1767).

Van Rooisvlei ❙ 1906 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa
Nama leader Jakob Morenga continued guerrilla war in German Southwest Africa after Hendrik Witbooi's death near Vaalgras (October 1905) and was finally attacked in camp at Van Rooisvlei, just inside British South Africa, by a German column under Captain Bech. The Nama lost 23 killed and three days later Morenga surrendered to the British, ending the so-called Herero War (4 May 1906).

Van Thuong ❙ 1965 ❙ Vietnam War
See Chu Lai

Vaprio ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Cassano

Varaville ❙ 1058 ❙ Rise of William of Normandy
Henry I of France was concerned at the rise of Duke William of Normany and, after a failure at Mortemer (1054), he and Geoffrey of Anjou again entered Normandy. As they crossed the Dives at its mouth near Varaville, William attacked and inflicted a bloody defeat, with many drowned when the bridge collapsed. Henry withdrew and made peace while William went on to seize England at Hastings.

Varberg ❙ 1565 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War
On campaign into Danish Halland, Erik XIV of Sweden captured Varberg, supported by artillery under his brother Charles. Very heavy fighting against Danish commander Daniel Rantzau saw parts of the port change hands, But with discipline breaking down, Rantzau withdrew after a costly final assault. Days later he met Swedish reinforcements at Axtorna (28 August–18 October 1565).

Varberg ❙ 1569 ❙ Nordic Seven Years War
When John III of Sweden resumed hostilities, Danish commander Daniel Rantzau led a fresh offensive and besieged Varberg, where he and his successor Frans Brockenhausen were both killed. Frederick II of Denmark then stormed Varberg, killing garrison commander Bo Birgersson Grip. War soon ended with Denmark agreeing to withdraw all claim on Sweden (October–4 December 1569).

Vardar ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)
Intervening to support Serbia against German-Bulgarian invasion, Anglo-French forces landed at Salonika and advanced north into the Vardar Valley under General Maurice Sarrail. The key city of Strumica changed hands several times before a powerful Bulgarian counter-attack drove the Allies back to Greece, defeating the British at Kosturino (15 October–15 December 1915)

Vardar ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

After years of stalemate in Salonika, new Allied commander Louis Franchet d'Esperey launched a massive offensive along the Vardar Valley through Dobro Polje against Bulgarian General Nikola Zhekov. While British forces in the east were checked near Doiran, the British, French, Serb, Italian and Greek Allies broke through and Bulgaria sued for peace (15–26 September 1918).

Varese ❙ 1859 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Giuseppe Garibaldi was campaigning against Austria in northern Italy, east of Lake Maggiore, when he led 3,000 irregulars against Varese, held by Marshal Karl von Urban. The Austrians withdrew after fierce fighting and were driven out when they tried to dig in at nearby Malnate. While Garibaldi won again at San Fermo and Tre Ponti, his campaign produced little strategic benefit (26 May 1859).

Varna ❙ 1444 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

Encouraged by Pope Eugenius IV, Ladislas III of Poland and Hungary led the "Crusade of Varna" against the Turks in the Balkans. On the Black Sea Coast, near Varna, the 20-year-old King was defeated and killed by Sultan Murad II, who then reconquered Serbia and Wallachia. The Hungarian commander Janos Hunyadi escaped and was killed in 1448 at Kossovo (10 November 1444).

Varna ❙ 1828 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

Russian Prince Alexander Menshikov crossed the Danube in support of Greek independence and despatched General Count Hans von Diebitsch to besiege the Black Sea port of Varna, held by 20,000 Turkish troops. Powerful sorties by the garrison were repulsed on 7 and 21 August and the city was eventually taken by storm (5 August–11 October 1828).

Varvarin ❙ 1810 ❙ 1st Serbian Rising

On a fresh campaign in Serbia after the costly defence of Nish in May 1809, Khurshid Pasha and an Ottoman army of 30,000 advanced against Kara George and 3,000 Serbians to the northwest at Varvarin. Irish-born Russian General Joseph O'Rourke arrived just in time to help defeat Kurshid. Another victory at Loznitza a month later drove the Turks out of Serbia (8 September 1810).

Vasa ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Supporting the Swedish summer offensive down the west coast of Finland from Siikajoki, Swedish General Johan Bergenstrahle landed against General Nikolai Demidoff's Russian invaders at Vasa. The main Swedish army was unable to send aid from nearby Nykarleby and the outnumbered Swedes evacuated by sea. The port was recaptured for Sweden a few days later (25–26 June 1808).

Vasai ❙ 1780 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Bassein, India

Vasaq ❙ 1442 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

To avenge Turkey's defeat at Hermannstadt, Ottoman Sultan Murad II sent Governor Sehabeddin of Rumelia into Transylvania with a massive army against the outnumbered Hungarians of Janos Hunyadi. In the Ialomita Valley at Vasaq the Turks suffered an even worse defeat, with a reported 20,000 casualties. They lost again the next year at Nish (6 September 1442).

Vasilika ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

As 5,000 Ottoman troops under three Pashas advanced south to support Omer Vrioni at the Acropolis, they were blocked at Vasilika by Greeks under Nikitas Nikitaras, later reinforced by Odysseus Androutsos. Ambushed at nearby Mount Oeta, the Turks lost 800 men and withdrew. With his reinforcements defeated and Tripolitza lost (8 October), Vrioni abandoned Athens (4 September 1821).

Vaslui ❙ 1475 ❙ Moldavian-Turkish War
See Rakhova

Vassy ❙ 1562 ❙ 1st French War of Religion
More a massacre than a battle, this strategic incident occurred when the Catholic Francis Duke of Guise, claiming a violation of limited rights granted to Protestant Huguenots by Queen Catherine de Medici, allowed his men to attack worshippers in church at Vassy, near Condé sur Noireau, Normandy. About 60 unarmed Huguenots were killed, triggering the First French War of Religion (1 March 1562).

Vatapi ❙ 642 ❙ Indian Dynastic Wars
To avenge the defeat of his father Mahendra at Kanchi (610), Narasimhavarman of Pallava took a large army against Pulakesin II of Chalukya. With General Paranjothi, Narasimha won a decisive battle near the Chalukya capital Vatapi (modern Badami). Pulakesin was killed in the fighting and Vatapi was occupied until his son Vikramaditya drove Pallava out in 655 and struck back at Kanchi.

Vauchamps ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (French Campaign)
In a brilliant five-day campaign east of Paris against General Gebhard von Blucher's Army of Silesia, Napoleon Bonaparte won at Champaubert, Montmirail and Chateau-Thierry, then defeated Blucher's vanguard further east between Janvilliers and Vauchamps. The Russians and Prussians withdrew in tatters and Bonaparte was able to turn against the Austrians (14 February 1814).

Vaught's Hill ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)
Two weeks after the Union rout south of Nashville, Tennessee, at Thompson's Station, Colonel Albert S. Hall led a Union Brigade northeast from Murfreesboro and met Confederate General John H. Morgan at Vaught's Hill, near Milton, southeast of Nashville. Hall repulsed the Confederates and, with Union reinforcements marching from Murfreesboro, Morgan withdrew (20 March 1863).

Vaux (1st) ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)
While German forces attacked northwest of Verdun around Le Mort-Homme, General Konstantin Schmidt von Knobelsdorf in the east attacked the powerful fort at Vaux. Intense fighting with shocking losses on both sides forced Major Sylvain Raynal to surrender the fortress. After a failed French counter-attack, General Philippe Nivelle had to withdraw (8 March–7 June 1916).

Vaux (2nd) ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)
A counter-attack by General Robert Nivelle retook the fortress of Douaumont (24 October) then turned against Vaux. After costly losses in an initial assault, the French bombarded the fortress for six days and forced its surrender. German commander Erich von Ludendorff began to withdraw his army and action around Louvement ended the battle of Verdun (25 October–3 November 1916).

Vaxholm ❙ 1612 ❙ War of Kalmar
Christian IV of Denmark became stalled on land after seizing Alvsborg (24 May), so took a large fleet against the fortress of Vaxholm, outside Stockholm, where a massive Danish bombardment damaged the fortress and the nearby Swedish fleet. But Vaxholm held out and, with winter approaching, Christian withdrew and made peace with King Gustavus Adolphus (August–4 September 1612).

Vedrosha ❙ 1500 ❙ 1st Muscovite-Lithuanian War
Determined to secure Lithuania, Duke Ivan III of Moscow sent Daniil Shchenya, whose army met Lithuanian commander Prince Konstantine Ostrozhsky on the banks of the Vedrosha, west of Dorogbuzh. An extraordinarily bloody action saw virtually the entire Lithuanian army killed or captured, with Ostrozhsky himself taken prisoner. Russia won again next year at Mstislavl (14 July 1500).

Vega ❙ 1319 ❙ Later Christian Reconquest of Spain

In an ill-considered expedition against Muslim Granada, Prince Peter and Prince John of Castile—Regents for the infant Alfonso XI—took an inadequate force close to Granada itself. After some initial success they suffered a terrible defeat to the west at Vega. Both Peter and John were killed and King Ismail of Granada was encouraged to take the offensive against the Christians.

Vegkop ❙ 1836 ❙ Boer-Matabele War

As Boers moved into Orange River Valley, a party under Andries Potgieter and Sarel Cilliers was attacked at Vegkop, southeast of modern Heilbron, by 5,000 of Mzilikazi's Matabele under Mkhalipi. Potgieter's brother Nicolaas died in a terrible fight before the Matabele were driven off after costly losses, taking the trekkers' stock. Potgieter was soon avenged at Mosega (19 October 1836).

Veglaer ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War

Having taken part in the Boer defeat at Italeni, Jacobus Potgieter and Hans de Lang led the courageous defence of Veglaer lager, close to the Tugela River near modern Estcourt, where they were attacked by a reported ten regiments of Zulus. The Zulus were driven off after heavy fighting (though they captured the trekkers' cattle). They were routed in December at Blood River (13 August 1838).

Veii ❙ 405–396 BC ❙ Roman-Etruscan Wars

Twenty years after taking Estruscan Fidenae, Rome began a prolonged campaign against their major rival city of Veii, just a few miles away up the Tiber. Following a siege claimed to have lasted ten years, Marcus Furius Camillus took Veii by storm, then looted and destroyed the city. After recovering from defeat by invading Gauls at the Allia, Rome gradually subsumed the remaining cities of Etruria.

Velasco ❙ 1832 ❙ Texan Wars of Independence

Attempting to reinforce Texan patriots at Anahuac, a citizen force of over 100 led by John Austin and Henry Brown was blocked by Mexican Colonel Domingo de Ugartechea at Fort Velasco, at the mouth of the Brazos River. In a fierce action, supported by the Texan schooner Brazoria, both sides lost about 20 casualties. Ugartechea then surrendered and was returned to Mexico (26 June 1832).

Velbuzhde ❙ 1330 ❙ Serbian Imperial Wars

Stephan Dechanski (Urosh III) expanded the power of Serbia and invaded Bulgaria against his former brother-in-law Tsar Mikhail Shishman, who was defeated and killed in battle at Velbuzhde (modern Kustendil), southwest of Sofia. The Serbian victory was largely due to the bravery of Serbian Crown Prince Stephan Dushan, who beat the Byzantines in 1355 at Adrianople (28 July 1330).

Velencze ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

See Pakozd

Velestino (1st) ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

Ottoman commander Edhem Pasha advanced into Thessaly through victory at Mati (23 April) to seize Larissa from the fleeing Greeks and sent Mahmud Bey southeast towards the strategic railway junction at Velestino, held by heavily outnumbered Greeks under Colonel Konstantinos Smolenskis. After a disastrous cavalry charge and over 1,200 casualties, the Turks fell back (30 April 1897).

Velestino (2nd) ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War

Advancing south into Thessaly, Ottoman commander Edhem Pasha was repulsed at Velestino and a week later sent Hakki Pasha on a second attack. In a two-day action, with heavy artillery fire from both sides, Turkish infantry assaults were driven off. With ammunition low and possible outflanking at Pharsalus, Greek Colonel Konstantinos Smolenskis withdrew east to Volo (5–6 May 1897).

Velez-Malaga ❙ 1704 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

See Malaga

Velikie Luki ❙ 1580 ❙ Livonian War

King Stephen Bathory of Poland resolved to cut off Moscow's campaign against Livonia and captured Polotsk. The following year he took a fresh expedition deeper into Russian territory, where he and commander Jan Zamoyski attacked Velikie Luki. In a brutal siege the fortified city was taken by storm and plundered. Bathory led his final expedition in 1581 against Pskov (4 September 1580).

Velikoknyazheskaya ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

As part of General Anton Denikin's great White offensive in the Kuban, General Pyotr Wrangel's South Caucasian Army crossed the Manych from Torgovaya and advanced on the Reds at Velikoknyazheskaya, east of Rostov. Heavy fighting saw Wrangel capture the town, along with 15,000 prisoners and 55 guns. He then continued northeast towards Tsaritsyn (17 May 1919).

Vella Gulf ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

A new attempt to reinforce the Japanese garrison on Kolombangara, west of New Georgia, saw Captain Kaju Sugiura surprised to the west in Vella Gulf by six destroyers under Commander Frederick Moosbrugger. Unlike previous actions at Kula Gulf and Kolombangara, three out of four Japanese destroyers were sunk with no American loss (6–7 August 1943).

Vella Lavella—Land ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

While Allied forces secured New Georgia, American Admiral Theodore Wilkinson bypassed neighbouring Kolombangara and landed further west on Vella Lavella. After initial success, some Japanese reinforcements arrived and fighting was renewed. New Zealanders under General Harold Barrowclough later took over and successfully cleared the island (15 August–5 October 1943).

Vella Lavella—Naval ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As the Japanese evacuated Vella Lavella, west of New Georgia, the screening force led by Admiral Matsuji Ijuin was intercepted by destroyers under Captain Frank Walker. A fierce night action saw the Americans outnumbered and outmanoeuvred with two destroyers sunk. Although one Japanese destroyer was also sunk the evacuation was successfully completed (6–7 October 1943).

Velletri ❙ 1744 ❙ War of the Austrian Succession

Austrian Prince Johann George Christian von Lobkowitz advancing south against the Spanish kingdom of Naples was met southeast of Rome at Velletri by a Spanish and Neapolitan army under Charles IV of Sicily and General Count Juan de Gages. The Austrians were checked in an indecisive action and they withdrew north to support Charles Emmanuel at Cuneo (11 August 1744).

Velletri ❙ 1849 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

Sent to intercept Neapolitan troops advancing to support the French siege of Republican Rome, Giuseppe Garibaldi and about 2,000 men met the Bourbon force at Velletri, southeast of Rome. As at nearby Palestrina earlier, the numerically superior Neapolitans were driven off, but Garibaldi did not follow up his victory and Rome itself was eventually force to capitulate (19 May 1849).

Vellinghausen ❙ 1761 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

Four months after victory at Gruneberg, a French army under Marshals Charles Soubise and Victor-Francois Broglie invaded Westphalia. At Vellinghausen, southeast of Hamm, Broglie was driven off by Prussian Marshal Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick. The following day Soubise and Broglie were defeated when they failed to co-operate and were driven back to the Rhine (15–16 July 1761).

Vellore ❙ 1677–1678 ❙ Bijapur-Maratha Wars

Maratha King Shivaji campaigned against Bijapur in southeast India, where he attacked the strong fortress of Vellore, then pursued Mughal commander Sher Khan Lodi to Tiruvadi, leaving Narahari Rudra and 7,000 men to maintain the siege. Garrison commander Abdullah Khan finally surrendered Vellore after losing 2,000 men through starvation and disease (23 May 1677–22 July 1678).

Vellore ❙ 1806 ❙ Vellore Mutiny

When Sir John Cradock in Madras ordered Indian troops to remove beards, turbans and other religious symbols, 1,500 sepoys attacked the British barracks at Vellore. Colonel Rollo Gillespie arrived from nearby Arcot with loyal troops and crushed the mutiny. About 130 British troops and 400 mutineers died and Cradock and Governor General Lord William Bentinck were recalled (10 July 1806).

Vellur ❙ 917 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

After the death of Aditya of Chola (907), his son Parantaka extended the empire, waging war against Rajasimha II of Pandya. Rajasimha sought aid from Kassapa V of Ceylon, who sent an army under his son the Sakkasenapati, but at Vellur (modern Vellore) Parantaka defeated the combined force. Parantaka later drove Rajasimha from Madura and claimed Ceylon, but was checked in 949 at Takkolam.

Venadito ❙ 1817 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

While Mexican Royalists besieged a rebel army at Los Remedios in Guanajuato, rebel leader Francisco Javier Mina campaigned in the field against Marshal Pascual Liñan's communication lines. But Mina was defeated and captured by Colonel Francisco de Orrantía at Venadito, near Silao. The Spanish adventurer was executed a few days later and his rising was effectively over (27 October 1817).

Vences ❙ 1847 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

See Rincón de Vences

Vengi ❙ 830 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

Govinda III of Rashtrakuta drove Vijayaditya II of Eastern Chalukya out of Vengi, between the Godaveri and Krishna Rivers. Vijayaditya later regained the city and began a revolt (817), which drove Govinda's teenage son Amoghavarsha off the throne. Aided by Karkka of Gujarat, Amoghavarsha regained control and at Vengi inflicted a crushing defeat. In 850 he won again at Vingavelli.

Venice ❙ 1310 ❙ Tiepolo's Rebellion

Opposed to the increasingly oligarchic Venetian Grand Council, Baiamonte Tiepolo and Marco Querini conspired to storm the palace of Doge Pietro Gradenigo and overthrow his government. When word leaked the plotters attacked prematurely and were crushed in the streets. Querini was executed, but Tiepolo managed to escape. A secret Council of Ten was created to protect the Republic (15 June 1310).

Venice ❙ 1849 ❙ Italian Wars of Independence

With Austria driven out of Milan, Daniele Manin declared a Republic in Venice (26 March 1848) which a year later held out against siege by Marshal Josef Radetzky despite Piedmontese defeat at Novara. Following a terrible bombardment and rampant cholera, the starving city was forced to capitulate. Manin was exiled and Austria regained control in Italy (20 July–22 August 1849).

Venta del Pozo ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington withdrew from a failed siege of Burgos, his rearguard under General Sir Stapleton Cotton, with Brigadier George Anson and General Eberhardt von Bock, was attacked at Venta del Pozo by French Generals Jean-Baptiste Curto and Joseph Boyer. The Allies suffered a sharp defeat and continued through Villadrigo towards Portugal (23 October 1812).

Venta de Urroz ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Buenza

Ventaquemada ❙ 1812 ❙ Colombian War of Independence

Dictator Antonio Nariño secured Cundinamarca then took 1,500 men to try and seize Tunja, held by Federalist Governor Juan Niño and Colonel Antonio Baraya. Just south of Tunja at Ventaquemada, Nariño was met and routed by Federalist Brigadier Joaquín Ricaurte. Nariño then withdrew south towards Bogotá, which he defended at Santa Fé (2 December 1813).

Venta y Media ❙ 1815 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Advancing from victory at Puesto del Márquez in northern Argentine (17 April), the vanguard of General José Rondeau's Patriot Army of the North under General Martin Rodríguez was attacked by General Joaquín de la Pezuela at Venta y Media, near Oruro, in western Bolivia. The Royalists inflicted a decisive defeat and Rondeau lost again a month later further north at Sipe-Sipe (21 October 1815).

Venusia ❙ 208 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

With the war in Italy stalling, Consuls Titus Crispinus and Marcus Marcellus marched to support the siege of Locri in central Italy and Hannibal ambushed the Romans near the camp at Venusia (modern Venosa), north of Potenza. In sharp fighting, Crispinus was mortally wounded and Marcellus was killed outright, depriving Rome of one of its most effective Generals.

Vera (1st) ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

A co-ordinated effort to relieve the Allied siege of San Sebastian on the Spanish north coast saw French Marshal Nicolas Soult cross the Bidassoa near San Marcial, while General Bertrand Clausel advanced further upriver. Defeated by Allied General William Inglis, Clausel fought his way back across the river at Vera. San Sebastian town fell by storm the same day (31 August 1813).

Vera (2nd) ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

While Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington forced his way across the estuary of the Bidassoa in northeastern Spain, other Allied forces advanced the same day further upstream towards the key bridge at Vera. Spanish General Francisco Longa and British General Sir James Kempt overwhelmed the defence of General Nicolas-Francois Conroux, who retreated north (7 October 1813).

Veracruz ❙ 1832 ❙ Mexican Civil Wars

General Antonio de Santa Anna, opposing the government of President Anatasio Bustamente, was defeated at Tolomé and fell back to nearby Veracruz, which he held with 2,500 men and over 100 guns against Federal General José Maria Calderón. After losing perhaps 1,000 men, mainly to disease, Calderón retired to Jalapa. In September Bustamente won at Gallinero (12 April–13 May 1832).

Veracruz ❙ 1838 ❙ Pastry War

See San Juan de Ulúa

Veracruz ❙ 1847 ❙ American-Mexican War

In a bold amphibious assault on Mexico's east coast, American General Winfield Scott and Commodore David Conner landed unopposed near Veracruz. After a five-day land and naval bombardment, General Juan Morales surrendered the city and the great fortress of San Juan de Ulúa. Scott then began his epic advance inland through Cerro Gordo to Mexico City (9–27 March 1847).

Veracruz ❙ 1859 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Conservative President Miguel Miramón led a fresh offensive against the Liberal forces of Benito Juarez to recapture Guanajuato then marched to besiege the Juarista capital at Veracruz. With his army driven off by yellow fever, Miramón had to return to Mexico City, where the Conservative cause was soon boosted by a great victory over the Liberals at Tacubaya (1–29 March 1859).

Veracruz ❙ 1860 ❙ Mexican War of the Reform

Resuming the offensive in eastern Mexico, Conservative President Miguel Miramón took a force against the Liberal city of Veracruz, held for Benito Juarez by General Ramon Iglesias. While Veracruz was heavily bombarded, it suffered little damage and Miramón was forced to withdraw to Mexico City. He was more successful a few weeks later at Guadalajara (5–21 March 1860).

Veracruz Incident ❙ 1914 ❙ Mexican Revolution

A few days after Mexican forces seized American sailors for allegedly going ashore at Tampico without permission, American Marines under Colonel John Lejeune seized Veracruz on reports that the German ship Ypiranga was landing arms for President Victoriano Huerta. About 200 Mexicans died attempting to resist the Marines and Huerta soon fled into exile (21 April 1914).

Verbitza ❙ 811 ❙ Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars

Emperor Nicephorus I launched a large-scale offensive against the Bulgar Khan Krum and burned the Bulgar capital Pliska (modern Pliskov) before being ambushed at nearby Verbitza. Trapped by wooden pallisades erected at each end of the steep pass, the Byzantine army was annihilated, with Nicephorus himself killed. Krum won again two years later at Versinikia (26 July 811).

Vercellae ❙ 101 BC ❙ Rome's Gallic Wars

After Cimbri from Jutland defeated Quintus Lutatius Catulus in Italy on the Adige, he was reinforced by Gaius Marius, fresh from victory in Gaul at Aquae Sextiae. East of Turin at Vercellae, the invaders were crushed and King Boiorix was killed. With thousands massacred and women and children enslaved, the Cimbri were annihilated, ending the Germanic threat to Italy (30 July 101 BC).

Vercelli ❙ 218 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

See Ticinus

Verdun ❙ 1792 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As war started, Prussians and Austrians under Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand Duke of Brunswick stormed the border to besiege then bombard Verdun. Colonel Nicolas Beaurepaire vehemently opposed surrender, but under suspicious circumstances was reported to have shot himself. Verdun capitulated, though was retaken (14 October) after Brunswick's defeat at Valmy (29 August–2 September 1792).

Verdun ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

German forces moving west from Metz confronted the stategic fortress at Verdun, garrisoned by about 7,000 men under Baron Guerin de Waldersbach. Heavy attacks by field artillery were repulsed (24 August & 8 September) before General Wilhelm von Gayl brought up siege guns for a full investment from 13 October. Verdun was soon forced to capitulate (24 August–7 November 1870).

Verdun ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

In the reputed bloodiest battle then known, German forces attacked Verdun, seizing and then losing Le Mort-Homme and Fleury and the fortresses of Douaumont, Vaux and Souville. This ultimate battle of attrition cost 542,000 French and 434,000 German casualties for no strategic gain before the Germans eventually fell back to their starting line (21 February–18 December 1916).

Verdun ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

New commander Henri Petain rebuilt after disaster at the Aisne (April–May) and launched a relieving campaign north from Verdun to reaffirm the French offensive and support the British at Ypres. Advancing east and west of the Meuse, the French secured extensive ground and over 10,000 prisoners, recovering most of the key defensive positions lost in early 1916 (20–28 August 1917).

Vergt ❙ 1562 ❙ 1st French War of Religion

Following the massacre of Protestants at Vassy (1 March), Huguenots led by Louis I de Bourbon Prince of Condé seized many cities before a setback at Vergt, south of Perigueux, where they were badly defeated by the Gascon Marshal Blaise de Monluc on behalf of Catholic commander Francis Duke of Guise. The battle largely ended Protestant Huguenot power in the Guyenne (9 October 1562).

Vermillion Bayou ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Lower Seaboard)

Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks continued his offensive in western Louisiana through victory at Fort Bisland and Irish Bend, ordering General Cuvier Grover northwest in pursuit of General Richard Taylor at Vermillion Bayou, near Vermillionville. Despite initial success, the Confederates were driven off by Union artillery and fell back north towards Opelousas (17 April 1863).

Verneuil ❙ 1424 ❙ Hundred Years War

A year after defeat at Cravant, Dauphin Charles VII of France sent a Franco-Scottish army into English Normandy, where it was routed at Verneuil, east of Paris, by John Duke of Bedford's outnumbered English longbowmen. Archibald Earl of Douglas and John Stewart Earl of Buchan (Constable of France) were killed, while Duke Jean of Alencon was captured (17 August 1424).

Verona ❙ 249 ❙ Roman Military Civil Wars

When Gaius Trajanus Decius successfully put down a rebellion on the Danube, Roman Emperor Philip I appointed his General to take command in the area, where the troops promptly elected him Emperor. Philip gathered his army to punish the usurper but was defeated and killed near Verona in northern Italy. Decius was formally recognised as Emperor.

Verona ❙ 312 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

Emperor Constantine advanced through northern Italy against his rival Emperor Maxentius to win near Turin then defeat the powerful General Pompeianus Ruricius at Brescia and drive him back to siege in Verona. Ruricius broke out to bring reinforcements but was killed when his relief force was destroyed. Verona surrendered and Constantine marched to seize Rome at the Milvian Bridge.

Verona ❙ 403 ❙ Goth Invasion of the Roman Empire

The Goth leader Alaric withdrew from a bloody battle at Pollentia, but the following year renewed his offensive in Italy and attempted to besiege Verona. Attacked nearby by the Roman-Vandal General Flavius Stilicho, Alaric again suffered a decisive defeat yet withdrew east in good order. He concluded a treaty with Stilicho and was later appointed to hold Illyricum for Emperor Honorius.

Verona ❙ 489 ❙ Goth Invasion of Italy

Driven back from defeat on the Sontius (Isonzo) River in northern Italy (28 August), Odoacer, the first Germanic ruler of Italy, prepared to defend Verona against the invasion of Theodoric the Ostrogoth. Fighting near Verona, Odoacer suffered another defeat at the hands of the Ostrogoths and was forced back to his capital at Ravenna (30 September 489).

Verona ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

With France defeated in Germany at Ostrach and Stockach, Generals Barthélemy Schérer and Jean Victor Moreau attempted a broad offensive against Austrian General Paul Kray in Italy, crossing the Adige north of Verona at Pastrengo, while General Joseph Montrichard marched south to Legnano. Their dispersed forces were driven back at heavy cost and lost again at Magnano (26 March 1799).

Versinikia ❙ 813 ❙ Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars

After terrible Byzantine defeat at Verbitza (811), new Emperor Michael marched west to meet a fresh offensive by the Bulgar Khan Krum. A confused battle at Versinikia, northwest of Adrianople, saw Byzantine General Leo the Armenian desert the field and Krum won a bloody victory to take Adrianople. Leo was acclaimed Emperor and soon made peace with Krum's son Omortag (22 June 813).

Vertieres ❙ 1803 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Santo Domingo Rising)

Black revolutionary Jean Jacques Dessalines seized Port-au-Prince (17 October) then turned north against the remaining French under General Donatien Rochambeau at Cap Francais (modern Cap Haitien). An heroic assault by rebel leader Francois Capois on nearby Fort Vertieres was repulsed, but Rochambeau surrendered Cap Francais next day and independent Haiti was soon declared (18 November 1803).

Verulamium ❙ 54 BC ❙ Roman Invasion of Britain

See Wheathampstead

Verulamium ❙ 61 ❙ Roman Conquest of Britain

See Boudicca

Veseris ❙ 339 BC ❙ Latin War

See Suessa

Vesontio ❙ 1674 ❙ 3rd Dutch War

See Besançon

Vesuvius ❙ 339 BC ❙ Latin War

See Suessa

Veszprem ❙ 1593 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Grand Vizier Sinan Pasha invaded Hungary to avenge the Ottoman defeat at Sissek (20 June), taking a large force which laid siege to the Imperial fortress of Veszprem, southwest of Buda. Although the town fell after just three days, the approach of winter ended Sinan's campaign and his elite Janissary infantry insisted on returning to Belgrade (10–13 October 1593).

Veurne ❙ 1297 ❙ Franco-Flemish Wars

See Furnes

Vézeronce ❙ 524 ❙ Burgundian-Frankish War

Renewing the Frankish war against Burgundy, suspended after Avignon (500), Clodomir of Orleans (son of Clovis) captured and later murdered King Sigismund, then invaded with his half-brother Theodoric. Sigismund's brother Godomar was defeated in battle near Vienne at Vézeronce but Clodomir was killed in the pursuit. Burgundy was finally extinguished in 532 at Autun (25 June 524).

Viana ❙ 1067 ❙ War of the Three Sanchos

While a war of succession was under way in Castile, King Sancho II of Castile attacked his cousin King Sancho IV of Navarre, who turned for aid to another cousin, King Sancho I of Aragon. At Viana, in Navarre north of Logroño, the Allies routed the Castilian army and the war ended with nothing achieved. Next year Sancho II defeated his brother Alfonso VI of Leon at Lantada (September 1067).

Viasma ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Vyazma

Vibo ❙ 48 BC ❙ Wars of the First Triumvirate

Pompeian Admiral Gaius Cassius Longinus destroyed Julius Caesar's ships at Messana and months later attacked another Caesarian fleet under Sulpicius Rufus off Vibo (modern Vibo Valentia), on the "toe" of Italy. This time, the Pompeians were driven off without heavy loss to either side. Cassius withdrew his fleet after news arrived of Caesar's great victory on 9 August at Pharsalus.

Viborg ❙ 1157 ❙ Danish War of Succession

See Grathe Heath

Viborg ❙ 1710 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

See Vyborg

Viborg ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

See Vyborg

Vic-de-Bigorre ❙ 1814 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

With the Allied army delayed by flooded rivers from pursuing the French after their defeat north of the Pyrenees at Aire (2 March), the right wing under General Sir Thomas Picton advanced against General Jean Baptiste d'Erlon at Vic-de-Bigorre, ten miles north of Tarbes on the Upper Adour. The French were driven out and the Allies advanced next day to capture Tarbes (19 March 1814).

Vicenza ❙ 1513 ❙ War of the Holy League

Raymond of Cardona, Spanish Viceroy of Naples, recovered from defeat at Ravenna (April 1512) to invade Venetia and, west of Venice near Vicenza, he met the Venetian army of Bartolomeo d'Alviano. While Cardona's cavalry had heavy losses, his infantry under Fernando d'Avalos Marquis of Pescara won a decisive victory, repeated in 1524–1525 at Rebecco, Sesia and Pavia (7 October 1513).

Vicenza ❙ 1848 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

Advancing from victory at Curtatone (29 May), Austrian Marshal Josef Radetzky approached the Lombardy city of Vicenza, where King Charles Albert of Sardinia had positioned the Italian Allies behind powerful defences. However, Vicenza came under heavy fire when a jaeger battalion captured the nearby fortress of Monte Berico and General Giacomo Durando capitulated (11 June 1848).

Vich ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Just weeks after French forces took Gerona in Catalonia, French General Joseph Souham marched along the Ter Valley against surrounding Spanish insurgents. North of Barcelona at Vich, Souham was surprised by Spanish General Henry O'Donnell, who caused heavy casualties—including Souham who was badly wounded. However, O'Donnell was eventually driven off (20 February 1810).

Vicksburg ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Union commander Ulysses S. Grant closed in on Vicksburg, Mississippi, winning to the east at Jackson and Champion Hill before launching his assault on the Confederate river stronghold. After prolonged siege and bombardment, Confederate General John C Pemberton surrendered almost 30,000 men. The fall of Port Hudson a few days later secured the Mississippi (18 May–4 July 1863).

Victoria de la Tunas ❙ 1897 ❙ 2nd Cuban War of Independence

Continuing the war in eastern Cuba following rebel disaster at Punta Brava, Calixto Garcia took almost 1,000 insurgents against Victoria de la Tunas, held by Spanish Colonel José Civera. After seizing the town, Garcia bombarded then captured the forts, along with about 400 prisoners. Bayamo and Holguin also fell and America later intervened to seize the country (28–30 August 1897).

Vid ❙ 447 ❙ Hun Invasion of the Roman Empire

See Utus

Vidin ❙ 1366 ❙ Ottoman Conquest of the Balkans

Louis I of Hungary recovered from defeat by the Ottomans at the Maritza (1363) to wage war on Christian heretics led by Prince Stratsimir of Western Bulgaria. A sharp campaign on the Danube saw Louis capture Vidin and imprison Stratsimir, then forcibly convert his people to orthodoxy. With Ottoman aid Stratsimir threw the invaders out in 1369, but Louis recaptured Vidin a year later.

Vienna ❙ 1485 ❙ Hungarian National Wars

Campaigning against Emperor Frederick III, Matthias I Corvinus of Hungary besieged and captured Vienna, making it his Royal seat of government. His so-called Black Army then helped him to secure Carinthia and Styria. However, when Matthias died in Vienna five years later, the city reverted to the empire and his weak successor Ladislas VI saw Hungary's power rapidly fade.

Vienna ❙ 1529 ❙ Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Sultan Suleiman I led a fresh invasion across the Danube to capture Buda (8 September) before besieging Vienna, held by Count Philip of Austria with Count Nicolas of Salm and Marshal Wilhelm von Roggendorf. After a failed attack by land and from the river—and with winter approaching—Suleiman executed his prisoners and withdrew (22 September–15 October 1529).

Vienna ❙ 1683 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

As Grand Vizier Kara Mustafa advanced up the Danube the Emperor fled Vienna, leaving Governor Count Rudiger von Starhemberg to hold the city against siege. After two months, John III Sobieski of Poland and Charles V of Lorraine arrived and destroyed the besieging army in mountains to the south at Kahlenberg. The Turks fled and the West was saved (13 July–12 September 1683).

Vienna ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

In relentless pursuit after victory on the Danube east of Linz at Ebelsberg (3 May), Napoleon Bonaparte drove the defeated Austrians under Baron Johann Hiller to Vienna, where Archduke Maximilian refused to surrender. The Austrian capital fell after two days of intermittent bombardment, but not before most of Hiller's troops had withdrawn east over the Danube (10–13 May 1809).

Vienna ❙ 1848 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

Inspired by Revolutionary fervour, workers in Vienna rose against the empire and were besieged by Habsburg Field Marshal Alfred Windischgratz, fresh from suppressing rebellion in Prague. Vienna was heavily shelled and, after a Hungarian relief army was repulsed at Schwechat, further bombardment and street fighting forced the city's surrender (26 October–2 November 1848).

Vienna ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Following a failed German offensive at Lake Balaton in Hungary, the survivors withdrew towards Vienna and Soviet Marshal Rodion Malinovksy entered Austria from the southeast. Despite Panzer reinforcements, Vienna fell after heavy fighting and German Army Group South was isolated east of the city. General Lothar Rendulic finally surrendered his force on 8 May (6–13 April 1945).

Vienne ❙ 411 ❙ Later Roman Wars of Succession

When usurper Flavius Claudius Constantinus claimed recognition as joint Roman Emperor in Gaul, his son Constans was besieged on the Rhone south of Lyons at Vienne by their former General Gerontius, who had now deserted to the cause of Emperor Honorius. After much of his army deserted to Gerontius, Constans was defeated and put to death. His father was defeated and executed at Arles.

Vienne ❙ 500 ❙ Burgundian-Frankish War

Gundobald of Burgundy was defeated at Dijon by Clovis, King of the Franks, then turned on his own brother, Godegisil, who had treacherously supported the invaders. Clovis made no attempt to assist his former ally when Gundobald besieged and defeated Godegisil at Vienne, on the Rhone south of Lyons. Gundobald executed his brother and took control of all Burgundy.

Vientiane ❙ 1574 ❙ Burmese-Laotian Wars

With the Laotian Kingdom of Lan Xang disorganised after the death of King Sethathirat, King Bayinnaung of Burma invaded against Regent Saesurin (Sene Soulinthara). Following capture of the capital Vientiane (Vien Chan), Burma ruled Laos through vassal Kings (including Saesurin). The country later lapsed into anarchy until Laotian control was restored in 1637 by the great Souligna Vongsa.

Vientiane ❙ 1827 ❙ Siamese-Laotian Wars
See Nong Bua Lamphu

Vientiane ❙ 1960 ❙ Laotian Civil War
When army Captain Kong Le staged a coup (9 August) and neutralist Prime Minister Prince Souvanna Phouma tried to make peace with the Communist Pathet Lao, Rightist General Phoumi Nosavan advanced on Vientiane, supported by Colonel Kouprasith Abhay inside the city. Three days of fighting secured the capital and Kong Le withdrew north into the Plain of Jars (13–16 December 1960).

Viervoet ❙ 1851 ❙ 8th Cape Frontier War
British Resident Major Henry Warden tried to enforce order in the Orange River Sovereignty (later Orange Free State) and took a small force, supported by African allies, against the Basotho Chief Moshoeshoe. At Viervoet, near Modderspoort, Warden suffered a sharp defeat at the hands of the Chief's sons. However, Moshoeshoe was beaten next year further east at Berea Mountain (30 June 1851).

Vigan ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War
Attempting to cut off President Emilio Aguinaldo's retreat through western Luzon, American Colonel James Parker landed at Vigan, where he was attacked a week later by 400 men under General Manuel Tiñio. Heavily outnumbered, Parker repulsed the night assault. Next day General Samuel B. M. Young advanced to drive Tiñio out of Tagudin, northwest of Tirad Pass (3–4 September 1899).

Vigirima ❙ 1813 ❙ Venezuelan War of Independence
Spanish commander Juan Domingo Monteverde followed up Royalist success over Republicans near Barquisimeto in western Venezuela (10 November) by sending Colonel José Miguel Salomón to threaten Barcelona. Patriot leader Simón Bolívar marched out to meet the advancing Royalists, securing victory at Vigirima. He won even more decisively next week at Araure (25 November 1813).

Vigla ❙ 1897 ❙ 1st Greco-Turkish War
After Turkey's invasion of Thessaly was checked in the east at Nezeros, Crown Prince Constantine of Greece received reinforcements at Larissa and advanced on Edhem Pasha at Vigla, near the Maluna Pass. The Greek infantry secured outer Turkish entrenchments following heavy artillery bombardment, but there was no final assault and the forces met again near Mati (20 April 1897).

Vigo ❙ 1719 ❙ War of the Quadruple Alliance
In response to Spain's attack on Britain at Glenshiel, British Admiral James Mighella landed 4,000 men under Sir Richard Temple Viscount Cobham at Vigo in Galicia. After bombardment of Fort San Sebastian the citadel surrendered and nearby Pontevedra was also taken. The expedition withdrew with seven prizes and massive quantities of guns and ammunition (29 September–10 October 1719).

Vigo Bay ❙ 1702 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession
Returning from failure at Cadiz (15 September), Admiral Sir George Rooke attacked the Spanish treasure fleet, unloading at Vigo Bay under Francois de Rousselet Marquis de Chateaurenault. While Dutch troops led by James Butler Duke of Ormonde seized the forts, Admiral Thomas Hopsonn stormed the port, where every Franco-Spanish ship was taken or destroyed (12 October 1702).

Viipuri ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence
See Vyborg

Vijaya ❙ 1471 ❙ Vietnamese-Cham War
With China expelled from northern Vietnam at Dong-do (1427), the greatest Emperor of Vietnam's Le Dynasty, Le Thanh Tong, resolved to subjugate the neighbouring state of Champa, along the coast of southern Vietnam.

The capital Vijaya (near modern Quy Nhon) was seized by a massive assault and the population was massacred, effectively ending Champa as an independent kingdom.

Vijayanagar ❙ 1406 ❙ Vijayanagar-Bahmani Wars

Just eight years after King Harihara II of Vijayanagar was defeated at the Krishna, his son King Deva Raya renewed war against the Bahmanids, whose Sultan Firuz Shah immediately attacked the city of Vijayanagar. Despite being repulsed and wounded, Firuz ravaged the countryside and Deva Raya had to accept a humiliating peace, yielding the strategic fortress of Bankapur.

Vilafranca del Penedès ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Following his attack on French troops at Vich, Spanish General Henry O'Donnell maintained pressure on French communication lines in Barcelona by sending General Juan Caro against Vilafranca del Penedès, west of Barcelona. A strong French infantry unit was virtually destroyed, with the survivors captured. Nearby Manresa fell a week later (30 March 1810).

Vilande ❙ 731 ❙ Indian Dynastic Wars

Amid ongoing war between the rival kingdoms of southern India, Crown Prince Vikramaditya of Chalukya joined with King Sripurusha of Ganga against Pallava. In battle at Vilande, Paramesvaravarman II was defeated and his capital Kanchi was occupied. A few years later, Vikramaditya invaded again (740) and defeated the new King Nandivarman to once more seize Kanchi.

Vilasa ❙ 1583 ❙ Turko-Persian Wars

Ottoman Sultan Murad III faced a renewed effort by Persia's Safavids to recover the Caucasus and despatched a massive army under Osman Pasha, which crushed the Crimean rebels and their Persian supporters on the banks of the Samur, near Vilasa. The engagement—known as the Battle of the Torches because it continued day and night—secured Ottoman rule in the Caucasus (7–11 May 1583).

Vila Velha ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

With Spain threatening Portugal, Britain sent reinforcements under General John Burgoyne, who took the Spanish base at Valencia, Alcántara (27 August) then marched against forces preparing to cross the Tagus into Alentejo. In a night attack on the entrenched Spanish cavalry camp at Vila Velha de Rodao, Burgoyne inflicted heavy casualties, effectively ending the campaign (5 October 1762).

Vilcapugio ❙ 1813 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

Patriot General Manuel Belgrano won brilliant victories over the Spanish at Tucumán and Salta, then marched north into modern Bolivia, where he met a revitalised Royalist army under General Joaquín de la Pezuela at Vilcapugio, near Potosi. Belgrano was disastrously defeated in a bloody action, losing most of his guns and equipment, and was soon beaten again at Ayohuma (1 October 1813).

Viljandi ❙ 1560 ❙ Livonian War

See Fellin

Villach ❙ 1492 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars

After Ottoman Sultan Bayazid II was repulsed from an attempt to surprise Belgrade, some of his forces raided into Croatia and Carinthia in southern Austria, where they were attacked near Villach, west of Klagenfurt, by a large Christian army. The Turks suffered a decisive defeat, with a reported 10,000 killed and 7,000 captured, while 15,000 Christian prisoners were said to have been saved.

Villafranca de Oria ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As French General Maximilien Foy withdrew towards Tolosa after defeat at Vitoria (21 June), his rearguard under General Antoine-Louis Maucune delayed the Allies near Villafranca de Oria. Attacked by Spanish advance units under Colonel Francisco Longa, Maucune lost about 200 men before breaking off the engagement and withdrawing northeast to Tolosa (24 June 1813).

Villafranca de Oria ❙ 1835 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Carlist commander Tomás Zumalacárregui continued his offensive against Spanish Regent Maria Cristina in Navarre, where he besieged Villafranca de Oria, southwest of Tolosa. After Liberal aid was driven off at Larrainzar and Descarga, Villafranca fell, yielding a massive prize of arms. The Carlists quickly took Durango, Tolosa and Vergara and advanced on Bilbao (May–3 June 1835).

Villagarcia ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Faced by a fresh Spanish offensive in Andalusia, French Marshal Nicolas Soult sent General Jean-Baptiste Girard towards the passes of the Morena to meet General Pedro La Romana. Severely underestimating the forces against him, La Romana accepted battle at Villagarcia de la Torre, near Llerena. He was driven back with heavy losses, withdrawing towards Zafra (11 August 1810).

Villagarcia ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When the Allies captured Badajoz, British cavalry led by General Sir Stapleton Cotton pursued the French Army corps of General Jean Baptiste Drouet Count D'Erlon. Southeast of Badajoz at Villagarcia, Cotton caught up with the French rearguard under General Henri-Dominique Lallemand, who took a defensive position but lost badly and was driven back on Llerena (11 April 1812).

Village Creek ❙ 1841 ❙ Cherokee Indian Wars

General Edward H. Tarrant retaliated against Indian raids on settlements in the new Republic of Texas, leading about 70 volunteers against Cherokee, Caddo and other tribes in the Village Creek settlements close to modern Fort Worth. Although Texan casualties were light for a reported 12 Indians killed, the outnumbered militia were driven off and withdrew (24 May 1841).

Villa Glori ❙ 1867 ❙ Garibaldi's Second March on Rome

Taking advantage of war between Italy and Austria, Giuseppe Garibaldi renewed his support for insurgency in Rome and sent 70 men up the Tiber with arms. At Villa Glori, Enrico Cairoli was attacked and killed by French Zouaves. Most of his supporters were also killed or captured and his brother Giovanni died of wounds. Garibaldi was defeated a week later at Mentana (27 October 1867).

Villalar ❙ 1521 ❙ Comuneros Uprising

On campaign against the Comuneros popular rising in Castile, the Royalist army of Charles I of Spain destroyed the rebels at Villalar, near Toro on the Duoro River. Comuneros leaders Juan de Padilla and Juan Bravo were executed while Antonio de Acuna, rebel Bishop of Zamora, fled. Toledo held out briefly under Padilla's widow before the entire rising collapsed (23 April 1521).

Villa Muriel ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

As Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington withdrew from his failed siege of Burgos, his rearguard was defeated at Venta del Pozo then again two days later on the Carrion at Villa Muriel, by French Generals Antoine-Louis Maucune and Maximilien Foy. Wellington hastened back and retook Villa Muriel, but the position was turned and he resumed his withdrawal (25 October 1812).

Villar de Puerco ❙ 1810 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Barquilla

Villarreal de Alava ❙ 1936 ❙ Spanish Civil War

When Basque forces launched an attempt to retake the northern Spanish city of Vitoria, they came under massive Nationalist attack just to the north at Villarreal de Alava. Heavy fighting saw the only major Basque offensive of the war driven off with severe losses. Six months later the Nationalists attacked and seized the Basque capital at Bilbao (30 November–5 December 1936).

Villa Velha ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)
See Vila Velha

Villaviciosa ❙ 1665 ❙ Spanish-Portuguese Wars
See Montes Claros

Villaviciosa ❙ 1710 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession
After an Anglo-Austrian army captured Madrid, they were driven out by French General Louis Duke de Vendôme. The day after he defeated the Allied rearguard at Brihuega, Vendôme attacked the main force under Guido von Starhemberg at Villaviciosa, northeast of Guadalajara. The Austrians inflicted heavy French losses but had to continue their withdrawal (10 December 1710).

Villazón ❙ 1934 ❙ Chaco War
Following Bolivia's victory over Paraguay in the Chaco Boreal at Cañada-Strongest (24 May), General Enrique Peñaranda sent Colonel David Toro to encircle the Paraguayans near Villazón. Despite huge numerical superiority, Toro's partial victory produced only 400 prisoners and 50 trucks captured. Most of the Paraguayans escaped south towards Cañada el Carmen (7–11 November 1934).

Villeré's Plantation ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812
British Colonel William Thornton advanced up the Mississippi from Lake Borgne and captured the plantation of Jacques Villeré, where he was attacked by American Generals Andrew Jackson and John Coffee, supported by two ships. Reinforced by General John Keane, the British drove off the attack, losing almost 300 casualties. Jackson withdrew to New Orleans (23 December 1814).

Villers-Bretonneaux ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
See Amiens

Villers-en-Cauchies ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
During a French attempt to relieve Landrécies, besieged by Frederick Augustus Duke of York, a small British-Austrian cavalry unit under Major-General Karl Ott inflicted costly losses on a much larger force of French infantry and artillery east of Cambrai at Villers-en-Cauchies. Another cavalry action at Beaumont helped drive off the relief army and led to the fall of Landrécies (24 April 1794).

Villersexel ❙ 1871 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
French commander Charles-Denis Bourbaki was advancing up the Ognon Valley to relieve besieged Belfort, when he was intercepted to the southwest at the small town of Villersexel by German forces under General Karl August von Werder. The Germans withdrew after fierce fighting, but a week later Bourbaki was routed at Héricourt and Belfort remained under siege (9 January 1871).

Villiers ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War
The so-called Great Sortie from besieged Paris saw General Auguste Alexandre Ducrot lead a large force southeast across the Marne towards the Württemburg division at Villiers and Champigny. After costly losses on both sides, a counter-attack by Prince Albert of Saxony repulsed the French. Similar sorties were attempted at Le Bourget and Mont Valerian (29 November–3 December 1870).

Villmanstrand ❙ 1741 ❙ 1st Russo-Swedish War
See Willmanstrand

Villmergen ❙ 1656 ❙ 1st Villmergen War
During resumed religious warfare in Switzerland, the Protestant forces of Berne under Sigismund von Erlach were ambushed at Villmergen, west of Zurich, by an army from Lucerne and other Catholic Cantons under Christopher Pfyffer. The men from Zurich and Berne were heavily defeated—with almost 1,000 dead—and a troubled peace was established (24 January 1656).

Villmergen ❙ 1712 ❙ 2nd Villmergen War

Almost 60 years after Catholic victory west of Zurich at Villmergen, religious warfare in Switzerland resumed and Ackermann of Unterwalden took 12,000 men against Protestant Berne and Zurich. Once again, the decisive battle was fought near Villmergen. Ackermann was defeated, with over 2,000 killed, and the Catholic Cantons were forced to yield territory (25 July 1712).

Vilmanstrand ❙ 1741 ❙ 1st Russo-Swedish War

See Willmanstrand

Vilna ❙ 1658 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

See Werki

Vilna ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

As Poland rose in a fresh insurrection against Russia, the Lithuanian city of Vilna turned against its Russian occupiers. The garrison was successfully driven out in a powerful midnight attack by troops under Colonel Jakob Jasinski, supported by a large number of civilians. But by 12 August the Russians had recaptured the Lithuanian capital (22 April 1794).

Vilna ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

On the northern flank of Germany's Triple Offensive, General Hermann von Eichhorn advanced through Kovno and Grodno against General Aleksei Evert around the key city of Vilna. A frontal assault cost Eichhorn 50,000 men over two weeks, before he circled to take Vilna in the flank. However, the offensive soon ground to a halt and ended a week later (8–18 September 1915).

Vilna (1st) ❙ 1919 ❙ Lithuanian War of Independence

Revolutionary Russia's capitulation to Germany at Brest-Litovsk ceded Lithuania. But shortly after Germany's defeat, the Bolsheviks determined to regain control. Russian forces seized Vilna and the Lithuanian government evacuated to Kaunas. A few months afterwards, Poland drove the Red Army out of Vilna, helping trigger the Russo-Polish War (5 January 1919).

Vilna (2nd) ❙ 1919 ❙ Russo-Polish War

Early in Poland's war against Russia in the eastern Marchland, new Polish commander Josef Pilsudski advanced on Vilna, supported by General Stanislaw Szeptycki. Heavy fighting saw the Soviet troops defeated and driven out. Following a failed Russian counter-attack, the front largely stabilised until a fresh Polish offensive to the southeast around Minsk (16–19 April 1919).

Vilna ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

As the war ended, Polish commander Josef Pilsudski was determined to regain Vilna against international opinion and he condoned a fictional "mutiny" by General Lucjan Zeligowski, who led his Lithuanian-Byelorussian Division on a surprise raid. After a skirmish at Jaszuny, Zeligowski took Vilna by coup, creating an "independent state" until the city voted to join Poland (9 October 1920).

Vilna ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With the fall of Minsk, Soviet Generals Ivan Bagramyan and Ivan Chernyakovsky converged on Vilna, where the new commander of Army Group Centre, Marshal Walther Model, attempted large-scale counter-attacks. However, the Lithuanian capital fell, with about 15,000 Germans killed. The Russians then drove west to take Kaunus and north through Dvinsk towards Riga (8–13 July 1944).

Vilnius ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Vilna

Vilppula ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

Russian Colonel Mikhail Svetchnikov launched an offensive in southwest Finland, where he attacked White forces under Colonel Martin Wetzer around Vilppula. With both sides reinforced during the action, Svetchnikov was eventually checked further to the west near Ruovesi and the Vilppula front was established. A week later the Russians attacked again through Ruovesi (2–13 February 1918).

Viluma ❙ 1815 ❙ Argentine War of Independence

See Sipe-Sipe

Vimeiro ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

When British troops landed in Portugal, they repulsed a French delaying action at Rolica. Four days later General Sir Arthur Wellesley, with Portuguese support, smashed an attack by General Androche Junot north of Lisbon at Vimeiro. However, British commander Sir Harry Burrard forbade pursuit and amazingly agreed to evacuate the defeated French in British ships (21 August 1808).

Viminacium ❙ 601 ❙ Byzantine-Balkan Wars

After several campaigns to stabilise the Danube frontier, Emperor Maurice sent General Priscus to confront the Avars under Khan Baian in their homeland, north of the Danube. A series of engagements in the Tisza Valley saw Priscus defeat the Avars, including a major victory at Viminacium (modern Kostalac, Serbia). The death of Maurice in a coup (602) helped secure a temporary peace.

Vimy (1st) ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Artois (1st)

Vimy (2nd) ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Artois (2nd)

Vimy ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Arras

Vinaroz ❙ 1938 ❙ Spanish Civil War

Continuing the offensive on the Ebro, which had begun at Belchite, Nationalist forces seized Lerida (3 April) and reached the coast at Vinaroz, between Barcelona and Valencia. The strategic town was taken by General Camilo Alonso Vega, effectively dividing Republican Catalonia in two. Vega then turned south to join the advance towards Castellón de la Plana (15 April 1938).

Vincennes ❙ 1779 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As American frontiersman George Rogers Clark campaigned in Illinois, British Governor Henry Hamilton marched southwest from Detroit and reoccupied Vincennes, on the Wabash in Indiana (17 December 1778), where he was later besieged by Clark. With failing support from his French and Indian garrison, Hamilton surrendered and Clark retained his conquests (25 February 1779).

Vincy ❙ 717 ❙ Rise of Charles Martel

After defeating the Neustrians at Ambleve (716), Charles Martel of Austrasia consolidated his authority over the Kingdom of the Franks by beating the Neustrians again at Vincy, near Cambrai, where King Childeric of Neustria was routed. Charles lacked sufficient forces to seize Paris and withdrew to Cologne. Two years later he secured northern France with victory at Soissons (21 March 717).

Vinegar Hill, Idaho ❙ 1879 ❙ Sheepeater War

Campaigning in the Salmon River Mountains of Idaho against Bannock and Shoshoni (known as Sheepeaters), Lieutenant Henry Catley was ambushed at Vinegar Hill, near the middle Fork of the Salmon. Catley's patrol disgracefully abandoned their baggage and fled. But after a brief campaign in rough country, General Oliver Howard forced the Sheepeaters to surrender (29 July 1879).

Vinegar Hill, Ireland ❙ 1798 ❙ Irish Rebellion

The final major battle of the Irish Rebellion saw a large Loyalist force under General Sir Gerard Lake attack the rebel army of Father John Murphy on Vinegar Hill, near Enniscorthy, 14 miles north of Wexford. With no protection against heavy shellfire, the rebels were destroyed, with an estimated 4,000 killed. French reinforcements landed in August, but too late (21 June 1798).

Vingavelli ❙ 850 ❙ Later Indian Dynastic Wars

In one of the great dynastic rivalries of medieval India, Amoghavarsha of Rashtrakuta fought a prolonged campaign against the Eastern Chalukya, who he had defeated in 830 at Vengi. The decisive battle eventually took place at Vingavelli, where Amoghavarsha routed Vijayaditya III. Within a few years the Eastern Chalukya had acknowledged the supremacy of Rashtrakuta.

Vingeanne ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Gray

Vinh Yen ❙ 1951 ❙ French Indo-China War

Viet Minh General Vo Nguyen Giap opened his offensive into the Red River Delta, advancing on Vinh Yen, northwest of Hanoi and taking outlying positions. French commander Jean de Lattre de Tassigny flew in with reinforcements to take control and human wave attacks were driven off by firepower and napalm. Giap withdrew with 5,000 killed and many wounded (13–17 January 1951).

Vinkovce ❙ 316 ❙ Roman Wars of Succession

See Cibalae

Vinkovo ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

The day before Napoleon Bonaparte began retreating from Moscow, Prince Mikhail Kutuzov sent General Vasilii Orlov-Denisov probing towards Vinkovo, southwest of the capital. After French General Francois Sébastiani suffered a sharp loss, Marshal Joachim Murat was wounded repelling the Russians. Days later the French were defeated at Maloyaroslavetz (18 October 1812).

Vionville ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Mars-la-Tour

Vipurii ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Vyborg

Virgen ❙ 1855 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

See La Virgen

Virgin Bay ❙ 1855 ❙ National (Filibuster) War

See La Virgen

Virginia ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

In a classic broadside action off the coast of Virginia, the British sloop Frolic (Commander Thomas Whinyates) on convoy escort north of Bermuda was attacked by the American sloop Wasp (Captain Jacob Jones). Frolic suffered very heavy damage and casualties, but Wasp was also badly damaged. Later that day she was forced to surrender to the British warship Poictiers (18 October 1812).

Virginia Capes ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Chesapeake Capes

Virginius Incident ❙ 1873 ❙ 1st Cuban War of Independence

While carrying war materials for Cuban rebels, the blockade runner Virginius, illegally flying the American flag, was seized off Jamaica by the Spanish gunship Tornado. British and Americans (including Captain Joseph Fry) were among 53 passengers and crew executed before the sloop Niobe intervened. Spain later paid compensation to Britain and America to avoid war (31 October 1873).

Virta bro ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russo-Swedish War)

Falling back before a reinforced Russian invasion of Finland, Swedish General Karl Adlercreutz was decisively defeated at Oravais and retreated north to the Swedish border. At the bridge at Virta (modern Iisalmi), General Johan August Sandels held off Russian General Nikolai Tutschkoff, but the Russians later invaded Sweden itself for victory in August 1809 at Savar (27 October 1808).

Virton ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Ardennes

Vis ❙ 1866 ❙ 3rd Italian War of Independence

See Lissa

Visby ❙ 1361 ❙ Wars of the Hanseatic League

King Valdemar IV Atterdag of Denmark landed on the west coast of Gotland with a reported 70 ships and 2,500 men and repulsed Gotland peasants at Masterby. Three days later he butchered the peasant army outside the walls of Visby and the city yielded without a siege. Danish victory a year later off Helsingborg confirmed the beginning of the decline of Gotland (27 July 1361).

Visingso ❙ 1167 ❙ Swedish Wars of Succession

After Prince Magnus of Denmark killed Swedish King Eric—the Saint—near Upsala (1160), the Danish army was eventually repulsed by Eric's rival and successor Charles VII. However, Eric's son Knut later returned to Sweden with a Norwegian army and in battle near Visingso, on Lake Vattern, Charles was defeated and executed. Knut Eriksson was then recognised as King.

Vistula ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Warsaw (1st)

Vistula ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

See Warsaw

Vistula-Oder ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

Opening a stunning offensive across the Vistula, four Russian armies smashed through German defences along a 300-mile front. In little over two weeks, they advanced 350 miles to the Oder, just 40 miles from Berlin, to secure Poland and part of Czechoslovakia. The Germans lost over 500,000 casualties, with large forces trapped at Poznan and Breslau (12–31 January 1945).

Vitebsk ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

During his advance into Russia, Napoleon Bonaparte had captured Vitebsk on the Dvina after victory at Ostrowno (26 July). But his plan to withdraw through Vitebsk on his retreat from Moscow ended when Prince Ludwig Wittgenstein defeated Marshal Claude Victor and seized the city. The loss forced Bonaparte to withdraw along the more exposed southerly route (7 November 1812).

Vitebsk ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

At the start of the Russian offensive into Belorussia, Generals Ivan Bagramyan and Ivan Chernyakovsky converged on Vitebsk and encircled five German divisions under General Georg-Hans Reinhardt. All rescue attempts failed and the city fell after bloody fighting with 20,000 Germans killed and 10,000 captured. Further heavy losses followed at Mogilev and Bobruysk (23–27 June 1944).

Vithalwadi ❙ 1780 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Kalyan

Vitkov Hill ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

Determined to seize Bohemia, despite Imperial defeats at Sudomer and Porici, Sigismund of Hungary laid siege to Prague. At nearby Vitkov Hill he attempted to drive off the great Hussite leader Jan Zizka and suffered a decisive defeat. (The battlesite was renamed Zizkov in honour of Zizka.) Sigismund withdrew until his renewed offensive later that year, repulsed at Vysehrad (14 July 1420).

Vitoria ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

On his final Spanish offensive, Arthur Wellesley Lord Wellington drove King Joseph Bonaparte from Madrid and met Bonaparte and Marshal Jean-Baptiste Jourdan north of the Ebro at Vitoria. The large English-Portuguese-Spanish army won their most decisive battle, then seized vast treasure and supplies as the French abandoned central Spain (21 June 1813).

Vitsi ❙ 1949 ❙ Greek Civil War

Opening the final campaign against Communist forces in northern Greece, Marshal Alexandros Papagos feinted towards Grammos, then launched a huge offensive against about 7,000 men under Nikos Zakhariadis around Vitsi, south of Florina. After bloody fighting, the massively outnumbered insurgents escaped west to Albania or south to help defend Grammos (10–16 August 1949).

Vittorio Veneto ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Italian Front)

New Italian commander Armando Diaz resolved to avenge defeat a year before at Caporetto and began a massive offensive from the Piave towards Vittorio Veneto, aided by French General Jean Graziani and British General Frederick Lambert Earl of Cavan. Austrians under Archduke Josef and Svetozar Boroevic were destroyed and Austria quickly sued for peace (24 October–4 November 1918).

Vizcacheras ❙ 1829 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars

General Juan Galo Lavalle seized power with victory at Navarro in December 1828, then faced substantial Federalist forces under Estanislao López of Santa Fe. Part of Lavalle's army was beaten by irregular Federalist cavalry at Vizcacheras, near the Salado River, with German Colonel Frederic Rauche killed. Lavalle's main force was soon defeated at Puente de Márquez (28 March 1829).

Vlaardingen ❙ 1018 ❙ German Civil Wars

When Count Dirk II of Frisia overstepped his authority raising taxes, Emperor Henry II sent a force under Duke Godfrey of Lotharingen and the Bishop of Utrecht against his fortress at Vlaardingen, west of modern Rotterdam. Panicking in swampy conditions, the Imperial army was cut to pieces, with perhaps 900 killed. Despite such losses, the Emperor soon made peace with his vassal (29 July 1018).

Vladar ❙ 1421 ❙ Hussite Wars

Despite the Imperial repulse at Zatec (2 October), German cities in Bohemia sent forces against the Hussite Jan Zizka, who was pursued northeast by Henry of Plauen, a great Lord of Pilsen. When Zizka's badly outnumbered force made a stand on the Vladar, near Zlutice, Plauen suffered very heavy losses in costly frontal assaults before Zizka broke out at night and escaped to Zatec (November 1421).

Vladimir ❙ 1238 ❙ Mongol Conquest of Russia

The Mongol Batu (grandson of Genghis Khan) and his General Subetai campaigned in Russia, where they destroyed Ryazan and Moscow, then marched east and besieged Vladimir, the capital of Vladimir-Suzdal. Grand Duke Yuri had left the city, which was taken and burned, and his family was put to death. The following month Duke Yuri himself was defeated at the Sit River (3–8 February 1238).

Vlakfontein ❙ 1901 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

On a drive in the western Transvaal searching for Boer arms, British General Henry Dixon marched west from Naauwpoort with 1,200 men and camped at Vlakfontein, where Boers under Jan Kemp attacked and routed a patrol. In a massive counter-attack, the Boers were driven off after very heavy fighting. But Dixon's position was untenable and he withdrew to Naauwpoort (30 May 1901).

Vlie ❙ 1666 ❙ 2nd Dutch War

English commander George Monck defeated the Dutch fleet off North Foreland (5 August) then despatched Admiral Sir Robert Holmes to raid the Dutch coast, where he attacked the Waddenzee anchorage off Vlie and Terschelling. In an action which became known as "Holmes' Bonfire," he burned 160 Dutch merchantmen with cargoes alone valued at one million pounds sterling (20 August 1666).

Vlotho ❙ 1638 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Following Allied victory near Breisach, the 23-year-old Elector Palatinate Karl Ludwig boldly attempted to recover his patrimony with Swedish encouragement and English money. However, his small army was routed at Vlotho, on the Weser near Herford, by Imperial General Melchior Hatzfeld. The Elector narrowly escaped though his brother Prince Rupert was captured (7 October 1638).

Vogelinseck ❙ 1403 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

See Speicher

Volkerschlacht ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

See Leipzig

Volkondah ❙ 1751 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War

Sent with reinforcements for Nawab Muhammad Ali of Arcot, British and Indian troops under Swiss-born Captain Rudolph Gingens came under attack at Volkondah, north of the Coleroon River. Heavily defeated by a greatly superior French-Indian force under Nawab Chanda Sahib and Colonel Louis d'Auteil, Gingens was driven back to siege at Trichinopoly (19–20 July 1751).

Volo ❙ 352 BC ❙ 3rd Sacred War

See Pagasae

Volta ❙ 1848 ❙ 1st Italian War of Independence

See Custozza

Volturno ❙ 554 ❙ Gothic War in Italy

See Casilinum

Volturno ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd Italian War of Independence

Giuseppe Garibaldi was marching north from Naples when he was attacked in a strong position at the Volturno, outside Capua, by the Neapolitan army of Francis II under General Giosuè Ritucci. Aided by Piedmontese, fresh from victory at Castelfidardo, Garibaldi drove off the Bourbon forces with heavy losses on both sides. He then captured Capua and advanced on Gaeta (1–2 October 1860).

Volturno ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

Advancing up western Italy from Salerno, Anglo-American forces under General Mark Clark secured Naples then faced 35,000 Germans led by General Heinrich von Vietinghoff determined to hold the Volturno River. Very heavy fighting saw the Germans withdraw north to the Gustav Line and the exhausted Allies were forced to pause before renewing their advance (13–18 October 1943).

Vönnu ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

See Cesis

Voronezh ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

As General Anton Denikin's White Army swept north towards Moscow, Red commander Symeon Budenny was driven out of Voronezh by General Vladimir Sidorin (6 October). Orel also fell, but the Red Army soon countered with a massive flank attack. General Andrei Shkuro was left to cover a bloody retreat as the Whites fled south to the Don Basin (25 September–24 October 1919).

Voronezh ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

With the Russian winter offensive halted at Kharkov, Panzer General Herman Hoth opened the second German offensive north towards Voronezh. After heavy resistance, Voronezh was taken from General Filip Golikov and a bridgehead was established on the Don. However, the German advance was halted and Hoth moved south through Rostov towards the Caucasus (28 June–5 July 1942).

Vorskla ❙ 1399 ❙ Conquests of Tamerlane

Fleeing from defeat at the Terek by the Turko-Mongol Tamerlane, Toktamish (former Khan of the Golden Horde) gained support from Grand Duke Witold (Vytautus) of Lithuania, who invaded the Ukraine with a force of Lithuanians, Poles and Teutonic knights. At the Vorskla, a tributary of the Dnieper, Tamerlane's General Edigu attacked and destroyed Witold's army (12 August 1399).

Vougle ❙ 507 ❙ Visigothic-Frankish Wars

See Vouillé

Vouillé ❙ 507 ❙ Visigothic-Frankish Wars

On the pretext of religious persecution, Clovis, the Catholic King of the Salian Franks, and his Burgundian allies, brought on a major battle against Alaric II, King of the Arian Christian Visigoths in Gaul. Alaric was routed at Vouillé, near Poitiers, then killed in the subsequent pursuit, reputedly at the hands of Clovis himself. The defeat ended Visigothic rule in Gaul and they retreated into Spain.

Voulon ❙ 507 ❙ Visigothic-Frankish Wars

See Vouillé

Vozha ❙ 1378 ❙ Russian-Mongol Wars

Grand Prince Dimitri of Moscow was determined to challenge Mongol rule and attacked settlements along the Volga. He then faced a counter-attack by Mongol leader Maimai, who sent a force under General Begich. On the Vozha, a tributary of the Oka, the Russians secured a decisive victory, which led directly to Dimitri's great victory two years later at Kulikovo (10 August 1378).

Vrachori ❙ 1821 ❙ Greek War of Independence

Early in the war, a large force of Greeks, mainly Armatoli militia, attacked Vrachori (modern Agrinion) north of Missolonghi, with its large population of Jews and Muslims. The garrison of about 600 Albanian mercenaries under Nourka negotiated their own safe withdrawal (after looting the town) before the Greeks entered Vrachori and massacred the Jews and Turks (9 June 1821).

Vryheid ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

In a new Boer offensive in the eastern Transvaal, Louis Botha led 1,100 men in a night attack on Vryheid, south of Piet Retief, garrisoned by 900 under Colonel John M. Gawne. In heavy fighting at nearby Lancaster Hill, the British lost about 60 casualties (including Gawne fatally wounded), but the Boers were eventually driven off and Botha turned north to Belfast (11–12 December 1900).

Vucji Do ❙ 1876 ❙ Serbo-Turkish War

To support Christians in Bosnia-Herzogovina against Turkey, Montenegrans under Prince Nicholas invaded and defeated the Turks in a number of engagements, most notably, the bloody action at Vucji Do, near Cetinje, where Turkish commander Ahmed Mukhta Pasha was decisively defeated. However, Montenegro's Serb allies were less successful against the Turks at Alexinatz (18 July 1876).

Vuelte de Obligada ❙ 1845 ❙ Argentine-Uruguayan War

Concerned by Argentina's intervention in Uruguay and siege of Montevideo, Anglo-French ships under Admiral Sir Charles Hotham entered the Parana River, blocked at Vuelte de Obligada, north of San Pedro, by General Lucio Norberto Mansilla. Despite brilliant defence, with Mansilla wounded, the Allies broke through but did not affect the siege of Montevideo (18–20 November 1845).

Vukovar ❙ 1991 ❙ Croatian War

When Croatia broke away from Yugoslavia, the Yugoslav army and Serb paramilitary invaded and besieged Vukovar, where 1,800 police and volunteers led by Mile Dedakovic held out against General Mile Mrksic and 50,000 troops with tanks and artillery. The ''Croatian Stalingrad'' fell with awful destruction and killings and a ceasefire came six weeks later (24 August–19 November 1991).

Vulcan Pass ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Balkan Front)

See Targu Jiu

Vuoksi River ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Vuosalmi

Vuosalmi ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Despite terrible losses around Ihantala in Karelia, Soviet forces attempted to turn the Finnish left and crossed the Vuoksi River. However, they suffered severe casualties in bitter fighting around Vuosalmi and along the Äyräpää Ridge and were forced back onto the defensive. A final Russian offensive in southeast Finland next month was repulsed further north at Ilomantsi (4–11 July 1944).

Vyazma ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

Russian Prince Mikhail Kutuzov harassed Napoleon Bonaparte's retreat from Moscow, attacking Prince Eugène de Beauharnais and Marshal Louis Davout at Fiodoroivksoy, near Vyazma, between Moscow and Smolensk. While General Mikhail Miloradovich failed in an attempt to cut off the rear of the retreating army, the French suffered further heavy losses (3 November 1812).

Vyazma ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

As Germany resumed the offensive toward Moscow, Panzer General Herman Hoth was joined by General Erich Hoepner advancing to trap six Soviet armies around Vyazma. The pocket was crushed in a double battle with the encirclement further south at Bryasnk. The Germans reached to within 25 miles of the capital before the Russians counter-attacked west from Moscow (2–14 October 1941).

Vyborg ❙ 1710 ❙ 2nd "Great" Northern War

Tsar Peter I destroyed the Swedish army at Poltava (July 1709) then sent Admiral Fedor Apraxin to besiege Vyborg, at the head of the Gulf of Finland. The siege stalled until the spring thaw enabled the Russian fleet to bring more troops and fire power. Peter was present when the garrison of 4,000 surrendered, finally securing the approaches to St Petersburg (February–13 June 1710).

Vyborg ❙ 1918 ❙ Finnish War of Independence

Weeks after a local White victory in eastern Karelia at Rautu, commander General Ernst Löfström determined on a final offensive against the Red Army further west at the key city of Vyborg (inside modern Russia). With a brilliant envelopment and siege, the Whites took Vyborg by storm, capturing about 12,000 Red troops. War soon ended with Finland independent (23–29 April 1918).

Vyborg ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

See Karelia

Vyborg ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Northern Europe)

Soviet forces broke the German siege of Leningrad, then turned on Finland in the so-called Continuation War and 24 divisions invaded the Karelian Isthmus. With the Mannerheim Line pierced, the city of Vyborg was taken after a short battle and the Finns fell back northeast to defend Ihantala. Fighting for strategic islands in Vyborg Bay continued until mid-July (10–20 June 1944).

Vyborg Bay ❙ 1790 ❙ Russo-Swedish War

Swedish Duke Charles of Sodermanland was blockaded in Vyborg Bay in the Gulf of Finland by Russian Admiral Paul Tchitchakov and Prince Charles Nassau-Siegen, but drove off a Russian attack and led a remarkable dash to the open sea. While both sides lost ships in a confused action, the Swedes suffered heavier losses before escaping for the decisive action on the Svenskund (2–3 July 1790).

Vysehrad ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

Hussites from Prague continued the war against Sigismund of Hungary after victory at Vitkov (14 July) with Hynek Krusina besieging the nearby fortress of Vysehrad, held by Czech and German Royalists under Lord Vsembera of Boskovice. A large force led by Sigismund arrived too late to save the starving garrison from surrender and he was heavily defeated next day (1 November 1420).

Vysokov ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

See Nachod

W

Wabash ❙ 1791 ❙ Little Turtle's War
See St Clair's Defeat

Wachau ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

Opening the three-day Battle of Leipzig, a brutal action was fought east of the city around the village of Wachau, where Russians under Prince Eugene of Württemberg attacked French Marshal Claude Victor. With Napoleon Bonaparte's personal intervention, the French eventually repulsed the Allied assault, but the overall battle of Leipzig was a resounding French defeat (16 October 1813).

Wadi ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Mesopotamia)

A week after a disastrous repulse at Sheik Sa'ad, General Sir Fenton Aylmer's Anglo-Indian force advancing up the Tigris to relieve Kut-al-Amara attacked again a few miles further upstream against Turkish positions in a steep valley known as the Wadi. Heavy fighting cost over 1,600 British casualties, though the Turks still held the nearby strategic defile at Hanna (13 January 1916).

Wadi Akarit ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

General Sir Bernard Montgomery breached the Mareth Line in southern Tunisia before pushing on to Gabès, where General Giovanni Messe tried to hold a defensive line at the Wadi Akarit. In the reputed last set-piece battle of the campaign, Montgomery took over 7,000 Axis prisoners. He then joined up with Americans from Gafsa and drove on through Enfidaville to Tunis (6 April 1943).

Wadi al-Arabah ❙ 634 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

Marching north into Palestine, Muslim General Amr ibn al-As defeated a Byzantine force at Dathin, between Aila and Gaza, while in the Wadi al-Arabah, south of the Dead Sea, Yazib ibn abi Sofian defeated and killed Sergius, Patrician of Caesarea. Facing renewed Byzantine resistance, Caliph Abu Bekr recalled Khalid ibn al-Walid from Mesopotamia for victory at Ajnadin (4 February 634).

Wadi al-Batin ❙ 1991 ❙ 1st Gulf War

As part of the final 100-hour ground offensive against Iraq, American General Frederick Franks and British General Rupert Smith drove deep into Iraq, then swung east to cut off the elite Republican Guard around Wadi al-Batin. In some of the fiercest fighting of the war, the claimed largest tank battle since World War II saw Iraq routed. The war ended next day (26–27 February 1991).

Wadi al-Makhazin ❙ 1578 ❙ Portuguese-Moroccan War
See Alcazarquivir

Wadi Bekka ❙ 711 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain
See Guadalete

Wadi Chelif ❙ 740 ❙ Berber Rebellion
See El Asnam

Wadi Isly ❙ 1844 ❙ French Conquest of Algeria
See Isly

Wadi Kiss ❙ 1907 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa
Beni Snassen tribesmen campaigning in northeast Morocco raided into Algeria and attacked a French column at Wadi Kiss, on the border, just inland from Port Say. A week later over 4,000 advancing Moroccans suffered a terrible defeat in the Wadi Kiss and were repulsed at Port Say. The Beni Snassen were crushed and General Louis Lyautey levied a heavy fine (29 November 1907).

Wadi M'Koun ❙ 1908 ❙ French Colonial Wars in North Africa
General Albert d'Amade followed indecisive action east of Casablanca at Settat by leading 2,000 men circling north against Wadi M'Koun, while a second force marched east through Ber Rechid. The attempted pincer movement was a complete failure, with the southern column forced to fight off a heavy ambush. D'Amade suffered another costly loss a month later at R'Fakha (21 January 1908).

Wadi Salit ❙ 742 ❙ Berber Rebellion
Facing Berber revolt in southern Spain, Umayyad Governor Abd al-Malik ibn Katan invited in the Syrian Baldj ibn Bishr, who had lost to the Berbers at Bakdura in Morocco. Baldj defeated the main Berber force besieging Toledo at Wadi Salit, on the River Tagus, but he then overthrew Abd al-Malik and had himself appointed Governor. This was confirmed by his victory in August at Aqua Portora.

Wadi Sebou ❙ 741 ❙ Berber Rebellion
See Bakdura

Wadi Zem Zem ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)
See Buerat

Waerenga ❙ 1865 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War
Pursuing the religio-military Hauhau on New Zealand's east coast, Major James Fraser, with Captain Charles Westrupp's Forest Rangers and Maori allies, won at Hungahungatoroa, then attacked a strong position at Waerenga-a-Hika, on the Waikonu. A bloody seven-day siege saw 100 Hauhau killed before over 400 surrendered, securing a brief halt to fighting in Poverty Bay (November 1865).

Wafangtien ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War
See Delisi

Wager's Action ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession
See Cartagena, Colombia

Wagingera ❙ 1705 ❙ Mughal-Berad Wars
Emperor Aurangzeb captured the last major Maratha fortress at Torna (June 1704) then turned against Wagingera, capital of the Berad tribesmen who had withstood the Mughals at Sagar (1680). Chief Pidia Nayak held out against huge odds for three months before evacuating the city at night. The elderly Emperor returned exhausted to Ahmadnagar and died soon after (19 February–8 May 1705).

Wagon Box Fight ❙ 1867 ❙ Red Cloud's War
With inadequate resources to attack Fort Phil Kearney, south of modern Sheridan, Wyoming, 1,500 Sioux and Cheyenne under Red Cloud attacked 32 soldiers and workmen under Captain James Powell at a woodcutting camp just west of the fort. Shielded behind loaded log wagons, Powell's men, armed with repeating rifles, beat off six attacks, inflicting very heavy Indian losses (2 August 1867).

Wagon Hill ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War
During the Boer siege of Ladysmith, commandant Cornelis de Villiers led an uncharacteristic frontal assault on a ridge to the south, known as the Platrand, defended by General Sir Ian Hamilton. One of the war's bloodiest actions—around Wagon Hill and Caesar's Camp—saw the Boers eventually repulsed, with up to 800 casualties, including de Villiers killed (6 January 1900).

Wagram ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte suffered a costly loss near Vienna at Aspern-Essling, then concentrated a large force on the mid-river island of Lobau before crossing the Danube against Archduke Charles of Austria at Wagram. A massive battle with very heavy casualties on both sides saw Charles defeated when Archduke John arrived too late with reserves. Austria then sued for peace (6 July 1809).

Wahlstadt ❙ 1241 ❙ Mongol Invasion of Europe

See Liegnitz

Wahoo Swamp ❙ 1836 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

On a fresh offensive in Florida, General Richard Call led 2,500 men, including 750 Creeks, south from Fort Drane. After twice dispersing the Seminole in the Wahoo Swamp, near the Withlacoochee northeast of modern Dade City, Call met a large Seminole concentration and was forced to withdraw with very heavy losses, especially among his Creek allies (17, 18 & 21 November 1836).

Waiara ❙ 1864 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

See Mangapiko

Waihand ❙ 1006 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

Invading Multan from Afghanistan, the Muslim Mahmud of Ghazni attacked the Carmathian heretic Sultan Abdul Fath Daud, who sought help from the Hindu Prince Anandpal. At Waihand, near Peshawar in modern Pakistan, Anandpal suffered a heavy defeat but met Mahmud at the same site two years later. After a brief siege of Multan, Sultan Daud accepted Orthodox Islam (March–April 1006).

Waihand ❙ 1008 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Northern India

Mahmud of Ghazni led a fresh campaign from Afghanistan into India and met a large Hindu force under Prince Anandpal at the same site as two years earlier. Mahmud's Muslims dispersed the Hindu war-elephants and inflicted a decisive defeat in battle at Waihand, near Peshawar in modern Pakistan. The Afghan's subsequent invasions ravaged much of northern India (31 December 1008).

Waikorowhiti ❙ 1870 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

As the hunt for the Hauhau rebel Te Kooti continued in New Zealand's central North Island after defeat at Te Porere, he was attacked near Rotorua by Lieutenant Gilbert Mair and Arawa Maori allies. A running action near Waikorowhiti and Tumunui cost the Hauhau valuable supplies and about 20 killed. Te Kooti escaped but was a spent force and soon fled to the King Country (7 February 1870).

Waima Incident ❙ 1893 ❙ British Occupation of Sierra Leone

Threatened in northern Sierra Leone by Sofa warriors, British Colonel Alfred Ellis and Captain Edward Lendy marched out of Freetown. They were attacked at Waima by French under Lieutenant Gaston Maritz (who mistook them for the hostiles) with Maritz, Lendy and many troops killed. France paid compensation and a British Protectorate was later proclaimed (22 December 1893).

Wairau ❙ 1843 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

On disputed land at Wairau, on New Zealand's South Island, Maoris under Te Rauparaha and his nephew Te Rangihaeata exchanged fire with a survey party on the Tuamarina Stream. Six Maoris and 22 Europeans died, half of them killed after capture, including Resident Agent Captain Arthur Wakefield. The "Wairau Massacre" shocked the young colony and helped trigger war (17 June 1843).

Waireka ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

Five men were killed by Maoris south of New Plymouth at Omata and Colonel George Murray, with militia Captain Charles Brown, was sent into action at nearby Waireka. Although Murray prematurely withdrew, Captain Peter Cracroft (Niger) arrived to secure victory and New Zealand's first Victoria Cross was won. Fighting soon resumed at Puketakauere (28 March 1860).

Waitara ❙ 1860 ❙ 2nd New Zealand War

When hostile Maoris disputed a grant of land at Waitara, north of New Plymouth, martial law was declared and troops under Colonel Charles Gold, aided by local mounted militia, marched against the Ngatiawa Chief Hapurona at Te Kohia. Attacking with howitzers and a rocket tube, Gold forced Hapurona to withdraw, but trouble soon flared south of New Plymouth at Waireka (17 March 1860).

Waitzen ❙ 1849 ❙ Hungarian Revolutionary War

Hungarian General Janos Damjanics advanced to break the siege of Komárom and repulsed Austrian forces at Szolnok, then defeated and killed General Christian Goetz at Waitzen (modern Vác), north of Budapest. Komárom was relieved and, after being further driven back through Nagy Sallo (19 April), Austrian Field Marshal Alfred Windischgratz had to evacuate Hungary (10 April 1849).

Wakamatsu ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Meiji Restoration

After securing central Japan and renaming the capital Edo as Tokyo, Imperial forces marched into northern Honshu to suppress continued resistance in pro-Tokugawa Aizu (modern Fukushima). Following widespread fighting and heavy losses, the great Aizu stronghold at Wakamatsu finally surrendered to Saigo Takamori, leaving only the rebels at Goryokaku (22 September 1868).

Wakde ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

Just days after landings at Hollandia in northern New Guinea, American General Horace Fuller attacked further west at Wakde, which was fiercely defended by 800 Japanese. Brutal action saw all but four Japanese killed before the island was secured, at a cost of 40 American dead. Resistance was much more prolonged on the nearby mainland around Sarmi (17–21 May 1944).

Wake ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Pacific)

As war started, Admiral Sadamichi Kajioka attacked the American base on Wake Island, where he was driven off by artillery and aircraft with two destroyers lost. Reinforced by two carriers returning from Pearl Harbour, he attacked again and, despite courageous fighting by Major James Devereux's Marines, commander Winfield Cunningham had to surrender (8–23 December 1941).

Wakefield ❙ 1460 ❙ Wars of the Roses

Richard Duke of York was proclaimed heir after Northampton (10 July), but was besieged at Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, by Henry Percy Earl of Northampton and Henry Beaufort Duke of Somerset, loyal to Queen Margaret. York rashly sallied out and was among 2,000 killed, along with his son Edmund Earl of Rutland and commander Richard Neville Earl of Salisbury (30 December 1460).

Wakefield ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

In an attempt to capture prisoners to exchange for those captured in his defeat on Seacroft Moor, Parliamentary General Sir Thomas Fairfax led a bold dawn attack on Wakefield, Yorkshire. Despite being unexpectedly outnumbered, Fairfax took the city and over 1,500 prisoners, including Royalist commander George Lord Goring (21 May 1643).

Walaja ❙ 633 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Iraq

Alarmed by defeat in Mesopotamia at Hafir and Mazar, the Persian Emperor sent fresh forces under Andarzaghar, supported by non-Muslim Arabs. Without waiting for Persian commander Bahram, Andarzaghar advanced to Walaja, on the eastern bank of the Euphrates, where Muslim General Khalid ibn al-Walid secured a brilliant victory. Khalid soon won again at Ullais (April 633).

Walcheren ❙ 1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

Viceroy Don Luis de Requesens was triumphant on land, re-establishing Spanish supremacy in the Netherlands, and sent Colonel Julian Romero to relieve the long blockade of Middelburg. Off Walcheren near Reimerswaal, Dutch privateers known as "Sea Beggars" under Louis de Boisot routed the Spanish force, destroying nine warships. Middelburg soon had to surrender (29 January 1574).

Walcheren ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

Attempting to divert Napoleon Bonaparte's attention away from Austria, 40,000 British troops under General Sir John Pitt Lord Chatham and Admiral Sir Richard Strachan landed on swampy Walcheren Island, guarding Antwerp. Nothing was achieved and malaria killed 4,000 and disabled 10,000 before the disastrous expedition was abandoned (30 July–23 December 1809).

Walcheren ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Scheldt Estuary

Walcourt ❙ 1689 ❙ War of the Grand Alliance

Amid renewed fighting in the Spanish Netherlands, French under the Dukes Louis d'Humières and Claude de Villars clashed at Walcourt, south of Charleroi, with a Spanish-German army led by Prince George Frederic of Waldeck, supported by the English Brigade of the Duke of Marlborough. The French were heavily defeated and d'Humières lost his command (25 August 1689).

Walker's Creek ❙ 1844 ❙ Comanche Indian Wars

Texas Rangers under Captain Jack Hays, pursuing the Comanche Yellow Wolf west from San Antonio, met a large Indian force near the Guadalupe River on the Pimta trail at Walker's Creek. Yellow Wolf and more than 20 Indians were killed in a close action—said to be one of the first using the newly introduced revolvers—while the Rangers lost one killed and four wounded (9 June 1844).

Walkerton ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As Union General Judson Kilpatrick raided outside the Confederate capital at Richmond, Virginia, a detached brigade under Colonel Ulric Dahlgren was ambushed north near the Pamunkey at Walkerton by units of General Wade Hampton's Confederates under Lieutenant James Pollard. With Dahlgren killed and most of his men captured Kilpatrick withdrew to Yorktown (2 March 1864).

Wallhof ❙ 1626 ❙ 2nd Polish-Swedish War

Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden resumed war against Poland in Livonia, where he was threatened southeast of Riga by two armies under Generals Krystof Radziwill and Lew Sapieha. Arriving by forced marches before Radziwill could assist, Gustavus badly defeated Sapieha on the Plain of Semigallia near Wallhof, causing massive Polish casualties. He then invaded Prussia to besiege Danzig (7 January 1626).

Wallingford ❙ 1153 ❙ English Period of Anarchy

With the Empress Matilda defeated in a long dynastic dispute with her cousin King Stephen, her son Henry Plantagenet, the Count of Anjou, returned to England with 3,000 men and marched on the King at Wallingford, near Oxford. After a brief clash Stephen agreed to recognise Henry as his heir, ending "The Anarchy." When Stephen died a year later, Plantagenet became Henry II (January 1153).

Walnut Hills ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Chickasaw Bluffs

Waltersdorf ❙ 1807 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

In a prelude to Napoleon Bonaparte's battle in eastern Prussia at Eylau, French Marshal Michel

Ney was sent southwest to Waltersdorf, near the Passarge, to prevent the Prussians of General Anton Lestocq linking up with the main Russian army. Lestocq's outnumbered force was defeated and his survivors arrived too late to affect the outcome at Eylau three days later (5 February 1807).

Walwal ❙ 1934 ❙ 2nd Italo-Ethiopian War

During a dispute on Ethiopia's border with Italian Somaliland, Captain Roberto Cimmaruta, with a force of mainly Somali irregulars, provoked a major clash at the important oasis of Walwal, 50 miles inside Ethiopia. The Italian force and Ethiopians under Kiferra Balcha both suffered casualties and Mussolini used the clash to justify an invasion of Ethiopia in 1935 through Adowa (5 December 1934).

Wanborough ❙ 592 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Wodnesbeorg

Wanborough ❙ 715 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

See Wodnesbeorg

Wandewash ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (India)

Encouraged by his defence of Madras against French Governor General Comte Thomas Lally, British Colonel Eyre Coote captured Wandewash, 60 miles to the southwest (29 November 1759), which was besieged by Lally two months later. Lally's Maratha cavalry deserted during this decisive battle and he was badly defeated. He then withdrew to siege and defeat at Pondicherry (22 January 1760).

Wanganui ❙ 1847 ❙ 1st New Zealand War

See Rutland Stockade

Wanting ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (China)

Chinese commander Wei Lihuang captured Longling across the Salween, then pursued the Japanese to the Burmese border, where General Yuzo Matsuyama determined to defend Wanting. Heavily attacked from all sides, the Japanese held out for 25 days before withdrawing to Namhkam. Within days, convoys were using the reopened Burma Road (27 December 1944–20 January 1945).

Warangal ❙ 1309–1310 ❙ Wars of the Delhi Sultanate

After failure in 1303 against the Kingdom of Kakatiya (Andhra Pradesh), Sultan Ala-ud-din sent a large army under Malik Kafur against the fortified city of Warangal. Twenty-five days of fighting secured the outer mud fortresses and, when the inner stone citadel came under siege, Prataparuda II sued for peace. Malik withdrew with massive treasure, but disputes over tribute led to further warfare.

Warangal ❙ 1322–1323 ❙ Wars of the Delhi Sultanate

Delhi conquered the Kingdom of Kakatiya in 1310, but disputes over unpaid tribute led to further fighting. Sultan Tughluk Shah I finally sent his son Muhammad against Warangal. False reports of a coup in Delhi led to Muhammad withdrawing, but he was soon reinforced and resumed the siege. After five months, Prataparuda II surrendered and died going into captivity, ending the Kakatiya Dynasty.

War Bonnet Creek ❙ 1876 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

Attempting to join Sitting Bull after his great victory at Little Big Horn, about 1,000 Cheyenne in northwest Nebraska were intercepted at War Bonnet Creek, near modern Montrose, by Colonel Wesley Merritt, who had marched east from Fort Laramie. In a fierce battle—during which William F. Cody killed Yellow Hand—the Cheyenne were defeated and driven back (17 July 1876).

Warburg ❙ 1760 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

The Prussian-British army of Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick responded to a new French offensive towards Hanover by meeting Louis-Nicolas Felix Comte du Muy at Warburg, northwest of Kassel. Supported by British cavalry under John Manners Marquis of Granby, Duke Ferdinand routed the French and drove them back to the Rhine, where they made a stand at Kloster-Kamp (31 July 1760).

Ware Bottom Church ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Four days after checking Union commander Benjamin F. Butler south of Richmond, Virginia, at Drewry's Bluff, Confederate General Pierre G. T. Beauregard attacked further south near Ware Bottom Church. The Union line stabilised when General Adalbert Ames was driven out of his forward position, though Butler remained "bottled up" on the James at Bermuda Hundred (20 May 1864).

Wareham ❙ 876 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

Advancing southwest from Cambridge, the Danish King Guthrum led his Vikings across Wessex, where they defeated the garrison and captured the coastal port of Wareham, west of Bournemouth. King Alfred of Wessex paid them a tribute to leave the kingdom, but the Vikings escaped during the night towards Exeter. In 878 they returned to defeat Alfred at Chippenham.

Wargaom ❙ 1779 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

A British column advancing from Bombay towards Poona under Colonel William Cockburn was surrounded and massively outnumbered between Talegaon and Wargaom by Marathas under Mahadji Sindhia of Gwalior and Tukaji Holkar of Indore. After suffering heavy losses, Cockburn obtained safe passage by agreeing to a truce, later repudiated by his superiors (13 January 1779).

Warka ❙ 1656 ❙ 1st Northern War

With Charles X of Sweden blockaded by Polish forces on the Vistula near Sandomierz, Margrave Frederick V of Baden marched with reinforcements to relieve the King. Frederick was intercepted at Warka, south of Warsaw, and badly beaten by Polish commander Stefan Czarniecki. Charles later managed to break out from Sandomierz and retook Warsaw in July (28 March 1656).

Warmstadt ❙ 1113 ❙ German Civil Wars

Siegfried, Count-Palatine of the Rhine, rebelled against Emperor Henry V with support from Lothar of Saxony, Rudolf of the North Mark, Wiprecht of Groitsch and Ludwig of Thuringia. At Warmstadt, near Quedlinburg, north of the Harz, the rebels were crushed by Imperial General Hoyer of Mansfeld, with Count Siegfried killed. Rebellion soon flared again at Andernach and Welfesholze.

Warren's Action ❙ 1798 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (Irish Rising)

See Donegal Bay

Warren Wagontrain Raid ❙ 1871 ❙ Kiowa Indian War

See Salt Creek

Warsaw ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

See Sobota

Warsaw ❙ 1656 ❙ 1st Northern War

Following Swedish defeat at Warka (28 March), Swedish commander Arvid Wittenberg was eventually forced to surrender nearby Warsaw (21 June). Having meanwhile escaped from Sandomierz, Charles X of Sweden was reinforced by Brandenburgers under Georg von Derfflinger and attacked in force. Polish commander Stefan Czarniecki was defeated and Charles retook Warsaw (28–30 July 1656).

Warsaw ❙ 1657 ❙ Transylvanian-Polish War

Prince George Rákóczi II of Transylvania, with Swedish support and Cossacks under Anton Zhdanovich, tried to seize the Polish throne, taking and looting Cracow and Warsaw. However, when Sweden withdrew to fight Denmark (and his Cossacks mutinied) Rákóczi was forced into a humiliating surrender. Returning home, he was routed by Tatars at Trembowla (9 June–23 July 1657).

Warsaw (1st) ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

Amid renewed Polish insurrection, a Warsaw cobbler named Jan Kalinski led a brutal Easter rising against the Russian garrison, who were pursued and slaughtered in the streets on Good Friday and driven out (17–18 April). Warsaw later withstood an unsuccessful two-month siege by King Frederick William III of Prussia and his Russian allies (2 July–9 September 1794).

Warsaw (2nd) ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Praga

Warsaw ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

After costly losses in northeast Poland at Ostrolenka, Polish rebels under General Henryk Dembinksi withdrew to Warsaw, pursued by Russian Field Marshal Ivan Paskevich. The outnumbered Poles lost 9,000 men in a terrible two-day battle before the capital fell and the war ended. Paskevich became Viceroy and stamped out Polish nationalism (6–8 September 1831).

Warsaw (1st) ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

With Austria driven out of eastern Poland around Lemberg, German commander Paul von Hindenberg and General August von Mackensen in the north marched on Warsaw. Russia's Nikolai Ivanov concentrated his forces under General Nikolai Ruzskii and heavy fighting forced the Germans to withdraw. Further south Austria was checked at the San (28 September–17 October 1914).

Warsaw (2nd) ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

Recovering from German losses on the Nieman, General August von Mackensen launched a fresh offensive into Poland and retook Lodz (6 December) then advanced on Warsaw. But desperate Russian defence and bitter cold stopped the Germans 30 miles west of the capital at the Bzura. Both sides entrenched for the winter until the New Year German attack at Bolimov (7–20 December 1914).

Warsaw ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As part of Germany's new Triple Offensive, General Max von Gallwitz advanced on the Polish Salient, where Grand Duke Nicolas withdrew from the Bzura, west of Warsaw. Under determined German attack, the Russians then abandoned the Polish capital and withdrew through Vilna, while further west Germany seized the fortress of Nowo Georgiewsk (4–5 August 1915).

Warsaw ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

Polish commander Josef Pilsudski was forced back to Warsaw by Russian victory on the Berezina, then he led a bold counter-offensive along the Vistula against General Mikhail Tukhachevski. Against all international expectation, Pilsudski won a stunning victory and Tukhachevski withdrew east towards the Nieman with crippling losses in men and equipment (16–25 August 1920).

Warsaw ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Determined to crush Poland, German forces raced for Warsaw and launched a bloody land and air assault. A Polish counter-attack to the west at the Bzura eased the siege, but with ammunition exhausted and much of the capital in flames, General Juliuscz Rommel had to surrender the city and over 100,000 men. The last Polish resistance soon ended at Hel and Kock (9–28 September 1939).

Warsaw ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

When Soviet forces reached the Vistula, General Tadeusz Bor-Komorovski's Polish Home Army rose against the German garrison of Warsaw and seized more than half the city. However, expected Soviet help did not come and the rising was brutally crushed by SS General Erich von dem Bach-Zelewski. Warsaw fell (17 January) in the Vistula-Oder offensive (1 August–2 October 1944).

Wartenburg ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

As Napoleon Bonaparte returned west of the Elbe, General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians pursued him hard and units of the Prussian army under General Hans Yorck forced the Elbe at Wartenburg, south of Wittenberg. Yorck, later created Graf von Wartenburg, drove off General Henri Bertrand and the Allies continued their advance on Leipzig (3 October 1813).

Washington, DC ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

See Bladensburg

Washington, New York ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

See Fort Washington

Washington, North Carolina ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate General Daniel H. Hill on campaign against the Union army in North Carolina was repulsed near New Bern at Fort Anderson (13–15 March) then moved north against the Union garrison at Washington, in the Pamlico Sound, defended by General George G. Foster. However, Hill was unable to blockade the river city and was eventually forced to withdraw (30 March–20 April 1863).

Washita ❙ 1868 ❙ Cheyenne-Arapaho Indian War

Colonel George Custer marched into Indian Territory and launched a dawn attack on Black Kettle, camped under a flag of truce on the Washita River, near modern Cheyenne, Oklahoma. Fighting back bravely, the Indians killed 16 soldiers, including Major Joel Elliot. However, Black Kettle and 100 others were killed, with many more wounded and their families captured (27 November 1868).

Wasp* vs Avon ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

See Western Approaches (2nd)

Wasp* vs Frolic ❙ 1812 ❙ War of 1812

See Virginia

Wasp* vs Reindeer ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

See Western Approaches (1st)

Waterberg ❙ 1904 ❙ German Colonial Wars in Africa

Taking command in German Southwest Africa after humilation at Oviumbo, Colonel Lothar von Trotha led about 4,000 well-equipped men against the Herero rebels in the Waterberg Mountains. The rebels were routed in a decisive action and fled into the Omaheke Desert, where they were hunted down and annihilated. Fewer than 20,000 out of 80,000 Herero survived the war (11–12 August 1904).

Wateree Ferry ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

As American commander Horatio Gates prepared to fight the British army at Camden, South Carolina, guerrilla Colonel Thomas Sumter sent Colonel Thomas Taylor against the British rear at Wateree Ferry, just outside Camden. The rebels defeated a small force under Colonel Isaac Carey and seized 50 wagonloads of supplies but were soon caught at Fishing Creek (15 August 1780).

Waterford ❙ 1170 ❙ Anglo-Norman Conquest of Ireland

After Norman adventurer Raymond Fitzgerald "Le Gros" besieged the Viking Irish city of Waterford and inflicted massive casualties repulsing an attack on his camp, he was reinforced by Richard de Clare Earl of Pembroke "Strongbow" and the Irish leader Mac Murchada. Waterford was taken by storm and the Norman and Irish allies then captured Dublin (May–25 August 1170).

Waterford ❙ 1922 ❙ Irish Civil War

While fighting continued in Limerick, government forces under General John Prout advanced south from Kilkenny towards Waterford, held by Republican Colonel Pax Whelan.

Following heavy shelling, Prout's men stormed into the city, which fell with few casualties but very extensive damage. The Republicans then withdrew west towards Clonmel (18–21 July 1922).

Waterkloof ❙ 1851 ❙ 8th Cape Frontier War

General Sir Harry Smith was determined to secure the Waterkloof in the eastern Cape and sent Colonel John Fordyce with 450 Highlanders and 400 Mfengu levies against Chief Macomo's stronghold in the Amatolas. However, Fordyce was attacked on the steep mountain and driven off. Two months later, a much larger force drove Macomo out, though Fordyce was killed by a sniper (8 September 1851).

Waterloo ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

Climaxing the "Hundred Days" following his return from Elbe, Napoleon Bonaparte was defeated at Waterloo, south of Brussels. The British-Dutch army of Arthur Wellesley Duke of Wellington and General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians achieved one of the major victories in western history and Bonaparte abdicated again, ending the Napoleonic Wars (18 June 1815).

Wattee-Goung ❙ 1825 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War

British General Sir Archibald Campbell defeated the Burmese at Danubyu (1 April) and moved up the Irriwaddy to captured Prome. After the failure of peace talks, Colonel Robert McDowell then advanced 16 miles northeast to the stockade at Wattee-Goung (Wettigan), held by Maha Nemyu. McDowell was killed in a heavy defeat and the British fell back on Prome (16 November 1825).

Wattignies ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Attempting to repulse the Austrian siege of the French border fortress of Maubeuge, poorly trained French recruits under General Jean Baptiste Jourdan met the veterans of Prince Friedrich Josias of Saxe-Coburg over two days at nearby Wattignies. After initial heavy French losses, the Austrians were driven off and the starving garrison of Maubeuge was relieved (15–16 October 1793).

Wauhatchie Station ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

Determined to secure the western approaches to Chattanooga, Tennessee, Union General Joseph Hooker seized a bridgehead at Brown's Ferry then sent General John W. Geary south to secure Wauhatchie Station. Confederate General Micah Jenkins was repulsed in a hard-fought night action and Union forces in Chattanooga soon broke out to the east at Missionary Ridge (28–29 October 1863).

Wavre ❙ 1815 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (The Hundred Days)

Napoleon Bonaparte was determined to keep General Gebhard von Blucher's Prussians away from the main battle at Waterloo, south of Brussels, and sent his right ring under Marshal Emmanuel de Grouchy eight miles east to Wavre. However, the Prussian rearguard of General Johann Thielmann held Grouchy off and Blucher was able to march to Waterloo in time to seal victory (18 June 1815).

Wawer ❙ 1831 ❙ Polish Rebellion

After halting a Russian advance outside Warsaw at Grochow and Praga, Polish General Jan Skrznyecki crossed the Vistula at night and drove General Fedor Geismar's Sixth Corps from their positions at Wawer with over 10,000 casualties and also captured massive amounts of stores. Russian Marshal Hans von Diebitsch then ordered a withdrawal to Siedlce (31 March 1831).

Waxhaw ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

With the capture of Charleston, British cavalry Colonel Banastre Tarleton pursued approaching American reinforcements under Colonel Abraham Buford, who Tarleton had defeated at Lanneau's Ferry. Making a stand at Waxhaw, just inside North Carolina, Buford was brutally defeated and his wounded were bayonetted in what was ironically called "Tarleton's Quarter" (29 May 1780).

Wayna Daga ❙ 1543 ❙ Adal-Ethiopian War

Muslim leader Ahmad ibn Ibrahim (Ahmad Grañ) of the Somali state of Adal routed Ethiopia at Shimbra-Kure and secured the southern part of the country before new Emperor Galawdewus (Claudius) secured Portuguese aid and attacked the Muslims at Wayna Daga (Woina Daga) near Lake Tana. Ahmad was defeated and killed and the state of Adal was fatally weakened (21 February 1543).

Waynesboro, Virginia ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Concluding his campaign in the Shenandoah after victory at Cedar Creek, Union commander Philip Sheridan, with General George A. Custer, marched southeast from Staunton against General Jubal A. Early's Confederate remnant at Waynesboro, Virginia. Sheridan secured a one-sided victory, capturing guns, supplies and over 1,000 prisoners, though Early himself escaped (2 March 1865).

Waynesborough, Georgia ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

As Union commander William T. Sherman marched through Georgia from Atlanta, his left wing under General H. Judson Kilpatrick withdrew from a costly action against Confederate General Joseph Wheeler at Buck Head Creek, then attacked him at Waynesborough. Wheeler fled north to Augusta after heavy fighting and within a week Sherman had reached Savannah (4 December 1864).

Wednesfield ❙ 911 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

After Edward the Elder of Wessex defeated the Danes of Northumbria at Tettenhall and returned to Kent (August 910), the Danes broke the peace and Edward marched back to Staffordshire to defend his widowed sister Aethelflaed, the Lady of Mercia. At Wednesfield (Wodensfield) near Wolverhampton, Edward defeated and killed the Danish Kings Halfdan and Ecwils.

Weenan ❙ 1838 ❙ Boer-Zulu War

See Bloukranz

Weihaiwei ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Marshal Iawo Oyama supported the Japanese offensive in southern Manchuria, landing on the Shandong Peninsula to attack Weihaiwei, which fell after two days of bitter fighting (31 January). The Chinese fleet in Weihaiwai Bay then came under attack by land as well as sea. With costly losses and no hope of aid, Admiral Ding Ruchang committed suicide and his fleet surrendered (2–12 February 1895).

Weinsberg ❙ 1141 ❙ German Civil Wars

When German King Lothair died, his son-in-law and heir, Henry the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, was outmanoeuvred by Conrad Hohenstaufen—who was elected as Conrad III and immediately broke up Henry's lands. On Henry's death, his brother Welf reclaimed Bavaria, but at Weinsberg, near Heilbronn, Conrad defeated Welf and forced his surrender (December 1140).

Weinsberg ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War

Following peasant defeat at Leipheim (4 April), about 8,000 Franconian peasants under Jaecklein Rohrbach and Florian Geyer attacked Count Ludwig von Helfstein at Weinsberg, just east of Heilbronn. The castle was stormed and the "Weinsberg Massacre" saw the garrison slaughtered, with the Count and 17 other nobles executed. Heilbronn surrendered the same day (16 April 1525).

Weissenburg ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

See Wissembourg

Weissenstein ❙ 1604 ❙ 1st Polish-Swedish War

As Swedish forces in Livonia were driven out by a Polish counter-offensive under Hetman Jan

Karol Chodkiewicz, General Arvid Stalarm lost the key city of Dorpat. He later unwisely attacked Chodkiewicz, southeast of Tallin near Weissenstein (modern Paide, Estonia) and the Swedes suffered a disastrous defeat. King Charles IX himself was beaten in 1605 at Kirkholm (15 September 1604).

Weisser Berg ❙ 1620 ❙ Thirty Years War (Bohemian War)

See White Mountain

Wejh ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

Arab leader Prince Feisal was encouraged by his success at Yanbu, on the Red Sea. Shadowed by the British navy, he then took perhaps 11,000 men north along the coast against a 1,200-strong Turkish garrison at Wejh (al Wajh). Having landed forces from British ships just to the north of Wejh, Feisal secured the port. Later that year he marched further north against Aqaba (24 January 1917).

Weldon Railroad (1st) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Jerusalem Plank Road

Weldon Railroad (2nd) ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Globe Tavern

Welfesholze ❙ 1115 ❙ German Civil Wars

Renewing rebellion crushed at Warmstadt (1113), Saxon and Thuringian nobles rose against Emperor Henry V. Again led by Duke Lothar of Saxony, the rebels were better organised and, after defeating the King at Andernach, soon won again at Welfesholze, near Mansfeld in the eastern Harz. With the church against him and few supporters, Henry effectively abandoned his authority in Saxony.

Welika Pond ❙ 1836 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

At the start of the evacuation of Fort Drane, Florida, Captain William Maitland led a 60-man escort with 22 wagons of stores ten miles towards Fort Defiance, outside Micanopy. Just short of his objective he was attacked at Welika Pond by 200 Seminole under Osceola. A sharp action cost Maitland five killed and six wounded before he was rescued by troops from Fort Defiance (19 July 1836).

Wells ❙ 1692 ❙ King William's War

Encouraged by success against York in Maine, French Governor Joseph Robineau de Villebon sent his brother Rene and Abnaki Indians across Penebscot Bay to attack the settlement at Wells, on the coast southwest of Portland. However, the British led by Joseph Storer and militia Captain James Convers fought back strongly from well-fortified houses and the attack was driven off (9–10 June 1692).

Welshpool ❙ 1400 ❙ Glendower's Rebellion

Owen Glendower (Owain Glynn Dwr) led a Welsh rebellion which destroyed the estates of the Anglo-Norman noble Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin and captured several towns before facing 1,400 English levies led by Hugh Burnell on the Severn at Welshpool. Glendower was defeated and his estates forfeited, though his largely guerrilla campaign continued for many years (24 September 1400).

Wenden ❙ 1577 ❙ Livonian War

Soon after failure at Reval, Tsar Ivan IV sent Magnus, his vassal King of Livonia, who captured Wenden (Cesis in Latvia). When Magnus promised protection against Russia he was arrested and Ivan attacked his men holding the citadel. After heavy bombardment, the garrison blew themselves up to avoid capture. Ivan then killed thousands of citizens in the so-called "Massacre of Wenden."

Wenden ❙ 1578 ❙ Livonian War

At war with Russia over Livonia, Stephen Bathory of Poland had been occupied with the siege of Danzig and was unable to prevent the brutal capture of Wenden (modern Cesis in Latvia). The following year he sent a force of German cavalry, who surprised the city at night. The Russian garrison were caught unaware and were slaughtered in revenge for the previous massacre (21 October 1578).

Wenden ❙ 1919 ❙ Estonian War of Independence

See Cesis

Wepener ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Continuing his raid in Orange Free State after victory at Sannah's Post and Reddersburg, Christiaan de Wet attacked 1,900 men, mainly pro-British Afrikaaners under Colonel Edmund Dalgety, at Wepener, southeast of Bloemfontein. Despite repeated assaults and 300 casualties, Dalgety held out and de Wet withdrew north as General Lord Frederick Roberts approached (9–25 April 1900).

Werbach ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

General Erwin von Manteuffel followed Prussian victory at Aschaffenburg by advancing southeast towards the Tauber, where General August von Goeben secured Hochhausen, then attacked the Bavarians at Werbach, west of Würzburg. Advancing breast-deep across the Tauber, the Prussians secured Werbach then marched on through Helmstadt and Gerchsheim to Würzburg (24 July 1866).

Werben ❙ 1631 ❙ Thirty Years War (Swedish War)

Marching north along the Elbe after destroying Magdeburg, the starving Imperial army of Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly met the Swedish forces of Gustavus Adolphus near the junction with the Havel at Werben. In the face of a massive Swedish assault, Tilly lost a reported 6,000 casualties then withdrew through neutral Saxony towards Leipzig and eventual battle at Breitenfeld (22 July 1631).

Werki ❙ 1658 ❙ Russo-Polish Wars

While on campaign against Sweden in Latvia, Polish Hetman Wincenty Gosiewski was surprised outside Vilna at Werki by Russian Prince Yuri Dolgorukov. Gosiewski was heavily defeated and captured and the Russians sacked Vilna. However, a Cossack siege of Minsk forced Dolgorukov to withdraw. Another offensive into Lithuania in 1660 was repulsed at Polonka (21 October 1658).

Wertingen ❙ 1805 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (3rd Coalition)

Napoleon Bonaparte's Grand Army advanced across the Rhine in massive force and swung south to cut off the Austrian invasion of Bavaria under General Karl Mack von Leiberich. Northeast of Ulm at Wertingen, the advance guard of Marshals Joachim Murat and Jean Lannes destroyed an Austrian force. The French then continued south to threaten Mack with encirclement (8 October 1805).

Wesel ❙ 1629 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

In a bold raid to support the Dutch siege of Hertogenbosch, Colonel Otto van Gendt (Heer van Dieden) took a small force east from Arnhem against the Spanish base at Wesel, north of Duisberg. Attacking at night, the Dutch seized the city, along with supplies and prisoners, including Governor Francisco Lozano, hastening the capitulation of Hertogenbosch (19 August 1629).

Wesel ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

Two days after American forces crossed the Rhine near Mainz, Allied commander Sir Bernard Montgomery launched over a million British, American, French and Canadian troops across the Rhine around Wesel. While there was sharp resistance at Emmerich, a bridgehead was established and the Americans swung south to surround the Ruhr Pocket (23 March 1945).

Weser ❙ 16 ❙ Rome's Germanic Wars

Roman General Julius Caesar Germanicus advanced into Germania, where he buried victims of the disaster at Teutoburgwald (9 AD) then attacked the Cherusci under Arminius. In open battle at a location known as Idistaviso, probably on the Weser near Minden, Germanicus won a decisive victory. However, he was soon recalled and Rome failed to establish her authority beyond the Rhine.

Western Approaches (1st) ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

The American sloop Wasp (Captain Johnston Blakeley) sank five vessels in the Western Approaches to the English Channel then met the British sloop Reindeer (Commander William Manners) in a famous action. After bloody losses on both sides, Manners was killed attempting to board the American ship and Reindeer was forced to surrender (28 June 1814).

Western Approaches (2nd) ❙ 1814 ❙ War of 1812

Refitted in France after action against Reindeer, the American sloop Wasp (Captain Johnston Blakeley) resumed raiding in the Western Approaches to the English Channel and was met at night by the British brig Avon (Commander James Arbuthnot), which was badly damaged and later sank. Wasp was driven off by other British ships and was lost without trace on the way home (1 September 1814).

Western Hubei ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (China)

After a long pause since Zhejiang (August 1942), General Isamu Tokoyama led an offensive into Hubei to clear the upper Yangzi and threaten China's wartime capital at Chongqing. Advancing against the fortress at Shipai near Yichang, the Japanese were driven off by a large counter-offensive under General Chen Cheng and within weeks were back to the starting point (5 May–17 June 1943).

Westerplatte ❙ 1939 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

War started when German battleships opened fire on the naval depot at Westerplatte, in Danzig harbour. An heroic defence against overwhelming naval and aerial bombardment and land attack came to symbolise Polish resistance. The action cost 15 Poles killed and perhaps 200 Germans before Major Henryk Sucharski surrendered to General Friedrich Eberhard (1–7 September 1939).

West Irian ❙ 1962 ❙ Dutch-Indonesian War

When Indonesia tried to seize West Irian (Netherlands New Guinea), two Dutch warships engaged four torpedo boats offshore, sinking one and damaging another with 50 killed, including Indonesia's Deputy Chief of Navy. Indonesia sent land forces and, facing international opposition, the Netherlands yielded the territory, incorporated into Indonesia in 1963 (15 January 1962).

West Point ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Eltham's Landing

Westport ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

Confederate General Sterling Price crossed Missouri to seize Independence (11 August) then found himself between two Union armies southeast of Kansas City. Using one division to hold the Big Blue River, he turned west against Union commander Samuel R. Curtis at Westport. However, he was driven off in a large-scale action and turned south through Marais des Cygnes (23 October 1864).

West Scheldt ❙ 1574 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

See Walcheren

West Wall ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (Western Europe)

See Siegfried Line

Wethersfield ❙ 1637 ❙ Pequot Indian War

Retaliating for the murderous colonial attack on Block Island, off southern New England, 200 Pequot Indians under Chief Sassacus attacked the town of Wethersfield, just south of Hartford, Connecticut, killing six men and three women. The attack led to a formal declaration of war at Hartford and resulted in the decisive attack on the Pequot six weeks later at Mystic (12 April 1637).

Wettigan ❙ 1825 ❙ 1st British-Burmese War
See Wattee-Goung

Wetzikon ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
In a prelude to the First Battle of Zurich, French General Nicolas Soult was attacked and driven back at Wetzikon, east of the city, by Austrian General Franz von Jellachich. With the arrival next day of General André Masséna, the Austrians were repulsed with heavy losses on both sides. But over the coming days at Zurich, Masséna was forced to withdraw (2–3 June 1799).

Wetzlar ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)
Two months after French General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan crossed the Rhine and defeated Archduke Charles Louis of Austria at Altenkirchen, he sent General Francois Lefebvre forward to cover the left flank and drive the Austrians out of Wetzlar. Lefebvre was repulsed when the Archduke arrived with reinforcements and Jourdan retired down the east bank of the Rhine (15 June 1796).

Wewak ❙ 1944–1945 ❙ World War II (Pacific)
Australian General Jack Stevens took over command at Aitape in New Guinea and led a slow offensive east against about 50,000 Japanese isolated at Wewak. Heavy fighting and costly losses on both sides forced General Hatazo Adachi to abandon Wewak and take his survivors into the mountains, where they held out until the end of the war (December 1944–11 May 1945).

Wexford ❙ 1649 ❙ British Civil Wars
On a campaign of destruction against Catholic-Royalist Ireland, Oliver Cromwell's New Model Army massacred the inhabitants of Drogheda (12 September) then advanced against Wexford on the Slaney. The town was taken by storm and sacked with further slaughter, prompting the surrender of other towns to avoid a similar fate (11 October 1649).

Weyconda ❙ 1753 ❙ 2nd Carnatic War
See Trichinopoly (2nd)

Wheathampstead ❙ 54 BC ❙ Roman Invasion of Britain
Julius Caesar returned to Britain with a larger force after a failed invasion at Deal and attacked confederated tribes under Cassivellaunus, King of the Catuvellauni. After scattered fighting, the Romans won a decisive action, probably at Wheathampstead near Verulamium (St Albans). When Cassivellaunus sued for peace the Romans left and did not return for almost 100 years (July–September 54 BC).

White Bird Canyon ❙ 1877 ❙ Nez Percé Indian War
Resisting relocation to a reservation, Nez Percé Chief Joseph attacked settlers in northern Idaho. General Oliver Howard sent cavalry Captain David Perry against Joseph's camp, on the Salmon River southeast of Grangeville, where the troopers were ambushed at White Bird Canyon, with 36 killed out of 100. Howard then led a much larger force to the Clearwater River (17 June 1877).

White City ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)
See Indaw

White Hall ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)
On expedition deep into North Carolina from New Bern, Union General John G. Foster dispersed a Confederate force at Kinston. Two days later he met the Confederates further west on the Neuse at White Hall, where General Beverly Robertson tried to block his advance. Inconclusive action allowed Foster to continue advancing the few miles northwest towards Goldsboro (16 December 1862).

Whitehaven ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution
American John Paul Jones in the Sloop Ranger sailed into Solway Firth and landed on England's west coast at Whitehaven, where he spiked two batteries and burned several ships. He then landed on St Mary's Isle in an abortive attempt to kidnap the Earl of Selkirk. Though no blood was shed, Whitehaven was America's only attack on English soil and spread great alarm (22–23 April 1778).

White Horse Hill ❙ 1952 ❙ Korean War

While the Americans struggled at Old Baldy, South Koreans faced a massive Chinese assault on White Horse Hill, west of Chorwon, with a diversionary attack on the French at nearby Arrowhead. Some of the heaviest fighting of the war saw White Horse Hill reportedly change hands 20 times before the Chinese were repulsed. The invaders meantime succeeded at Triangle Hill (6–15 October 1952).

White Marsh ❙ 1777 ❙ War of the American Revolution

British General Sir William Howe defeated George Washington at Brandywine and Germantown, then advanced from Philadelphia to destroy the Continental Army. But after days of manoeuvring and small actions at White Marsh and Edge Hill, Howe failed to bring them to battle. He returned to base and Washington withdrew to winter quarters in Valley Forge (5–8 December 1777).

White Mountain ❙ 1620 ❙ Thirty Years War (Bohemian War)

When Protestant Bohemia elected Frederick V of the Rhine to rival Emperor Ferdinand II, Christian of Anhalt and Bethlen Gabor of Hungary faced a Catholic army under Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly and Charles-Bonaventure de Longueval Comte de Bucqoi. West of Prague at White Mountain the Protestants were routed. Prague was sacked and Frederick fled (8 November 1620).

White Oak Road ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Attacking Confederate defences southwest of besieged Petersburg, Virginia, General Gouvernor K. Warren advanced through Lewis's Farm against General Robert H. Anderson at the White Oak Road and was checked after heavy fighting. The Union was also checked the same day at Dinwiddie Court House, but won decisively next day at Five Forks (31 March 1865).

White Oaks ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Beaver Dam Creek

White Oak Swamp ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

As General Robert E. Lee pursued George B. McClellan's Union army through Seven Days' Battles to White Oak Swamp, southeast of Richmond, Virginia, the Union rearguard under General William Franklin delayed General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson at White Oak Bridge. Two miles away near Glendale, the main force fought a bloody action then withdrew to Malvern Hill (30 June 1862).

White Plains ❙ 1776 ❙ War of the American Revolution

General George Washington conducted a fighting withdrawal north from New York City, from Harlem Heights to White Plains, on the Bronx River in New Jersey, where British General William Howe attempted an encirclement. While the Americans were driven out in heavy fighting, a storm delayed Howe's pursuit and Washington escaped to Connecticut (28 October 1776).

White River ❙ 1879 ❙ Ute Indian Wars

Nathan Meeker was Indian agent at the White River Agency, near modern Meeker, northwest Colorado, whose policy of assimilation provoked a war with the Ute under Jack (Nicaagat) and Colorow. When an army column was besieged at nearby Red Canyon, the Indians murdered Meeker and nine other white men and seized his wife, daughter and another woman (29 September 1879).

White Rock ❙ 218 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Crossing the Alps from Gaul, Carthaginian General Hannibal Barca routed the Allobroge at Chevelu then advanced up the Isère, where he was attacked by other Barbarian tribesmen. Hannibal suffered costly losses east of Séez, near a promontory known as the White Rock, but continued over the Little St Bernard Pass into Italy for victory in November at the Ticinus (October 218 BC).

White Russia ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Belorussia

Whitestone Hill ❙ 1863 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

General Alfred Sully took command after victory at Stony Lake (28 July) pursuing Sioux Chief Inkapaduta to southern North Dakota, where he attacked and destroyed his camp at Whitestone Hill, near modern Merricourt. A very fierce action saw 20 soldiers and about 200 Sioux men, women and children killed. The Indians soon fought again at Killdeer Mountain (3 September 1863).

White Wing ❙ 1966 ❙ Vietnam War

See Bon Son

White Wolf Mountain ❙ 207 ❙ Wars of the Three Kingdoms

After victory over Yuan Shao at Guandu (200), warlord Cao Cao (Ts'ao Ts'ao) fought his sons and eventually pursued Yuan Shang and Yuan Xi northeast into Liaoning, where they allied themselves with Wuhuan leader Tadun. At White Wolf Mountain (Bailung Shan) the allies were routed. Tadun died in battle and the Yuan brothers were killed in exile, leaving Cao Cao unrivalled in northern China.

Whitman Massacre ❙ 1847 ❙ Cayuse Indian War

Angered by a measles outbreak, Cayuse under Tiloukaikt attacked the mission station of Dr Marcus Whitman at Waiilatpu, west of modern Walla Walla, in southeast Washington. Whitman, his wife Narcissa and 12 others were massacred and about 53 women and children were captured for ransom. The murders triggered a war and Tiloukaikt and four others were eventually hanged (29 November 1847).

Wiazma ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Vyazma

Wiazma ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Vyazma

Wibbandun ❙ 568 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

In a determined campaign to expand his kingdom northwest towards the Thames, Aethelbert, the Jute King of Kent, met Ceawlin of the West Saxons and his brother Cutha at Wibbandun (modern Wimbledon). Aethelbert was heavily defeated and the battle helped consolidate Ceawlin as undisputed ruler of Saxon Wessex.

Wichita Agency ❙ 1862 ❙ Kickapoo Indian Wars

As Civil War continued, pro-Union Kickapoo under Papequah attacked the Wichita Agency on Oklahoma's Washita River, where three white traders were killed and Indian Agent Matthew Leeper was terribly wounded. Next day the Kickapoo pursued the local Tonkawa and took over 100 scalps before returning north with massive booty and a large herd of captured horses (23–24 October 1862).

Wieselburg ❙ 1096 ❙ 1st Crusade

With European forces gathering for the First Crusade, Count Emich of Leisengen led a large force east from the Rhine, attacking Jews on the way. Refused passage through Hungary by King Coloman, the Crusaders besieged the fortress of Wieselburg, east of Amstetten in Austria, where they were destroyed in full battle by Hungarian troops. Some of the survivors later joined the main Crusade.

Wiesenthal ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

After defeating Hanover at Langensalza, Prussians invaded Bavaria and General August von Goeben sent General Karl von Wrangel east from Dermbach against General Jakob von Hartmann at Wiesenthal. As at Zella earlier in the day, the Bavarians were driven off. The Prussians regrouped to advance on Kissingen, while Prince Alexander of Hesse fell back west on Frankfort (4 July 1866).

Wiesloch ❙ 1622 ❙ Thirty Years War (Palatinate War)

Supporting Frederick V Palatine of the Rhine against Emperor Ferdinand II, the Protestant mercenary Count Ernst von Mansfeld crossed the Rhine to prevent Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly of Bavaria joining forces with Spanish General Gonzalo Fernández de Cordoba. Tilly suffered a sharp defeat south of Heidelberg near Wiesloch, but joined Cordoba for victory at Wimpfen (27 April 1622).

Wigan ❙ 1651 ❙ British Civil Wars

As Charles II advanced into England after Royalist defeat at Inverkeithing (20 July), James Stanley Earl of Derby landed in Lincolnshire with reinforcements from the Isle of Man. However, his small cavalry force was beaten near Wigan by Puritan Colonel Robert Lilburne. Lord Derby escaped to fight at Worcester (3 September), after which he was court-martialled and shot (25 August 1651).

Wilderness ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

At the start of his offensive against General Robert E. Lee in northern Virginia, Union commander Ulysses S. Grant launched a massive attack in the Wilderness, across the Rapidan west of Fredericksburg. Grant lost more men in a very hard-fought drawn action but did not retreat. Instead, he continued advancing south to resume the fight at Spotsylvania Court House (5–7 May 1864).

Wilhelmstahl ❙ 1762 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

With Russia out of the war, the Prussian-British army of Duke Ferdinand of Brunswick renewed its assault on the French in Hesse. At Wilhelmstahl, near Kassel, the French suffered a costly defeat, concluded by the British cavalry of John Manners Marquis of Granby. Duke Ferdinand soon inflicted another defeat at Lutterberg and drove the French back across the Rhine (24 June 1762).

Wilkomierz ❙ 1435 ❙ Later Wars of the Teutonic Knights

Teutonic knights of the Livonian Order recovered from disaster at Tannenberg (1410) and intervened in the Lithuanian succession, supporting Swidrygiello against Zygmunt Korybut. Attacked at Wilkomierz, north of Vilna, by Zygmunt and Polish General Jakob Koblynski, the Order suffered another decisive defeat, with Grandmaster Frank von Kersdorf routed and killed (1 September 1435).

Willems ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Following the surrender of Landrécies, in northern France, British Dragoons and Hussars under General David Dundas attacked a large infantry formation under General Jacques Bonnaud east of Lille at Willems. The heavily outnumbered cavalry managed to break the French infantry square, inflicting over 2,000 casualties as well as taking 13 guns and 450 prisoners (10 May 1794).

Williamsburg ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Early in the Peninsula campaign in Virginia, Union commander George B. McClellan pursued the Confederates west from Yorktown and met the rearguard under General James Longstreet at Willliamsburg. After Union General Joseph Hooker was initially repulsed, Generals Winfield S. Hancock and Philip Kearny joined the attack and Longstreet continued his withdawal (5 May 1862).

Williamson's Plantation ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Leading Loyalist militia against rebel forces gathering under Colonel Thomas Sumter, Captain Christian Huck attacked James Williamson's Plantation in York County (modern Brattonville, South Carolina) and was surprised by partisan Colonels William Bratton and James McClure.

The Tories were routed, with Huck killed, encouraging Sumter to advance on Rocky Mount (12 July 1780).

Williamsport ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate commander Robert E. Lee withdrew from defeat at Gettysburg and reached Williamsport, Maryland, on the Potomac, where he was attacked by units of George G. Meade's Union army. After a prolonged but inconclusive engagement—and action further east at Boonsboro— Lee withdrew into Virginia, then turned to meet a flank attack at Manassas Gap (6–16 July 1863).

Williams Station Massacre ❙ 1860 ❙ Pyramid Lake Indian War

See Truckee

Willmanstrand ❙ 1741 ❙ 1st Russo-Swedish War

Threatened by Russian claims on Finland, Sweden unwisely declared war and General Charles Erik Lewenhaupt was routed by Russian Marshal Peter Lacy and General James Keith at Willmanstrand (modern Lappeenranta) on Lake Saimaa. Lewenhaupt was later executed after surrendering 17,000 men at Helsingfors (Helsinki). The ensuing peace gave Russia part of Finland (3 September 1741).

Willow ❙ 1848 ❙ Cayuse Indian War

Colonel Cornelius Gilliam marched up the Columbus in pursuit of Indians who had murdered Dr Whitman to win at the Deschutes, then met the Cayuse near the Willow River on the Washington-Oregon Border. Grey Eagle and seven others were killed in a fierce action and Five Crows was mortally wounded. A month later Gilliam met another Indian force at the Tucannon (24 February 1848).

Willow Grange ❙ 1899 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Encouraged by success south of besieged Ladysmith at Chieveley, Boer leaders David Joubert and Louis Botha advanced on Estcourt, where they were attacked at nearby Willow Grange by General Henry Hildyard. Failing to drive the Boers off Brynbella and Beacon Hill, Hildyard fell back on Estcourt with about 80 casualties. However, Joubert soon withdrew to Colenso (22–23 November 1899).

Willows ❙ 377 ❙ 5th Gothic War

See Ad Salices

Wilmington ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Advancing up the Cape Fear River from Fort Fisher, North Carolina, a large Union force under General John M. Schofield attacked Fort Anderson outside Confederate Wilmington. General Robert Hoke was forced to abandon the fort after heavy bombardment (19 February) and General Braxton Bragg evacuated Wilmington, the Confederacy's last Atlantic seaport (12–22 February 1865).

Wilno ❙ 1794 ❙ War of the 2nd Polish Partition

See Vilna

Wilno ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Vilna

Wilno ❙ 1919 ❙ Lithuanian War of Independence

See Vilna

Wilno ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

See Vilna

Wilno ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Vilna

Wilnsdorf ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

As General Jean Victor Moreau crossed the Rhine into Germany, French General Francois Lefebvre advancing on the left met Austrian General Paul Kray in a strong position at Wilnsdorf, southeast of Siegen. Lefebvre took over 600 prisoners in a hard day's fighting and Austrian commander Alexander Wartensleben ordered Kray to withdraw to the Lahn (4 July 1796).

Wilson's Creek ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

A month after tactical victory in southwest Missouri at Carthage, Confederate General Ben McCulloch and militia under Sterling Price met Union General Nathaniel Lyon at Wilson's Creek, south of Springfield. Lyon was killed in a bloody action with over 1,000 lost on either side. Major Samuel D. Sturgis then led a Union retreat to Springfield, buoying the secessionist cause (10 August 1861).

Wilson's Wharf ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

On campaign southeast of Richmond near the James, about 3,000 Confederate cavalry under General Fitzhugh Lee attacked a Union supply depot at Wilson's Wharf, Virginia, on the north side of the river, near Fort Powhatan. Lee was defeated and driven off by black regiments under General Edward A. Wild and the Union offensive soon advanced south towards Totopotomoy (24 May 1864).

Wilton ❙ 871 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

Following the death of Aethelred of Wessex in the Saxon defeat at Merton in March, his brother King Alfred continued the fight against the Viking invasion of Wessex until the Danes attacked him near Wilton, west of Salisbury, the traditional home of Saxon Kings. Lured from his position by a feigned Viking withdrawal, Alfred was defeated and paid a tribute to buy peace.

Wilton ❙ 1143 ❙ English Period of Anarchy

Amid anarchy following the death of Henry I, King Stephen was restored after defeating his cousin the Empress Matilda in 1141 at Winchester and Oxford. She and her half-brother Robert of Gloucester fought on and at Wilton, west of Salisbury, Stephen was routed, only just escaping capture. But when Robert died in October 1147, Matilda retired to Normandy (1 July 1143).

Wimbledon ❙ 568 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

See Wibbandun

Wimborne ❙ 902 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

In a disputed succession following the death of King Alfred of Wessex, his son Edward the Elder found himself at war with his cousin Aethelwald, son of Aethelred of Mercia. Aethelwald fled after being besieged and defeated at Wimborne, near Poole in Dorsetshire, He returned in 905, aided by Danish Vikings, and was killed in battle on the Thames at Holme.

Wimpfen ❙ 1622 ❙ Thirty Years War (Palatinate War)

Following victory near Heidelberg at Wiesloch, a failed attempt by Count Ernst von Mansfeld to split his Catholic enemy left George Frederick Margrave of Baden alone to face the combined forces of Johan Tserclaes Count Tilly and General Gonzalo Fernández de Cordoba. The elderly Margrave was routed north of Heilbronn at Wimpfen and the Protestants soon lost again at Höchst (6 May 1622).

Winceby ❙ 1643 ❙ British Civil Wars

Royalist Sir John Henderson led a fresh offensive near Horncastle in Lincolnshire, attacking Parliamentary troops besieging Bolingbroke Castle. Led by Edward Montague Earl of Manchester, Oliver Cromwell and Sir Thomas Fairfax, the Ironsides cavalry routed Henderson's far superior force at nearby Winceby, capturing 800 prisoners and substantial quantities of arms (10 October 1643).

Winchelsea ❙ 1350 ❙ Hundred Years War

When Spanish Privateer Carlos de la Cerda entered the English Channel from Sluys, he was intercepted off Winchelsea, Sussex, by English ships under personal command of King Edward III. A large number of Spanish ships were destroyed or captured. The victory, coming after the great naval battle at Sluys (1340), ensured

Edward mastery of the sea route to his army at Calais (29 August 1350).

Winchester, England ❙ 1141 ❙ English Period of Anarchy

In a period of anarchy following the death of Henry I, when King Stephen was overthrown and imprisoned by his cousin Matilda at Lincoln in February, his wife Matilda besieged the Empress and her half-brother Earl Robert of Gloucester at Winchester. The defenders fled after six weeks, but Robert was captured at Stockbridge and was later exchanged for the King (August–September 1141).

Winchester, Virginia ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Two days after victory near Front Royal, Virginia, Confederate General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson advanced along the Shenandoah against Winchester. During a decisive action at nearby Bowers Hill, Jackson and Major Richard S. Ewell routed heavily outnumbered Union General Nathaniel P. Banks, who lost over 2,000 men and retreated north across the Potomac (25 May 1862).

Winchester, Virginia ❙ 1863 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

Confederate comander Robert E. Lee prepared his new invasion of the north, sending General Richard Ewell into Virginia's Shenandoah Valley against General Robert H. Milroy at Winchester. A crushing Union defeat cost Milroy about 1,000 casualties and over 3,000 prisoners plus massive losses in supplies and guns. Two days later, Lee himself started north towards Gettysburg (13–15 June 1863).

Winchester, Virginia ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Opequon

Windhoek ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (African Colonial Theatre)

On a determined campaign into German Southwest Africa, South African commander Louis Botha advanced from Swakopmund towards Windhoek, while General Jan Smuts marched north through Gibeon. Windhoek and its powerful wireless station fell after the capture of nearby Karibib and two months later German Governor Theodore Seitz surrendered the whole colony (12 May 1915).

Winkovo ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Vinkovo

Winnington Bridge ❙ 1659 ❙ Royalist Rising

Despite defeat in Britain's Civil War, Royalist plotters organised a regional rising under Sir George Booth. The intended wider revolt failed and Parliamentary troops under John Lambert routed the rebels at Winnington Bridge, near Northwich, Cheshire. Booth was captured dressed as a woman and imprisoned. He was soon released upon the King's restoration in May 1660 (19 August 1659).

Winter Battle of Masuria ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Masurian Lakes

Winter Line ❙ 1943–1944 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Gustav Line

Winterthur ❙ 1292 ❙ Habsburg-Swiss Wars

In an early confederation of Swiss cities against their Habsburg rulers, the army of Zurich marched northeast against the Austrian city of Winterthur, where they were heavily defeated. Albert of Austria then besieged and captured Zurich itself and the confederation was for the time being dissolved. The struggle resumed 60 years later at Nafels (12 April 1292).

Winter War ❙ 1939–1940 ❙ Russo-Finnish War

As World War II began, the Soviet Union attacked Finland, bombing Helsinki and capturing Petsamo, before suffering costly losses at the Mannerheim Line on the Karelian Isthmus, and further north at Tolvajärvi, Suomussalmi and Raate Road. Soviet forces regrouped for a fresh assault on the Mannerheim Line and Finland was forced to sue for peace (30 November 1939–13 March 1940).

Winwaed ❙ 655 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Amid rivalry between Northumbria and Mercia, Penda of Mercia defeated and killed successive Northumbrian Kings at Heathfield (633) and Maserfield (641). But at the River Winwaed, near modern Leeds, Penda was defeated and killed by Oswy of Northumbria, who was avenging his brother Oswald. Northumbrian preeminence was restored until defeat in 679 at Trent (15 November 655).

Wippedesfleet ❙ 465 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Conquest of Britain

Eight years after defeating the Britons at Aegelsthrep and Creccanford, the semi-legendary Jute warrior Hengist received reinforcements from Jutland and achieved a third victory at Wippedesfleet (probably the Wansum Channel near Thanet in Kent), said to be named for the death in battle of the Thane Wipped. The campaign gave Hengist effective control of much of southeast England.

Wisby ❙ 1361 ❙ Wars of the Hanseatic League

See Visby

Wisconsin Heights ❙ 1832 ❙ Black Hawk Indian War

The Sauk Chief Black Hawk campaigned in Wisconsin after defeat at Kellogg's Grove (25 June) and was attacked while crossing the Wisconsin River, west of Madison, by mounted volunteers led by Colonel Henry Dodge and some of General Henry Atkinson's regulars under General James Henry. Black Hawk was badly defeated but escaped to soon fight again at Bad Axe (21 July 1832).

Wise's Fork ❙ 1865 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Kinston

Wissembourg ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Days after defeat near Froeschwiller, Austrian General Dagobert Wurmser withdrew north to Wissembourg, on the Lauter, where he was again attacked by French commander Louis Lazare Hoche. Wurmser suffered heavy casualties and, three days later, the invaders withdrew across the Rhine at Philippsburg, leaving France controlling the left bank of the Rhine (25–26 December 1793).

Wissembourg ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

At the start of the war, Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia invaded in overwhelming force east of Saarbrucken to attack Wissembourg and the nearby fortress of Geissberg, held by advance units of Marshal Marie MacMahon's army under General Abel Douay. The French withdrew after heavy losses—including Douay killed—and MacMahon fell back on Wörth (4 August 1870).

Witebsk ❙ 1812 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Russian Campaign)

See Vitebsk

Witebsk ❙ 1944 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

See Vitebsk

Withlacoochee ❙ 1835 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

Marching south from Fort Drane, Florida, 260 regulars under General Duncan Clinch and 400 militia led by General Richard Call, unaware of the Dade Massacre three days earlier, were attacked crossing the Withlacoochee, southwest of Ocala, near modern Dunellon, by 200 Seminole under Osceola. Clinch had 60 casualties, though the Indians suffered a major defeat (31 December 1835).

Withlacoochee ❙ 1836 ❙ 2nd Seminole Indian War

In a fresh offensive against the Seminole in Florida, General Edmund Gaines led 1,200 men north from Tampa and was attacked by Osceola at the Withlacoochee, near the earlier battlefield east of Dunellon. After a week's siege and 65 casualties, including Gaines severely wounded in the mouth, he was relieved by General Duncan Clinch and both sides withdrew (29 February–6 March 1836).

Wittenweier ❙ 1638 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

When Bernard of Saxe-Weimar advanced down the Rhine to besiege the city of Breisach, Emperor Ferdinand III sent a relief force under Count Johann von Gotz to support Count Friedrich von Savelli (who had escaped from capture at Rheinfelden). The Imperials were repulsed at nearby Wittenweier and an attempt to relieve Breisach in October was repulsed at Sennheim (30 July 1638).

Wittstock ❙ 1636 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

When Imperial forces entered Brandenberg to aid Elector John George of Saxony, they were attacked on the Dosse at Wittstock by a smaller Swedish army under Johan Banér, with Scottish Generals Alexander Leslie and James King. The Elector and General Melchior Hatzfeld suffered an awful loss, which helped avenge the Protestant defeat in 1634 at Nördlingen (24 September 1636).

Wodnesbeorg ❙ 592 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Following his defeat by the British at Fethanleag, King Ceawlin of the West Saxons faced a rebellion by nobles under his nephew Coel, son of Cutha, who had died at Fethanleag. Coel seized part of his uncle's land, then in battle at Wodnesbeorg (Adams's Grave, near Wanborough) in Wiltshire, Ceawlin was defeated and driven out. As a result, Coel secured the crown of Wessex.

Wodnesbeorg ❙ 715 ❙ Anglo-Saxon Territorial Wars

Concerned about the growing power of Wessex, Ceolred of Mercia invaded Wessex and met Ine of the West Saxons in battle at Wodnesbeorg (Adams's Grave, near modern Wanborough) in Wiltshire. After heavy losses on both sides, Ine was defeated and forced to withdraw. An attempt by King Ine to expand west into Cornwall was also defeated six years later at the Camel.

Woevre ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Attempting to take the offensive southeast of Verdun in the Woevre, French forces attacked the northern face of the German salient around St Mihiel. Although the French secured part of the heights at Les Éparges, their offensive was eventually checked with heavy losses. German attacks the following year made Verdun the focus of one of history's bloodiest battles of attrition (6–15 April 1915).

Wogastisburg ❙ 631 ❙ Frankish Imperial Wars

The Frank Samo united the Slavs against the Avars (defeated at Constantinople 626) to secure an area in Moravia, Slovakia, Lower Austria and Carinthia, and become King. Threatened by growing Slavic power, Dagobert I of the Franks sent a large force, supported by Austrasians. They were badly beaten at Wogastisburg (probably in Bohemia), but Samo's "empire" collapsed when he died in 658.

Wohlenschwyl ❙ 1653 ❙ Swiss Peasant War

Faced by a rural rising, 10,000 Swiss under Conrad Werdmüller of Zurich marched against the canton of Aargau, where they were attacked at Wohlenschwyl, near Mellingen, by a massive but poorly armed peasant force under Nicolas Leuenberger and Christian Schybi. The peasants withdrew after an inconclusive battle and within days had been beaten at Gisikon and Herzogenbuchsee (3 June 1653).

Wojnicz ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

Charles X of Sweden beat John II Casimir at Opoczno (6 September), then besieged Cracow before moving east against Polish commanders Stanislas Lanckoronski and Aleksander Koniecpolski at Wojnicz. Although outnumbered, Charles secured a decisive victory and Cracow then fell. The Swedes were soon checked at Jasna Gora and the Poles were able to regroup (23 September 1655).

Wolchefit Pass ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Northern Africa)

Despite Italian surrender at Amba Alagi (19 May), remaining troops held out in central Ethiopia, where Allied forces under General Charles Fowkes converged north of Lake Tana. Some of the heaviest fighting was at Wolchefit Pass, on the road south from Adowa. An elite force of over 3,000 Italian and African troops eventually surrendered, opening the road to Gondar (27 September 1941).

Wolfenbüttel ❙ 1641 ❙ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

Karl Gustav Wrangel took command of the Swedish army following the death of Johann Banér and besieged Wolfenbüttel, just south of Brunswick, supported by Count Johann von Königsmarck and Jean-Baptiste Guébriant. Fierce fighting saw Wrangel drive off the approaching Imperials under Archduke Leopold William and Ottavio Piccolomini, but he was soon superseded (29 June 1641).

Wolf Mountain ❙ 1877 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

In a final campaign against the Sioux following Little Big Horn (June 1876), General Nelson Miles took 500 men and two light guns against Crazy Horse's village on Wolf Mountain, near the Tongue River, just inside the Montana border. The Sioux were beaten and Crazy Horse surrendered just before a final action at Muddy Creek in May. He was shot "trying to escape" (7 January 1877).

Wolgast ❙ 1628 ❙ Thirty Years War (Saxon-Danish War)

Christian IV of Denmark was encouraged by Imperial failure at Stralsund (5 August) and took 12,000 men to Pomerania to seize the city of Wolgast in preparation for invading Mecklenberg. But Imperial commander Albrecht von Wallenstein routed the Danes near Wolgast and drove them back to their ships. Christian sued for peace and Denmark withdrew from the war (2 September 1628).

Wonju ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

As North Korean forces stormed across the border, they were delayed in the central peninsula at Chunchon, then fought their way south towards Wonju against determined resistance by the South Korean Sixth Division. The North Koreans finally reached Wonju and took it after heavy fighting, but General Chon U was relieved of command for falling behind the invasion schedule (2–5 July 1950).

Wood Lake ❙ 1862 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

Colonel Henry Hastings Sibley relieved Fort Ridgely, Minnesota (22 August) and took 1,600 volunteers northwest against Santee Sioux under Little Crow. The Indians ambushed Sibley's scouts south of the Yellow Medicine, then attacked Sibley at nearby Wood Lake, where they suffered a decisive defeat and sued for peace. Thirty-nine were later hanged, but Little Crow escaped (23 September 1862).

Woodsonville ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Western Theatre)

See Rowlett's Station

Woodstock Races ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

See Tom's Brook

Worcester ❙ 1642 ❙ British Civil Wars

See Powick Bridge

Worcester ❙ 1651 ❙ British Civil Wars

Pursued into England after Royalist defeats at Dunbar (September 1650) and Inverkeithing

(20 July), Charles II and General David Leslie reached the Severn, where they were invested at Worcester by Oliver Cromwell's New Model Army. Outnumbered almost two to one, the Cavaliers suffered a decisive defeat. Charles fled to France and the Civil Wars were effectively over (3 September 1651).

Worgaom ❙ 1779 ❙ 1st British-Maratha War

See Wargaom

Worringen ❙ 1288 ❙ German Ducal Wars

Climaxing a five-year war over the Duchy of Limburg, east of the Meuse, Duke John of Brabant decisively defeated Rainald of Guelders and his allies, the Archbishop of Cologne and Henry of Luxembourg, in battle at Worringen, a suburb of modern Cologne. Henry was killed in battle, after which Limburg was joined to Brabant, while Cologne secured self-government (5 June 1288).

Wörth ❙ 1793 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Froeschwiller

Wörth ❙ 1870 ❙ Franco-Prussian War

Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia invaded France through Wissembourg and over 100,000 men marched on Wörth, where Marshal Marie MacMahon held the village of Froeschwiller. Hard fighting saw the Prussians suffer greater casualties, but MacMahon lost a third of his army and fled towards Metz. France suffered another defeat the same day northwest at Spicheren (6 August 1870).

Wounded Knee Creek ❙ 1890 ❙ Sioux Indian Wars

Attempting to suppress the messianic Ghost Dance movement, Colonel James Forsyth attacked Indians at Wounded Knee Creek, north of Pine Ridge, South Dakota. In a one-sided disaster, about 150 Indians were killed, including Chief Big Foot and many women and children. Forsyth lost about 30 killed, many to "friendly fire," in this last action of the Indian Wars (28 December 1890).

Wrotham Heath ❙ 1554 ❙ Wyatt's Rebellion

With Queen Mary of England planning to marry Catholic Philip II of Spain, rebels in Kent under Sir Henry Isley set out to support insurrection by Sir Thomas Wyatt. Near Wrotham, they were met and routed by Henry Lord Abergavenny, with the survivors hunted down at nearby Hartley Wood. Isley escaped but was among about 100 rebels executed after the rebellion ended at Temple Bar (28 January 1554).

Wuchang ❙ 1852–1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Taiping forces repulsed at Changsha soon captured Hanyang and Hankou, then besieged strategic Wuchang across the Yangzi, supported in the field by General Xiang Rong. Joined by Heavenly King Hong Xiuquan, the Taiping stormed the city, followed by a terrible massacre. But facing a costly siege, they advanced downriver towards Anqing (23 December 1852–12 January 1853).

Wuchang (1st) ❙ 1854 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Leading a fresh Taiping offensive west from Nanjing, Huang Zaixing occupied Hanyang and Hanchow, then again besieged strategic Wuchang, defended by Governor Chonglun (later by Qinglin). Although Wuchang fell to Taiping General Weijun after very heavy fighting, it was soon retaken. Qinglin escaped, but he was subsequently executed for abandoning the city (16 February–26 June 1854).

Wuchang (2nd) ❙ 1854 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

After checking the Taiping Western Expedition in Hubeh, Zeng Guofan's Xiang Army advanced down the Yangzi to retake Wuchang, held by a reduced Taiping garrison under Shi Fengkui. In a massive assault by land and river, Zeng destroyed the Taiping fleet and took the city by storm for a great Imperial victory. The Taiping then continued east towards Jiujiang (12–14 October 1854).

Wuchang ❙ 1855 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

While Taiping commander Shi Dakai delayed Imperial commander Zeng Guofan at Jiujiang, he sent Generals Qin Rigang and Chen Yucheng up the Yangzi to attack Wuchang, where they were later joined by reinforcements under Weijun. The city was taken for the last time by a furious Taiping assault and held out against a massive siege a year later (23 February–3 April 1855).

Wuchang ❙ 1856 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Imperial Generals Luo Zenan and Hu Linyi led a renewed offensive against the Taiping on the Yangzi, where they besieged Wuchang, held by Weijun and Shi Fengkui. Luo was killed repulsing a Taiping sortie (6 April) and a Taiping relief force under Gu Longxian was driven off. Wuchang was finally relieved when Shi Dakai arrived with 30,000 Taiping (3 January–August 1856).

Wuchang ❙ 1911 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolution

Following a premature revolutionary bomb explosion in Wuchang, an Imperial crackdown on Republicans triggered an army rising. Governor Ruizheng of Hubei and General Zhang Biao fled and many Manchu troops died before the city fell to rebels. While nearby Hankou and Hanyang were taken and then lost, Wuchang held out until the Chinese Republic was born (9–11 October 1911).

Wuchang ❙ 1926 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

When Nationalist forces converged on Wuchang through Tingsiqiao and Hesheng, the city held off three bloody assaults by General Chiang Kai-shek, then settled down to a siege. Northern General Wu Beifu withdrew when the twin cities of Hanyang and Hankou defected, but Liu Xing held out until finally forced to surrender (7 September–10 October 1926).

Wuhan ❙ 1938 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

With Nanjing captured in late 1937, Japanese forces advanced west against the great Yangzi conurbation of Wuhan. A sprawling five-month battle of attrition was fought as cities and fortresses to the north and east fell to the Central China Expeditionary Army. Chiang Kai-shek finally had to withdraw and early the following year the Japanese turned south against Nanchang (June–25 October 1938).

Wu-hsueh ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

See Wuxue

Wurschen ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (War of Liberation)

See Bautzen

Würzburg ❙ 1796 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

Following defeat at Amberg, French General Jean-Baptiste Jourdan withdrew towards the Rhine. At Würzburg he was heavily defeated by the combined Austrian forces of Archduke Charles and Generals Alexander Wartensleben and Paul Kray. After a rearguard action at Bleichfeld, Jourdan sought an armistice and the Austrians marched northwest towards Aschaffenburg (3 September 1796).

Würzburg ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

Ending the war against Austria's southern German allies, General Erwin von Manteuffel advanced through Tauberbischofsheim and Werbach against Würzburg, held by a small garrison after Prince Karl of Bavaria was defeated at Gerchsheim and withdrew across the Main. Würzburg surrendered after a brief bombardment and Bavaria signed an armistice with Prussia (28 July 1866).

Wuxue ❙ 1853 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Following the bloody capture of Wuchang, Taiping forces under Shi Dakai advanced down the Yangzi and near Wuxue (Wu-hsueh) surprised and destroyed an Imperial garrison of 3,000 under General Enchang, who killed himself in shame. Imperial Comissioner Lu Jianying, approaching with reinforcements, disgracefully turned and fled through Anqing to Nanjing (15 February 1853).

Wynberg ❙ 1795 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Cape Colony

Wynendael ❙ 1708 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

French commanders Louis Duke de Vendôme and James Duke of Berwick were unable to relieve besieged Lille and sent General Louis du Fosse Comte de la Motte against a massive convoy travelling south from Ostend. At Wynendael, near Torhout, Motte's superior force was routed by the escort under Generals John Webb and Cornelius Woudernberg. Lille soon fell (28 September 1708).

Wyoming Massacre ❙ 1778 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Major John Butler attacked rebel militia in Wyoming, marching south from Niagara to the Susquehanna with a large force of Tory militia and Iroquois Indians. Near Forty Fort, southwest of Scranton, Pennsylvania, the patriots under Colonel Zebulan Butler were destroyed, followed by slaughter of fugitives and prisoners and terrible destruction in the Wyoming Valley (3 July 1778).

X

Xaquixaguana ❙ 1548 ❙ Spanish Civil War in Peru

After seizing Peru at Anaquito (January 1546) and defeating a Royalist counter-offensive at Huarina (October 1547), Gonzalo Pizarro faced a fresh Royalist army under Viceroy Pedro de la Gasca. In a battle with few casualties at Xaquixaguana, near Cuzco, Pizarro was beaten. He was executed next day and Royal authority was restored, but anti-Royalists won again in 1554 at Chuquinga (8 April 1548).

Xeres ❙ 711 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Spain

See Guadalete

Xerigordon ❙ 1096 ❙ 1st Crusade

Preceding the First Crusade, pilgrims of the so-called "People's Crusade" reached Civetot on the Asian side of the Bosphorus, where Germans under Rainald of Breis advanced and captured the castle of Xerigordon, east of Nicaea. Besieged by a large Turkish army, they were forced by terrible thirst to surrender after eight days. Most were killed or enslaved (September–October 1096).

Xiamen ❙ 1841 ❙ 1st Opium War

New Superintendent Sir Henry Pottinger renewed war following the truce at Guangzhou by sailing northeast from Hong Kong with troops under General Sir Hugh Gough and a strong fleet under Admiral Sir William Parker. Approaching Xiamen (Amoy) off Fujian, Gough landed to take the island by storm after a naval bombardment. Pottinger then sailed north against Dinghai (25–27 August 1841).

Xi'an ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

During the Communist offensive into northwest China, General Peng Dehuai seized Xi'an (Sian) from General Hu Zongnan, then faced attack by Hu and Muslim commander Ma Pufang. Sent from Taiyuan, General Nie Rongzhen joined Peng and together they utterly defeated Ma, west of Xi'an. The Communists then pursued him further west to seize Lanzhou and Xining (20 May 1949).

Xiang ❙ 1934 ❙ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Soon after Chinese Communists under Zhou Enlai and Mao Zedong began the Long March from Jiangxi, they were attacked crossing the Xiang (Hsiang) River by Nationalist commander He Jian. The most disastrous defeat of the campaign cost the Red Army perhaps 30,000 men, but the march continued west and north through victory at Loushan (25 November–3 December 1934).

Xiangfan ❙ 1268–1273 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Xiangyang

Xiangji ❙ 757 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

When An Lushan captured Luoyang and Chang'an, China's Imperial army regrouped for a counter-offensive under Guo Ziyi. Just south of Chang'an at Xiangji, Guo was initially repulsed before his Uighar cavalry under Pugu Huai'en helped win a decisive victory. Chang'an fell next day, followed by Luoyang (3 December). An Qingxu (son of An Lushan) withdrew to Xiangzhou (13 November 757).

Xiangyang ❙ 1206–1207 ❙ Jin-Song Wars

When Song forces tried to recover land in northern China, a massive Jin (Chin) army advanced to besiege Xiangyang (Hsiang-yang) on the Han in Hubei. Song commander Zhao Chun led a brilliant defence, with night raids destroying Jin boats and siege machines. After three months the Jin withdrew with heavy losses. The Jin also besieged De'an to the southeast (December 1206–March 1207).

Xiangyang ❙ 1268–1273 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

In a massive assault on Song southern China, Mongol Kubilai Khan sent forces to besiege the powerful fortress town of Xiangyang on the Han and nearby Fancheng, held by General Lu Wenhuan. During a five-year blockade—which saw the use of trebuchets— Mongol commanders and local ally Liu Zheng repulsed relief attempts by land and river. The fall of Xiangyang was a decisive blow to the Song.

Xiangzhou ❙ 758 ❙ An Lushan Rebellion

With victory at Xiangji (November 757), Tang forces retook Chang'an and Luoyang, then a claimed 200,000 men under Yu Chao'en besieged An Qingxu (son of An Lushan) at Ziangzhou (modern Anyang). A relief force under Shi Siming finally arrived and inflicted a humiliating defeat on the badly led Imperial army. Shi Siming then overthrew An Qingxu and later retook Luoyang (7 April 758).

Xianyang ❙ 207 BC ❙ Fall of the Qin Dynasty

While rebel warlord Xiang Yu destroyed the main Qin (Ch'in) army at Julu, his ally Liu Bang marched on the capital at Xianyang (Hsien-yang) near modern Xi'an in Shaanxi. After Qin forces were defeated at nearby Lantian, Qin ruler Ziying surrendered himself and the city to Liu Bang. Early next year Xiang Yu looted and burned Xianyang and murdered Ziying, ending the short-lived Qin Dynasty.

Xiao ❙ 627 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

See Yao

Xiaoling ❙ 1631 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

When Manchu leader Abahai (Hong Taiji) besieged Dalinghe, a Ming relief army approached and part of the force under Wu Xiang and Sun Chengzong was beaten by Abahai at the Xiaoling, near Jinzhou. Heavily outnumbered, Abahai later attacked the main force of 40,000, also at the Xiaoling. Ming General Zhang Chun was beaten and captured and later changed sides (11 & 22 October 1631).

Xing-an ❙ 1900 ❙ Russo-Chinese War

In the aftermath of the Boxer Rebellion, Russian forces advanced along the Chinese Eastern Railway into Manchuria, where General Orlov captured Ongon then attacked a large Chinese force entrenched further east at Xing-an. Aided by Cossacks under Colonel Alexander Bulatovich, Orlov forced the Chinese to withdraw, but he was too late to support the capture of Qiqihar (24 August 1900).

Xinmintun ❙ 1925 ❙ Guo Songling's Revolt

Manchurian warlord Zhang Zuolin secured northern China at Shanhaiguan (October 1924), then faced rebellion by General Guo Songling, who invaded Manchuria and reached Xinmintun, west of Mukden (Shenyang). After initial success, cavalry threatened Guo's rear and his officers surrendered (just as allies in China won at Tienstin). Guo was executed and the revolt ended (23 December 1925).

Xoconochco ❙ 1498–1500 ❙ Aztec Wars of Conquest

See Soconusco

Xuan Loc ▌ 1975 ▌ Vietnam War

North Vietnamese General Van Tien Dung captured Ban Me Thuot, in the central highlands, then turned south towards Saigon. However, he found his way blocked by stubborn South Vietnamese resistance on the last defensive position at Xuan Loc, just 35 miles northeast of the capital. Dung lost perhaps 5,000 killed before finally breaking through to advance on Saigon (9–22 April 1975).

Xuge ▌ 707 BC ▌ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

With the Eastern Zhou Dynasty threatened by feudal lords, King Huan led an army against the powerful noble Zheng Zhuang Gong, who had been ousted as Royal Chief Minister. In battle at Xuge (Hsü-ko), the King was wounded by an arrow and the Royal army was embarrassingly defeated. The Zhou became only nominal rulers of China and Zheng assumed leadership among the feudal states.

Xuyi ▌ 451 ▌ Wars of the Six Dynasties

Emperor Taiwu of Wei crushed a Song army at Huatai, near the Yellow River, then continued his southern offensive and reached the Yangzi near Jiankang, before withdrawing to besiege Xuyi (Hsu-I) on the Huai to secure food for his army. Song commander Zangzhi led a courageous defence for weeks and, on reports of a Song fleet approaching upriver, Taiwu returned north, ravaging the countryside.

Xuzhou ▌ 1927 ▌ 2nd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

After securing the lower Yangzi at Longtan, east of Nanjing, Nationalist forces consolidated central China and General He Yingqin led a fresh offensive against Northern warlord Sun Zhuanfang at Xuzhou (Hsuchow) in northern Jiangsu. Sun launched a massive counter-offensive, though he was finally driven off and withdrew northeast into Shandong (14–16 December 1927).

Xuzhou ▌ 1937–1938 ▌ Sino-Japanese War

Following the Rape of Nanjing, Japanese forces advanced northwest against the strategic railway city of Xuzhou (Hsuchow), while other units marched south through Jinan. After months of heavy fighting north and east of the city, including the Japanese defeat at Taierzhuang, the Chinese had to avoid further losses and evacuated Xuzhou (23 December 1937–19 May 1938).

Xuzhou ▌ 1948–1949 ▌ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Huaihai

Y

Yaguachi ❙ 1821 ❙ Ecuadorian War of Independence

After taking command of Ecuador's Patriot army at Guayaquil, General Antonio José de Sucre marched out against approaching Spanish commander Melchior Aymerich. To the northeast at Yaguachi, General José Mires destroyed a Royalist column, capturing Colonel Francisco González to avenge previous defeat at Huachi. Aymerich was defeated a month later at Huachi (19 August 1821).

Yahni ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

General Mikhail Loris-Melikov supported the Russian siege of Kars in the Caucasus by capturing Turkish positions on nearby hills known as the Great and Little Yahni. Heavy Russian casualties made him pause and Ahmed Mukhtar Pasha led a brilliant counter-attack, driving the Russians off. However, the Turkish commander was routed ten days later at Aladja Dagh (2–4 October 1877).

Yai-shan ❙ 1279 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Yashan

Yalu–Naval ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Marching north through Korea after driving the Chinese out of Pyongyang, Japanese Marshal Aritomo Yamagata soon reached the Yalu, strongly defended by General Song Qing. In a broad assault at Hushan, Jiuliancheng and Dandong, Yamagata stormed across the river, capturing massive supplies of guns and munitions, then advanced into Manchuria towards Caohekou (24–25 October 1894).

Yalu ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

Japan's First Army (General Tamemoto Kuroki) marched north through Korea after landing at Chemulpo (9 February) and approached the vital Yalu crossing, weakly defended by advance Russian units under General Mikhail Ivanovich Zasulich. A mismanaged disaster near Uiju saw Zasulich sacrificed with over 2,000 casualties. The Japanese then crossed into Manchuria (25 April–1 May 1904).

Yalu (naval) ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Haiyang

Yamazaki ❙ 672 ❙ Jinshin War

When Japanese Emperor Tenji died, a war of succession broke out between his son and heir Prince Otomo (later Emperor Kobun) and his brother Prince Oama, who raised forces against his nephew and advanced on the capital Otsu. South of Otsu at Yamazaki, Otomo was defeated and committed suicide. Oama took the throne as Emperor Temmu and moved his capital to Asuka.

Yamazaki ❙ 1582 ❙ Japan's Era of the Warring States

With his army besieging Takamatsu, Oda Nobunaga in Kyoto was attacked and then forced to kill himself by his own General, Akechi Mitsuhide. Securing Takamatsu, Loyalist commander Toyotomi Hideyoshi pursued the traitor to Yamazaki, southeast of Kyoto, where he and his allies were routed. Mitsuhide was later killed while fleeing and Hideyoshi became effective ruler (2 July 1582).

Yamen ❙ 1279 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

See Yashan

Yanacocha ❙ 1835 ❙ Bolivian-Peruvian War

When Peruvian President Luis José de Obregoso was overthrown, the acquisitive President Andrés Santa Cruz of Bolivia marched into Peru, supposedly to restore Obregoso, and met former President Agustín Gamarra at Yanacocha, southeast of Cuzco near Urcos. Gamarra suffered a decisive defeat and Santa Cruz marched north for further victory near Arequipa at Socabaya (11 August 1835).

Yan'an ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

A co-ordinated Nationalist offensive into Shaanxi saw two armies under General Hu Zongnan converge on the Communist capital at Yan'an, where outnumbered commander Peng Dehuai fought a defensive action just south of the city. Mao Zedong's Central Committee withdrew and the Nationalists took Yan'an and perhaps 10,000 prisoners. They in turn withdrew after Yichuan (15–19 March 1947).

Yanbu (1st) ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

When Sharif Hussein, Emir of Mecca, proclaimed the Arab Revolt against Turkey in the Hejaz, his son Abdullah took a large force against Yanbu 'al Bahr. The Red Sea port surrendered and became an important supply base for the Arab Revolt. When the revolt later began to stall, the successful defence of Yanbu helped rekindle support for the cause (27 July 1916).

Yanbu (2nd) ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)

While Arab forces besieged Medina, further west Prince Feisal tried to hold the Red Sea port of Yanbu. Attacked by Turks from Medina, the Arabs were defeated and fell back into the town. British warships offshore under Captain William Boyle forced the Turks to withdraw, which enhanced the prestige of the Arab Revolt and encouraged the advance north on Wejh (8–16 December 1916).

Yancun ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

With the legations in Beijing besieged by anti-foreign Boxers, a 20,000-strong relief force left Tianjin and advanced through Beicang to Yangcun (Yangts'un—modern Wuqing), where General Song Qing tried to defend the Bei He. In the last heavy fighting before the Allies reached Beijing, over 100 British, French, Russian and American troops were killed, many by "friendly fire" (6 August 1900).

Yangts'un ❙ 1900 ❙ Boxer Rebellion

See Yancun

Yangzhou ❙ 1645 ❙ Manchu Conquest of China

When the Manchu captured Beijing, Ming Prince Fu (Zhu Yousong) set up court in Nanjing with the Imperial name Hongguang. Manchu Prince Dodo, fresh from Tongguan, then attacked Yangzhou, north of Nanjing, where General Shi Kefa was defeated and killed. An exemplary massacre followed and Prince Fu fled. In 1659 the Ming were routed trying to retake Nanjing (13–20 May 1645).

Yangzi Incident ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

When the British frigate Amethyst entered the Yangzi to evacuate embassy staff at Nanjing, she was shelled by Communist artillery and driven ashore with 17 killed, including Captain Bernard Skinner. After months of negotiation, and costly losses in a relief attempt, naval attaché Commander John Kerans eluded gunfire and Amethyst successfully escaped downstream (20 April–31 July 1949).

Yangzi Pass ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

After General Feodor Keller failed to halt General Tamemoto Kuroki's First Army at the Motien Pass, near the Lan River north of Port Arthur (modern Lüshun) in Manchuria, he tried to defend the nearby Yangzi (Yang-Tzu) Pass, west of the Lan. When Keller was killed by shrapnel, his successor, General Kashtalinksi, abandoned Haichang and withdrew to Liaoyang (31 July 1904).

Yanling ❙ 575 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

Following a period of truce on the Yellow River, the state of Zheng transferred its allegiance from Jin in the north to Chu in the south and Duke Li of Jin sent a large army under Luan Shu and Shi Xie (victor in 589 at An). At Yanling in Zheng, King Gong of Chu and Marshal Zifan suffered a decisive defeat and Zifan killed himself. Duke Li was soon overthrown in a coup which weakened Jin.

Yannina ❙ 1912–1913 ❙ 1st Balkan War

See Jannina

Yanshi ❙ 618 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty

During power struggles within the ailing Sui Empire, Li Mi of Henan took a large force against Luoyang, held by Sui general Wang Shichong, who led a powerful sortie against Li's camp. In battle at Yanshi, Li was decisively defeated and fled west to Chang'an to submit to Li Yuan's newly proclaimed Tang Dynasty. In 621 Wang himself surrendered to a Tang army at Luoyang (5–6 October 618).

Yantra ❙ 1810 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

See Batin

Yanzi ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

During the weeklong "Battles of the Pyrenees," French General Honoré Reille's retreat towards France (after the defeat at Sorauren) was blocked in the valley at Yanzi by Spanish troops led by General Francisco Longa. The French eventually broke through and continued their withdrawal across the Bidassoa, though at the cost of more than 300 casualties (1 August 1813).

Yao ❙ 627 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

The powerful Chinese states of Jin (Chin) and Qin (Ch'in) had been allies at Chengpu (632), but following the death of Duke Wen of Jin (628), Duke Mu of Qin determined to attack the disputed state of Zheng. New Duke Xiang of Jin took his army and met the invaders at the Yao (sometimes Xiao) Gorge, south of the Yellow River. The Qin suffered a disastrous defeat with three generals captured.

Yarmuk ❙ 634 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

Muslim forces under General Khalid ibn al-Walid advanced from victory at Ajnadin (30 July) and drove the Byzantine army back to the Yarmuk River, in northeastern Jordan, and inflicted a defeat at Yaqusa. The Byzantines withdrew, effectively opening the door to the invasion of Syria, where Khalid won early next year at Fihl and Marj as-Suffar as he advanced on Damascus (September 634).

Yarmuk ❙ 636 ❙ Muslim Conquest of Syria

After Muslims captured Damascus, Emperor Heraclius sent a large army under Theodorus Trithurius, aided by Armenian Prince Vahan. Muslim General Khalid ibn al-Walid abandoned Damascus and withdrew down the Jordan to the Yarmuk, where Theodorus was defeated and killed. Khalid then re-occupied Damascus, ending a millennium of Greco-Roman Levant (20 August 636).

Yashan ❙ 1279 ❙ Mongol Wars of Kubilai Khan

After Mongol Kubilai Khan attacked southern China and captured the Song capital Hangzhou (1276), Imperial Regent Zhang Shijie fled and finally took refuge on Yashan Island near Guangzhou with the infant Emperor Bing. Defeated by Mongol ships near Macao, Admiral Lu Xiufu leapt into the sea to drown with the child. Kubilai had already declared himself Emperor (19 March 1279).

Yashima ❙ 1185 ❙ Gempei War

Defeated at Ichinotani (March 1184), the Taira fled to their stronghold at Yashima on Shikoku in Japan's Inland Sea, while Minamoto Yoshitsune took time to rebuild his army with troops from his brother Yoritomo in Kamakura. Yoshitsune then launched a powerful attack on the island fortress and Taira Tomomori withdrew west with the boy-Emperor Antoku to Dannoura (23 March 1185).

Yataití-Corá ❙ 1866 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Six weeks after victory at Tuyutí, the Argentine, Brazilian and Uruguayan allies under General Bartolomé Mitre came under attack by Paraguayan forces just to the northeast at Yataití-Corá, between the Paraguay and the upper Parana. After a drawn action, with costly losses on both sides, the Paraguayans withdrew under cover of darkness. They won a week later at Boquerón (11 July 1866).

Yatay ❙ 1865 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Early in Paraguay's offensive against its neighbours, Dictator Francisco Solano López sent his vanguard under Major Pedro Duarte to the Uruguay, where he was met on the Argentine side at Yatay by a small allied force under General Venancio Flores. Duarte was defeated and captured with 2,000 casualties and the Paraguayans withdrew across the river to Uruguayana (17 August 1865).

Yaunis Khan ❙ 1516 ❙ Ottoman-Mamluk War

With Mamluk Sultan Kansu al-Gauri killed in northern Syria at Marj-Dabik (24 August), his nephew Touman Beg marched to meet the invasion by Sultan Selim I. Near Gaza at Yaunis Khan (now Khan Yunis), Ottoman Vizier Hadim Sinan destroyed the Mamluks with artillery and seized Gaza, killing the garrison. Meanwhile, Touman withdrew and met the invaders at Ridanieh (28 October 1516).

Ybate ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Ita Ybate

Ybibobo ❙ 1934 ❙ Chaco War

As the Paraguayan army advanced north into the Chaco Boreal through victory at Yrendagüe, a Paraguayan detachment under Colonel Nicolás Delgado reached the Parapití and surrounded the outnumbered Bolivians at Ybibobo. Delgado won, capturing 2,000 prisoners and massive supplies, but the Paraguayan advance was checked in the following April at Boyuibé (27–30 December 1934).

Ye ❙ 528 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

Amid rivalry to control the Wei Court at Luoyang, Erzhu Rong appointed a puppet Emperor then turned east with his General Hou Jing against the rebel Ge Rong. Outside Ye, near modern Anyang, Ge Rong's much larger army was defeated and he was captured and executed. Within two years Erzhu Rong was killed in a palace coup and in 532 his successor Erzhu Zhao was defeated near Ye at Hanling.

Yecla ❙ 1813 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

Opening a new French offensive in Valencia by Marshal Louis Suchet, General Jean-Isidore Harispe attacked an isolated Spanish force under General Francisco Elio at Yecla, inland from Alicante. Elio's Murcian army was routed and fled south towards Jumilla, while Suchet's main force continued east to another victory next day at Biar (11 April 1813).

Yelizavetpol ❙ 1826 ❙ Russo-Persian Wars

After Persian forces invaded Russia and lost at the Shamkhor, Prince Abbas Mirza raised his siege of Shusha and marched north towards Yelizavetpol (later Kirovabad and Gandzha) against Russian Generals Ivan Paskevich and Valerian Gregorevich Madatov. Russian artillery destroyed the Persian cavalry, but war continued until the fall of Erivan and Tehran (13 September 1826).

Yellow Bayou ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

At the end of his Red River Campaign in Louisiana, repulsed at Mansfield and Pleasant

Hill, Union commander Nathaniel P. Banks won at Mansura, then two days later sent General Joseph A. Mower against General Richard Taylor's Confederates further east at Yellow Bayou, near Simmesport. Both sides withdrew after indecisive action and Banks escaped over the Atchafayala (18 May 1864).

Yellow Creek ❙ 1774 ❙ Cresap's War

Daniel Greathouse campaigned against Indians on the Ohio, where he attacked the settlement at Yellow Creek, north of modern Weirton, and killed a number of people, including the wife of leading Shawnee warrior James Logan. The massacre triggered war against militia under Michael Cresap (which became Lord Dunmore's War) eventually decided in October at Point Pleasant (30 April 1774).

Yellow Ford ❙ 1598 ❙ Tyrone Rebellion

See Blackwater

Yellow River ❙ 1227 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan

The last campaign of the Mongol Genghis Khan saw him march against the Tangut of Xi Xia in northwest China, where he inflicted a decisive defeat at the frozen Yellow River (Helanshan Mountain). He later besieged the Tangut capital at Ningxia, but died before it fell. In accordance with Khan's deathbed wish, when Tangut Emperor Li Xian surrendered, he was put to death. Ningxia was destroyed.

Yellow Sea ❙ 1592 ❙ Japanese Invasion of Korea

See Hansan

Yellow Sea ❙ 1894 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

See Haiyang

Yellow Sea ❙ 1904 ❙ Russo-Japanese War

With besieged Port Arthur (modern Lüshun) exposed to Japanese artillery fire, Russian Admiral Vilgelm Vitgeft was ordered to Vladivostok and sailed into the Yellow Sea with six battleships, three cruisers and eight destroyers. In a bloody fleet action with Admiral Heihachiro Togo, Vitgeft was killed. Most of the Russian ships fled back to Port Arthur and were later sunk (10–11 August 1904).

Yellow Tavern ❙ 1864 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

While the Union and Confederate armies fought a massive action at Spotsylvania Court House, Union General Philip Sheridan led cavalry deep into Confederate Virginia and was blocked by General James "Jeb" Stuart just north of Richmond at Yellow Tavern. Stuart was defeated and mortally wounded and Sheridan continued south to join the Union army on the James (11 May 1864).

Yemama ❙ 633 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

See Akraba

Yemoji ❙ 1892 ❙ British Conquest of Nigeria

Governor Gilbert Carter resolved to extend British rule in Nigeria and sent Colonel Francis Scott of the Gold Coast Constabulary north from Ipe. Falling back through Pobo and Majoda, Ijebu warriors tried to defend a pass on the Yemoji River near Imagbon. Heavy fighting saw Scott's Hausas distinguish themselves and the nearby capital Ijebu Ude surrendered next day (19 May 1892).

Yenan ❙ 1947 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Yan'an

Yenangyaung ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (Burma-India)

Withdrawing north from the fall of Prome (1 April), British under General Bruce Scott tried to hold Yenangyaung and the nearby Magwe oilfields, boldly supported to the north by Chinese General Sun Liren. Fighting in extreme heat, the Allies secured some local success against General Shozo Sakurai before they finally had to withdraw with heavy losses in men and equipment (10–19 April 1942).

Yenbo ❙ 1916 ❙ World War I (Middle East)
See Yanbu

Yenikale ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War
See Kerch

Yenikale Strait ❙ 1790 ❙ Catherine the Great's 2nd Turkish War
After attacking Turkish harbours on the Black Sea, Admiral Fedor Ushakov's 16 ships met 18 Turkish ships under Kapudan Pasha Hussein in the Strait of Yenikale, south of Kerch, attempting to land forces in the Crimea. The resulting two-hour action was fierce but indecisive and the damaged Turks withdrew. The rival fleets met again in late August west of the Crimea at Tendra (8 July 1790).

Yenisehir ❙ 1481 ❙ Ottoman Civil Wars
Sultan Bayazid II faced rebellion by his brother Cem, who captured Bursa in northern Anatolia and declared himself Sultan (28 May). However, 30 miles to the east at Yenisehir, Cem was overwhelmed by Imperial janissaries under Ahmad Gedik Pasha. The defeated rebel fled to Egypt and later to the Christians in Europe, who used him as a pawn in international politics (20 June 1481).

Yenitsá ❙ 1912 ❙ 1st Balkan War
See Jannitsa

Yen-ling ❙ 575 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era
See Yanling

Yen-shih ❙ 618 ❙ Rise of the Tang Dynasty
See Yanshi

Yerbas Buenas ❙ 1813 ❙ Chilean War of Independence
Following their repulse in central Chile at Cancha Rayada (29 March), Patriots under Juan de Dios Puga Córdova pursued guerrilla leader Ildefonso Elorreaga into the hills of Yerbas Buenas, south of the Maule, where they unexpectedly met the entire Royalist army of Antonio Pareja. Puga Córdova suffered a terrible defeat and his attempted withdrawal became a disastrous pursuit (26 April 1813).

Yerua ❙ 1839 ❙ Argentine Civil Wars
In renewed resistance to Argentine Dictator Juan Manuel de Rosas, Juan Galo Lavalle entered the Uruguay River with French aid. At Yerua, south of Concordia, he heavily defeated Federalist General Pascual Echague, Governor of Entre Rios. However, forces loyal to Rosas soon won in the south at Chascomús and Echague defeated Lavalle in July 1840 at Sauce Grande (22 September 1839).

Yevpatoriya ❙ 1855 ❙ Crimean War
See Eupatoria

Yichuan ❙ 1948 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War
Communist General Peng Dehuai led an offensive in Shaanxi, where he encircled Yichuan then savaged the relief force of General Liu Kan. Severe fighting saw Liu and perhaps 5,000 killed and 18,000 captured, with 5,000 more killed with the fall of Yichuan itself. As a result, on 22 April, Nationalist General Hu Zongnan had to abandon nearby Yan'an (29 February–1 March 1948).

Yiling ❙ 222 ❙ Wars of the Three Kingdoms
To avenge the execution of his sworn brother Guan Yu after Fancheng (219), Liu Bei of Shu led a large army against Sun Quan of Wu. An extended campaign along the Yangzi around Yiling (modern Yichang) saw Liu Bei and his commander Huang Quan decisively defeated by the brilliant young Lu Xun. Victory secured Wu's control of Jingzhou and led to uneasy peace between Wu and Shu.

Yingchuan ❙ 548–549 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars
Taking advantage of rebellion by Hou Jing of Eastern Wei, a Western Wei army under Wang Sizheng advanced deep into enemy territory and occupied the fortified town of Yingchuan on the Wei, southeast of Luoyang. A large Eastern Wei army under Gao Yue besieged the city and, after costly assaults, diverted the river to flood the area. Wang finally surrendered to Gao Cheng of Eastern Wei.

Yingkou ❙ 1895 ❙ Sino-Japanese War

Continuing Japan's offensive in southern Manchuria, General Motoharu Yamaji marched from Taipingshan against Yingkou, joined by General Taro Katsura advancing west from Niuzhuang. Crossing the frozen Liao towards nearby Tianzhuangtai for one of the largest battles of the campaign, Yamaji decisively defeated Chinese commander Song Qing to effectively end the war (9 March 1895).

Yongchon ❙ 1950 ❙ Korean War

North Korean forces launched a major assault on the north of the Pusan Perimeter, in southeast Korea, attempting to advance through Yongchon and threaten Taegu, under attack to the west. Intense fighting by South Korean troops, with American support, saw Yongchon change hands several times before the Communist offensive was finally repulsed with very heavy losses (5–13 September 1950).

York, England ❙ 866–867 ❙ Viking Wars in Britain

On a major offensive into Northumbria, a large Danish force from East Anglia under Ivar, Ubba and Halfdan—sons of the warrior Ragnar Lodbrok—captured the key city of York. A few months later, the local rulers, Aelle and Osbeorht, united to regain York, but both were killed in a terrible Saxon defeat. The city then became capital of Danish England (November 866–21 March 867).

York, England ❙ 1069–1070 ❙ Norman Conquest of Britain

Resisting the Norman conquest of northern England after Hastings, Northumbrian Earls Waltheof and Gospatrick and a large Danish force under Asbiorn attacked York, which fell after eight days with the 3,000-strong Norman garrison massacred. King William I later persuaded the Danes to withdraw, then retook the undefended city and devastated the entire district.

York, England ❙ 1644 ❙ British Civil Wars

In the wake of Royalist defeat at Selby (11 April), William Cavendish Earl of Newcastle withdrew to York under siege by Ferdinando Lord Fairfax and Scottish forces under Alexander Leslie Earl of Leven. Royalist forces reached York (31 June), but after their defeat at nearby Marston Moor, Newcastle fled abroad and Sir Thomas Glenham surrendered the city (22 April–16 July 1644).

York, Maine ❙ 1692 ❙ King William's War

In a French counter-offensive against the British in Acadia (modern Nova Scotia), Governor Joseph Robineau de Villebon reoccupied Port Royal, then sent Canadians and Abnaki Indians against York, on the coast of Maine, northeast of Kittery. Attacking in heavy snow, they killed 48 colonists then withdrew with perhaps 70 prisoners. The next major offensive was against Wells (5 February 1692).

York, Ontario ❙ 1813 ❙ War of 1812

Captain Isaac Chauncey and 1,700 troops under General Zebulan Pike attacked the British naval base on Lake Ontario at York (modern Toronto) and overwhelmed General Sir Roger Sheaffe, who had to withdraw. The town was looted and destroyed, but the magazine exploded killing many Americans, including General Pike. The British soon retaliated at Sackets Harbour (27 April 1813).

York River, Virginia ❙ 1644 ❙ Powhatan Indian Wars

Hearing of civil war in England, Opechancanough of the Algonquin Confederacy renewed war against Colonial Virginia, where a coordinated attack on outlying settlements on the York River saw about 300 settlers killed. Governor Sir Wiliam Berkeley then led local militia and friendly Indians and crushed the confederacy. Opechancanough was later captured and shot in custody (18 April 1644).

Yorktown ❙ 1781 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Withdrawing from New York to Virginia, British commander Charles Earl Cornwallis defended Yorktown, on Chesapeake Bay, against a large American and French force under General George Washington and Jean-Baptise Comte de Rochambeau. Earl Cornwallis surrendered after costly assaults and naval defeat off Chesapeake Capes and Britain lost her American colony (6–19 October 1781).

Yorktown ❙ 1862 ❙ American Civil War (Eastern Theatre)

At the start of the Peninsula campaign in Virginia, Union commander George B. McClellan marched on Yorktown and General Fitz-John Porter besieged the city, held by Generals John B. Magruder and Joseph E. Johnston. After needless delay and about 300 casualties, the Confederates slipped away through Williamsburg just as McClellan was ready to attack (5 April–4 May 1862).

Youghiogany ❙ 1754 ❙ Seven Years War (North America)

See Great Meadows

Young's House ❙ 1780 ❙ War of the American Revolution

Colonel Joseph Thompson led about 250 Connecticut troops on a mid-winter patrol into Westchester New York and was met near Mt Pleasant by a larger force of British, Hessians and Tories under Colonel Chapple Norton. Sharp fighting around Joseph Young's House cost the Americans 14 killed, many wounded and over 100 captured, including Thompson and his officers (3 February 1780).

Ypacarai ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

See Ita Ybate

Ypres ❙ 1794 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (1st Coalition)

See Hooglede

Ypres ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

German General Erich von Falkenhayn launched a large-scale offensive to break the line in Flanders, sending forces against the Belgians on the Yser. He then attacked British Sir John French and French Ferdinand Foch around Ypres. Action at Langemark, Gheluvelt and Nonne Boschen cost both sides terrible losses, but the Allies held the vital Ypres salient (15 October–15 November 1914).

Ypres ❙ 1915 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

The first use of gas on the Western Front reputedly occurred when Duke Albrecht launched a huge advance against the Allied salient around Ypres in the Second Battle of Ypres. Severe fighting at Hill 60, Gravenstafel, St Julien, Frezenberg and Bellewaarde saw the salient substantially reduced at the cost of 70,000 Allied and 35,000 German casualties, but Ypres did not fall (22 April–25 May 1915).

Ypres ❙ 1917 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

Following success at Messines (14 June), commander Sir Douglas Haig ordered the bloody offensive called Third Ypres, or Passchendaele. Fighting at Pilkem Ridge, Langemark, Menin Road, Polygon Wood, Broodseinde, Poelcappelle and Passchendaele saw the British salient only slightly enlarged at the cost of over 300,000 Allied and 250,000 German casualties (31 July–6 November 1917).

Ypres ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

See Lys

Yrendagüe ❙ 1934 ❙ Chaco War

Paraguayan Colonel Eugenio Garay marched north to the Chaco Boreal from victory at Cañada el Carmen (16 November) to attack Bolivia's Colonel David Toro at Yrendagüe, while Colonel Rafael Franco attacked to the east at Picuiba. A decisive rout saw Bolivia sacrifice up to 4,000 dead (many from thirst and heat) and 3,000 captured. They lost again at Ybibobo (8–11 December 1934).

Yser ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Western Front)

The Belgian army was driven out of Antwerp, then tried to defend the River Yser in Flanders, between Ypres and the port of Nieuwport. Attacked by German forces under Prince Albrecht, the Belgian and French Allies fought a bold defence. In the face of terrible losses, they flooded the area to halt the German advance, then moved east to join the main battles around Ypres (18–29 October 1914).

Ystradowen ❙ 1032 ❙ Anglo-Welsh Wars

In one of the decisive battles between England and Wales, Saxon forces landed at the mouth of the Dawen and advanced against Cynan Seisyllt (Cecil) at Ystradowen, west of Cardiff. Cynan and his two sons were killed in very hard fighting, but his brother Robert arrived overnight from the Wye and routed the invaders at nearby Llancwywan, driving them back to their ships.

Ytororó ❙ 1868 ❙ War of the Triple Alliance

Pursuing the defeated Paraguayan army south of Asunción, the Argentine, Brazilian and Uruguayan allies under Marshal Luíz Aldes, Marquis of Caxias, met General Bernadino Caballero attempting to defend the Ytororó River near Ypané. Heavy fighting saw 1,200 Paraguayans and 3,000 Brazilians killed and Caballero fell back towards Avaí (6 December 1868).

Yubi ❙ 546 ❙ Wei Dynastic Wars

After Western Wei was halted at Mangshan (543), fighting resumed between the great rivals in northern China when Gao Huan of Eastern Wei advanced down the Fen to besiege Yubi. (His previous attempt in 542 failed in the face of a great snowstorm.) The Western garrison under Wei Xiao Kuan held out against tunnelling and assault and after two months Gao withdrew. He died a few weeks later.

Yugoslavia ❙ 1941 ❙ World War II (Southern Europe)

See Belgrade

Yü-hsien ❙ 1232 ❙ Mongol Conquest of China

See Yuxian

Yuhuatai ❙ 1862 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Imperial commander Zeng Guoquan advanced against the Taiping capital at Nanjing, seizing nearby Yuhuatai Hill (30 May), where his 20,000 men eventually faced assault by perhaps 200,000 Taiping under Generals Li Xiucheng and Li Shixian. The Taiping were defeated and withdrew after six weeks of bloody fighting and Zeng maintained his siege of Nanjing (13 October–26 November 1862).

Yung'an ❙ 1851 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

As a massive Taiping army withdrew through Guangxi, pursued by Imperial Commissioner Saishanga and Generals Xiang Rong and Wulantai, rebel General Luo Dakang surprised Yung'an (modern Mengshan) on the Meng River. The strategic town fell by storm and was held against siege until April 1852, when the Taiping withdrew through the Dadong Mountains (25 September 1851).

Yungay ❙ 1839 ❙ Chilean War of the Confederation

When President Andrés Santa Cruz of Bolivia seized Peru after victory at Socabaya and imposed confederation, Chile felt threatened and sent General Manuel Bulnes, who captured Lima. The following year Bulnes met the Bolivian army southeast of Concepción at Yungay. Santa Cruz was defeated and overthrown—fleeing to Ecuador—and the confederation came to an end (20 January 1839).

Yungchen ❙ 1949 ❙ 3rd Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

See Chenguanzhuang

Yuxian ▌ 1232 ▌ Mongol Conquest of China

In renewed invasion of northern China, the Mongols Ogedai and Tolui (sons of Genghis Khan) and General Subetai crossed the Yellow River. After capturing Luoyang, they met the outnumbered Jin army near Yuxian in Henan, where Jin General Wan Yen Yi was defeated and executed. The Mongols then marched northeast to besiege the Jin capital at Kaifeng (February 1232).

Yzer Spruit ▌ 1902 ▌ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Jacobus de la Rey resumed his offensive in the western Transvaal after Kleinfontein, attacking a convoy and 700 men sent by Colonel Stanley von Donop northeast from Wolmaranstad to Klerksdorp. At Yzer Spruit, 13 miles from Klerksdorp, the British lost 53 killed and the rest wounded or captured. De la Rey seized hundreds of horses and half a million rifle rounds (24 February 1902).

Z

Zab ❙ 130 BC ❙ Later Syrian-Parthian War

Marching into Mesopotamia with a huge army to recover land lost to the Parthians, Seleucus Antiochus VII of Syria defeated Phraates II of Parthia in a great battle on the upper Zab River. While the victory enabled Antiochus to recapture the key cities of Babylon and Ecbatana, his defeat and death near Ecbatana the following year ended Syrian ambition east of the Euphrates.

Zab ❙ 591 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

See Ganzak

Zab ❙ 627 ❙ Byzantine-Persian Wars

See Nineveh

Zab ❙ 750 ❙ Muslim Civil Wars

In a decisive move to suppress the rival Caliph Abdu'l-Abbas (who was descended from the Prophet's uncle Abbas) the last Umayyad Caliph, Merwan II, took a large army to Mesopotamia and was defeated at Karbala in August 749. On the River Zab, near the ruins of ancient Nineveh, he was again defeated and fled. Abdu'l-Abbas then established the Abbasid Caliphate (25 January 750).

Zabern ❙ 1525 ❙ German Peasants' War

Erasmus Gerber led peasant rebels in Alsace, where they seized the city of Zabern (modern Saverne), northwest of Strasbourg, provoking intervention by Duke Antoine of Lorraine. With 60,000 French, Spanish and other troops, the Duke attacked and utterly routed about 7,000 peasants at nearby Lupstein. He then regained Zabern and subdued Alsace with terrible violence (16 May 1525).

Zabid ❙ 525 ❙ Aksum-Sabaean War

At the height of Aksumite power in Ethiopia, Emperor Ella Asbeha took a large force across the Red Sea against Saba (in modern Yemen) whose Jewish rulers were persecuting Christians. On the beach at Zabid, King Yusuf Dhu Nuwas was defeated and killed, ending the once-mighty Empire of Saba (biblical Sheba). In 570, Persian allies of Saba seized the country and forced Aksum to withdraw.

Zacatecas ❙ 1914 ❙ Mexican Revolution

With Federal forces in central Mexico retreating after Torréon and Paredón, Venustiano Carranza sent Pánfilo Natera—and later Francisco (Pancho) Villa—against stubbornly held Zacatecas. After ten days of bombardment the ruined city fell by storm, with perhaps 6,000 Federal troops killed in the costliest defeat of the war. Carranza then overthrew President Victoriano Huerta (12–23 June 1914).

Zag ❙ 1980 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

Polisario guerrillas from Western Sahara captured Lebouirate (August 1979) and besieged Zag in southeast Morocco, triggering a fresh Moroccan offensive (Operation Iman). The relief force was twice severely repulsed outside Zag, but a renewed effort broke the siege in early May. Morocco then began to build a sand wall to seal off part of Western Sahara (1–11 March 1980).

Zagonyi's Charge ❙ 1861 ❙ American Civil War (Trans-Mississippi)

See Springfield, Missouri

Zahara ❙ 1481 ❙ Final Christian Reconquest of Spain

Opening the last Muslim offensive against Christian Spain, Mulei Abdul-Hassan, the new King of Granada, refused the annual tribute to Ferdinand and Isabella and invaded Andalusia. There he surprised and destroyed the fortress of Zahara, on the Guadalete River, killing or enslaving most of the population. Muslim Spain was finally destroyed in the war that followed (26 December 1481).

Zahle ❙ 1981 ❙ Lebanon Civil War

On the offensive in the Bekaa Valley, Syria attacked Christian militia at Zahle, on the Beirut-Damascus highway. Militia General Bashir Gemayel sent reinforcements and the town held out for three months against severe shelling. A brief Israeli air raid persuaded Syria to talk and both sides withdrew, though failure of the Syrian army left the Lebanese Christians to claim victory (2 April–30 June 1981).

Zakataly ❙ 1853 ❙ Russian Conquest of the Caucasus

Imam Shamil of Dagestan took advantage of impending war between Russia and Turkey to attack Russian Prince Girgori Orbeliani at Zakataly in southwest Dagestan. Orbeliani drove the rebels off, then came under siege at nearby Meseldeger. Shamil was repulsed with costly losses and a relief army under Prince Moisei Argutinsky finally forced him to withdraw (5–19 September 1853).

Zalankamen ❙ 1691 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Slankamen

Zalgiris ❙ 1410 ❙ Later Wars of the Teutonic Knights

See Tannenberg

Zallaka ❙ 1086 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

When Alfonso VI of Castile took Toledo (May 1085) and advanced into Andalusia, Almoravid Emir Yusuf ibn Tashufin of Morocco landed in force at Algeciras and met the huge Christian army on the Plains of Zallaka near Badajoz. His horsemen destroyed the Spanish force, with Alfonso severely wounded and forced to retreat. The victory secured Yusuf most of southern Spain (23 October 1086).

Zallaqa ❙ 1086 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

See Zallaka

Zama ❙ 202 BC ❙ 2nd Punic War

Marching his veterans inland, away from Carthage in modern Tunisia, Carthaginian leader Hannibal Barca took up position at Zama against Roman General Publius Scipio the Younger and his Numidian allies. The Carthaginians were utterly destroyed in a classic set-piece battle and the war came to an end. Hannibal fled and Scipio was granted the honorific "Africanus" (19 October 202 BC).

Zamora ❙ 873 ❙ Christian Recapture of Zamora

King Alfonso III of Castile and Leon secured his greatest victory over the Muslims of Cordova when he destroyed a large army at Zamora, north of Salamanca. The rebel Kalib of Toledo was heavily defeated and his ally Abdul-Kassim was killed in the battle. Alfonso the Great then rebuilt Zamora as he advanced the Christian frontier to the Douro River and the Guadarramas.

Zamora ❙ 939 ❙ Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

See Simancas, Vallidolid

Zamora ❙ 981 ❙ Later Christian-Muslim Wars in Spain

See Rueda

Zamora ❙ 1072 ❙ War of Castilian Succession

After defeating his brother Alfonso VI at Golpejerra in January, Sancho II of Castile seized Leon, then faced a local rebellion supported by his sister Urraca. Sancho besieged Zamora, north of Salamanca, but was assassinated by Vellido Adolfo, apparently at Urraca's instigation. The siege ended and Alfonso returned from exile to take the Kingdoms of Castile and Leon (October 1072).

Zamosc ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War

With Russia's main army defeated near Warsaw, Soviet forces and Cossack Calvary under Symeon Budenny in Galicia were soon encircled by Polish General Wladyslaw Sikorski near Zamosc, southeast of Lublin. One of the last cavalry battles saw Polish General Juliusz Rómmel secure bloody victory at nearby Komárow, but the Russians were allowed to escape (30 August–2 September 1920).

Zamosc-Komárow ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

See Komárow

Zand ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

As British commander Lord Frederick Roberts advanced north along the railway from Bloemfontein towards Pretoria with 38,000 men and 100 guns, about 5,000 Boers under Christiaan de Wet and Louis Botha attempted to defend the Zand River. The Boers were driven back in heavy fighting and the British marched north to take nearby Kroonstad and east to Lindley (10 May 1900).

Zanzibar ❙ 1503 ❙ Portuguese Colonial Wars in East Africa

At the start of Portugal's campaign along the east coast of Africa, commander Rui Lorenco Ravasco took a force against the strategic island of Zanzibar (part of modern Tanzania). A sharp bombardment forced Mwinyi Mkuu, King of Zanzibar, to accept Portuguese suzerainty. Portuguese forces further north soon captured Muscat and Hormuz to command the Persian Gulf.

Zanzibar ❙ 1652 ❙ Later Portuguese Wars in East Africa

Imam Sultan ibn Sayf of Oman took Muscat (1650) then despatched his son Sayf ibn Sultan with 28 ships and 10,000 troops against Portuguese settlements in Zanzibar. The Portuguese suffered heavy losses, including Viceroy Manoel de Nazareth killed. Omani forces gradually secured the island, deposing Queen Fatima and expelling the remaining Portuguese after the fall of Mombasa in 1698.

Zanzur (1st) ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

Despite summer heat, Italian commander Carlo Caneva in Tripoli launched an unexpected offensive west against Turko-Arab forces entrenched in an extended line from Zanzur through Sidi Abd-al-Jalil. Over 13,000 Italians with field artillery inflicted heavy casualties and occupied Sidi Abd-al-Jalil, but they failed to secure Zanzur and had to fight again four months later (8 June 1912).

Zanzur (2nd) ❙ 1912 ❙ Italo-Turkish War

Four months after a bloody but unsatisfactory Italian offensive west of Tripoli towards Zanzur, Generals Ottavio Ragni and Felice de Chaurand advanced again with 12,000 men and 34 guns. Intensive fighting saw the Turks and Arabs finally driven out at bayonet-point with about 1,400 killed. Peace was signed within a month, securing Italy possession of Libya (20 September 1912).

Zapote Bridge ❙ 1896 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

Spanish Governor Ramon Blanco faced rebellion in Cavite and sent a small force under General Ernesto Aguirre against Emilio Aguinaldo, who attempted to defend the Zapote Bridge, near Bacoor. The insurgents suffered a costly defeat and Aguinaldo narrowly escaped capture. Aguirre soon returned to Manila for reinforcements and days later resumed his offensive at Imus (3 September 1896).

Zapote Bridge ❙ 1897 ❙ Philippines War of Independence

On a fresh offensive south of Manila, new Spanish Governor Camilo de Polaveija and General José Lachambre were met at Zapote Bridge, near Bacoor, by rebels Emilio Aguinaldo and Edilberto Evangelista. An heroic victory saw Evangelista killed holding the Spanish at bay, but Silang and Dasmariñas soon fell and Aguinaldo fell back through Imus to defeat at Naic (17 February 1897).

Zapote River ❙ 1899 ❙ Philippine-American War

Sent to combat fresh insurgency in southern Luzon, American General Henry W. Lawton was reinforced after humiliation at Sucat (10 June) and attacked General Artemio Ricarte entrenched on the Zapote, near Cavite. After a costly action—with 75 American and over 500 Philippine casualties—the insurgents withdrew. Nearby Imus fell next day without resistance (13 June 1899).

Zara ❙ 1202 ❙ 4th Crusade

Seeking transport to Palestine, leaders of the Fourth Crusade asked Venice for ships and were induced to pay the debt by helping besiege and recapture the former Venetian city of Zara in Hungarian-ruled Dalmatia. Though Europe was shocked at Crusaders attacking a Christian city, the Crusaders then also agreed to assist Venice in seizing Constantinople in July 1203 (10–15 November 1202).

Zara ❙ 1346 ❙ Hungarian-Venetian Wars

Soon after Venice seized Dalmatia from Hungary, the Adriatric city of Zara (Zadar in modern Croatia) rose in revolt and was besieged by Venetian commander Marino Faliero. Louis I of Hungary arrived with a large force to assist Zara but he suffered a costly defeat and was forced to withdraw. Two further campaigns (1337–1358 and 1378–1381) saw Louis gradually regain most of Dalmatia.

Zaragoza ❙ 1118 ❙ Early Christian Reconquest of Spain

See Saragossa

Zaragoza ❙ 1710 ❙ War of the Spanish Succession

See Saragossa

Zaragoza ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

See Saragossa

Zaragoza ❙ 1937 ❙ Spanish Civil War

See Saragossa

Zarghan ❙ 1730 ❙ Persian-Afghan Wars

Advancing into Persia against its Afghan conquerors, Persian General Nadir Kuli (later Nadir Shah) won great victories at Mehmandost and Murchakhar, driving the usurper Ashraf Khan south towards Shiraz, where he rallied his troops. However, Ashraf was utterly defeated just to the north at Zarghan. He was murdered returning to Kandahar and Nadir was created Sultan (15 January 1730).

Zarnesti ❙ 1690 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

See Zernyest

Zarnow ❙ 1655 ❙ 1st Northern War

See Opoczno

Zarnowiec ❙ 1462 ❙ Thirteen Years War

See Puck

Zatec ❙ 1421 ❙ Hussite Wars

Recovering from defeat at Vitkov Hill (July 1420), a fresh expedition of Imperial Princes entered Bohemia against the Hussite heretics and besieged Zatec (German Saaz), northwest of Prague. On false reports of an approaching army under the great Jan Zizka, the so-called Second Crusade withdrew with costly losses inflicted by the pursuing garrison of Zatec (19 September–2 October 1421).

Zborov ❙ 1649 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

With his army in the Ukraine beaten at Korsun and Pilawce, John II Casimir of Poland led a new force against Cossack rebel Bogdan Chmielnicki, now besieging Zbarazh, north of Ternopol. While the King was surprised and defeated just to the west at Zborov, Chmielnicki's fickle Tatar allies withdrew and he had to accept peace until decisive battle in 1651 at Beresteczko (15–17 August 1649).

Zeebrugge ❙ 1918 ❙ World War I (War at Sea)

Determined to bottle up German destroyers and U-boats at Bruges in Belgium, Admiral Roger Keyes led an ambitious raid against the ports of Zeebrugge and Ostend. Troops landed at Zeebrugge failed to silence shore batteries and blockships were not correctly positioned. The raids cost over 500 Allied casualties and saw eight Victoria Crosses won, but Zeebrugge was quickly reopened (22–23 April 1918).

Zeelandia ❙ 1661–1662 ❙ Chinese Conquest of Taiwan

See Fort Zeelandia

Zehdenick ❙ 1806 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (4th Coalition)

As the Prussian army retreated north across Germany after the twin defeats at Jena and Auerstadt, French Generals Antoine Lasalle and Emmanuel de Grouchy attacked their flank at Zehdenick, north of Oranienberg. As at Potsdam, Prince Friedrich-Ludwig of Hohenloe's retreating force suffered a sharp loss, soon followed by defeat and surrender at Prenzlau (26 October 1806).

Zela ❙ 67 BC ❙ 3rd Mithridatic War

When Mithridates VI of Pontus tried to recover his kingdom, lost five years before at Cyzicus and Cabira, local Roman Governor Lucius Valerius Triarius, a legate in the army of Lucius Licinius Lucullus, allowed himself to be attacked near Zela (modern Zile) in northern Turkey. Triarius suffered a terrible defeat, losing 7,000 men. Mithridates was routed the following year on the Lycus.

Zela ❙ 47 BC ❙ Roman-Pontian Wars

King Pharnaces of Bosporus attacked Roman forces in Asia Minor and defeated Julius Caesar's General Domitius Calvinus at Nicopolis (48 BC). Caesar himself then hastened from Egypt and gathered an army in Syria. In northern Turkey at Zela (modern Zile), the Pontians were routed and Pharnaces fled. Caesar reported to the Senate: "Veni, Vidi, Vici—I came, I saw, I conquered."

Zella ❙ 1866 ❙ Seven Weeks War

After defeating Hanover at Langensalza, Prussians invaded Bavaria and Prussian General August von Goeben sent General Ferdinand von Kummer south from Dermbach against General Friedrich von Zoller at Zella, near Neidhartshausen. Fierce action forced the Bavarians to fall back on Diedorf. After victory that day at Wiesenthal, the Prussians regrouped to advance on Kissingen (4 July 1866).

Zenta ❙ 1697 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

Sultan Mustafa II renewed the Turkish offensive in Hungary, where his army was attacked while crossing the Tisza River at Zenta (modern Senta) by an Imperial force only one-third as large under Prince Eugène of Savoy. The Turks were destroyed, with Grand Vizier Elmas Mehmed among thousands killed. The ensuing peace saw the Habsburgs secure Hungary (11 September 1697).

Zenteno ❙ 1933 ❙ Chaco War

See Alihuatá

Zernyest ❙ 1690 ❙ Later Turkish-Habsburg Wars

In a renewed Turkish offensive in Europe, renegade Hungarian Count Imre Thokoly was sent to invade Transylvania. At Zernyest (modern Zarnesti) Thokoly defeated a Habsburg-Transylvanian army and the Turks made him Prince. However, he and Grand Vizier Fazil Mustafa were defeated a year later at Slankamen and Transylvania was secured by the Habsburgs (11 August 1690).

Zhapu ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st Opium War

Reinforced by Admiral Sir George Elliot, Superintendent Sir Henry Pottinger and General Sir Hugh Gough withdrew troops from Ningbo and attacked Zhapu, the port of Hangzhou, held by 10,000 Chinese regulars and Tatars. Gough took the city by storm with over 1,200 Chinese dead. Wusong and Shanghai soon fell without fighting and Gough advanced up the Yangzi to Zhenjiang (18 May 1842).

Zhawar ❙ 1986 ❙ Afghan Civil War

Following up a government offensive into the Parrot's Beak region, southeast of Kabul (September 1985), Brigadier Abdol Safar took about 12,000 men against the Mujahaden supply base of Zhawar, defended by General Jalaluddin Haqqani. A massive air and ground assault saw Zhawar fall with heavy losses, but the government forces soon withdrew and it was reoccupied (2–20 April 1986).

Zhejiang-Jiangxi ❙ 1942 ❙ World War II (China)

Supposedly in response to the Doolittle Raid on Tokyo in April, General Shunroku Hata led nine Japanese divisions on a massive offensive into East Zhejiang and Jiangxi Provinces, where they took Qingtian (30 July) and destroyed several Allied airfields. Chinese General Gu Zhutong eventually counter-attacked near Wenzhou and the Japanese were forced to withdraw (15 May–27 August 1942).

Zhelte Vody ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

See Zolte Wody

Zhengrong ❙ 404 ❙ Wars of the Sixteen Kingdoms Era

In the bloody struggle for the middle Yangzi, Huan Xuan seized the upper reaches then advanced to seize Jiankang and depose the Jin Emperor (403). Loyalist General Liu Yu assembled a large fleet and, at Zhengrong Island near modern Echeng, Huan was routed, then killed in the pursuit. Liu Yu restored Emperor An, but in 420 he seized the throne and began the Southern Song Dynasty (June 404).

Zhenhai ❙ 1841 ❙ 1st Opium War

Campaigning northeast from Hong Kong, General Sir Hugh Gough and Admiral Sir William Parker captured Xiamen and Dinghai, then attacked the fortified city of Zhenhai at the mouth of the Yong, held by almost 4,000 Chinese. Zhenhai fell by assault after a heavy bombardment and defeated Commissioner Yu Qian commited suicide. Ningbo quickly fell three days later (10 October 1841).

Zhenjiang ❙ 1842 ❙ 1st Opium War

After storming Zhapu, General Sir Hugh Gough advanced up the Yangzi, strongly supported by Admiral Sir William Parker, but was blocked at Zhenjiang (Chenkiang). In some of the war's hardest fighting—with many British killed by heatstroke—Zhenjiang fell by assault. With Nanjing threatened, China ended the war, ceding Hong Kong and opening key ports to British trade (21 July 1842).

Zhenjiang ❙ 1856 ❙ Taiping Rebellion

Determined to relieve Zhenjiang (Chenkiang), east of Nanjing (under Imperial siege since May 1853), Taiping commander Qin Rigang attacked and routed the besieging force. After capturing nearby Yangzhou, he returned and, just west of Zhenjiang, defeated and killed Imperial commanders Liu Cunhou and Ji'er Hang'a. Qin was soon recalled to defend Nanjing (1 April & 1 June 1856).

Zhijiang ❙ 1945 ❙ World War II (China)

While Japanese forces seized the airbase at Laohekou, General Ichiro Sakanishi, south of the Yangzi, led 70,000 men towards the major airfield at Zhijiang. Despite suffering terrible losses, Chinese General He Yingqin halted the advance and Japan's last offensive was repulsed. Commander Yasuji Okamura ordered continued withdrawal and the war soon came to an end (8 April–7 June 1945).

Zhitomir ❙ 1920 ❙ Russo-Polish War
See Berezina

Zhitomir ❙ 1943 ❙ World War II (Eastern Front)

At the centre of the Soviet offensive towards the Dnieper, General Nikolai Vatutin took Kiev before his forward units raced west and seized the key rail centre of Zhitomir. It was retaken within days by General Hasso von Manteuffel's Seventh Panzer Division, then lost again to the Russians. The front stabilised and the Russians turned south against the pocket at Korsun (12–31 December 1943).

Zhongdu ❙ 1214–1215 ❙ Conquests of Genghis Khan
See Beijing

Zhovnyne ❙ 1638 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

Despite disaster at Kumeiky in late 1637, Yakiv Ostrianyn continued Cossack revolt in the Ukraine. Between Kremenchuk and Poltava at Hotva he routed a Polish force under Stanislas Potocki. The Poles regrouped and a month later at Zhovnyne, northwest of Kremenchuk, Ostrianyn was defeated and fled. Rebellion died down until the great rising of 1648 at Bazavluk (15 May & 13 June 1638).

Zhovti Vody ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars
See Zolte Wody

Zhumadian ❙ 1927 ❙ 1st Chinese Revolutionary Civil War

Nationalist Tang Shengzhi opened a new offensive north from Wuchang, crossing into Henan to attack Northern General Wu Beifu attempting to make a stand on the Beijing-Hankou railway at Zhumadian (Chumatien). Wu was decisively defeated and fled and Tang continued north against Zhang Xueliang (son of Marshal Zhang Zuolin) at Linying (14 May 1927).

Zhuozhou ❙ 1920 ❙ Anhui-Zhili War

As warlords struggled for northern China, Manchurian leader Zhang Zuolin joined Kao Kun of the Zhili against the ruling Anhui faction of Duan Qirui in Beijing. A ten-day war saw Allied General Wu Beifu defeat Duan's army southwest of the capital at Zhuozhou and then Liulihe. The Anhui government collapsed, but the allies fell out two years later at Changxindian (14–18 July 1920).

Zielenice ❙ 1792 ❙ Polish Rising

When Poland declared an independent constitution in 1791, Catherine the Great sent Field Marshal Alexander Suvorov to impose Russian authority. At Zielenice (modern Selenez), northeast of Warsaw, Josef Poniatowski (nephew of the Polish King) held off the Russians with heavy losses on both sides. Despite further Polish resistance at Dubienka, the rising was doomed (18 June 1792).

Zieriksee ❙ 1304 ❙ Franco-Flemish Wars

After Guy of Namour's Flemish victory at Courtrai (July 1302), he attacked southern Holland to no avail, then besieged Zieriksee on the eastern Scheldt. Count William of Hainault sought help from Philip IV of France and off Zieriksee the Flemish navy was destroyed with Guy taken prisoner. The siege was lifted and further Flemish defeat a week later at Mons-en-Pevele ended the war (10 August 1304).

Zieriksee ❙ 1575–1576 ❙ Netherlands War of Independence

In a courageous assault on the Zealand island of Duiveland, Spanish General Don Osorio de Ulloa waded ashore under heavy attack (28 September) and Dutch General Charles Boisot was killed. Christoforo de Mondragón then besieged Zieriksee. After Admiral Louis de Boisot was killed attempting to break the blockade, Arend van Dorp finally capitulated (26 October 1575–2 July 1576).

Zijpe ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)
See Zuyper Sluys

Zilikats Nek (1st) ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Boer commander Jacobus de la Rey recovered from the fall of Pretoria and attacked 240 men under Colonel Henry R. Roberts attempting to secure the strategic pass to the west at Zilikats Nek, near Rustenberg. Trapped under heavy fire, with no sign of relief from Colonel Walter P. Alexander, Roberts surrendered shortly after sunset with 17 killed, 55 wounded and 189 captured (11 June 1900).

Zilikats Nek (2nd) ❙ 1900 ❙ 2nd Anglo-Boer War

Determined to recover the Zilikats Nek, a strategic pass through the Magaliesburg to western Transvaal (lost to the Boers two months earlier), General Ian Hamilton marched west from Pretoria with over 7,000 men. After a sharp attack, with light casualties on either side, the Boers under Commandant Petrus Coetzee fled and Hamilton reached Rustenberg three days later (2 August 1900).

Zitácuaro ❙ 1811 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

When insurgent forces seized Zitácuaro, west of Mexico City, Royalist Captain Juan Baustista de la Torre was bloodily repulsed (20 February and 22 May 1811). Ignacio López Rayón then took command of the insurgents and faced another attack by Colonel Miguel Emparan. The Royalists were defeated once again and a national revolutionary Junta was established in Zitácuaro (22 June 1811).

Zitácuaro ❙ 1812 ❙ Mexican Wars of Independence

Royalist General Félix María Calleja resolved to destroy the insurgent Junta at Zitácuaro, west of Mexico City, and took a large force against the rebel stronghold, defended by Ignacio López Rayón. After bloody fighting, Calleja took Zitácuaro by storm, then sacked the city with terrible casualties and destruction. Months later, he attacked rebel leader José María Morelos at Cuautla (1–2 January 1812).

Zivin ❙ 1877 ❙ Russo-Turkish Wars

When Russian commander Mikhail Loris-Melikov advanced into the Caucasus to relieve General Arzas Artemevich Tergukasov at Tahir, he attacked Izmail Hakka Pasha at Zivin, southwest of Karaugan, even though Tergukasov had already retreated. Izmail fled with over 1,000 casualties, but the cautious Loris-Melikov feared a counter-attack and also withdrew (25 June 1877).

Zizkov ❙ 1420 ❙ Hussite Wars

See Vitkov Hill

Zlatitsa ❙ 1443 ❙ Turkish-Hungarian Wars (Long Campaign)

The Christian army of King Ladislas IV of Hungary and General Janos Hunyadi advanced across the Balkans after victory in Serbia and once again met Kasim Bey, Governor of Rumelia, now escaped from capture at Nish. Battle at Zlatitsa (Izladi), west of Sofia, saw the Christians halted and in deepest winter they turned for home, harried at Melshtitsa and Kunovica (12 December 1443).

Zlatoust ❙ 1919 ❙ Russian Civil War

During a powerful counter-offensive in the Urals by General Mikhail Tukhachevski, the Red Army captured Ekaterinburg, then advanced on Whites attempting to defend Zlatoust. A massive encircling movement routed and almost captured the forces of General Vladimir Kappel, before the city was taken by storm and the Whites withdrew east towards Chelyabinsk (24 June–13 July 1919).

Zloczow ❙ 1675 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

After beating the Turks in Moldavia at Khotin (1673), John III Sobieski of Poland was abandoned by his former ally Michael Pac of Lithuania in the face of an invasion by 20,000 Turks and Tatars. Determined to recover the Ukraine, Sobieski met the invaders east of Lvov at Zloczow (modern Zolochev) and inflicted a heavy defeat. He then won again at Soczawa and Zurawno (24 August 1675).

Zlota Lipa ❙ 1914 ❙ World War I (Eastern Front)

As Austrians advanced into eastern Poland through Krasnik and Komárow, further south Russian commander Nikolai Ivanov sent Generals

Nikolai Ruzskii and Aleksei Brusilov on a counter-offensive across the Zlota Lipa, a tributary of the Dneister. Austrian General Rudolf von Bruderman was routed and fell back in disorder to the Gnila Lipa, southeast of Lemberg (26–28 August 1914).

Znaim ❙ 1809 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (5th Coalition)

In the aftermath of Archduke Charles of Austria's loss at Wagram, French General Auguste Marmont intercepted the Austrians on the far bank of the Danube at Znaim (modern Znojmo). Henry Prince of Reusse attempted a counter-attack but was repulsed with heavy losses when Marshal André Masséna arrived with the main French army. An armistice was signed next day (10–11 July 1809).

Zojila ❙ 1948 ❙ 1st Indo-Pakistan War

As Pakistan-backed forces invaded northern Kashmir, some of the fiercest action occurred at the strategic 11,500-foot Zojila Pass, east of Srinigar. The Indians had to withdraw from some key positions (7 July), but Brigadier Kanhya Lal Atal—with a record high-altitude use of tanks—stormed the pass to retake Kargill and relieve Leh. The war soon came to an end (23 May–1 November 1948).

Zolte Wody ❙ 1648 ❙ Cossack-Polish Wars

Bogdan Chmielnicki's Cossacks began rebellion against Poland in the Ukraine at Bazavluk (21 January) and John II Casimir sent Hetman Mikolaj Potocki, whose son Stefan's advance guard was surrounded by Cossacks and Crimean Tatars under Tuhai-Bei, at Zolte Wody, south of Kremenchuk. Stefan Potocki was defeated and captured and his father was soon beaten at Korsun (16 May 1648).

Zonchio ❙ 1499 ❙ Venetian-Turkish Wars

See Lepanto

Zongzhou ❙ 771 BC ❙ Wars of the Western Zhou

Having overthrown the Shang at Muye (1045 BC), the Western Zhou ruled at Zongzhou (near modern Xi'an) gradually losing influence to feudal lords and "western barbarians." With King You distracted by a family dispute, Quan Rong "barbarians" attacked and sacked Zongzhou. You was killed, ending the Western Zhou Dynasty. The Eastern Zhou fled east to Chengzhou (trad date 771 BC).

Zorawno ❙ 1676 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

See Zurawno

Zorndorf ❙ 1758 ❙ Seven Years War (Europe)

General Count Wilhelm Fermor led a renewed Russian invasion of East Prussia and advanced towards the Oder to besieged Kostrzyn (Custrin), where Frederick II attacked at nearby Zorndorf. While both sides suffered enormous losses in a bloody action, General Friedrich von Seydlitz's Prussian cavalry finally won the day and the Russians withdrew to Königsberg (25 August 1758).

Zornoza ❙ 1808 ❙ Napoleonic Wars (Peninsular Campaign)

After advancing into Biscay to recapture Bilbao, Spanish General Joachim Blake was attacked to the southeast at Zornoza by French Marshal Francois Lefebvre and General Francois Sébastiani. The outnumbered Spanish managed to disengage, but Blake had to abandon Bilbao three days later. He withdrew west through Valmaseda to further defeat in two weeks at Espinosa (29 October 1808).

Zouar ❙ 1986–1987 ❙ Libyan-Chad War

When rebel leader Goukouni Oueddei changed sides to support President Hissen Habré, his former Libyan sponsors attacked his strongholds at Bardai and Zouar. Heaviest fighting was at Zouar, where the Toubou garrison was finally overwhelmed by 8,000 Libyans. Habré sent troops north to join the rebels and Zouar was retaken with very costly Libyan losses (December 1986–2 January 1987).

Zouerate ❙ 1977 ❙ Western Sahara Wars

